

BIBLIOTHECA

REGIA MONACHENSIS.

Brit. 92^m 2^o

Selection

<36613932670012 ✓

<36613932670012

Bayer. Staatsbibliothek

2 Brit. 92 m-2

RECEIVED

REPORTS AND PAPERS

OF THE

Vol.

SELECTION
OF REPORTS AND PAPERS
OF THE
HOUSE OF COMMONS.

VOL. 2.

Education

1836.

SELECTION

OF

REPORTS AND PAPERS

OF THE

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Vol. 2.

London

1830.

FIRST REPORT

Contents of Vol. 2.

No.
400	First Report of the Commissioners on	M. Spang
	Education in Ireland (1825) ———	1

Dated 30th May 1825.

Printed by Wm. Clowes, at the House of Parliament.

Printed by the House of Commons, to be Printed by Wm. Clowes.

Richard J. Hill

John J. Hill
Richard J. Hill

FIRST REPORT

OF THE

COMMISSIONERS

ON

Education in Ireland.

Dated 30th May 1825.

Presented by His Majesty's Command to both Houses of Parliament.

Ordered, by The House of Commons, to be Printed,

3 June 1825.

FIRST REPORT

THE REPORT	p. 1—102.
THE APPENDIX	p. 103.

Education in Ireland.

3

GEORGE THE FOURTH, by the Grace of God of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, TO Our trusty and well-beloved Thomas Frankland Lewis, John Leslie Foster, William Grant, James Glassford, and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires, Greeting: Whereas, an humble Address has been presented to Us by the Knights, Citizens, and Burghesses, and Commissioners of Shires and Burghs, in Parliament assembled, humbly beseeching Us that We should be graciously pleased to issue a Commission under Our Great Seal, for inquiring into the Nature and Extent of the Instruction afforded by the several Institutions in Ireland, established for the purpose of Education, and maintained either in Whole or in Part from the Public Funds; for inquiring into the state of the Diocesan and District Schools, and the Nature of the Instruction there given; for ascertaining whether any and what Regulations may be fit to be established with respect to the Parochial Schools, and for reporting as to the Measures which can be adopted for extending generally to all classes of the People the benefits of Education: Know ye, That We, reposing great Trust and Confidence in your Intelligence, Discretion and Diligence, have authorized and appointed, and by these Presents do authorize and appoint you the said Thomas Frankland Lewis, John Leslie Foster, William Grant, James Glassford, and Anthony Richard Blake, to inquire into the Nature and Extent of the Instruction afforded by the several Institutions in Ireland, established for the purpose of Education, and maintained either in Whole or in Part from the Public Funds; to inquire also into the State of the Diocesan and District Schools in Ireland, and the nature of the instruction there given; to ascertain whether any and what Regulations may be fit to be established with respect to the Parochial Schools in Ireland, and to report as to the measures which can be adopted for extending generally to all Classes of Our People of Ireland the benefits of Education. And, for the better discovery of the truth in the premises, We do by these Presents give and grant to you, or any One or more of you, full Power and Authority to call before you, or any One or more of you, such Persons as you shall judge necessary, by whom you may be the better informed of the truth in the premises. And we do further by these Presents give and grant to you, or any One or more of you, full power and authority to inquire of the premises and every part thereof, by all lawful ways and means whatsoever, within all parts of Our United Kingdom. And We do further by these Presents give and grant unto you, or any One or more of you, full power and authority, where the same shall appear to be requisite, to administer an Oath to any person whatsoever, to be examined before you, or any One or more of you, touching or concerning the premises. And We do further by these Presents give and grant to you, or any One or more of you, full power and authority to cause all Persons to bring and produce upon Oath, before you, or any One or more of you, all and singular Records, Books, Papers, and other Writings touching the premises, and which shall be in the custody of them or any of them. And Our further Will and Pleasure is, that you or any Three or more of you, upon due inquiry into the premises, do propose and reduce into writing, and submit to Us such Regulations as you may think fit to be established established respecting the matters aforesaid, and particularly respecting the Parochial Schools, and do certify to Us from time to time, under your hands and seals, your several Proceedings as the same shall be completed; and do within the space of Two Years after the date of these Presents, or sooner, if the same can reasonably be, certify unto Us in like manner the whole of your Proceedings under and by virtue of these Presents, together with what you shall find touching or concerning the premises upon such Inquiry as aforesaid. And We further will and command, and by these Presents ordain, that this Our Commission shall continue in full force and virtue, and that you Our said Commissioners, or any Three or more of you, shall and may from time to time proceed in the execution thereof, and of every matter and thing therein contained, although the same be not continued from time to time by adjournment. And We hereby command all and singular Our Justices of the Peace, Sheriffs, Mayors, Bailiffs, Constables, Officers, Ministers, and all other Our loving subjects whatsoever, as well within liberties as without, that they be assistant to you and each of you in the execution of these Presents. In Witness whereof, We have caused these Our Letters to be made Patent. Witness Ourselves, at Westminster, the Fourteenth day of June, in the Fifth year of Our Reign.

By Writ of Privy Seal,

BATHURST.

FIRST REPORT

OF

THE COMMISSIONERS

OF

IRISH EDUCATION INQUIRY.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR MAJESTY:

WE, the undersigned Commissioners nominated and appointed by a Commission under the Great Seal, bearing date the Fourteenth day of June one thousand eight hundred and twenty-four, beg leave humbly to report as follows:

IN proceeding to carry into Effect the Inquiry committed to our Charge, we directed our Attention in the first Instance to the Petition from the Prelates of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, which, immediately before our Appointment, had been presented to the House of Commons, praying the House "to adopt such Measures as might promote the Education of the Roman Catholic Poor of Ireland, in the most effectual manner." The following Extract from this Document will show the Opinions and Views of the Petitioners with respect to the System of public Education in Ireland, as affecting the Children of the Roman Catholics.

Education of the Lower Classes.

"The Petitioners beg leave most respectfully to submit to the House, that in the Roman Catholic Church the literary and religious Instruction of Youth are universally combined, and that no System of Education which separates them can be acceptable to the Members of her Communion; that the religious Instruction of Youth in Catholic Schools is always conveyed by means of catechistical Instruction, daily Prayer, and the reading of religious Books, wherein the Gospel Morality is explained and inculcated; that Roman Catholics have ever considered the reading of the sacred Scriptures by Children, as an inadequate Means of imparting to them religious Instruction, as an Usage whereby the Word of God is made liable to Irreverence, Youth exposed to misunderstand its Meaning, and thereby not unfrequently to receive in early Life Impressions which may afterwards prove injurious to their own best Interests, as well as to those of the Society which they are destined to form; that when Petitioners learned, some Years past, that the Legislature had granted a considerable Sum of Money for the Purpose of promoting a well-ordered System of Education in Ireland, without religious Distinction, they conceived the strongest Hope that the Money so granted would be partly employed in providing for the Education of the Roman Catholic Poor, and that no Regulations of a private or partial Kind would be suffered to interfere with the benevolent Intentions of the Legislature; that such their Hopes and Expectations have been disappointed; the Grant for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland, as well as that for assisting the building of Schools, being subjected in their Disbursement or Application to such Regulations or Bye Laws as rendered them nearly useless to the Roman Catholic Poor; that the Trustees of the former Grant give Aid only to Schools wherein the sacred Scriptures, without Note or Comment, are read by the Children,

Petition of Roman Catholic Prelates.

Education of the Lower Classes.

“ a Regulation which does not accord with the Discipline of the Roman Catholic Church ; and the latter Grant, as the Petitioners are informed, is applied generally only to the building of such Schools as are leased in trust to the Ordinary or Minister, or other Ecclesiastical Person of the Established Religion in the Diocese or Parish in which such School is situated, vesting in them by a special Clause a Power of Visitation as well as a Right to appoint or to remove the Schoolmaster at will ; the Petitioners further presume humbly to state, that such Clause operates to the virtual Exclusion of Roman Catholics from such Schools, the Prelates and parochial Clergy of the Established Church not being deemed by Roman Catholics fit Persons to whose Controul or Superintendence the Education of their Children should be entrusted ; that such Schools moreover, as well as all others, built, or partly built, at the public Expence, are connected with some Society whose Rules and Regulations are not approved of by Roman Catholics ; the Petitioners also presume to observe, that the Parliamentary Grant to the Society for the Suppression of Vice is, as the Petitioners have heard and believe, partly applied to the building of Schools, subject to a like Influence, and to the supplying of them with Books, Tracts, and Catechisms, such as Roman Catholics cannot conscientiously make use of ; the Petitioners, therefore, deem it a Duty to inform the House, that the Roman Catholic Poor of Ireland continue unprovided with School Houses, Schoolmasters, or with any such Aids as are necessary for promoting amongst them a well-ordered System of Education ; that the Parliamentary Grants are not made available to the Education of the Poor without religious Distinction, inasmuch as the Societies or Persons to whom their Application has been made or confided have subjected the Schools built by them, as well as the Systems of Education promoted by them, to such Influence or Regulations as render them generally inaccessible to Roman Catholics ; that in all the Instances wherein Aid is given by the Society for the Education of the Poor of Ireland to Schools under the immediate Influence of Roman Catholics, the Laws of the Society are evaded, or combined with such Regulations for the religious Instruction of the Children, as are consistent with the Discipline of their Church ; that Schools whereof the Master professes a Religion different from that of his Pupils, or from which such religious Instruction as the Catholic Church prescribes for Youth is excluded, or in which Books or Tracts not sanctioned by it are read or commented on, cannot be resorted to by the Children of Roman Catholics, and that Threats and Rewards have been found equally unavailing, as a Means of inducing Catholic Parents to procure Education for their Children from such Persons or in such Schools ; that the Petitioners most humbly suggest to the House, that any System of Education incompatible with the Discipline of the Catholic Church, or superintended exclusively by Persons professing a Religion different from that of the vast Majority of the Poor of Ireland, cannot possibly be acceptable to the latter, and must, in its Progress, be slow and embarrassed, generating often Distrust or Discord, as well as a Want of that mutual good Faith and perfect Confidence which should prevail between those who receive Benefits and those who dispense them.”

The Perusal of this Statement, and the Information we received that Exertions were making by the Roman Catholic Priesthood to withdraw the Children of their Persuasion from many of the Schools supported by the Aid of Public Funds, induced us at once to apply ourselves to the Investigation of the general State of Education of the lower Classes in Ireland, and to postpone for a Time the Examination of those Institutions which are more particularly applied to the Instruction of the higher Orders.

In addition to the several Institutions for promoting Education, which received Aid by Parliamentary Grants, we found that several Societies maintained by private Subscription were in active Operation throughout the Country. It became therefore our Object to examine particularly into the respective Characters and Proceedings of these Societies, and to trace the Effects produced by them ; and in the Progress of this Inquiry, Schools of every Description for the Education of the lower Orders were necessarily presented to our Consideration.

With a view to render our Inquiry as correct and comprehensive as possible, we addressed ourselves to the Clergy of the Established Church, to the Presbyterian Ministers, and to the Roman Catholic Priests in their several Benefices ; and for this this Purpose we transmitted to them certain Forms of Returns, which we required to be filled up, and in each Case to be verified on Oath. Education of the Lower Classes.

The Trouble which we thus occasioned to the respective Clergymen was necessarily very great, and we have the Satisfaction of stating that it was undertaken and discharged by them (a few Instances excepted, which it may be our Duty hereafter to notice) with the utmost Promptitude and Zeal; and we are indebted to their Exertions for much valuable Information, which could not have been otherwise obtained, and without which any Accounts which we could have rendered would necessarily have been incomplete.

As it was impossible for us to rely solely on Information collected by others, we thought it right to assign to ourselves respectively the Examination of different Districts, and we employed the greater part of the Summer in making a personal Inspection of a great Variety of Schools for the Education of the lower Orders in every County of Ireland.

To the Information thus collected, we have also added the Examinations on Oath of numerous Individuals conversant with the Subjects under Inquiry.

IN proceeding to describe the existing State of the Education of the lower Orders in Ireland, we find it necessary to refer, in the first place, to an Act passed in the 28th Year of the Reign of Henry 8th, Cap. 15, entitled "An Act for the English 28 H. 8. c. 15.
"Order, Habite, and Language." This Act having directed that the Irish Habit and Apparel should be abolished, and the peculiar Form in which the Irish wore their Hair discontinued, provided in the 9th Section that spiritual Promotions should be given only to such Persons as could speak English, and that every Archbishop, Bishop, &c., at the Time of the Admission of any Person to spiritual Promotion, should administer an Oath to the Person promoted that he would endeavour "himself to learn, instruct, and teach the English Tongue to all under his Rule, Cure, Order, and Governance, and likewise that he should bid the Bards in the English Tongue, and further that he should keep or cause to be kept within the Place, Territory or Parish where he should have Rule, Benefice, or Promotion, a School to learn English, if any of the Children of his Parish should come to him to learn the same, taking for the keeping of the same School such convenient Stipend or Salary as in the said Land was accustomedly used to be taken;" and it is further enacted, that if the Archbishop or Bishop, &c. omit to administer such Oath, "he shall forfeit for every Time offending against this Statute £.3. 6s. 8d.," the one Moiety to the King, and the other to the Informer; and if any Person presented to any Benefice do not observe the Tenor, Purport, and Effect of the said Oath, he shall forfeit for the First Offence 6s. 8d., for the Second Offence 20s., and "if the Third Time he be lawfully condemned for like Offence," then such Benefice shall be deemed voyd, as though the Incumbent had died.

The Effects which immediately resulted from this important Statute cannot be accurately ascertained. The State of Ireland at the Time of its Enactment was such as must have opposed serious Obstacles to its being carried into effect; and whatever might have been attempted in conformity with its Provisions, there is no Trace of a successful Result. The Irish Language, Habit, and Order continued to prevail without the English Pale, and could with Difficulty be restrained from encroaching within its Limits.

In the same Year (though previously to the passing of this Law) a Statute was 28 H. 8. c. 5. enacted, by which the King was declared to be the Head of the Church of Ireland; and another Act vested the Lands belonging to certain religious Houses in the 28 H. 8. c. 16.
Crown; but as, by the Ninth Section of the Statute above abstracted, the Priest was directed to bid the Bards in English, we may conclude that no Alteration had then been made in the established Form of the Roman Catholic Worship, and that the Schools which this Act established could not have been intended to induce any Change of religious Opinions.

In the 12th year of the Reign of Queen Elizabeth, the next Step in the 12 Eliz. c. 1.
Progress of Irish Education was taken by the passing of "An Act for the "Erection of Free Schools." The Preamble to this Act attributes the manifold and heinous Offences daily and hourly perpetrated to a Lack of good bringing-up of the

Education of the Lower Classes.

the Youth of the Realm, and provides for the Establishment of a Free School in every Shire Town, to be built at the Charge of the County, and directs that "the Schoolmaster shall be an Englishman, or of the English Birth of this Realm," (Ireland).

In the Diocese of Armagh, Dublin, Meath, and Kildare, the Masters were to be appointed by the respective Archbishops and Bishops; in all other Dioceses by the Lord Deputy or Chief Governor, who was also to fix the Stipend of every Schoolmaster, according to the Circumstances of the respective Dioceses, whereof the Ordinary was to pay yearly One-third Part, and the Parsons, Vicars, Prebendaries, &c., the other Two Parts.

It is worthy of Notice, that in this Act there is no Reference or Allusion to the Act of 28th Henry 8th, "for the English Order, Habite, and Language;" nor is there any Direction as to the Course of Instruction to be given in these Schools, other than that it should be free, and that the Schoolmaster should be an Englishman; neither is the Subject of Religion mentioned, though Ten Years had elapsed since the Act of Uniformity had passed; nor is there any Direction with respect to Instruction in the Latin Tongue.

2 Eliz. c. 2.

We do not find that in more than Two or Three of the few Diocesan Schools now existing any free Scholars are admitted. They are applied solely to the Education of the higher and middle Orders; and although open to Individuals of all Persuasions for classical Instruction, are decidedly of a Protestant Character. As they have from their Origin been entirely in the Hands of the Clergy of the Established Church, it is probable that they have long stood on this Footing. In the Act of 7 William 3d, Cap. 4., hereafter mentioned, it is stated, with reference to this Statute of Elizabeth, that it established public Latin Free Schools in each Diocese; and although in the former Act there was no Direction that Latin should be taught, we may conclude from the Expressions of the latter Act of William 3d, that they must at the Time have been practically applied to the Purposes of classical Education.

From the 12th of Elizabeth to the 17th and 18th Charles 2nd, no Act was passed which had an important Bearing on Irish Education; in the Interval, indeed, considerable Grants of Land were made by Charles 1st, for the Endowment of Five Free Schools; which we shall for the present omit to notice, as they are applied to the Purposes of classical Instruction.

17 & 18 Ch. 2. c. 6.
s. 6.

By an Act passed in the 17th and 18th Charles 2nd, Cap. 6, s. 6, it was provided, that all Schoolmasters should take the Oath of Allegiance and Supremacy, and be licensed by the Ordinary.

7 Will. 3. c. 4.

The next Statute relating to the Subject was passed in the 7th Year of William 3rd, Cap. 4, by which it was rendered highly penal to receive any other than a Protestant Education; and if a Roman Catholic was sent Abroad to be educated in the Tenets of his own Religion, he was liable to the Disabilities imposed by the Act. The 9th Section of this Statute states that the tolerating and conniving at Papists keeping Schools was one great Reason of many of the Natives continuing ignorant of the Principles of true Religion, and Strangers to the Scripture; and enacted, that no Person of the Popish Religion should publicly teach School under a Penalty of Twenty Pounds, and Three Months Imprisonment; and by the 10th Section, "to the Intent that no Pretence may be made or used that there are not sufficient Number of Schools in this Realm to instruct and inform the Youth thereof in the English Language and other Literature," it was enacted, that the Statute of 28 Henry 8th, Cap. 15, called, "An Act for the English Order, Habite, and Language;" whereby it was provided that every Incumbent should keep or cause to be kept a School to learn English, and also the Act made in the 12th Year of the Reign of Elizabeth, entitled "An Act for the Erection of Free Schools," whereby it was enacted, "that a public Latin Free School should be constantly maintained and kept within each Diocese, and which generally had been maintained and kept, but had not had the desired Effect," should thenceforth be strictly observed and put in Execution.

There is Reason to fear, however, that this strict Injunction was never very fully complied with, inasmuch as it is stated in the next Act which bears upon the System of of Irish Education (8th George 1st, Cap. 12. Sec. 9.) that English Protestant Schools were much wanting in Ireland. To supply this want, however, no further Provision was made than that every Archbishop and Bishop should have the Power, under certain Regulations, of conveying to the Churchwardens of each Parish ^{8 G. 1. c. 12. s. 9.} Two Acres of Land, and other Ecclesiastical Persons One Acre, for the use of a Resident Protestant Schoolmaster, to teach the English Tongue, such Master to be nominated by the Person making such Grant and his Successors and to be licensed by the Ordinary. The Powers of this Act were extended by 5th George 2d, ^{5 G. 2. c. 4.} Cap. 4. to Tenants in Fee Tail, and for Life, who were thereby empowered to grant Land, not exceeding One Acre, for the same Purposes, to the Minister and Churchwardens and their Successors for ever, who were by the Act made capable of taking such Grant; and by the 50th George 3d, Cap. 33. Sec. 1. the Provisions of this latter ^{50 G. 3. c. 33. s. 1.} Act are still further extended, so far as to permit Tenants in Fee Simple, in Fee Tail, or for Life, to grant, by Deed, Half an Acre of Land in Towns, and Two Acres in the Country, to any Person approved of by the Bishop of the Diocese, such Approbation to be expressed by the Bishop being a Party to and signing such Deed, in Trust for the Use of a Resident Schoolmaster, and subject to such Conditions respecting the Mode of appointing the Schoolmaster, and the Regulation of the School, as shall be specified in such Deed; The Second Section enables Archbishops, Bishops, and Ecclesiastical Persons, to grant One Acre, in the same Manner for the same Purpose.

To what Extent the Acts of Henry 8th and of Elizabeth had at any Time been complied with, cannot now be ascertained. It appears, however, that the Clergy of Ireland continued to be fully sensible of the obligation which the Law had imposed upon them; for in the Year 1731, a Petition was presented to His Majesty King George 2d, signed by all the Archbishops and Bishops, and Thirty other Dignitaries of the Church, as well as by many Persons of the First Distinction amongst the Laity, praying His Majesty to grant a Charter for incorporating certain Persons, with power to accept Gifts, Benefactions, and Lands, for the Support and Maintenance of Schools wherein the Children of the Poor might be taught gratis.

In this Petition it is stated, that the Popish Natives appear to have little Sense of Religion but what they take implicitly from their Clergy, whereby they are not only kept in gross Ignorance, but in great disaffection to His Majesty and His Government, scarcely any of them having appeared willing to abjure the Pretender to His Majesty's Throne. That amongst the ways to convert and civilize these deluded People, the most necessary have always been thought to be. that a sufficient number of English Protestant Schools should be erected, wherein the Children of the Irish Natives should be instructed in the English Tongue, and in the fundamental Principles of true Religion. The Petition then states that the Parish Ministers had generally endeavoured, and often with some Expence to themselves, to provide Masters for such Schools as the Law required them to do, but that the richer Papists refused to send their Children to such Schools, and the Poorer were unable to pay the accustomed Salary as the law directed; and it being stated, that such Schoolmasters had seldom been able to subsist, and sufficient Masters were discouraged from undertaking such Employment, the Petitioners conceived it was not to be expected that the Residence of Protestant Clergy upon their Benefices would ever be a sufficient Remedy for this growing Evil, if some effectual Encouragement were not given to such English Protestant Schools.

Incorporated Society

For promoting English Protestant Schools in Ireland.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

IN compliance with the Prayer of this Petition, a Charter was granted in the Year 1733, incorporating the Chief Dignitaries of the Church, the Officers of State, and other Persons of the highest Rank and Respectability, with Power to receive Donations and Bequests for the Establishment of Schools for the Education "of the Popish and other poor Natives."

The Charter.
Appendix, No. 4.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Letter of Lord
Primate Boulter.

The Character of the Policy of that Period, together with the Views and Feelings of those who immediately promoted the Objects of this Institution, may be collected from the Letters of Primate Boulter, His Grace being at that Time charged not only with the Superintendence of the Church, but in a great measure with the political Government of Ireland. A Letter written by His Grace to the Lord Bishop of London, dated Dublin, May 5th, 1730, contains the following Passage:—

“ The great Numbers of Papists in this Kingdom, and the obstinacy with which they “ adhere to their own Religion, occasions our trying what may be done with their “ Children to bring them over to our Church; and the good Success the Corpora“ tion established in Scotland for the Instruction of the ignorant and barbarous Part “ of that Nation has met with, encourages us to hope, if we were incorporated for “ that Purpose here, that we might likewise have some Success in our Attempts to “ teach the Children of the Papists the English Tongue and the Principles of the “ Christian Religion; and several Gentlemen here have promised Subscriptions for “ maintaining Schools for that Purpose, if we were once formed into a Corporate “ Body. This has set the principal Nobility, Gentry, and Clergy here on presenting “ an Address to His Majesty to erect such Persons as he pleases into a Corporation “ here for that Purpose. which we have sent over by the Lord Lieutenant, to be laid “ before His Majesty. The Copy of this Address I have here sent your Lordship,
 “ in which you will in some Measure see the melancholy State of Religion in this “ Kingdom; and I do in my own name and that of the rest of my Brethren beg
 “ the Favour of your Lordship to give it your Countenance. I can assure you the “ Papists are here so numerous, that it highly concerns us, in point of Interest as well
 “ as out of Concern for the Salvation of these poor Creatures, who are our Fellow “ Subjects, to try all possible means to bring them and theirs over to the Know“ ledge of the true Religion; and one of the most likely methods we can think of
 “ is, if possible, instructing and converting the young Generation; for instead of “ converting those that are adult, we are daily losing many of our meaner People,
 “ who go off to Popery.”

The Charter was opened on the 6th of February 1733, in the Council Chamber at the Castle, in the Presence of the Duke of Dorset, then Lord Lieutenant, and of many of the principal Nobility, Gentry, and Clergy. A Subscription was immediately entered into, and afterwards forwarded both in Ireland and England. In the Year 1734, the Society founded their first School at Monastereven, in the County of Kildare, and in the Three following Years built Seven additional Schools. These Establishments have since become well known under the Name of the Charter Schools of Ireland.

Notwithstanding the Support which the Schools received both from the Gentry and the Clergy of Ireland, and an annual Donation of £.1,000 from His Majesty King George the Second, it was soon found necessary to apply for further Assistance. A Petition was accordingly presented to Parliament in the Year 1745, in consequence of which an Act passed compelling Hawkers and Pedlars to take out Licences, and the Duties, amounting annually to £.1,000, were granted to the Society. Similar Petitions were repeated from Time to Time, and Grants were successively obtained to a very considerable amount. New Schools were established as the Funds allowed, and in the Year 1769 they amounted to 52 Schools and Five Nurseries, in which it was stated by the Society, in a Petition presented to Parliament, that 2,100 Children were clothed and maintained.

It is not easy to ascertain how far the Society were satisfied with the Success of their Proceedings, or how long they continued to hope that they could effect the great Objects which they had in view at the Commencement of their Undertaking. The bold and comprehensive Plan announced in the Charter, was in fact confined in its operation within very narrow limits. When the Society contemplated the Establishment of “ a sufficient Number of English Protestant Schools,
 “ for the Instruction of the Children of the Irish Natives in the English Tongue, and “ in the fundamental Principles of the true Religion,” they do not appear to have taken into their Consideration the Necessity of incurring the Expence of lodging, clothing, and feeding all the Children whom they should undertake to teach. It appears, however, that the Society soon adopted the Opinion, that as long as the Children associated with their Parents and Kindred, the System of Instruction which was pursued could not effect the object of converting them to the Protestant Religion; and as consistently with this Object the Schools were established in Districts chiefly inhainhabited by Roman Catholics, it was thought necessary not only to cut off all Communication between the Children and their Relatives, and to confine them within the Walls of the Schools during the whole Period of their Instruction, but it is stated to have been a Part of the Discipline peculiar to the Society, that they should transplant the Children into such Schools as should be remote from their Popish Relations; and the more effectually to secure the Success of this Regulation, they recommended to the several Local Committees, and enjoined the Schoolmasters, not to suffer any Popish Priest, nor any Relation or Papist, or any Person unknown, to converse with them except in the Presence of the Master or Mistress.

Although the Charter was granted with a View to the Education of the Children "of Popish and other poor Natives," the Society passed a Resolution in 1775, which for a long period prevented them from admitting any other than Children who were born of Roman Catholic Parents. It appeared, however, as early as the Year 1757, that the People were unwilling under such Circumstances, to part with their Children; and as it was difficult to fill the Schools, except in Times of Scarcity, the Society further undertook to build Nurseries, that a constant Supply of Children might be provided.

Of the State of the Schools themselves, or of the Instruction given in them, nothing seems to have been publicly known, until Mr. Howard visited them in the Year 1784, and published an Account of the various Abuses which he had witnessed. In 1787 this benevolent Individual repeated his Inspection, and in the following Year a Committee of the Irish House of Commons was appointed to inquire "into the State of the Protestant Charter Schools." On this Examination it was ascertained, that in the whole of these Establishments, instead of 2,100 Children, the Number stated by the Society to be maintained, about 1,400 were all that could be produced. Mr. Howard was examined by the Committee, and he stated, amongst other things, that many of the Schools were much out of Repair, and going to Ruin; that the Children were neither well clothed, well fed, nor well taught; that some of them who were at Santry School, and who had been previously six Years at that of Ballycastle, could not read; and that what he called "the dreadful Situation of the Schools," prevented their being filled. "The Children, in general," he stated "were sickly, pale, and such miserable Objects, that they were a Disgrace to all Society; and their Reading had been neglected for the Purpose of making them work for the Masters."

Mr. Howard.

Committee of Irish
House of Commons.

At Longford he found Twelve sickly Boys almost naked, and Thirteen miserable Objects at Clonmel. At Inniscarra School the Master said that the Committee had applied for Sheets about two Years past, yet none were sent; and Mr. Howard added, that in other Schools Application had been often made to the Committee of Fifteen for Necessaries wanted, but no Attention paid to it. We forbear to detail at further Length the particular Facts on which Mr. Howard's Opinions were formed.

In addition to several other Witnesses, the Committee examined Sir Jeremiah Fitzpatrick, Inspector General of Prisons, who, in the Years 1786 and 1787, had visited Twenty-eight Charter Schools. He stated, that the barbarous Treatment which he had witnessed of some Children in the School at Kilkenny, was one of his first and principal Inducements to persevere in the Inspection of the other Charter Schools; that he found the Children in them puny, and not in that State of Health in which Children generally are; they were in general filthy and ill-clothed. He had seen them without Shifts or Shirts, and in such a Situation as it was indecent to look on; the Diet was insufficient for the Support of their delicate Frames; their Instruction was very much neglected; in general the Children had the Itch and other eruptive Disorders. At Castle-Carbery there was no Appearance of a School Room; Part of a Window was stuffed with a Turf-kish and Dung, and there were but Twenty-four ragged Shirts and Shifts, though there were Eighteen Girls and Fourteen Boys in the School, most of them sickly wretched looking Creatures, covered with the Itch; Two only could read, and all Order appeared to have been neglected; but the Master's and Mistress's Apartments were comfortable and well furnished, as likewise the Parlour, which served for a Committee Room.

Sir Jeremiah Fitzpatrick.

It seems not to have been doubted by the Irish House of Commons, that the Publication of such a Statement of Facts was sufficient to produce an effective Remedy;

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Remedy ; and from the Character of the distinguished Individuals who constituted the Incorporated Society, we are convinced that if such a Remedy was not provided it can be attributed only to the inherent Defect of the System which they were called upon to administer.

Nothing further appears on the Records of the Irish Parliament respecting this Institution, except that Grants were from Time to Time asked for and obtained. The Society however did not depend solely upon the Money derived from the Public Grants. Large Sums were given by different benevolent Persons to support the Schools. John Rogerson, Esquire, Dr. Richard Stuart, the Honourable Mrs. Ann Hamilton, and several other Persons left considerable Estates to the Society. Baron Vryhouven bequeathed £. 56,666, Three per Cent. Stock ; and an anonymous Benefactor gave £. 40,000 Stock, in the Four per Cent. Consolidated Bank Annuities. There are also vested in the Society, as Trustees, certain Estates devised by the Earl of Ranelagh in 1760, for the Establishment and Support of Schools at Roscommon and Athlone, for Protestant Children only, and other Estates devised by Doctor Richard Pococke, Bishop of Ossory, in 1763, “ for founding a “ Weaving School at Lintown, near Kilkenny, for Papist Boys, to be bred to the “ Protestant Religion.” These private Establishments are treated and visited in nearly the same manner as the other Schools, and have been subject to particular Reports. There is little difference in the system of Management, except that by the Terms of the Donors, the former are exclusively for the Reception of Protestant Children, and the latter for Roman Catholic Children to be bred up Protestants.

Of the State of the Charter Schools from the Year 1787 to the Period of the Union, we cannot speak from any Facts which have come to our Knowledge. We think it right, however, to extract the following Sentence from the Report, hereafter mentioned, of the Commissioners of the Board of Education in Ireland, dated the 29th December 1808 :—“ It is certain that from the Period of Mr. Howard’s “ Report till some time after the Rebellion of 1798, (though some Defects might “ have been remedied in consequence of Mr. Howard’s Statements, and the Investi- “ gation of a Committee of the House of Commons in Ireland) no considerable “ Reformation had taken place in the State of the Schools. For about the last- “ mentioned Year, and for some time after, it appears that most of the Buildings “ were in a very ruinous Condition, and some of the Schools in a State of great Neg- “ lect and Disorder ; and they appear to have sunk into this condition from several “ Causes.”

On the 14th of May 1803, a Resolution was passed at a General Board of the Incorporated Society, which made an important Change in the System of the Charter Schools. The Society re-considered the Resolution of 1775, by which they had bound themselves, “ to admit none but the Children of Papists, or such as were in “ danger of being bred up Papists,” and resolved, that the objects of the Society would be more effectually promoted, if the Children were admitted with “ no other “ Restrictions than such as were imposed by the Charter.”

From this Period, we are informed, that Orphan Children, and such as are of Protestant Parents, have been admitted in preference to those of Roman Catholic Parents. Several Schools in Counties inhabited chiefly by Persons of the latter Persuasion have been abandoned.

Win. Disney Esq.
Appendix, No. 7.

In the Year 1806, William Disney, Esquire, printed a small Work, entitled “ Ob- “ servations on the present State of the Charter Schools in Ireland, and the Means “ of improving them.” Mr. Disney was a Member of the Committee of Manage- “ men, called the Committee of Fifteen, and he subsequently became a Commissioner of the Board of Education in Ireland, in which Situations he acted for several Years ; and we have derived much important Information both from the perusal of the printed Work to which we have alluded, and also from the personal Examination of Mr. Disney himself.

The following Extract from this Work will show the State of the Charter Schools for a few Years preceding its Publication :—

“ Within

“ Within these last Five Years the Schools of * Castle-island and Inniscarra were “ suppressed for gross Management long persisted in, in spite of Remonstrance,
 “ after all Hopes of producing Reformation, through the Assistance of any Person
 “ in the Neighbourhood, had been abandoned, and the Masters and their Families, “ with just, but necessary Severity, were turned adrift without Provision. The “ Master of Ardraccon, the Master and Mistress of Dunkerrin, and the Mistresses “ of Castlebar and Newport Schools were dismissed in like Manner; and the “ Proceedings in all these Cases were sent to the Masters and Mistresses of all “ the other Schools, with the Sentences of Dismission and the Reasons on which “ they were founded, in the Hope that they might operate as a salutary Warning “ to prevent the Repetition of the like Abuses. After all these Examples, the “ School of Newmarket, in the County of Clare, was visited in the course of the “ Year 1805 by a Member of the Society, and it was found in a State of universal “ and scandalous Neglect, after repeated Warnings from the Society, and the “ Master and Mistress were dismissed on the Report, without any Attempt to “ defend or even to palliate their Conduct. Ballinrobe School was discontinued from “ another Cause; but on Removal of the Children from thence to Sligo School,
 “ it appeared from the Reports of the Local Committee of the last-mentioned “ Establishment, that their Education, Manners, and Clothing had been so shame“ fully neglected (though the Society had been in the Habit of receiving the most “ favourable Reports from the Local Committee of Ballinrobe School on all of these “ Points)

* The following are the Resolutions relating to the Suppression of some of these Schools.

16th Feb. 1802 :

“ THE Committee of Fifteen having taken into mature Consideration the present State of “ the Charter School of CASTLE-ISLAND, and how far it had, for a Series of Years past, answered
 “ the Purposes for which it was established,—

“ Resolved, That the said School being in the Heart of a very remote and Popish Country, and “ from the nearest Post Town Eight Miles—that there being a Local Committee that scarcely “ ever attends or occasionally visits, the nearest Member of which resides Six Miles from “ the School—that the said School being much out of Repair, and in very bad order in “ every respect—that the Business thereof, for a Length of Time past, having been extremely “ ill conducted, particularly with respect to the Clothing and Education of the Children—
 “ that there having been great Difficulty experienced in apprenticing Boys educated in said “ School, not more than Six having been apprenticed from thence during the last Seven Years—
 “ that therefore it is the unanimous Opinion of this Committee, That Castle-island is an “ improper Situation for a Charter School, and that therefore the School there ought to be “ forthwith suppressed.”

“ INNISCARRA SCHOOL.

“ AT an Extraordinary and Special General Meeting of the Incorporated Society, &c. held on the “ 15th Sept. 1802—It appearing to this Board, that the said School has been grossly ill administered
 “ for several Years back—that there is no reasonable Ground for hoping that any effectual Refor“ mation can be brought about therein for want of an efficient Local Committee—and that the “ Situation is in many respects highly inconvenient; it was (upon a Ballot) unanimously

“ Resolved, That it appears to this Board inexpedient to continue said School, and that the “ same be suppressed, as soon as conveniently may be after the 29th Sept. instant.”

“ DUNKERRIN SCHOOL.

“ General Board, 3d July 1805.

“ IT having appeared this Day, from the Report of the Reverend Richard Maunsell, the Catechist
 “ of Dunkerrin School, and also of the Honourable and Reverend Charles Knox, that Paul Sparling
 “ and his Wife, the Master and Mistress of the said School, had been guilty of Neglect and Fraud in “ the Articles of Food and Clothing of the Children—that they were served with an Extract of the “ Letter containing said Complaint, and required to justify themselves, if they could do so, from such “ Charges—and they having neglected to do so—

“ Resolved, That the said Paul Sparling and his Wife be and they are hereby dismissed, from “ the first of August next.”

“ NEWPORT SCHOOL.

“ General Board, 4th March 1804.

“ THE Society having met this Day, in pursuance of Notice given in the Summonses, to take “ into Consideration the Conduct of Mrs. Mary North, Mistress of Newport School, with respect to “ the Education of the Children committed to her Care; and having read the Recommendation of “ the Committee of Fifteen, stating the gross Ignorance of Fifteen Girls lately arrived from New“ port School, which appeared from an Examination of them by the Members of the said Committee—

“ Resolved, nem. con., That this Board agrees with the Recommendation of the Committee of “ Fifteen, and that accordingly the said Mary North be and she is hereby dismissed from the “ Service of the Society.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

“ Points) that the Master stood self-convicted, and forbore to urge a Petition which “ he had presented for Compensation for the Loss he had suffered in being de“ prived of his Provision by the discontinuance of the School, the Prayer of which “ must in Justice have been complied with, had the Local Committee of Sligo “ School been less faithful or less vigilant, or been actuated by any Partiality to “ the Master of Ballinrobe.

“ In the same Year several Schools in the South were visited by another “ Member, and the Consequence was, that Two Masters were dismissed, and “ One anticipated the Sentence of the Society by Resignation. After all “ these Dismissions, it might be expected (and the Society were probably de“ luded into a Persuasion,) that they had brought their Schools into tolerable “ Order, or at least that all flagrant and glaring Abuses had been suppressed; but “ in the Course of the last Spring they discovered that Two of their Schools, of “ both of which they had good Grounds for indulging the most favourable Expec“ tations, and from both of which they received the most flattering Reports, were “ in a State of great Disorder, and very far indeed from fulfilling the Purposes of “ the Institution. The Two Schools alluded to are, FARRA in the County of West“ meath, and STRADBALLY in the Queen's County. In the former, the Master was “ a thoroughly well qualified Man, and the Points of Accusation, though they “ impressed a general Conviction of gross Neglect and Mismanagement, were not “ so well supported by Proof as to render it prudent for the Committee of “ Fifteen to bring his Case before the General Board; he was severely reprimanded,
 “ and a Visitor has been since specially appointed to go down and to report accurately
 “ on the State of the School in every Particular. In the latter the Master was “ convicted of the base Fraud of substituting Pease-meal instead of Oatmeal for
 “ the Food of the Children, and of other very gross Neglects and Irregularities,
 “ and was dismissed with Disgrace.

“ In these multiplied Instances of Dismission, it is a Fact to be deplored,
 “ that but Two, namely, that of the Master and Mistress of Dunkerrin School, “ (who were turned out on the Report of the Clergyman of the Parish and
 “ the Catechist, who had discovered gross Frauds in the Clothing and Feeding
 “ of the Children), and that of Ardraccan (who was dismissed on the Report “ of the Catechist), were founded on Report of any Member of a Local Com“ mittee. In every other Instance, the Reports of Misconduct proceeded from “ Strangers who visited the Schools either accidentally or upon some Commission
 “ from the Society; and the Local Committees, so far from assisting in these “ necessary Acts for the Reformation of the Schools, almost universally supported
 “ the Cause of the Master, remonstrated against his Sentence, and solicited Com“ pensation for his Loss out of the Funds of the Society.”

Appendix, No. 8.
P. 33.

In the Examination of Mr. Disney, before us, will be found several particular Facts in confirmation of the Statements contained in his Work, and we beg to refer to it, as, from his long Experience, and the Situations which he has filled, his Evidence is deserving of particular Attention.

Report of Board of Education.

The next Information in order of Time, that we have been able to obtain of the State of the Charter Schools, is derived from the Third Report of the Commissioners of the Board of Education in Ireland, appointed under an Act of Parliament passed in the 46th Year of the Reign of His late Majesty, Cap. 122.* This Report bears date 29th December 1808, and is entitled to peculiar Consideration, being signed by his Grace the Lord Primate, the Archbishop of Dublin, the Provost of Trinity College, the Dean of St. Patrick's, Mr. Whitelaw, Mr. Disney, and Mr. Edgworth.

The Report contains a particular Statement of the Rules and Regulations of the Incorporated Society, of its Rise and Progress, and of the Funds derived from various Sources applicable to the Purposes of the Charity.

In order to ascertain the actual State of the Schools at the Time of their Inquiry, the Commissioners availed themselves of the Services of the Rev. Dr. Beaufort, and their Secretary Mr. Corneille, who inspected the several Establishments, with the Exception of Three, which were visited by the Lord Bishop of Derry, and One which was visited by the Rev. Mr. Wild. The Information so acquired is given at length in the Appendix to their Report.

* Re-printed by Order of the House of Commons, 7th December 1813.

The general Impression made upon the Visitors seems to have been extremely favourable. Dr. Beaufort states, in the Conclusion of his Report, that "this great Number of Children are trained up in Health, Cleanliness, and good Order, and although they may be better instructed in some Schools than in others, yet, in all, they are reasonably well taught to read and write, and all learn their Duty to God and Man." Mr. Corneille says, that "he cannot close his Report without expressing the very great satisfaction which he experienced from the very general good State of those Schools, under the Care of the Incorporated Society, which the Board of Education had sent him to visit and inspect."

We observe also, in a Letter addressed to the Board by one of their own Members, (the late Mr. Edgeworth) a Congratulation "on the flourishing State of the Charter Schools." He adds, "besides the Satisfaction which we receive from the prospect of having a number of useful Subjects added to the Community, we must be gratified by having it in our Power to evince to the Government of the United Kingdom, that the Education of Children in these Schools is efficacious, practical, free from Bigotry, and in every respect such as to put it beyond the Reach of private Defamation, and public Censure." Mr. Edgeworth then suggests many Improvements in the System of Management and Instruction, by means of which he states, "that Protestant Apprentices would soon be in such high Request, as to make it an Object of Competition amongst the Parents of the Poor to have their Children admitted into Charter Schools, and then, by Degrees, the foolish Prejudice against this Mode of Education would be eradicated; a Circumstance which might in itself be of very high Advantage to Ireland."

However satisfactory these general Statements were, when compared with the Condition of the Schools at the Time of Mr. Howard's Visitation, yet in the particular Reports of Dr. Beaufort and Mr. Corneille, Circumstances will be found, which shew that many of the Rules were neglected or violated, and that much still remained to be done to render the Schools effective. The State in which many of them were soon afterwards discovered, and particularly on occasion of the more accurate Visitations by the Rev. Mr. Thackeray, and the Rev. Mr. Lee, leads us to believe, that in many Cases Dr. Beaufort and Mr. Corneille must have been, to a certain Extent, either deceived by the Masters, or misled by the Kindness of their own Dispositions.

At Ardbraccan, Dr. Beaufort states, "the Master pays great attention to the Education of the Boys, and there appears no Complaint of Mismanagement;" yet in 1810, within Two years from the time of his Visit, the Master and his Wife were dismissed for Neglect of Duty. Ardbraccan.

The Nursery at Monivea is praised by Dr. Beaufort, as well regulated. The Master, he states, in 1808 had been there for twenty-one years. In 1810, however, we find that he was dismissed for Neglect. Monivea.

The Account given by Mr. Corneille, in 1808, of the School at Castledermot, is in general satisfactory. The Master had been there Fourteen Years. He was, however, dismissed the next Year (1809) for Neglect of Duty. Castledermot.

Of the School at Clontarf, Mr. Corneille says, "the School appeared to be a well regulated One. The Master attends to the Duties of it himself; and seems to be a very zealous, diligent, and proper Person in his Station." In 1812, this same Master, who had been appointed in 1798, was nevertheless dismissed for Neglect and Severity. Clontarf.

At Innishannon, Mr. Corneille expressed great Pleasure at finding the School so well conducted; yet the Person who had then been Master Seven Years was afterwards dismissed, in 1817, for Neglect of Duty. Innishannon.

The School at Killoteran, Mr. Corneille says, "he found in perfect Order: the most thorough and English Neatness prevailed throughout." But the Character of this School, under the Care of the same Master, afforded a striking Contrast when Mr. Thackeray visited it in 1817 and 1818. Killoteran.
Appendix, Nos. 19
& 42. pp. 65 & 79.

At Shannon Grove, Mr. Corneille saw "every thing to praise, and nothing to condemn." He adds, "the Master and Mistress, as the Catechist informed me, both conducted the School with the greatest Care and Attention." In 1817, Shannon Grove.
Appendix, No. 25,
Mr. p. 61.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Mr. Thackeray says of this School, "No Part is in the State of Neatness in which it should be kept, and some Parts of it are filthy. The State of Slovenliness in which I saw the whole seems without any Excuse." He adds, also, "The Qualifications of the Master do not fit him for the Duty of Education. The only Concern he seems to have with the Family is providing it with Food and Fuel." The same Person was Master at both these Periods; but the Mistress had been changed.

Upon a full Consideration of the whole Subject, the Commissioners of that Board could not refrain from expressing their Opinion, that during a very considerable Period of its Existence the Institution appeared to have fallen short of attaining the Purposes for which it was established; and that it was utterly inadequate, in point of Magnitude and Extent, for the Object which was intended and expected from it, viz. the Conversion of the lower Orders of the Inhabitants of Ireland from the Errors of Popery. The Commissioners recommended several Alterations and Improvements in the Management of the Society; and stated that the too general Supineness of Local Committees, or their mistaken Lenity in forbearing to report on the Misconduct of Masters, and the Difficulty of procuring a sufficiently constant and regular Attendance of the Committee of Fifteen in Dublin, were the chief Causes of the Neglect and Disorder into which the Schools had fallen; and they particularly recommended that Visitors should be employed to inspect the State of the Schools, and to inquire and report upon the State of the Children who had been or should be apprenticed.

A Person of the Name of Nelson, originally engaged by the Society to instruct the Children of the different Schools in Psalmody, was afterwards employed as Inspector of several of the Schools, and of the Children apprenticed from them. Some Results of his Inquiries into the State of Apprentices will be found in a subsequent Part of this Report. He does not, however, appear to have been a Person of sufficient Authority to undertake an efficient Examination of the Schools, and he was subsequently dismissed for Misconduct.

Rev. E. Thackeray.

In 1817, the Society appointed the Rev. Elias Thackeray to visit the several Schools; and he was authorized to enquire into the Conduct of all the Catechists, Masters, Mistresses, Ushers, and Servants thereof. By an Order, dated 24th June 1817, "It was resolved, That Mr. Thackeray be informed that it is the Wish of this Board, that in the Visitation of the Schools his Attention should be particularly directed to the Manner in which the present Regulations are observed, and the Care actually taken of the Morals and the Instruction of the Children, it being probable that any Evils or Imperfections which may exist, arise rather from the Want of due Care and Diligence in executing the Regulations already laid down, than from any Deficiency in the Regulations themselves; and he is also requested to inquire into and report particularly as to the actual State of Morals in the different Schools, and to take Measures to prevent the Time of his visiting from being previously known at the several and respective Schools."

In pursuance of these Instructions, Mr. Thackeray visited the Schools in 1817, and again in the Summer and Autumn of 1818. In both of those Years, a particular Report of the State and Condition of each School was made by him to the Society. General Reports were also drawn up, stating the Results of the Visits in each Year, which were printed and published respectively in 1818 and 1819.

Rev. W. Lee.

The Rev. William Lee was appointed to visit the Schools in 1819. He presented a particular Report of each School, and also prepared a General Report. Extracts from these Reports of Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee will be found in the Appendix, as well as the Examination of both these Gentlemen upon the Subject. The real State of the several Schools cannot be adequately appreciated, except by a careful Perusal of all these Documents.

Appendix, No. 9,
&c.

It may be sufficient here to state generally, that at the time of these several Visitations the Condition of the Schools appears to us to have been far from satisfactory. It will be found, that however in some Cases there may have been Cause for Approbation, yet in a much greater Degree was there Ground for Animadversion and Complaint. In a Majority of Cases, the Masters took little Share in the Instruction of the Children, their time being occupied in the Management of their Farms.

Farms. Some of the Houses were kept in a very slovenly and neglected Manner, and the Children were in many Cases ill fed and badly clothed, and afflicted with Diseases which, by ordinary Care and Attention, might have been easily cured. They were not brought up in Habits of Cleanliness and Decency, and their Hours of Instruction and Recreation were infringed, by being obliged to work for the Benefit of the Master. The Manner of Instruction appears to have been imperfect, and the Children had made but little progress in Scriptural Knowledge. They were neglected in many Cases by the Catechists, and still more by the Local Committee, who seldom attended to visit the Schools. The Children are described "as sullen and dogged," and, in some Cases, appear to have been treated with extreme Severity. A large Proportion of the Children apprenticed are known to have eloped from their Places, and it was in some Districts difficult to find Masters who would take Children from these Schools.

Mr. Thackeray, in his First General Report, appears to have been sanguine in his Expectations of the Success of the Schools, and seems to have thought that the existing Rules, if duly adverted to and enforced, would ensure every Object which could reasonably be expected. Appendix, No. 9.
P. 41.

With respect to Health, Mr. Thackeray observes, "that in a few Schools Ophthalmia and Tinea Capitis have so prevailed as to bring Discredit on the Master and Mistress. In still more Instances, cutaneous Eruptions have been blameably neglected." Appendix, p. 41.

The religious Instruction, in about One-third of the Schools, is said to be confined almost entirely to the Church Catechism, with Mann's, Crossman's and Stopford's Explanations. In about Two-thirds of the Schools, Mr. Thackeray says, "religious Instruction is communicated to an Extent that would scarcely be believed by any who are not acquainted with certain laudable Efforts pursued in the City of Dublin, both by Schools under the Society and elsewhere." Upon this important Point, we regret to say, that we shall be obliged in a subsequent Part of the Report to express a very different Opinion.

It would appear that Mr. Thackeray found some of the Schools under the Care of incompetent Masters, as, under the Head of Masters and Mistresses, he observes, "This Branch of our Examination, however gratifying in some Instances, left a Conviction on our Minds, that all other Regulations will be fruitless so long as Schools are committed to incompetent Superintendents. I therefore do not hesitate to assert, that in every School the Master should be fitted, by Habits as well as Knowledge, to the Work of Teaching. I cannot help expressing an Opinion, that the Schoolmasters now employed should be required to take regular Parts in the Tuition of the Pupils." Appendix, p. 43.

In conclusion, Mr. Thackeray expresses his general Conviction, that, "considering the number of the Establishments, and of the Children which they contain, the Treatment of the whole is kind and tender, and that the Children enjoy as much Happiness as they are capable of at their Age and in their Situation." Appendix, p. 45

In his Second General Report, containing the Result of the Visitation in 1818, Mr. Thackeray observes, that he thinks himself fully authorized to state that "no inconsiderable Improvement has taken place in those Establishments with which on the former Inspection he thought there was Reason to be dissatisfied; and that in those in which he saw then Cause for Commendation, the same Ground still exists, strengthened in almost every Case by increased Efforts on the Part of the Superintendents to advance the Efficiency of the Establishments committed to their Trust;" and he adds, in his Examination, "that many who might have been dismissed with propriety on his first Visit had greatly corrected their Conduct." Appendix, No. 28.
P. 64.

Mr. Thackeray further reports, that "such Masters as had considered themselves exempt from taking part in the Education of the Children, on account of the supposed Necessity of managing their Farms, then appeared to take part in the Business of the School, and that in Schools where on his former Visitation religious Knowledge was almost entirely confined to the Repetition of Catechisms, and the mere reading the Scriptures, Questions leading to Explanations were answered" Appendix, p. 89.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

“ answered as competently as could reasonably be expected from Children of “ their Age.”

Appendix, p. 143.

Appendix, No. 55.
p. 112.

The General Report prepared by Mr. Lee in 1820 was not presented to the Society. The Reasons which prevented him from presenting it will be found in his Evidence. We have however obtained a Copy of it, and find that the Conclusions of Mr. Lee were very unfavourable to the Charter School System. The Observations at the close of his Report are extremely important, and derive the more weight from the Circumstance that Mr. Lee was for many years a regular Visitor and Catechist of a large Charter School. “ I was led,” Mr. Lee observes, “ in the course of my official Visitations, to compare the Charter Schools with those “ on the Foundation of Erasmus Smith, and of the Association for discountenancing Vice, and promoting the Knowledge and Practice of the Christian Religion, “ both of which came under my authorized Inspection. The two latter it is well “ known consist exclusively of daily and parochial Schools; the Children attending “ them are for the most Part clothed in Rags, and fed upon the scanty and homely “ Fare afforded in the Cabin of an Irish Peasant. In the Charter Schools, on the “ contrary, the Children are comfortably lodged, well clad, and abundantly fed. “ No Pains are spared to preserve their Health. On the first Appearance of Disease, “ Medical Aid is procured, and their Teachers are in all Cases equal and generally “ far superior to those employed in the daily and parochial Schools. Yet I was “ invariably struck with the vast Superiority in Health, in Appearance, in Vivacity, “ and in Intelligence, of the half-naked, and one would almost suppose half-starved “ Children who live in their Parents’ Cabins, over those so well maintained and “ so carefully instructed in the Charter Schools. The Reasons of this striking “ Fact it might not be difficult to assign. In the Charter Schools all social and “ family Affections are dried up; Children once received into them are, as it “ were, the Children, the Brothers, the Sisters, the Relations of nobody!—they “ have no Vacation, they know not the Feeling of Home; and hence it is primarily, “ whatever concomitant Causes there may be, that they are so frequently stunted “ in Body, Mind and Heart.”

We have not been able to obtain any authentic Information of the State of the Charter Schools for the Four Years which elapsed between the Period of Mr. Lee’s Visitation and the opening of our Commission, no other Visitor having been appointed after him.

It was originally our Intention to have postponed the Examination of these Schools until those of a more general Interest should have been disposed of, but they were forced upon our Notice by Circumstances which seemed to render an immediate Inquiry necessary. We will proceed, therefore, to give an Account of the general State in which we found this Institution.

Schools.

Appendix, No. 6.

At the Time of our Inquiry in 1824, the Establishments of the Incorporated Society were as follows :

	N ^o
Boarding Schools (one of which has since been suppressed)	24
Two of a temporary Nature, being an Infirmary for the Sick, and an Asylum for Female Apprentices reduced to Distress by Misfortune or ill Conduct	2
Day Schools	5
The Pococke and Ranelagh Schools, administered by this Society, under the Wills of the Founders	3
Total	34

These appear to contain in the whole 2,143 Children; viz. 1,159 Boys, and 984 Girls, besides those attending the Five Day Schools, the Number of whom is very inconsiderable.

Management of the Society.

The Business of the Society is transacted by a Committee of Fifteen Members, who are annually elected. This Committee, which meets every Wednesday, performs all the ordinary Duties of the Society, except the Election and Dismissal of Officers and Masters and Mistresses, and the granting of Leases, which can only be done done by a General Board. The Officers of the Society are a Secretary and a Registrar, together with a Messenger, and Inspector of Apprentices.

Each School in the Country is supposed to be under the immediate Direction of a Local Committee and a Catechist, who are expected to pay frequent Visits to the School, and superintend its general Concerns. It is further the Duty of the Catechist to afford religious Instruction to the Children, and to communicate monthly with the Committee of Fifteen on the general State of the School, on the Conduct of the Master or Mistress, and on the Progress of the Children. A Salary, usually of 20*l.*, is attached to his Office.

Local Committee's
Catechists.

The Children are directed to be taught Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic, and to be instructed in the Principles of the Protestant Religion as by Law established. Several Expositions of the Catechism are in use, and the Holy Scriptures are to be read daily, and ought in all Cases to be made the Subject of Exposition, and the Foundation of religious Instruction by the Catechist.

The Labour of the Children is at the Disposal of the different Masters, who in many of the Schools are charged 15*s.* yearly for each Child. The Children are apprenticed to Protestant Masters only, with Fees of Five Guineas for Boys and Seven Guineas for Girls, and each Apprentice receives Three Guineas Bounty at the End of their Time, if their Conduct shall have entitled them to it. The Society also give a Marriage Portion of 5*l.* to every Boy and Girl educated in the Charter Schools, having duly served their Apprenticeships, on their marrying a Protestant; provided Application be made for the same within Seven Years after the Expiration of the Apprenticeship, and within Six Months after the Marriage.

It appears to have been the Object of the Society, during the last Two or Three Years, to reduce the Number of Children on the Establishment; and in the beginning of the Year 1824 the Number was below 1,700. In the Summer of that Year, 500 Children were transferred from the Foundling Hospital into the different Charter Schools, the Governors of the former Establishment finding that the Number of Children under their Care had increased in such a Proportion, as to render some Mode of Relief indispensably necessary. This Circumstance will be explained more fully in our Account of the FOUNDLING HOSPITAL, which must be reserved for a future Report. The Foundlings so transferred had in general been kept at nurse in the Country, and were only called into the Hospital for the Purpose of being transmitted to the different Charter Schools. This Circumstance occurred just before the Period of our Progress through the Country, and we saw these Children at several Schools to which they had been carried. Their Appearance was in general very wretched, and they were almost universally afflicted with Ophthalmia, which had been by them very generally communicated to the other Children. This Disease has prevailed in the Foundling Hospital to a very great Extent, for many Years, and in 1824 it had been particularly violent. We were informed by the Medical Attendant of the Hospital, that the Children transmitted to the Charter Schools were examined by him before they were sent off, and that they were free from Disease; but we were assured that this Disease broke out in every School to which these Children were carried, immediately after their Arrival.

In the course of our Progress we have visited Twenty of the Charter Schools, and we now proceed to state the Result of our Examination.

The School of SLIGO was visited by Two of the Commissioners, who found the School House and Premises in very good Order, and the Appearance of Eighty-two Children, which it contained, was favourable. The Reading by the Boys, their Manner of answering to Questions from the different Expositions of the Catechism, and some Specimens of Writing which were shewn, were highly creditable to the Conductors of the School. It appeared, however, on an attentive Examination, that the Master was a Man of violent and ungoverned Passions, and that the Boys were most severely and cruelly punished, not only by him, but also by his Son, and by a Foreman in the Weaving Department, and that these Punishments were inflicted for very slight Faults.

Sligo School.
Appendix, No. 75,
76, p. 144.

The habitual Practice of the Master was to seize the Boys by the Throat and press them almost to Suffocation, and to strike them with a Whip or his Fist upon the Head and Face during the time his Passion lasted.

One

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Appendix, No. 51,
p. 85.

One Boy had Black Eyes at the time of our Visit, caused by Blows of the Master's Fist; and the Punishment of another Boy, who had received many Years ago by an Accident a severe and permanent Injury in his Eyes, was attended with Circumstances of peculiar Violence. The Anger of the Master was chiefly excited by the Boys performing less Work than he expected in the Weaving Shop (of which the Master had the Profit), or by their not weaving well; they were also obliged to get up at Five, or sometimes Four o'Clock in the Morning, when there was a pressing Demand: One little Boy had been severely punished for complaining of this Violation of the Rules of the Society. The Fear of the Master generally deterred the Boys from stating their Grievances to the Catechist, to the Local Committee, or to casual Visitors. It will be seen, however, by the Report of Mr. Thackeray, that the Boys in 1818 had complained to him that they were forced to work for the Master at Hours not sanctioned by the Rules of the Society, and that the Master had promised to correct that Irregularity in future; we found also, that great Part of the Boys had been kept at Home one Sunday from Church*, to write Specimens of Penmanship, which were to be laid before the Committee of Fifteen, and which, if written on a Week Day, would have taken up Time which might, more profitably for the Master, have been employed in Weaving.

The Master did not deny the general Charge of Violence, but stated, that he always treated the Boys when unwell with great Kindness, and this the Boys themselves admitted.

Appendix, No. 79,
p. 151.

Appendix, No. 77,
78. p. 149.

We felt it our Duty to report the State of Sligo School to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, as President of the Incorporated Society, that no Time might be lost in placing it on a better Footing. In the Appendix will be found the Particulars of the Proceedings of the Local Committee, and of the Committee of Fifteen, which ensued. The Master was ultimately dismissed.

Stradbally School.
Appendix, No. 84.
p. 151.

The School at STRADBALLY, which contains Eighty-three Boys, was first visited by Two Commissioners on the 2d, and again by another Commissioner on the 9th of October. On the First Visit the Boys did not complain of any Severity, though called upon, in the Absence of all Persons connected with the Establishment, to state if they had any ground of Complaint. On the Second Visit the Boys were again called upon in the same Manner; at first they were silent, but on being told that the Commissioner present came from the Government to inquire into the State of the School, and would protect them if they had any just ground of Complaint, the whole School immediately came forward, and said, they were very cruelly used, but were afraid to speak, for that they had complained once to the Catechist, and that the Boys who complained had been "half-killed" in consequence, and it was only on receiving a full Assurance that the Commissioner who was present would protect them, that they were induced to make any Disclosures. Upon being asked, why they had not complained to the Commissioners on the First Visit, they said that they had taken them for "Common Visitors;" and that upon the Second Occasion, if it had not been mentioned expressly that the Commissioner came from Government, they would not have dared to complain to him either. From the Evidence taken on this Occasion, it was sufficiently proved, that about Three Weeks before the First Visit, one Boy had been flogged with a Leathern Strap Nine Times in one Day, his Clothes being taken down each Time, and that he received in the Whole near 100 Lashes, all for "a Sum in Long Division." On the same Day another Boy appears to have received 67 Lashes, on account of another Sum in Arithmetic; another Boy, only 13 Years old, had received 17 Stripes with a Rope.

On the 8th of October, the Day before the Second Visit, Eight Boys had been so severely punished that their Persons were found by One of the Commissioners

* The Rule No. 27 requires a regular Return of the Children attending Church, and the Master is to produce to the Clergyman a List of the Names of the Children attending, which he is to sign after reckoning the Children. A Quarterly Return is also required to be made of the Numbers attending; in the present Case, the Number attending Church on the Day in question had been entered as 72, but the Usher altered that Number to 42 on the Day of our Examination, for no other Reason, as it appeared, but that the Figure 7 was most easily converted into the Figure 4. The Master said he did not keep any Account of the Children who went to Church; he left that to the Usher.

in a shocking State of Laceration and Contusion. The Offence with which these Boys were charged by the Usher was "looking at Two Police Men playing at "Ball in the Boys' Ball Alley;" and he stated, that the Catechist recommended him to flog the Boys. This, however, was denied by the Catechist, and was, we have no doubt, utterly false; even if it had been true, it could only have applied to Two of the Eight Boys, whilst the cruel Treatment of the other Six remains unexplained, unless by the Suggestion of the Master, who states, that "he believes "the Usher may have been actuated in the Punishment by his Feelings as to what "the Boys might have said of him on the former Visit of the Commissioners;" on which Occasion, however, as before stated, the Boys had not in fact made any Complaint. The Instruments of Punishment were in the First Case, a Leathern Cat and a Rope; and in the latter, Branches from Elm Tress. These severe Punishments were all inflicted by the Usher in the Absence of the Master, and without his Knowledge. The latter appeared a mild and humane man, but had taken very little Part in the Conduct of the School. It was alleged, that the Cause had latterly been his Ill-health; but a better Reason seemed to be, that he was fully occupied in the Management of Three Farms, containing together nearly 130 Acres, of which only 29 belonged to the Society. One Farm of nearly 60 Acres was $2\frac{1}{2}$ Miles distant from the School, and the Boys were occasionally taken there to work. It does not appear that the Committee of Fifteen had been informed that the Master occupied this Farm. The Secretary states, that he only heard it lately, and that "he was surprised at it."

The Commissioners were particularly struck with the Appearance of Sullenness and Terror which marked the Deportment of the Children in this School, contrasted with the free and lively Air which generally characterizes those who are to be seen in Day Schools.

On examining the Boys, they were found able to repeat the Catechism and the Expositions of it correctly, but attached little or no Meaning to the Words they repeated. The Two Head Classes consisted of Twenty Boys, of Thirteen, Fourteen, and Fifteen Years of Age; Seventeen of them declared they had never heard of St. Paul, and Half of them had no Idea whether the Word "Europe" meant a Man, a Place, or a Thing; and only Three Boys in the School could name the Four Quarters of the World. Two Boys only appeared ever to have heard of Job, and only One could give any Account of his History.

We felt it our Duty to report the Case of the School at Stradbally to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, in the same Manner as we had done with respect to the School of Sligo. The consequent Proceedings of the Committee of Fifteen will be found at large in the Appendix.

Appendix, No. 79.

Appendix, Nos. 86
87, 88.

In the School at CASTLEDERMOT we found that the Mastertook very little Part in the Instruction of the Boys. They complained of being ill fed and cruelly beaten, both by the Master and Mistress. An Improvement had taken place in the Dietary within the Fortnight preceding the time of our visiting this School, commencing from the Day on which the Master learnt that the Commissioners were proceeding through the Country. Two Boys had recently been very severely punished by the Master. They stated that they had been set to work in the Garden, and having had but little Breakfast, they were hungry, and had eaten a raw Cabbage; that the Master, who appeared to be a Man of violent Passions, caught them, and flogged them for this Offence severely; that one of them received Sixteen Stripes in the usual Manner, and Six Blows with a Stick on the Head, which continued cut and bruised when the School was visited by the Commissioner. The other Boy had eloped in consequence of the Beating. The Boys stated that "the Usher beats "the Boys oftenest, but the Master the most severely; the Usher for Offences in "the School Room, the Master for other Offences."

Castledermot
School.
Appendix, No. 89.

The Catechist had attended very little to the Children in this School, chiefly, as he stated, on account of the Ophthalmia, which had been very prevalent. The Children in this School were found well instructed, and evidently had their Understandings exercised as well as their Memories. The Usher alone appears entitled to Credit for their Progress.

Appendix, No. 90.
p. 167.

On visiting the Charter School at LONGFORD, we found the Children looking very squalid and wretched; they complained of a short Allowance of Meat on the Longford School.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Days on which Meat was allowed, but said they had Plenty of Potatoes. The Master, about a Year previous, had been insane, but had latterly sunk into a State of hopeless Fatuity, and had been for several Months in that Condition. The Nature of his Illness had never been communicated officially to the Committee of Fifteen by the Local Committee; but the Circumstance appears not to have been unknown to the Secretary, and to have been by him mentioned to some of the Society. The Master died soon after our Visit.

Lintown Factory.

In the School at LINTOWN Factory we found, out of 21 Youths present, only 13 who could read. There were only Six Copy-books for the whole School. The Master did not teach, and there was no Usher. The Person who sometimes gave his voluntary Assistance in the School, and who was a Relation of the Master, was absent at the Time of our Visit, and no Instruction had been given for several Days preceding. Several of the Apprentices at the Factory were grown Men.

Newport Day
School.

In the School at NEWPORT, which in 1819 was converted into a Day School, we found only Twelve Children (Three or Four of whom were of the Master's own Family), and a large Pile of unused Books. The Master had been transferred from Strangford, having been found inattentive and negligent, and unfit to conduct that Establishment. In 1820 and 1821, it is stated, that nearly 200 Children had attended the Day School of Newport. The greater Part of them were Roman Catholics, and were soon afterwards withdrawn by the Priest; some few returned, but since 1821, the Attendance has been very small. The Building is in bad Repair, and has a very desolate Appearance. The Master seemed to take no Part in the School, and indeed appeared very little fit for the Situation. In a School kept in a Cabin, within a very short Distance, we found 96 Children, 38 of whom were Protestants, whose Parents preferred paying for their Instruction there, rather than accept the free Education supplied by the Charter School. There was also another Pay School at the Distance of about Two Miles, held in a Stable, which a young Man had taken for the Summer Season. This was so crowded with Children that the youngest were placed in the Manger, there being no room for them on the Floor.

Clonmel Day
School.

At the Charter School at CLONMEL, which also is a Day School, we found only Two Children, and no Book, except a few Fragments of Testaments. The Master is a Cripple from Rheumatism; he receives £.50 a Year, and has a House Rent-free; he also rents 24 Acres of Land from the Society, at 25s. an Acre. The Rent paid for this Land was 18s. per Acre in 1808, when the School was visited by Mr. Corneille, who says, that he was informed that the Land adjoining was let at Eight Guineas per Acre.

Santry School, and Kevin Street
School;
Appendix, No. 28.
p. 66.

Before we notice the State in which we found the Schools at SANTRY and KEVIN STREET, it will be necessary to explain the peculiar Nature and Objects of those Establishments. In the General Reports presented to the Society by Mr. Thackeray, he had strongly urged the Expediency of a Plan for ensuring a Supply of efficient Persons as Masters, Mistresses, Ushers, and Usheresses, in all their Schools, and also for training proper Persons to act as Parish Clerks, Schoolmasters, and Mistresses in private Establishments, the Demand for which, he stated, would in his Opinion employ One Half of the Children annually sent out of the Schools of the Society. It occurred to him, that no Expedient could more certainly ensure a Supply of such Persons, than engrafting an Institution for that purpose upon the Charter School Establishment. These Candidate Teachers he proposed should be selected from all the Schools, after an Examination of their Attainments, and Inquiry into general good Conduct. Superior Ability and Application, united to superior moral Conduct, were to be the sole Grounds of Preference; no Person was to be admitted on the Roll who had not been Four Years trained and educated under the Society, nor continued after they had attained the Age of 20 Years; when, if not previously disposed of, each Person was to receive £.10 from the Society, to enable them to establish a School at their own Costs, and by their own Efforts.

In consequence of Mr. Thackeray's Suggestion, it was settled in 1819, that the Charter Schools of Santry and Kevin Street should be appropriated, the former for the Reception of 40 Males, the latter of 20 Females, selected from the different Schools in the Character of Candidate Teachers. They were also to contain Children as usual, by instructing whom the Teachers were to be trained.

We

We found the School at KEVIN STREET consisting of 200 Girls, including the Kevin Street Candidate Teachers. Fifty-six of the latter Class have been admitted since 1819, of whom Twenty-one still remain on the Roll. Thirty-five, who have passed through the School, have been thus disposed of:—

	N ^o
Sent out as Nursery Governesses	21
Do. Schoolmistress	1
Do. Usheresses	5
Dead	1
Apprenticed	3
Eloped	1
Given up to their Parents	1
Returned to Schools	2
Total	35

The Candidate Teachers act as Monitors, and are themselves under the Instruction of the Mistress and Assistants. The Girls in this School are all most carefully instructed in Scriptural Knowledge by the Reverend Mr. Murray, the Catechist, whose valuable Services in this and several other public Institutions are gratefully felt and acknowledged. There is a Committee of Ladies who pay great attention to the Concerns of the School, and interest themselves in getting places for such of the Girls as are qualified to go out. We are sorry, however, to be obliged to add, that this School is extremely unhealthy; we found upwards of Fifty Children in the Infirmary, and the Medical Attendant informed us, that for many Years past nearly a Fourth of the Children have been constantly ill.

The Number of Boys admitted into the School at SANTRY, as Candidate Santry School Teachers, since its Establishment in May 1819, has been Ninety-five.

The Practice is, for the Candidate Teachers to instruct the Boys in the lower School; they are themselves to be under the Care of an Usher. In this School, as well as in most of those under the Society, the Master is too much occupied with his Farm and Family Concerns to attend to the Task of Instruction.

We find that the Candidate Teachers were left without any regular Usher from the end of April till 27th October 1824. Mr. M'Ghee, the late Usher, left the School in April, and in May Two of the Candidate Teachers were appointed to act, One for the Candidate Teachers' Class, and One for the lower School. In May and June the Master was absent for a Month, leaving the School entirely to the Care of these Boys.* The Boy appointed to act as Usher to the Candidate Teachers appears to have remained till August, when he was appointed to a School in the Country not connected with the Society; and from the time of his Departure, no Person succeeded to his Situation till October.

Mr. Devine, the Master, does not think the System likely to answer the End proposed. In his Opinion, the most promising Children are not selected, at least he complains that many of them are not fit for the purpose, and it will appear from other Evidence that there is reason to fear, sufficient Caution has not been used in the Choice. The Appearance and Habits of the Candidate Teachers is stated to be unfavourable, and to prevent them from being sought for to fill the Situations for which they are intended; Objections are made to their Boyish Appearance, and to their Ignorance of the World, owing to their having passed their Lives in the Seclusion of a Charter School.

The

* The Master had obtained Leave of Absence for Ten Days, but was absent from 23rd May to 26th June: there was no Entry of his Absence in the Visitor's Book. By Rule 57 it is expressly required, that no Master shall be absent without Permission; and when any Master shall absent himself, "he shall enter such Absence, and the Cause of it, in the Visitor's Book; stating by whose Permission he quitted the School, the exact Time of his Departure, and the exact Time of his Return."

The Entries made by the Catechist, during the Period of the Master's Absence, stated, "The Mistress and Usher present," but took no Notice of the Absence of the Master.
Two of the Candidate Teachers eloped during the Master's Absence.

Protestant
Charter Schools.
Appendix, No. 134.

The following Statement will shew in what Manner the 95 Boys admitted into this Establishment have been disposed of; a more particular Account will be found in the Appendix.

	N ^o
Eloped - - - - -	19
Expelled - - - - -	3
Sent out as Masters to Schools - - - - -	12
Ditto - as Parish Clerks and Schoolmasters - - - - -	2
Sent out as Ushers to Charter Schools - - - - -	8
Ushers in this Institution - - - - -	2
Given up to Parents - - - - -	5
Apprenticed - - - - -	1
	52
Died - - - - -	1
In Hospital at Clontarf - - - - -	2
Remaining in the Institution - - - - -	40
	43
Total - - - - -	95

It appears therefore, that out of Fifty-two who have passed through this Institution, Nineteen have eloped, Three have been expelled, and Five given up to Parents, making altogether Twenty-seven upon whom the Expence incurred has been thrown away, and whose Expectations of Preferment have led to no good Effect. Twenty-four only have been sent forth in accordance with the Principles or Objects of the Institution. Eight of the Boys originally selected from different Schools in 1819 remained at Santry in December 1824. Some of them have been Eighteen Years in the Schools of the Society.

Appendix, No. 107. The Expence at which these Results have been obtained requires particular Observation. A Boy, before his Admission into the Santry School as Candidate Teacher, will have probably cost from £.100 to £.120, and his Progress there will probably add as much more. It will hereafter be found that the Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland have trained and sent forth, in the course of the last Seven Years, above 800 Masters at an Expence of about £.7 each.

As the Candidate Teachers whom we found at Santry had professedly been selected from all the Schools for superior Merit alone, and may be supposed to be free from all Bias against their former Masters, it appeared to us desirable to obtain from them some Account of the Treatment they had experienced in the Schools from which they had been taken.

These Boys give on the Whole an Account which confirms our own Observations.

Clonmel.

At CLONMEL, in 1817, the Boys appear to have been punished with great severity by the Usher*, who used on all Occasions a common Horsewhip. It is stated that he often gave Four Dozen Lashes with his utmost Strength, and that the Boys have been beaten till the Blood ran down upon the Flags. A Boy was once knocked down by the Usher, and kicked so severely, that Two of his Ribs were broken, and the Ear of another Boy was nearly pulled off. For this last Offence the Usher was reported to the Catechist by the Master.

New Ross.

At NEW ROSS the same severe Mode of Punishment is stated still to exist; Two Boys have been punished for complaining, One of them with peculiar Cruelty. The Boys appear to have been employed to carry Dung in Hand Barrows, and to have been kept at work at unusual Hours, and to have been left without due Instruction. Many Boys eloped from this School during the Time the Witness Thomas Moyle was there, he thinks nearly Fifty in Nine Years, ending 1822, and he states that the Boys were in constant Fear and Alarm. The Return of Elopements from this

* This Usher was dismissed from this School in December 1817, on the Representation of Mr. Thackeray, as unfit and incompetent; but no Notice of his Cruelties seems to have been brought forward.

this School supplied to us by the Society, state Twenty-nine as having taken place within the Period above mentioned.

At STRANGFORD the same Severity appears to have prevailed previous to the Appointment of the present Master. His Predecessor was dismissed in 1819, on the ground of Incapacity, but he was afterwards appointed to the Day School at Newport, as before mentioned.

At SHANNON GROVE it is stated that the Children were improperly fed, and the Tubs used in the Boys Bed Rooms at Night were used in the Morning for washing, and also for fetching Potatoes from the Field. The same disgusting Practice prevailed at New Ross, and even in the Model School at Santry.

The Candidate Teachers at SANTRY appear to have agreed, on Communication with each other, to draw up a Statement, for the purpose of laying it before the Board, on behalf of the Children whom they had left in the other Schools, and who they well knew would not dare to complain for themselves. A Letter was accordingly written in June 1824, by Thomas Moyle, with the Consent of the other Candidate Teachers, representing in strong Colours the Treatment of the Children in the Country Schools, and stating particular Circumstances and Grievances which they expected to be called upon to prove. This Letter was addressed to the Board, and enclosed in a Cover to the Secretary. It was carried by the Writer to the House of the Society, and given to the Messenger, Thomas Vickers, who was requested to lay it before the Board. The Messenger gave the Memorial to the Registrar, who kept it for some Months, and it appears not to have come into the Hands of Mr. Adamson, the Secretary, until after it was known that several of the Santry Boys had been examined by us. We must refer to the conflicting Evidence of Mr. Stuart, Mr. Adamson, John Vickers, and the Boy Moyle, for a full Account of what took place. It is certain that the Statement did not reach the Board. Mr. Adamson says, "he considered it as merely a Production from a forward Boy, not necessary to be laid before the Board;" he thought it "a kind of literary Production, not a Complaint;" "a very useless Paper;" "that he had read many such at different Times, but paid very little Regard to them." Mr. Stuart says, "he gave it a cursory Reading, and thought it of no Moment whatever, hardly worth reading, merely a Complaint."

It appears, however, from Moyle's Evidence, that Notice of this Memorial was sent to the Persons whose Conduct was complained of, as the Masters of Ross and Waterford Schools came to the Writer, and, as he states, "abused him very much for having written it."

We have thought it right to give this Memorial at length in the Appendix. There is reason to believe that Letters of Complaints, transmitted occasionally by the Boys, have been intercepted in the same Manner by some of the Officers, and Notice given to the Parties against whom the Complaint was made. A Letter was written by a Boy of the Name of Best, from Sligo, some Time ago, to the Committee of Fifteen, which was returned to Sligo in a very few Days, and the Writer punished in the Face of the whole School for having complained.

No Offence that a Charter School Child can commit seems to be less pardonable than daring to utter a Complaint. We have already mentioned the severe punishment of Two Boys at New Ross School for a similar Offence; and in the Examination of William Lewis will be found a Statement of a severe Beating which he received with a Horsewhip, for having, as was suggested, advised another Boy to complain to the Rector of the Parish.

There will be found in the Evidence many Instances, which we forbear to detail of the severe punishment inflicted upon Boys who ventured to take such a Step. We shall mention only One more. The Rev. Thomas Magee, a Member of the Committee of Fifteen, had visited Sligo School in July 1824, and after examining the Boys in their Knowledge of the Scriptures, had entered his Opinion in the Visitors' Book, "that Thomas Ludden and James Gallagher were particularly pre-eminent;" adding a Recommendation, that they should be sent as Candidate Teachers to Santry, for which, he added, that "he thought them well qualified, and worthy of strong Recommendation." Ludden, however, was one of the Boys who complained to us at Strangford.

Shannon Grove.

Letter by Thos Moyle.Appendix,
Nos. 114.
115.
113.
131.

Appendix, No. 132.

Appendix, No. 82.
p. 157.Appendix, No. 145,
146.

Complaints.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Appendix, No. 99,
100, 103.

Appendix, No. 92,
93.

Sligo; and having heard that no Boy who complained "ever got to Santry," he and Gallagher were going to write to Mr. Magee, to remind him of the favourable Opinion he had expressed in their Behalf, hoping that by his Means they might be removed. Ludden had partly copied the Letter on a Slate, when the Master was informed of it, and mentioned it to the Local Committee, and we are sorry to add, it appears that with their Concurrence Ludden was flogged in the Face of the whole School, and the Boys informed, that any one, who should take a Pen in his Hand to write should be flogged severely. Gallagher, the other Boy, eloped in consequence, and having been retaken, he was, notwithstanding the good Character previously given by Mr. Magee, punished by Order of the Local Committee, who recommended that he should be dismissed from the School, having been convicted of eloping, and "being also a Boy of bad Character in other respects."

The speedy intimation transmitted to the Masters of Complaints preferred against them, may probably be accounted for by the habitual good Understanding which appears to subsist between them and the Officers of the Society; it is not denied that Presents of greater or less Value have been given by the Masters of different Schools to all the Officers; and the Registrar is at present considerably indebted to the Masters of Six or Seven Schools for Money borrowed from them, for which we do not collect that he was to pay Interest. It is suggested by the Registrar, that the Habit of giving conciliating Presents takes place for the Sake of the Masters obtaining Assistance in making out their Accounts, which, without such Aid, it is said, might be troublesome to adjust.

Instances of great Negligence have lately occurred in the Accounts presented before the Commissioners of Imprest, by whom they must be annually passed. They have been obliged to disallow the whole Charge for the Dietary of Two Schools, by reason of the Confusion existing in the Accounts, which did not appear to have undergone any detailed Examination, either by the Local Committees, by the Committee of Fifteen, or by the Officers of the Society. It appears further, by successive Reports of the Commissioners of Imprest, that several Items in the general Accounts had not been satisfactorily vouched for or explained. We shall for the present abstain from entering more particularly into the Subject, as it was undergoing a strict Examination at the Time of our leaving Ireland.

Mr. Lee, in his General Report, speaks in Terms of decided Disapprobation of Contracts for the Clothing of the Children being made in Dublin. He mentions the Stockings as being peculiarly bad; and in his Reports of particular Schools, many Circumstances are stated confirmatory of his Opinion. It appears that Mrs. Adamson, the Wife of the Secretary to the Society, was in fact the Contractor for great Part of the Clothing, the Name of Tyrrell and Co. being used in taking the Contract. This Circumstance was well known to different Officers of the Establishment, and to the Masters and Mistresses of the Schools. The Evidence of Mr. Moffett will shew how dangerous it was for any Master to object to the Quality of the Clothing.

The Society have an Officer who acts as Inspector of Apprentices. It is his Duty to see that the Persons applying for Children in or near Dublin are properly qualified to take them; that they are Protestants capable of maintaining an Apprentice, and of teaching the Trade which the Children are to learn. This is obviously an Office of Importance, as upon the due Selection of Masters and Mistresses the future Fate of the Children must principally depend. The Person who at present is intrusted with the Execution of this Duty has stated to us, that before his Appointment it has occurred that Persons have taken as many as Ten Apprentices, with £.2 for each as the First Instalment of the Apprentice Fee, and immediately turned the Children upon the Town. Two or Three Cases in Dublin of recent Occurrence have come to our Knowledge, in which Girls have been bound out as Apprentices to Persons by no means qualified to take them. In One Case the Master quitted the Country, and the Girl was left destitute, but was afterwards received into the Asylum of the Society in Charlemont Street. Another was apprenticed to a Person professing to be a Straw Bonnet Maker, but who did not really carry on any Trade. The Person employed as Inspector is now above 80 Years of Age, and the Cases above alluded to evince the Mischiefs that may arise from an inefficient Performance of so important a Duty.

It

It appears indeed to have so frequently happened that the Girls who had passed through the Schools and been placed out as Apprentices, either left their Places, or when their Time was expired were turned out without Protection on the World, that it was thought advisable by the Society, about Two Years ago, to open a House in CHARLEMONT PLACE, for the temporary Reception of such Girls, till they could obtain other Situations. Many Cases have occurred in which such an Asylum has no doubt been of the greatest Service. About 74 Girls have been already received into this Establishment within the Two Years since it was first opened. Several have lately been admitted, who had belonged to an unfortunate Party of nearly 50 in Number, who had been apprenticed to a Flax Hackling Manufactory at Bun-crana, in the County of Donegal, and having passed their Periods of Apprenticeship, were turned off by their Master without having learnt any Trade by which they could earn a Livelihood. The Employment of the Factory had so fully occupied them, that they had no Opportunity of learning any kind of Household or Needle-work. At the end of their Time of Service they remained without Resource, and but for this Establishment might have perished. Two of the Girls whom we found at this Asylum had lately been apprenticed to Mistresses who proved unable to support them. One of these Girls, who had been Seven or Eight Years in Charter Schools, could not write her Name, and was obliged to put her Mark to her Examination taken before us.

The Mistress seems active in obtaining Situations for the Girls, many of whom come to her in a State of great Ignorance and Helplessness. She states that "they can all read, and some can write pretty well; but that many of the Girls who have come in could not hem a Handkerchief or mend their own Stockings."

We cannot but consider the Establishment of this Asylum as a second Attempt on the Part of the Society to counteract the natural Effects of the erroneous Principle on which their System is conducted. By the Manner in which the Children are separated from their Parents and Kindred, all those ties are effectually broken on which the Wisdom of Providence has rested the first Principles of Human Society. We have already shewn that the poor Inhabitants of Ireland were rendered so unwilling to part with their Children, by the Dread of losing them for ever, that it became at one Time necessary to establish Nurseries in order to rear up Children to fill the Schools. Another Result of the same System is now presented to us; and we see, that after the Children have received a costly at least, if not a careful Education, they are in fact so helpless and deserted, that they require the Refuge of an Asylum as the Substitute for a Home.

The Fate of the Apprentices from the Charter School at CASTLEMARTYR, was a Appendix, No. 13. Subject of Regret at the Visitation of Mr. Thackeray in 1817, and of Mr. Lee in 1820, as will be seen in the Reports of those Gentlemen. Their present Condition is thus described by the Rev. George Smith, the Chatechist, in his Return to our Board, dated August the 31st, 1824. "The Charter School in this Parish has long laboured under the most formidable and discouraging Circumstances. Young Persons have been completely educated from Time to Time; but for Want of adequate Stations, Apprenticeships, or Employment, have been found, on their Removal from the School, wandering about as broken-hearted Beggars. The Incompetency of those to whom they have been bound has led to this Evil, an Evil resulting from the depressed State of this Country, and the Circumstances of the Times, and by no Means owing to any Want of Circumspection in the Guardians of the Institution. Some few have been perverted to the Popish Religion, but more, I suspect, from temporizing Necessity than from Principle."

By the great Care and benevolent Exertions of Individuals, some of these Institutions obtain for a Time a different Character from the rest. It is with Pleasure we observe that the School of Dundalk, under the Care of Mr. Thackeray, is at present the Instrument of as much Happiness and Benefit as the Charter School System can produce. The Schools of Celbridge, Kevin Street, Bagot Street, and Ardbraccan, at present derive similar Advantages, from the Care and Zeal of the Clergymen who respectively take Charge of them. The personal Characters of the present Master and Mistress at Cashel lead to the greatest Attention to the physical Condition of the Children. The Schools of Clontarf, Monstereven, and Monivea, and the Asylum in Charlemont Place, appear also, upon the whole, to be so conducted as to entitle the Persons concerned in their Management to Commendation.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Independent of the Objections which, as it appears to us, may justly be made to the Principle on which this Society was established, we think that its Constitution and Management are each of them so defective, that no hope of any permanent Improvement in its Schools can reasonably be entertained.

Appendix, No. 7.

"It is generally felt and acknowledged," says Mr. Disney, in his Work above referred to, "by the Members of the Incorporated Society, that the Schools under their Care are not in so flourishing a Condition as could be wished. Abuses are continually discovered, and sometimes in Schools where every thing was supposed to be perfectly well regulated." He adds, "take the Reports of the Local Committees of the several Schools, and you are told that every thing is in the most prosperous State; the Children well clothed, fed, and educated; the Master, Mistress, and Usher conducting themselves in the most exemplary Manner, and nothing wanting but more Liberality on the Part of the Society, to relieve the many Grievances under which the Master labours. Hear, on the other hand, the Report of an unprejudiced Stranger, and you will too often find the Picture reversed, and the whole Establishment of One of these applauded Schools in a State of universal Neglect, Abuse, and Decay." He further adds, "the two-fold Government, by the Means of the Local Committee on the Spot, and the Central Committee in Dublin, is liable to considerable Objections. If the Local Committees are zealous and active, and take an interest in the Welfare of the School, they cannot carry any of their plans for the Improvement of the School under their immediate Care into execution, without the Concurrence of the Committee in Dublin. That Committee will frequently not enter into their Views, and when they do, the general Interest of the Schools, or the State of the Funds, may render it inexpedient to comply with their Applications. Hence Zeal is damped, and local Exertions discouraged."

Appendix, No. 8.

In confirmation of this Opinion, so expressed in 1806, Mr. Disney adds, in his Examination in 1824, "that it appears to him in a high Degree improbable that a Central Committee, like the Committee of Fifteen, with the Aid of a Local Committee, should ever be an efficient Instrument for the Management of such Schools;" and he states that "he is not so sanguine now, as he was formerly, as to the Efficacy of the Institution, and the Prospect of Amendment."

Appendix, p. 39.

Another Objection to the System is stated by Mr. Disney to arise from that Part of the Constitution of the Society which places the general Superintendence and Control of the whole System in a General Board of the whole Society, consisting of an indefinite Number of Persons, the much greater Number of whom are unacquainted with the Business of the Society, and attend only casually, as Matters particularly interesting to them arise.

Appendix, p. 40.

The Attendance of the Committee of Fifteen appears totally inadequate to the Discharge of the various Duties imposed upon them. At present, their utmost Exertions, as Mr. Disney observes, are "not sufficient effectually to work the Machine;" and indeed the Labour required is greater than they could be reasonably expected to perform. The General Board has frequently interfered and opposed the Resolutions of the Committee of Fifteen; and Mr. Disney states, in the Case of Misconduct of Masters, who can only be dismissed by a General Board, "that improper Persons were frequently upheld by it; that it was extremely difficult to dismiss a Master without obtaining strict legal Proof of his Delinquency; and that they were considered rather as having a Freehold, than a Place at Pleasure, with Duties attached to it."—Notwithstanding this general Unwillingness in the Board, it appears by a Return made to us, that since the Year 1800 they have found it necessary to dismiss 32 Masters for Neglect of Duty, Severity, and other Causes; and that in the same Period 17 have resigned; the greater Part probably to save themselves from the Disgrace of a Dismissal.

We have already adverted to the little Assistance afforded in general by the Local Committees and Catechists in discovering Mismanagement of Schools in the Country, and the Reports of Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee will show how far any Reliance can be placed upon their Exertions for the Improvement of those Establishments.

Some

Some Cases have occurred, where a Suggestion of the Local Committee has been considered as an improper Interference with the Powers of the Committee of Fifteen, and Distrust and Misunderstanding have ensued; in other Cases, the Local Committees, upon perceiving that their Suggestions have not been adopted, have in consequence discontinued their Attendance.

As far as our Knowledge extends, the Local Committees seldom visit the Schools except when summoned to assist in making out the Half-yearly Accounts, and to sign the usual Testimonials of the Master's good Conduct, and of the regular Improvement of the Children. The Returns from the Catechist are made at the same Time, and he is required also to return and certify a Copy of the Entries made in the Visitors Beok every Half-year. These Entries, as far as can be collected from any of the Books which we have inspected, are generally confined to the Notices made by himself of his occasional Visits to the School.

By the Rules of the Society, the Catechists are required to report their Opinions in all Matters respecting each School to the Society, at least once a Month, and the Committee of Fifteen are authorized to grant a Gratuity of £. 2 10s. per Quarter, in addition to the usual Salary, to every Catechist who shall have complied with the Society's Regulations. Since the Office of Visitor has been discontinued, the only regular Means of obtaining Information of the Condition of the School is from these monthly Communications of the Catechists. The following (Extract from Examination of the Secretary of the Society, taken the 30th of October 1824, will show how much of their Duty in this respect is neglected, while at the same Time we learn from the same Officer, that he is not aware of an Instance in which a Part of the Salary of a Catechist has been withheld for the last 15 or 20 Years.)

Q. "If the Rules of the Society were observed, is it not the Fact that each Catechist would monthly have reported upon his own respective School?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "There are about Thirty Schools belonging to the Society?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "It would follow that about 270 monthly Reports at least ought ere now to have been made; of these 270, how many have been made, as nearly as you can answer?"

A. "There is a very small Proportion; I cannot tell how many."

Q. "Have Ten been received?"

A. "From the 1st of January to the 1st of October there ought to have been Nine Letters from each Catechist; that would be 270 Letters."

Q. "How many of these 270 have you received?"

A. "I declare I do not think there are 50."

Q. "Do you believe that as many as Ten out of those 270 regular monthly Reports have been received by you?"

A. "Upon my word I doubt it."

Q. "Can you recollect any One Instance in which a Catechist has made one of his monthly Returns since the 1st of last January?"

A. "I do not think there is."

The Instruction supplied in these Schools is very limited. The only Books used are the Scriptures, several Expositions of the Church Catechism, and other religious Works. A Book called "The Protestant Catechism," formerly in use at these Schools, was discontinued several Years ago, as justly liable to Exception; but among the Expositions of the Catechisms still retained, there is one by Dr. Stopford, which we think ought not to be put into the hands of Children; and among the religious Works is one, entitled, "A Confutation of the Errors of the Church of Rome," by Bishop Porteus, which contains Passages calculated to keep alive strong Feelings of political and religious Animosity. No Books of useful miscellaneous Information or Amusement are on the List of the Society. Neither do we find that any Charter School has availed itself of the Opportunity of obtaining the Supply of Books, or Lending Library, gratuitously afforded by the Society for the Education of the Poor to all Schools which apply for such a Grant. These Books consist of unexceptionable Works, conveying useful Knowledge in the most attractive attractive form for Children, and if introduced into the Charter Schools, might have assisted in giving that Knowledge of common things, the Want of which is so apparent in these Children, and which is frequently stated as a considerable Impediment to their Advancement. It will be seen by reference to the detailed Reports of Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee, that it was a frequent Subject of Complaint with them, that the Children had learnt their Catechism by rote only, but were entirely ignorant of the Meaning of what they repeated, and also very deficient in Scriptural Knowledge. At Trim in 1817, the Children were found very ignorant in this respect. Mr. Thackeray says, the Catechist seemed to lament it; and he adds "I think, unless some united Efforts be made on the Part of all interested in the State of this Establishment, in its moral and religious Progress, I cannot perceive any Benefit will result to the Society from its Continuance; the Master and Mistress themselves appear to possess very limited Qualifications to promote this Improvement."

Protestant
Charter Schools.

Trim School.
Appendix, No. 27.

Monivea School.
Appendix, No. 23.
p. 59.

Appendix, No. 68.

At Monivea, in the same Year, although the Children repeated the whole of Mann's Catechism without a Fault "they appeared defective in Scriptural Knowledge altogether, almost, though it was reported that they read the Scriptures daily." The Catechist attributed the non-answering of the Children in a great Degree to their being examined by a Stranger, but declined examining them himself. On Mr. Lee's Visitation of this School in 1820, he says, that "the Progress of the Children cannot be said to amount to any thing better than a mere Repetition of the Church Catechism, with Mann's Exposition." He adds, "indeed I think it impossible they could learn any thing better from the System I find in use here. A Monitor asks a Question at one end of the Room, which is answered with One Voice by 85 Girls. This Plan was pursued by all the Instructors. I have pointed out the Evil of it; and I believe I succeeded in convincing the Catechist, who is very willing to receive any Suggestion which he thinks useful to the Children, that no permanent or useful Instruction can possibly result from such a System. He has promised it shall be discontinued in future."

Killoteran.
Appendix, No. 19.
Cashel School.
Appendix, No. 11.
p. 47.

At Killoteran, in 1817, the Prevalence of Ophthalmia was stated by the Master as preventing the Children from learning their Catechisms, or advancing in Knowledge of the Scriptures; and at Cashel where great Ignorance was exhibited, it was suspected that they could have answered more satisfactorily if they would, but of the Justice of this Suspicion Mr. Thackeray says he was not able to form any Opinion.

Appendix, No. 136.

Mr. M'Ghee, who was Usher at Santry for upwards of Four Years, and had there the Opportunity of seeing Boys from all the Charter Schools, states, that in his Opinion "the Boys were extremely ignorant of every thing else but the Scriptures, and often extremely ignorant of them also;" and he adds, "although the Charter Schools profess to be Seminaries of Religion and Industry, they are quite the contrary, as far as my Experience goes."

Appendix, No. 124.

Mr. William Moffett, who was nearly 15 Years an Usher in different Charter Schools, states, that "he does not think the Boys in Charter Schools as well taught as they ought to be, for the Time and Pains bestowed upon them;" and he adds, upon being asked whether the Children in these Schools are generally impressed with religious Ideas, "they do not shew it much, if they are."

Appendix, p. 120.

Mr. Thackeray states, that "during his first Visit he had reason to complain that so many Children have not received the Sacrament as might have been expected." Mr. Thackeray's Opinion of the Proportion of Children who, in a well-regulated Charter School, ought to be admitted to this Ordinance, may be collected from the Example of the School of Dundalk under his own Superintendence, and in which we perceive with Pleasure that it amounted to Twenty out of an hundred.

It appeared further, that even on his Second Visitation of the Schools there were not fewer than Nine at least in which not One of the Children had received the Sacrament in the course of the preceding Year, though of competent Age if they had been properly instructed.

The Prejudice which was stated by the Third Report of the late Board of Education to have formerly existed against Charter Schools, and the Children educated in them, unfortunately continues to prevail at present. It is stated, on respectable Evidence,

Evidence, that Children from such Schools are desirous, if possible, to conceal that they have been Inmates of those Establishments; that it is an Opprobrium to have been educated in them; and that a Master of a Charter School who may happen to have an Usher sent to him from the Society, is anxious to conceal the Fact from the Children.

In Service, these Children are stated to be helpless and ignorant, and too often the Sport and Derision of their Associates. If protected by their Masters and Mistresses, they become suspected, and if not protected they often run away, being unable to withstand the Treatment they receive from their Fellow Servants. It seems that they are called by various Terms of Reproach, such as "Parisheens," and "Charter School Brats," which latter Term, in Ireland, implies Illegitimacy; and it is certain that they are not sought for as Servants or Apprentices with the Eagerness which might be anticipated in the Case of Children bred up with the Care and Attention which might be expected from the Constitution of the Society. At Ballycastle, in 1818, Mr. Thackeray found Ten Girls "so ill taught and so ill qualified, that not even the Offer of a Bounty would tempt the commonest Farmer to receive them." Appendix, pp. 69. 108.

From whatever Cause it may arise, it is to be lamented, that there were in the various Schools of the Society in December 1824 no fewer than 706 Individuals, (for Children they can hardly be called), who have passed the Age of Apprenticeship, and who are maintained at a great Expense to the Public.

This large Accumulation of Children and Adults will be more striking when it is seen that they are of the following Ages.

	N ^o
Of the Age of 14	152
15	167
16	159
17	108
18	48
19	34
20 and upwards	38
	706

We feel bound to observe, that in addition to the increased Expenditure thus incurred, considerable moral Mischief is to be apprehended from keeping so large a Number of young Persons confined together under all the Circumstances of their Situation.

If the Accumulation of Children in these Schools where large Apprentice Fees are given, be compared with the anxious Demand for Children apprenticed without Fees from the Kildare-Place Model Schools, as stated by Mr. Veevers, the Contrast will be very striking. He states that the Applications made to him for Apprentices from the Children educated in that School are so numerous as to be "a considerable Annoyance to him."

The Incorporated Society appears to have long been aware of these Difficulties, and from time to time have called upon the Local Committees and Catechists to exert themselves to procure Situations for the Children. It is however clear to us, that there is a Class of Persons connected with the Society whose Interest is opposed to sending out the Apprentices so early, namely, the Masters, who are charged for the Labour of the Children, and whose Profits of course increase with their growing Years and Strength. This Custom of charging the Master for the Labour of the Children has been, we think, productive of great Mischief. It was noticed by Mr. Gibbons, Secretary to the Society, in his Examination before the Committee of the Irish House of Commons in 1788, but the Society has continued the Practice, and no subject of Complaint has been brought forward so frequently by the Children, as being obliged to work at Periods allowed by the Rules for Instruction or Relaxation. Boys have been kept for a Month together on on the Farms occupied by the Masters, without going into School, or receiving any Instruction whatever.

Protestant
Charter Schools.

In the Sligo School, where Weaving was introduced, the bad Effect of this System is peculiarly apparent. The severe Punishments inflicted are chiefly to be attributed to the interested Motives of the Master, whose Profits by this System of compulsory Labour were very considerable. On finding several Boys in the School of advanced Age, and who ought long before to have been bound out, we inquired of the Master why they had not been apprenticed. The Master said they had been offered Places as Apprentices to Weavers, but had refused to go. The Boys stated that they were able to weave as well as Journeymen, and that they saw no Reason for being bound Apprentice to a Trade which they had been taught already; but they said they were willing to be bound out to any other.

Appendix, p. 87, 94.

In 1818, Mr. Thackeray in his Report says, with reference to this School, "it is much to be regretted that Boys so well instructed in weaving, and so capable of earning so much in that way, cannot find Masters in that Trade. I perceive many of these go out as Servants." The real Reason does not seem to have been suspected by the Visitor. It will be readily conceived that it was for the Interest of the Master, that the best Weavers should not leave the School as long as he could detain them, and the Measures resorted to by him for that Purpose demand Observation.

It is required by the Rules of the Society that the Age of every Child should be returned in each Half-yearly Report, and that a List should at the same Time be certified by the Catechist, of the Names and Ages of such Children as he shall judge from Age and Instruction fit to be apprenticed." The following Table contains the Ages of Twelve Boys in this School, as stated by the Master in Five successive Half-yearly Returns transmitted by him to the Committee of Fifteen at the several Periods mentioned. It will be seen from this Statement, that some of the Boys were returned in June 1824 as being younger than in June 1822; and their irregular Progress, and the occasional Alteration of their Ages in successive Returns, is very striking. There appears no Check upon these Irregularities, which had passed unnoticed.

NAME.	Admitted in Register.		Age as stated at Time of Admission.	Age as reported 25th June 1822.	Age as reported 25 Dec. 1822.	Age as reported 25 June 1823.	Age as reported 25 Dec. 1823.	Age as reported 25 June 1824.
	Year.	Month.
David Porter -	1812	Nov.	7	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	16	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	17
Thomas Ludden -	1814	April.	6 $\frac{1}{4}$	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$
Maurice Behan -	1815	March	7	13 $\frac{1}{4}$	14	14 $\frac{1}{4}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15
Daniel Kenzie -	1813	June	7	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	16	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	14 $\frac{1}{4}$	15
James Kenzie -	1813	Do.	6	14 $\frac{1}{4}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	13 $\frac{1}{2}$	14
Patrick Grady -	1815	March	7	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	16	16
John Phaire -	1812	Feb.	6	16	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	17	16	16 $\frac{1}{2}$
Denis Gallagher -	1815	April	6	13	13 $\frac{1}{2}$	14	13	13 $\frac{1}{2}$
Terence Gallagher	1814	Sept.	6	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$
John Dimby -	1811	Dec.	6	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	16	17 $\frac{1}{4}$	15	18 $\frac{1}{4}$
Philip M'Gann -	1815	March	8	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$
James Gallagher -	1816	March	8	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{4}$

The 4th Rule of the Society directs, that "the Masters and Mistresses are to state distinctly in each Quarterly Abstract in the Column appropriated for that Purpose, the net Value, Kind, and Profit of the Children's Labour." "No Premium,"

"Premium," it is added, "will be granted to any Master or Mistress by whom this Rule is neglected." This Regulation, however, seems never to have been attended to.

We cannot but think it fortunate that the weaving System has not been introduced into a greater Number of the Schools. However plausible the Principle, the practical Effect would have been to convert them into common Workhouses, without Controul upon the interested Proceedings of the Masters.

A View of the Charter School Institutions, which has lately been relied on as a Justification for their Continuance, remains to be noticed. It is stated, that these Establishments are of great Service, as providing an Asylum for Orphans and other Poor Children in a Country where there is no legal Provision for the Poor; it is however to be observed, how inadequate the Relief must be that can be thus afforded by the Admission into these Schools of about 200 Children in the Year out of the whole Population of Ireland. So long as the Doors are open, there will indeed always be Applications for Admission, and those who have most Interest or most Activity may succeed. A few limited Districts may thus be partially relieved, while the Country in general will feel comparatively little Benefit.

Thus it appears that in the course of One Year, from May 1821 to May 1822, Nineteen Boys were admitted into the Charter School at Strangford*, and Sixteen Girls into that at Dundalk, from Two contiguous Parishes, all on the Recommendation of One Family, being nearly a Fifth of the Total Annual Average Number of Admissions into all the Schools of the Institution. Appendix, No. 161, 162.

To relieve the whole of Ireland on the same Scale would require an Expenditure of above 20 Millions Sterling per Annum, and it may be doubted whether such Relief, if practicable, would be either very sensibly felt or very gratefully acknowledged.

But however great and numerous the Instances of Mismanagement and Abuse which prevail in these Establishments, it appears to us, that the main Objection arises from the mistaken Principles on which they are founded. A System of Education which separates Children from their Kindred, and which turns them out into Life when just arrived at Maturity, without Friends or Relations, and without that practical Experience which Children under ordinary Circumstances insensibly acquire, by witnessing the Realities of Life around them, does not appear to us likely to attain the Benefits expected from these Establishments.

We are convinced that if a Thousand Children educated in Charter Schools were to be compared with an equal Number who had remained in the apparently wretched Cabins inhabited by their Parents, but who had attended orderly and well regulated Day Schools, it would be found, not only that the latter had passed their Years of Instruction far more happily to themselves, but that when arrived at the Age of Manhood, they would upon a general Average be in every respect more valuable and better instructed Members of Society; they would have improved in Knowledge under Circumstances which would have strengthened and confirmed their Connection with all those to whom they must naturally look for Protection and Assistance, and would enter upon Life with their Affections awakened, their Principles confirmed, and their Character raised by the Reliance they would have learnt to place in their own Exertions, and in the Practice they would have acquired of controlling and conducting themselves.

It is very different in the Instance of a Boy let loose from a Charter School, who has lived in a State of Existence entirely artificial. All his Wants having been supplied by the Care of others, he has become peevish, fretful, and impatient, if not supplied according to Rule. His Mind is impressed by a Feeling of Sullenness,

* It should be stated, that the Local Committee of this School protested against what they termed such "undue Influence," and stated, that "the Doors of the Establishment were, for the most Part, closed to every Recommendation, excepting from the Quarter alluded to." A Correspondence ensued on the Occasion between the Local Committee and the Committee of Fifteen, which does not appear to have produced any Benefit to the Establishment. (See Appendix, Nos. 156 & 157.)

Protestant
Charter Schools.

resulting from a System of Severity and Terror. His Expectations have been unduly raised as to his own future Prospects, though the Habits of Indolence and Apathy which have appeared to us peculiarly to characterise these Children, render them altogether unsuited to the active, patient, persevering Exertions which are necessary to their Success in Life.

Expenditure.
Appendix, No. 172.

The Expenditure of the Society during the Ninety Years it has been in operation has been no less than £. 1,612,138, of which the Sum of £. 1,027,715 was derived from Parliamentary Grants.

Appendix, No. 169.

We have in vain endeavoured to obtain any Account of the Total Number of Children admitted during the same Period; we find, however, that from May 1821 to January 1825, 1,013 Children were admitted, being on an Average about 200 yearly; we find also, that the Total Number apprenticed from the beginning has been only 12,745, and of whom not more than 1,155 have received the Marriage

Appendix, No. 172.

Portions of £. 5 given to all Apprentices duly serving their Time, and marrying Protestants.

From these Statements it results, that 7,905 Children apprenticed cost just a Million Sterling.

Of the Children so apprenticed, a large Proportion certainly have not turned out well; we have already adduced some strong Reasons for entertaining such an Apprehension. A short Account is annexed to the Report of the late Board of Education, which states, on the Authority of Mr. Nelson, who had been employed by the Society to inquire into the Conduct and Treatment of the Children apprenticed, that out of 196, only 101 were doing well; and from a more extended Inquiry and Return, made by the same Person to the Society in the Year 1814, the following Result was obtained.

Appendix, No. 171.

Apprenticed from 1803 to 1814	Boys	-	-	-	1,535
	Girls	-	-	-	934
	Total	-	-	-	2,519

Of the former, 982 were stated as then doing well, and 603 had either eloped, or enlisted, or been discharged for bad Conduct. The Return speaks more favourably of the Girls, 205 of whom, however, had eloped or turned out ill. But there is Reason to apprehend, that this Report must be considered as far too favourable, when it is observed, that not One-tenth Part of the Number apprenticed have obtained the Marriage Portion given by the Society to those who have duly served their Time, and married Protestants within Seven Years from the Expiration of it.

Buildings and Repairs.

We have found it impossible to ascertain the Sum expended in Buildings and Repairs, for any Period prior to the Year 1806; but it must have been very considerable, as the Society have built and abandoned a Variety of Schools within this Period.

The Total Number built appears to have been 61, of which only 34 are now remaining.

The Sum expended for Buildings and Repairs since 1806 amounts to £. 83,689, and as only Two new Schools have been built since that Time, this Sum must have been expended chiefly in Repairs of the old Buildings.

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting Religion.

Association incorporated for discountenancing Vice, and promoting the Knowledge and Practice of the Christian Religion.

THIS Society originated on the 9th of October 1792, in a Meeting of Three Individuals, Members of the Established Church, who entered into certain Resolutions, in the First of which the Objects of the Founders were thus explained:—

Resolved,

Resolved, " That the rapid Progress which Infidelity and Immorality are making throughout the Kingdom calls loudly on every Individual, both of the Clergy and of the Laity, who has at Heart the welfare of his Country, or the Honor of God, to exert all his Powers to stem the baneful Torrent. But as many may be disheartened by considering the Impotence of separate Attempts to discountenance Vice, and to promote the Cause of Religion and Piety, it appears to us advisable to associate for that laudable Purpose."

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

In the Infancy of the Society its Funds were chiefly employed in the Purchase of Bibles and Prayer Books, in printing Religious and Moral Tracts (which were circulated by the Members at reduced Prices), and in distributing Premiums for the Promotion of Catechetical Examinations. Their Operations, however, must necessarily have been on a limited Scale, as we find that the Subscriptions received between 1792 and 1800 amounted only to £. 1,989. 13 s. 8 d.

In the Year 1800 the Society was incorporated by an Act of the Legislature, and in the following Year a Grant of £. 300 was voted to it by Parliament. Encouraged by this Support, the Association determined to extend the Sphere of their Operations. The Distribution of religious Works, and the Premiums given at the Catechetical Examinations, were increased, and a Resolution was taken to apply a Part of the augmented Funds to the Support of Schools.

The Association being supported and managed by Clergymen of the Established Church, the Assistance afforded by it was particularly directed to the Schools which, by the Acts of 28th Henry 8th, cap. 15, and of 7th William 3d, cap. 4, the Clergy were bound to establish, but for the Maintenance of which no Funds had hitherto been provided. A circular Notice was therefore issued by the Association, in which they expressed their Hope that by the Continuance of Parliamentary Aid they should be enabled to assist in the Establishment and Support of Parochial Schools, and they stated that they were ready to receive Applications from Clergymen willing to connect their Schools with the Association.

With respect to the general Character of this Society, and the leading Principles on which its Operations are conducted, it is necessary to observe, that though the Object of its Members is to promote the religious and moral Instruction of all who are disposed to take the Benefit of its Institutions, their Plan is particularly adapted to the Instruction of those who belong to the Established Church. This Principle was laid down in one of the original Resolutions in these Terms:—" That to guard against the Danger of Enthusiasm it be established as a fundamental Principle, that nothing be attempted contrary to the Doctrine and Discipline of the Established Church, or that shall lead in the smallest Degree to a Separation from the same."

The Aid which the Association are willing to give towards the Establishment of Schools is directed to Two Objects: building School Houses, and granting Salaries to Teachers. Before any Money is granted in aid of building, it is required that a Piece of Ground should be obtained on a permanent Endowment, and vested in the Minister and Churchwardens for the use of the Schools; if a permanent Endowment cannot be procured, a Lease of a Portion of Land, of the Value of Forty Shillings per Annum, must be obtained. By the Terms of the Deed of Conveyance, the Conditions of the Grant are declared to be, that the Minister of the Parish for the time being shall have the sole Power of appointing and of removing the Schoolmaster; that the Master " shall teach and instruct all such Children as shall be named to him for that Purpose by the written Direction and Permission of the said Minister, in the Principles and Practice of reading and writing the English Language, and of Arithmetic, and to such of them as are Members of the Established Church, the Church Catechism of the Established Church of England, in such Mode, and according to such Plan of Education, and under and subject to such Regulations, as shall from time to time be in Writing ordered by the said Minister;" and that no person shall be allowed to take Possession of the Premises, &c. without signing a written Agreement to quit on the Requisition of the Minister.

Appendix, No. 190.

Conditions

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

Conditions are also made to secure the substantial Fabric of the House, and the due Application of the Money. On proper security being given for a Compliance with these Terms, the Association contribute a sum not exceeding £. 50, stipulating at the same time that Double the Sum granted by them shall be provided by private Subscription. In two Instances the Land for the Scite of the School has been conveyed to Lay Trustees; in One to the Archdeacon, and in another to the Dean and Chapter; in Three to the Churchwardens alone, and in one Case to an individual Clergyman; in all other Cases the Conveyance is to the Minister and Churchwardens. In Thirty-two Cases the Lands conveyed have been Glebe Lands. Under the above Conditions, we find that Fifty-nine Schools have received Aid towards building, in Sums varying from £. 20 to £. 50.

Salaries are allowed to Masters and Mistresses on the following Conditions :—

1st. That there shall, as in the Case of building, be a Grant of Land, and a Contribution for the annual Support of the School, unless the Clergyman shall, in a satisfactory Manner, show that he has made due Exertion for these Purposes without Effect.

2d. That the School shall not receive annual pecuniary Aid from any other public Institution.

3d. That the Master and Mistress shall be of the Established Church, and that the Scriptures shall be read by all who have attained suitable Proficiency.

4th. That no Catechism shall be taught except that of the Church of England, and no Books used of which the Association shall disapprove.

If these Conditions are complied with, the Association grants a Salary, not exceeding £. 12 a Year, to a Master, and an additional Gratuity, not exceeding £. 6 if he conduct himself well.

In order to secure Compliance with these Rules, it is provided, that a Half-yearly Report of the State of the School, and the Conduct of the Master or Mistress, shall be regularly transmitted, according to a prescribed Form, certified by the Minister or Curate of the Parish, and approved by the Committee of Schools, before any Salary can be paid. We find that in Practice this Report is frequently prepared by the Master or Mistress, and merely signed by the Minister or Curate.

In all Cases where Aid is solicited for a School the Clergyman must be the Applicant; but if the Grant be consented to, it is made to the School, and not to the Clergyman, so that on his Death or Removal from the Benefice it is continued to his Successor as long as the Conditions are complied with.

The Appointment of the Schoolmaster is left solely to the Clergyman, provided always, that he appoint a Member of the Established Church. Of 249 Schools now in connection with the Association, the Masters of 99 hold also the Situation of Parish Clerks; and we are informed by some of the Managers of the Institution, that this Union of Offices is thought to be advantageous, by increasing the Respectability of the Individual who holds them.

The Plan of Instruction is in part explained by the Terms which the Association require to be complied with, before they make a Grant to a School. English Reading, (of which the reading of the Holy Scriptures forms a leading Part,) Writing, and Arithmetic, constitute the general Instruction. It is an Object also in these Schools to prepare the Children of the Established Church for the Catechetical Examinations which the Association has from its first Institution endeavoured to promote. The Schools nevertheless are open to Children of all Persuasions, provided only that they conform to the Rules. All must read the Scriptures, but none excepting those who belong to the Established Church are called upon to receive Instruction in the Church Catechism, the only one allowed to be taught. It appears, however, by the Evidence of Dr. Elrington, that in some (we suppose very few) Cases, Roman Catholic Children have attended at the Catechetical Examinations, and have been successful in the Competition for Premiums.

It is not the Practice of the Association to furnish Books for the use of their Schools; the Members indeed may take advantage of the Facility of Purchase which the Society affords, in the Case of Bibles, Testaments, and religious Works. The ordinary School Books, Paper, Slates, &c. are either provided by the Scholars themselves, themselves, or by Subscription. We are persuaded that the System of Instruction in these Schools would be rendered considerably more effective if the Association should avail themselves of the Aid of the Kildare-Place Society, by purchasing the School Requisites which they furnish at original Cost, and by Application for their gratuitous Grants of Books.

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

Though the Schools established by the Association have been principally for the Education of Children of the Established Church, they appear to have been attended almost as numerous by Roman Catholics as by Protestants. Amongst the Documents accompanying the General Report printed by Authority of the Association in the Year 1820, is a List, dated November 1819, of the Schools at that time receiving their Aid, and which contains a Statement of the Numbers on the Roll of each School, distinguishing Protestants from Roman Catholics. By this List it appears that the total Number on the Rolls of the 119 Schools then connected with the Association, with the Exception of Five from which there were no Returns, was 8,828, and that of this Number 4,460 were returned as Protestants, and 4,368 as Roman Catholics.

In the Sermon preached before the Association on the 14th June 1822, by the Rev. Dr. C. R. Elrington, and printed, with other Documents, in a Report for that Year, it is stated, that in 164 Schools which had been established previously to that Date, the Numbers receiving Instruction were 6,200 Protestants, and 5,334 Roman Catholics.

According to a Statement which has lately been transmitted to us, the Number of Children in daily Attendance on the Association Schools in September 1824 is reported to have been 15,922, of whom 9,578 are stated to be Protestants, and 6,344 Roman Catholics. The Returns do not furnish the Means of distinguishing the different Classes of Protestants.

In the course of our Inspection, the Schools connected with the Association appeared to us generally to be of a very orderly and highly respectable Description.

The Society is not open to all who may wish to belong to it, though willing to comply with its Conditions; the Members are admitted by Ballot, and Candidates have sometimes been excluded. The ordinary Business of the Society is conducted by Four standing Committees, a Committee of Schools and Education, a Committee of Tracts, a Catechetical Committee, and a Committee of Accounts. The Members of these Four special Committees form a general Committee or Council.

The Assistant Secretary, who also acts as Sub-Treasurer, receives a Salary of £. 300 per Annum. The effective Superintendence of the Schools rests chiefly with the Parochial Patron, by whom the Half-yearly Returns are directed to be signed. The Committee of Management, however, appear on Two Occasions to have had recourse to an Inspection, though no System has been hitherto adopted by the Managers of the Institution for a regular Visitation of the Schools.

In the Years 1819 and 1820, the Reverend Mr. Lee, Curate of Newport in the County of Tipperary, undertook to visit and report on the Schools connected with the Society; and subsequently another special Survey of their Schools was, at the Request of the Association, undertaken by the Clergymen of the Districts in which they were situated. These Inspections brought many Circumstances under the Notice of the Association with which they had previously been unacquainted. Mr. Lee inspected 104 Schools, and his Opinion was generally favourable both with respect to their Management and to the Regularity of Attendance of the Children; not a few Instances were found, however, in which one or more of the Regulations of the Society were infringed, and some in which considerable Abuses existed with respect to the Application of the Funds.

At One Place in the Neighbourhood of Dublin there was no School or School House; in Two others the School had been discontinued, and the House shut up. In Two Cases the Schools had been committed to the Charge of Roman Catholic Teachers. In Two Schools no Testament was read, and in Six the Roman Catholic Catechism was taught. The Master was in a few Instances reported as either unfit for the Duty, or engaged in other Employments inconsistent with his Office; and some of the School Houses were described as merehovels, or

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

in a State of Neglect and Filth. The Salary allowed to the Master was in one Instance received by another Person, who had been his Predecessor, and who performed no Duty, and in another it appeared that the Master received only One Half of the Amount allowed by the Association. The School Houses had also in several Cases been employed as Meeting Houses for Preachers of various Denominations.

Immediate Steps appear to have been taken for correcting the Abuses reported by Mr. Lee. The annual Payments were directed to be suspended until the Regulations should be complied with, and in some Cases were finally withdrawn.

Of the Result of the Second special Inspection, our Accounts are not so precise. We are informed, however, that in all Cases where the Half-yearly Report is not regularly transmitted, or where it is in any material Point imperfect, the Salary is withheld. It appears, nevertheless, that Infringements upon the Rules of the Society, in the Management of their Schools, continued from Time to Time to occur.

We find by a Return furnished to us, that between 1819 and 1824, the Payments of Salaries have been stopped in 52 Instances. Amongst the Reasons stated for these Suspensions are, the Teacher not being of the Established Church—his being unqualified or negligent—the want of proper Certificates, and, in some Cases, the intended Transfer of the Aid to some other School in the Parish.

It appeared to us, in the course of our Inquiries, that One of the Rules of the Society was, according to the present Practice, materially relaxed. Notwithstanding the Regulation that no Assistance shall be afforded to a School which derives annual Aid from any other Institution, we find that in the Year 1824 Twenty-five Schools received Aid from the Kildare-Place Society, chiefly in the Form of Gratuities to the Masters, and Two other Schools received Aid from the Funds of the London Hibernian Society.

In the Year 1807 the Association undertook the Establishment of a Seminary for the Education of Schoolmasters and Parish Clerks, at Kildeemo, in the County of Limerick. A Building was enlarged at considerable Expence for this Purpose, and the Seminary placed under the Superintendence of the Clergyman of the Parish. Between that Period and 1817, Eighty-nine Persons, whose Ages varied from 18 to 24 Years, became qualified for the Stations to which they were destined. After a Time, however, it was found necessary to institute an Inquiry into certain Abuses which were said to have prevailed in the Management of the Funds of the Institution, and it was in consequence entirely broken up. The Association have lately determined on making a Second Attempt of the same Nature. An Arrangement has been made for that Purpose with the Governors of the Foundling Hospital, and an Apartment in that Building is now preparing.

We have already stated, that it is a leading Object with the Association to provide an extended System of Catechetical Instruction. Their Efforts for this Purpose are not confined to the Children educated in their own Schools, but extend to the various Protestant Charitable Institutions in Dublin and its Vicinity, and generally to the Promotion of Catechetical Instruction throughout Ireland. The Amount of the Funds applied to this Object in 1823 was £.1,594—the total Sum during the last Seven Years has been £.7,888. The number of Persons examined as Candidates for Premiums in 1823 was 24,924—the Number of Premiums awarded 4,187. In 1823 Returns were made of such Examinations from 204 Parishes—in 1824 from 113. By the Rules of the Society, the Examinations must be conducted either by the Clergyman of the Parish, or a Clergyman deputed to act for him. The leading Principle in these Examinations is to promote an Acquaintance with the sacred Scriptures, with the Catechism of the Church of England, and with the Liturgy and Service of that Church. The Examiner is directed not to return any young Persons for Premiums, except such as shall have evinced an Acquaintance, proportioned to their Age, with the Morning and Evening Prayers of the Church. The Competition is open, however, as already observed, to Persons of other religious Denominations, who may choose to avail themselves of the Offer.

It

It is provided that the Claims to Premiums shall not be estimated by the mere Quickness of Recollection or Exactness of Recitation, but rather according to "a clear Apprehension of the Meaning, a serious Attention to the Subject, and an Application of Scripture suitable to the Age of the Children."

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

The Association consider their System as peculiarly distinguished from that of any other Establishment for the Education of the Poor in Ireland, by the Provisions which they have made for extending religious Instruction through the Means now described. According to their General Report published in 1820, the Number of Copies of the Scriptures and Prayer Books, which had been distributed in Premiums during the Thirteen Years preceding that Date, had been 3,720 Bibles, 876 Testaments, and 5,541 Prayer Books, besides numerous Copies of the Whole Duty of Man, Nelson on the Feasts and Festivals of the Church of England, Bishop Porteus's Lectures on the Gospel of Saint Matthew, Secker's Lectures on the Catechism, and other Works.

We have stated that the earliest Attention of the Association was directed to the general Dissemination of the sacred Scriptures, and of religious and moral Publications. In order to effect these Objects, the Society supply to their Members, at reduced Prices, Copies of the Bible, New Testament, and Book of Common Prayer, and likewise of such other Books as have from time to time been recommended by a Committee specially appointed for this Purpose.

It is stated by the Members and Officers of the Society to be a leading Principle in the Selection of Books, that Writings of a controversial Character shall be avoided, as far as may be consistent with the Duty of giving to Persons belonging to the Church of Ireland the approved Works of the most eminent Protestant Writers of that Church; in the List, however, of religious Books, Tracts, &c. recommended and furnished by the Association at reduced Prices, we observe several of a highly controversial Nature.

The Association employs a Bookseller, who engages to supply the various Publications to the Members of the Society at fixed Prices. There are different Rules of Reduction in different Classes of Books, the greatest being on Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer Books. Of these, the Society in most Cases pay Two-thirds of the whole Price; and, in general, they pay One Half of the Price of the other Books.

An Alteration has been made within these Two Years in the Mode of dealing with their Bookseller. Before that Time it appears, that the Extent of his Profits on the Sale of the different Works had not, in fixing the Prices, been sufficiently taken into account. Early in the Year 1822, the Association found that these Profits were larger in the Aggregate than was necessary, and reduced the Rate to 20 per cent., being One-fifth of the Cost calculated on the Bookseller's actual Outlay in providing the Books. Of the total Cost, including the Profit, the Society pay such Proportion as they respectively fix in the several Classes of Books, the Remainder is charged to such Members as choose to become Purchasers for Distribution.

Since the Adoption of this Regulation, the Bookseller is required to produce Quarterly Accounts, showing the actual Amount of his Payments, and a full State of his Transactions with the Society. Before the Period which has been referred to, regular Accounts do not appear to have been exhibited; and we learn from the Bookseller, that his Profits on many Transactions for preceding Years could not be stated with Precision. His Profits on the Sales made for the Association in 1821 appear to have been as follows:

On Bibles	-	-	-	-	£. 762	10	10
Testaments	-	-	-	-	455	3	7½
Prayer Books	-	-	-	-	409	1	7

The Profit on Miscellaneous Books does not admit of being precisely ascertained from the Accounts; if taken at the same Rate as that on the Prayer Books, (which is allowed to be under the probable Estimate), it would amount to about £. 350, giving £. 1,906 as Profit to the Bookseller on the Sales of Books for that Year.

The Value of Books which may be drawn at reduced Prices by Members of the Association is regulated by the Amount of their Annual Contributions, each Member

Association for
discountenancing
Vice and promoting
Religion.

Member being entitled to purchase Books at reduced Prices for Distribution to the Amount of Three Times the Sum of his Subscription. This Rate was fixed by a Resolution of the Society in 1822, and is limited to One Half of the Amount allowed before that Time.

From the Increase of their Operations, and from an Apprehension that the Public Aid would not be continued to a sufficient Extent for their Purposes, the Association decided early in the Year 1822 on the Expediency of reducing their Expenditure.

This Decision seems to have been adopted in consequence of a Correspondence which took place in the Years 1819 and 1820, between the Chief Secretary for Ireland and the Association, in which the Principle was suggested that the future Annual Grants from Parliament should be made proportionate to the Amount of the Annual Contributions from the Members. A Communication from Government, dated 9th March 1822, stated that the Grant, which would be recommended to Parliament for the Year then current, would amount to £.6,464. After this Communication was received, viz. 14th March 1822, a Committee was appointed to consider in what Part of their Expenditure a Retrenchment might be made; and on their Report it was determined to suspend any Grants in aid of new Schools, and to diminish the Amount of Yearly Salaries to the Schoolmasters, the Maximum of which was reduced from £.15 to £.12. It was resolved also to effect a further Reduction, by lessening that Proportion of the Price of their Books which was defrayed by the Society, and restricting at the same time the Quantity or Value of the Books which each Member should be entitled to receive at reduced Prices, limiting the Value to Three Times the Amount of the Member's Subscription instead of Six Times, as then allowed.

These Measures appear to have produced a much greater Effect in contracting the Sphere of the Operations, than was either expected or intended; and the Association have taken the Resolution of so far retracing their Steps as to remove some of the Limitations then imposed. They have of late entertained various Applications for new Schools, and they have again adopted the former Regulations, as to the Proportion which the Society pays on the Prices of Bibles, Testaments, and Prayer Books. The Limitation on the Privilege of Members, as to the Number of Books receivable at reduced Prices, continues unaltered.

The Effect produced by the restrictive Measures on the Amount of Books distributed will appear from the following Statement. In the Year 1821, the Testaments distributed by means of the Society amounted to 22,735. In 1822, when the Restrictions were imposed, the Number was reduced at once to 7,586, being One-third only of the Issue in the preceding Year; and in 1823, the Number was still further reduced to 3,219, being considerably less than One Half the Amount of the Year 1822, and less than One-seventh of the Amount in the Year 1821. The Decrease on the Sale of Bibles, Prayer Books, and other religious Books, was nearly in the same Proportion.

We here subjoin a short Statement of the general Receipts and Expenditure of the Association. The Receipts from Subscriptions and Donations for the Four Years ended with 1823 were as follows:

In 1820	-	-	-	£. 589	8	6
1821	-	-	-	1,188	3	11
1822	-	-	-	1,296	17	10
1823	-	-	-	1,065	17	6

The Amount of the Parliamentary Grants has varied very considerably in different Years. That for 1823 was £.9,084. 12s.

The total Amount of the Parliamentary Grants, which commenced in 1801, has been £.77,975. 11s. 3½d.

The total Sums expended by the Association, from the 25th March 1800 to the 5th January 1824, as stated by the Commissioners of Public Accounts, have been £.85,324. 8s. 6d., of which the Sums paid in Salaries and Gratuities to Schoolmasters has been £.18,424. 11s. 8d.

The

The total Number of Books sold on account of the Association, from 1800 to 1824, was as follows:

Bibles	- - - - -	67,123
Testaments and Prayer Books for 1800 and 1801	- - - - -	18,456
Testaments, 1802 to 1824	- - - - -	198,298
Prayer Books	- - - - -	122,179
Religious Books and Tracts from 1800 to 1824	- - - - -	979,826

Parochial Schools.

THE PAROCHIAL SCHOOLS to which we have so often alluded as being provided by the Clergy under the Acts of Henry the Eighth and William the Third, have not so separate a Character as to enable us to give an Account of them as a distinct Class. Parochial Schools.

In the several Benefices in Ireland, which amount to 1,242, there are 782 Schools, to which the respective Clergymen annually contribute pecuniary Aid, amounting altogether to £. 3,299. 19s. 4d.

There are, in addition to this Number, many Schools to which the Clergy have given Assistance, either by Grants of Land or of Houses, or by Donations of Books, or Subscription to the building of School Rooms. Appendix, No. 2.

Though several of these Schools are in great Measure maintained by the respective Clergymen, we found, very generally, that the Practice continues which was noticed by the Commissioners of the Board of Education in their Report dated November 2, 1810, in which they state, "that a Custom has universally prevailed (though we cannot trace the Period of its Commencement), for the Incumbents of Parishes in which Schools are kept to allow the Schoolmaster Forty Shillings per Annum as his Salary; and whenever this small Stipend (utterly inadequate at present) is paid by the Clergyman to a Schoolmaster, the School is called a Parish School."

There are many Benefices in which no such School is provided as the Acts above mentioned have directed. For the most part, however, the respective Clergymen take care that a School shall be kept. Of these not less than 250 are in connexion with the Association for discountenancing Vice. Many others derive Aid either from the Kildare-Place Society, the Lord Lieutenant's Fund, or from the Trustees of Erasmus Smith.

The Character of the Schools depends in a great Measure on the Rules of the Society with which they may be in connexion; and the Description we have given of the Schools of the Association may be considered as in a great Degree applicable to what are still called Parochial Schools.

Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland, commonly called "The Kildare-Street Society."

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

THE Schools established by the Association for discountenancing Vice were at once too few in Number, and too Protestant in Character, to become generally available for the Education of Roman Catholic Children, who continue to remain in most Instances without any other Instruction than such as they could obtain in that ordinary Class of Country Pay Schools, generally known in Ireland by the Name of "Hedge Schools," which were very frequently of an objectionable Character.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

The Education of the lower Orders in Ireland was thus circumstanced, when in the Year 1812 it came under the Consideration of the Commissioners of Education in Ireland, whom we have before adverted to.

In their Fourteenth and last Report, signed amongst others by His Grace the Lord Primate, His Grace the Archbishop of Cashel, the Bishop of Killalla, and the Provost of the University of Dublin, we find the Recognition of a new Principle as applied to Education in Ireland. The Commissioners state, "that they had applied their Efforts to the framing of a System which, whilst it should afford the Opportunities of Education to every Description of the lower Classes of the People, might at the same time, by keeping clear of all Interference with the particular religious Tenets of any, induce the whole to receive its Benefits as one undivided Body, under one and the same System, and in the same Establishments."

The Commissioners then proceed to state their confident Expectations, that such a Plan would be cordially accepted by those to whom it should be presented, "if all Interference with the particular religious Tenets of those who are to receive that Instruction should in the First Instance be unequivocally disclaimed and effectually guarded against." "We conceive this" (they add) "to be of essential Importance in any new Establishments for the Education of the lower Classes in Ireland, and we venture to express our unanimous Opinion, that no such Plan, however wisely and unexceptionably contrived in other respects, can be carried into effectual Execution in this Country, unless it be explicitly avowed and clearly understood, as its leading Principle, that no Attempt shall be made to influence or disturb the peculiar religious Tenets of any Sect or Description of Christians."

By the same Report the total Number of Schools in Ireland in the Year 1812 is estimated at about 4,600, and the Number of Children receiving Instruction in them at about 200,000.

The Instruction afforded in a great Majority of the common Schools is represented as being extremely limited, and the Masters in general as very ill-qualified to give even that Instruction, having themselves been taught in Schools of a similar Description. It states that "the Poverty of the lower Classes of the People, while it limits the Recompence of the Masters to the low Rates above-mentioned, and thus holds out no Temptation to a better Class to undertake the Office of Instructors, produces Effects if possible still worse, by incapacitating them from purchasing such Books as are fit for Children to read; whence it frequently happens, that instead of being improved by religious and moral Instruction, their Minds are corrupted by Books calculated to incite to lawless and profligate Adventure, to cherish Superstition, or to lead to Dissension or Disloyalty."

The Report proceeds to recommend the Appointment of a Board of Commissioners with extensive Powers, to substitute a systematic and uniform Plan of Instruction in place of these ill-taught and ill-regulated Schools—to prescribe the Mode of Education to be pursued in them, and to exercise a general Superintendence. "The Commissioners to be empowered to receive and dispose of Parliamentary Grants for building and endowing Schools—to purchase or accept Conveyances for the Sites of such Schools—to decide in the last resort on the Appointment, Conduct, and Dismissal of Masters—to prescribe the Course and Mode of Education—to provide for the Expence of furnishing Books, and to have a general Controul over the Whole of the proposed Establishments for the Instruction of the lower Classes."

The Report further recommends, "That the Commissioners so to be appointed should apply themselves to the preparing a sufficient Number of well qualified Masters to undertake the Conduct of such Supplementary Schools as they should from time to time proceed to endow." The Report adds, "That the Attention of the Commissioners should also be directed to the Selection of proper Books for the use of all the Schools under their Management, and that nothing should be taught in any of them without the express Approbation of the Commissioners, nor any Book introduced which has not been sanctioned by them."

The

The Report proceeds to express a confident Persuasion "that in such Selection of Books it would be found practicable to introduce not only a Number of Books in which moral Principles should be inculcated in such a Manner as is likely to make deep and lasting Impressions on the youthful Mind, but also ample Extracts from the Sacred Scriptures themselves, an early Acquaintance with which 'it deems' of the utmost Importance, and indeed indispensable, in forming the Mind to just Notions of Duty, and sound Principles of Conduct; and that the Study of such a Volume of Extracts from the Sacred Writings would form the best Preparation for that more particular religious Instruction, which it would be the Duty and Inclination of their several Ministers of Religion to give at proper Times and in other Places to the Children of their respective Congregations."

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

With these Recommendations the Commissioners closed their Labours, and we have no Doubt that the whole Subject became a Matter of anxious Consideration to the Irish Government. There is reason to believe that the Selection of Commissioners for carrying these Propositions into effect was found to be a Point of considerable Difficulty; and it may have been owing in part to this Circumstance, that it was thought right, in order to try the Experiment of the Principles above recommended, to make a Parliamentary Grant to an Institution already in existence, rather than appoint a new Board for the Purpose. The Institution selected for this Object was called "The Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland." It had been formed upon the 2d of December 1811, and was managed by a Committee of Gentlemen of various religious Persuasions. The Principles which they had prescribed to themselves for their Conduct, were to promote the Establishment and assist in the Support of Schools, in which the Appointment of Governors and Teachers, and the Admission of Scholars, should be uninfluenced by religious Distinctions, and in which the Bible or Testament, without Note or Comment, should be read by all the Scholars who had attained a suitable Proficiency in Reading, excluding Catechisms and Books of religious Controversy; wishing it at the same time distinctly to be understood, that the Bible or Testament was not to be used as a School Book from which Children should be taught to spell or read. A Grant was accordingly made to the Society of £. 6,980 Irish Currency, in the Session of 1814-15.

Antecedent to this Period, the Society had held its Meetings in School-Street, an obscure and inconvenient situation in the Liberties of Dublin, but to which they had been attracted by the Circumstance of a large School having been there most successfully established ever since the Year 1786, and which had been conducted, to the Satisfaction of all concerned, precisely upon the Principles which the new Society proposed for their own Guidance. The School in School-Street was, in fact, at that Time the Model School for the practical Exhibition and Illustration of their Plans. When the Society became the Object of Parliamentary Assistance, a new and more convenient Site was sought for their Operations; Kildare-Place was selected, and the Parliamentary Grants for the first Two or Three Years appear to have been principally expended upon building one Model School for Males and another for Females, with Apartments for the Masters and Mistresses who were to be received for training, together with Rooms for the Purposes of the Committee and their Clerks, a Warehouse for the Stores of Stationery, Books, and other School Requisites, and a Shop for their Sale.

The Society took possession of this their new Situation in the Year 1817, from which Period the Commencement of the present System is to be dated.

Their Plan of Proceeding embraced the following distinct Objects:

Objects of the Society.

1. To assist by pecuniary Grants, as well the Founding and Establishment of new Schools, as the Improvement of Schools already in existence, upon condition, however, that the Principles of the Society should be adopted for their Regulation.

2. To maintain in their Premises at Kildare-Place Two Model Schools, one for Male and the other for Female Children, in which they might exhibit practically the Plan recommended by the Society, and at the same Time supply the Means of training Masters and Mistresses for Country Schools, in improved Modes of teaching.

3. To

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

3. To receive Masters and Mistresses properly recommended from the Country ; to board and lodge them while in Dublin, and to employ them in the Male and Female Model Schools until they should become qualified for carrying the Views of the Society into effect in the Country.

4. To publish a Variety of moral, instructive, and entertaining Books, fitted for supplanting the objectionable Works then in use, and which had been complained of by the Commissioners of Education in their 14th Report.

5. To Supply to Schools in Connexion with the Society gratuitously, and to all Purchasers at cost Prices, Spelling Books, Stationery, Slates, and all other ordinary School Requisites.

6. To maintain a System of annual Inspection of all Schools connected with the Society, and to employ Gentlemen of Education and Character for this Purpose.

7. To encourage, by annual Gratuities, but not by Salaries, such Masters and Mistresses as should appear, from the Reports of the Inspectors, to be particularly worthy of Approbation.

We shall now notice in succession the Proceedings of the Society towards the Attainment of these several Objects.

Establishment of Schools.

1. The Number of Schools and Pupils in Connection with the Society at the Commencement of each Year appears to have been as follows :

In the Year ending the 5th January	1816	-	-	-	None.
	1817	-	-	-	8
	1818	-	-	-	65
	1819	-	-	-	133
	1820	-	-	-	241
	1821	-	-	-	381
	1822	-	-	-	513
	1823	-	-	-	727
	1824	-	-	-	1,122
	1825	-	-	-	1,490

The Number of Pupils in these Schools is stated to have been

In the Year ending the 5th January	1816	-	-	-	None.
	1817	-	-	-	557
	1818	-	-	-	4,527
	1819	-	-	-	9,263
	1820	-	-	-	16,786
	1821	-	-	-	26,474
	1822	-	-	-	36,657
	1823	-	-	-	51,637
	1824	-	-	-	79,287
and in 1825 not fewer than		-	-	-	100,000

Of the Accuracy of the Statements with respect to the Children in attendance on the Schools we are not able as yet to speak with Certainty. We have called upon the Society for exact Returns, but they have not as yet been furnished to us. The List of the Schools can hardly be otherwise than correct ; but if the Numbers of the Pupils have a Reference to the Names upon the Roll, which is stated to us to be the Case, we must observe, that in these as well as in all other Day Schools in Ireland, the Number in actual Attendance at any given Time will be found to be very considerably less.

In the course of our several Tours of Inspection, we have been in many of the Schools connected with the Society ; and we found them, generally speaking, convenient, cleanly, and in good order, and the Instruction given in them extremely efficient.

Model Schools.

2. The Male and Female Model Schools at Kildare-Place are the next Subjects for Consideration.

These

These are held in Two very large Rooms, well adapted for the Purpose. We found 400 Boys in the Male, and 297 Girls in the Female School. Of the 400 Boys there were 158 of the Established Church, 17 Protestant Dissenters, and 225 Roman Catholics. Of the 297 Girls, there were 79 of the Established Church, Nine Protestant Dissenters, and 209 Roman Catholics.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

The Pupils in each of these Schools are generally the Children of Mechanics, Labourers, and the Lower Description of Tradesmen. Each Child pays 1*d.* per Week for Tuition. The System of Instruction is an Union of whatever has from time to time appeared to the Committee most deserving of Adoption in the several Systems of Bell, of Lancaster, and of Pestalozzi; the Proficiency which is attained in the Arithmetical System of the latter, by many of the elder Boys and several of the Candidate Masters, is very remarkable. The Order, Dispatch, Cleanliness, and Accuracy so desirable in the Conduct of a School, have attained a high Degree of Perfection in these Establishments.

In the Girls School, the several Descriptions of Needle-work appear to be Objects of particular Attention; and it is a Circumstance much to the Credit of all Persons concerned, that whilst so much Difficulty is complained of by other Institutions in finding Masters or Mistresses for the Apprentices whom they are desirous of sending forth, even with the Assistance of Apprentice Fees, there is an unsought and anxious Resort to the Model Schools of Kildare-Place, by Persons seeking as a Favour to be put in Communication with the Parents of the Children whom they find there.

Mr. Veevers, the Superintendant of these Schools, describes the Application, both for Male and Female Apprentices, as amounting to double the Number that can be supplied. He states, that he limits his Interference to introducing the Persons making Application to the Parents, who are not (as too often occurs with other Institutions) Masters or Mistresses in search of mere Servants, but Persons engaged in profitable Trades. Appendix, No. 207.

3. The local Advantages derived from these Schools, in supplying the Means of Education to a District of the City of Dublin, are, however, subordinate to their chief Object, which is that of affording the means of training Masters and Mistresses for Country Schools. Training of Masters and Mistresses.

We have already adverted to the Description given in the 14th Report, by the Commissioners who preceded us, of the Schoolmasters, who, in the year 1812, were dispensing Education to the Irish People. The Report speaks of the deplorable want of Qualifications in a great Majority of those who teach in the common Schools. The Commissioners add, they are persuaded that a more essential Service could not be rendered to the State, than by carrying into Effect a practical Mode of supplying a Succession of well-qualified Instructors for the Children of the lower Classes.

To supply such a practicable Mode, and to carry it into Effect, became therefore one of the Objects of this Society. The Model Schools were to supply the Means, and they invited the Resort of Masters properly recommended, and whose Ages should not be less than Eighteen, or more than Thirty-five Years. In order at once to enforce Discipline, and to secure the moral Conduct of the Masters while in training, the Society have provided for their Board and Lodging within their Premises. Seven or Eight Weeks, generally speaking, have been found sufficient for their Instruction.

The Expence of Maintenance, as well as of the Journeys to and from Dublin, are defrayed by the Society, in Cases where the Masters are intended for Schools to be conducted on the Principles of the Society; where this is not proposed, the Facilities for training are equally afforded, but the Persons recommending are called on to pay for the Expenses of the Master.

Accommodation was at first provided by the Society for 32 Masters, but this proving insufficient, it has been increased. Upon our Visit we found 48 Masters in training. There are at present about 80 Candidates for Admission, and Mr. Veevers, to whose Superintendence this Department is especially committed, considers

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

siders 300 as about the Number which he is enabled at present annually to send forth. The Number of Masters trained by the Society in successive Years have been as follows :

	N ^o
In the Year ending 5th January 1814	4
1815	16
1816	18
1817	24
1818	46
1819	33
1820	51
1821	86
1822	78
1823	127
1824	150
1825	207
Making in the whole	840

As there is no Distinction made with respect to the Religion of the Persons received for training, the Proportion of Protestants and Roman Catholics depends on the Number of Applications for Admission made by Persons of each Persuasion. We find that of the first 771 admitted, 461 were Protestants, and 310 Roman Catholics.

We learn from Mr. Veevers, that the Persons admitted to the Training School are latterly of a superior Description, and better qualified than they were a few Years ago. During the Day they are occupied in the Training School; the greater Part of their Leisure in the Evening is engaged in studying the Arithmetic of Pestalozzi. There is no Regulation as to Religion, except that they should attend their respective Places of Worship on Sunday. Mr. Veevers informs us, that on Sunday Evening they frequently read the Scriptures, though they are not required to do so; the Proposition, he says, originated from themselves, and that both Protestants and Roman Catholics applied to him, to know if he had any Objection. He says, he has never superintended this Exercise; that when he has heard of any thing like religious Disputation, he has instantly checked it; that the Training Masters have amongst each other no Distrust arising from their different Persuasions, that on the contrary they live in the utmost Harmony.

Appendix, No. 200.

Mr. Jackson, the Secretary, states, that they generally leave the Institution with greater Feelings of Attachment than they approached it; and "that they are very useful in the Country in removing the Prejudices that have gone abroad. Their sojourning with us," he adds, "cannot fail to have a good effect upon the Teachers. We should say so from the Nature of the Thing, but Experience warrants us in saying that the very best Consequences do result. Individuals of the different Persuasions live together like the Members of one Family. They have no Differences between them, and I have often questioned them upon the Manner in which they were employed out of School Hours, and how they lived together; and I have always been answered by such Individuals expressing great Satisfaction, and even Surprise, that they could live together so happily, differing as they did. I am sure the very best Consequences have resulted."

When the Teachers leave the Institution they obtain Certificates of Competence, distinguishing their several Degrees of Proficiency, which are said to be considered in the Country as a sort of Diploma. In a few Instances the Masters have subsequently been taken from the Country Schools to act as Tutors in private Families.

These Masters have been maintained while in Kildare-Place, and had their Journeys defrayed in coming from the Country and returning to it, at the average Expense of £. 7 each; a Result which, when contrasted with the Expenditure of from £. 100 to £. 150, which we are told is considered not unreasonable to expend upon a Candidate Teacher in the Charter School at Santry, is not more striking in the Disparity of Expence than it is in the superior Success which has attended it.

It

It is only within the present Year that the Society have established a similar Branch of their Institution for the training of School Mistresses, in Connection with the Female Model School. Accommodation for 36 has been provided, which will enable them to send forth an annual Supply to the Extent of about 220.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

4. The next Department to be noticed is that which relates to Books. The Fourteenth Report had characterized such as were in use in the Country Schools of Ireland in the Year 1822 as "calculated to incite to lawless and profligate Adventure, to cherish Superstition, or to lead to Dissension and Disloyalty."

School Books.

It became, therefore, the Object of this Society to prepare a Supply proper for the use of Schools, sufficiently entertaining to enter into fair Competition with the Works above referred to, and at the same time so cheap as necessarily to supplant them in the Market.

The Society, by an offer of their Books at a Price somewhat below their prime Cost, have induced the Hawkers, Pedlars, and other Dealers (who had been in the Habit of supplying the Country with the objectionable Works before mentioned) to become extensive Purchasers at their Depository, and they are now, in fact, amongst its principal Customers. The Loss to the Society upon the Sale amounts to about £. 650 per annum.

The Character of the Books formerly in use in the common Pay Schools of Ireland is described by the Reverend Mr. Cooke, Moderator of the Synod of Ulster, who states, that when he was a Boy, in the Five Schools through which he passed in the course of his Education, the Works which formed the Subject of his Studies, were "the Seven Champions of Christendom, the Destruction of Troy, Hero and Leander, Gesta Romanorum, the Seven Wise Masters, the Chinese Tales, the Romance called Parismos and Parismenos, Don Belianis of Greece, the History of Captain Freney, a Robber, Valentine and Orson, the Irish Rogues and Rapparees, and the History of Redmond O'Hanlan, a notorious Highwayman."

Appendix, No. 261.

From the Fourteenth Report of the Commissioners of Education, to which we have so frequently referred, it appears that the Character of the Supply had not improved in the Year 1812. Since that Period, in proportion as better Books have been sent into Circulation by the Society now under Consideration, those of an objectionable Character have been gradually disappearing, and as the Number of Volumes issued by the Society within the last Seven Years has amounted very nearly to a Million, we cannot doubt but that a proportionate Decrease has taken place in the Supply of the Works that were complained of.

We have nevertheless found the Traces of their former Abundance in the following Catalogue of Books, which, amongst many others of a scarcely less objectionable Character, have been returned to us, by the respective Clergymen, as having been found by them in the common Schools, subsequent to the issuing of our Commission:

"The History of the Seven Wise Masters and Mistresses of Rome, the Seven Champions of Christendom, the Seven Wonders of the World, the Irish Rogues and Rapparees, the Life of Captain Freney, the Robber, the Life of Redmond O'Hanlon, the Robber, the History of Captain Grant, a Gentleman Highwayman, the Garden of Love, the Feast of Love, the Effects of Love, the Economy of Beauty, the School of Delights, Nocturnal Revels, the Chevalier de Faublas, the Monk, the Life of Lady Lucy, the Life of Moll Flanders, Fanny Meadows, Donna Rosina, Rousseau's Eloisa, the Pleasant Art of Money Catching, the Devil and Doctor Faustus, the Feats of Astrologers, Tristram Shandy, the Arabian Nights, Pastorini's Prophecies, Guy Earl of Warwick, Parismos and Parismenos, Hero and Leander, the History of Philander Flashaway, and the History of Renard the Fox."

In the Appendix will be found a List of all the Books, except those of an elementary Description, which were found in the Schools of Four Counties, Donegal, Kildare, Galway, and Kerry, one County having been taken out of each Province, without any particular ground of Preference, to serve as a sufficient Specimen for the whole.

Appendix, No. 221.

It

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

It has occurred to a Member of our Commission to see, in a School in the County of Sligo, a Child holding the New Testament in its hands, sitting between Two others, one of whom was supplied with the "Forty Thieves," and the other with "the Pleasant Art of Money Catching," while another at a little Distance was perusing the "Mutiny Act," and all reading aloud their respective Volumes at the same Moment.

We make these Statements with a View to shew the Existence of an Evil which still requires a Remedy, and not for the Purpose of charging it as a Matter of Imputation to any particular Class of Persons. The Selection of the Book in which each Child is to learn to read in a common School has necessarily been left to the Child itself, or to its Parents. The Masters, scarcely removed above the lowest State of Poverty, in no Instance have ever thought of providing them, and the Schools being mostly founded on private Speculation, and unsupported by Societies or Patrons; the Books which were easily and cheaply to be procured, were those naturally preferred by the Children and their Parents.

The Society were therefore desirous of preparing a Variety of Publications which should, as much as possible, combine useful Instruction with Entertainment. A responsible Officer, at a Salary of £.150, was employed for their Compilation, but no Work of his was allowed to be issued to the Printer, until it had undergone a careful Examination, both by the Book Committee and by the General Committee of the Society.

Appendix, No. 222.

In the course of Seven Years, the different Works thus sent into Circulation have amounted to 52, a List of which we have inserted in the Appendix. They are, as will be perceived, of the most miscellaneous Nature—Voyages and Travels in every Region of the World—Arts and Sciences of every Description connected with Manufactures, Mechanics, Trade, and Agriculture—Poetry, and History—Rural Economy, and interesting Narratives—almost every Species of Moral Instruction—Views of the Wisdom and Goodness of the Creator, illustrated in every Department of Natural History—Historical Selections from the Old Testament, and Collections from the Psalms and Proverbs. Some of a lighter Character were inserted in the Collection, an improved Edition of Esop's Fables, and of Robinson Crusoe, having found their Place in it. From all of these, whatever was of dubious Tendency has been carefully excluded, while the Merits of Vaccination, the Treatment of Fever, the Nature of Savings Banks, and a variety of Knowledge useful to the Peasantry, are often to be found illustrated in Works where they might have been the least expected.

The following is the Account of the Sales and Distributions of the Books.

	Volumes.
For the Half Year ending 30th April 1818	50,311
From the 1st May 1818 to the 5th January 1819	42,611
For the Year ending 5th January 1820	123,733
Do. - - - 1821	153,895
Do. - - - 1822	185,218
Do. - - - 1823	106,230
Do. - - - 1824	121,888
Do. - - - 1825	172,816
Making in the whole	956,702 Volumes

in about 7 Years, ending 5th January 1825.

We learn that no Objection has ever been raised to any one of these Works, except in a single Instance. The Objection was of a very trifling Nature, and was immediately remedied by the Omission of the Passage complained of in a subsequent Edition of the Work.

These Books are sold wholesale and retail at the Shop of the Society; Twelve may be bought in the bound Form for 6s. by any Purchaser, and Grants are made gratuitously, not only to Schools in Connection with the Society, but to any well regulated regulated Schools, the Patrons of which take the Trouble of making Application, or even to any lending Library that may be formed in a Country Village.

49

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

Not only are the Schools connected with the Society supplied with these Books, but they are more or less to be found in the common Schools of the Country. Large, however, as the Issue has been, it is still altogether inadequate for the Purposes intended.

Among the Publications of the Society, there is one which we think ourselves called upon particularly to notice. It is entitled, "A Selection from the New Testament, consisting of Lessons composed from the Writings of the Four Evangelists, for the Use of Schools. By Permission of the most Reverend Dr. Troy, printed in 1818."

It having been questioned whether the Permission of Dr. Troy had in fact ever been given to this Work, we have thought it right fully to examine into the Matter. We beg to refer particularly to the Evidence of Mr. Jackson, the Secretary, Mr. Warren, a Member of the Book Committee, and Mr. Blenkinsop, who is Stationer to the Roman Catholic College of Maynooth, and the Printer of the Work in question. From these Gentlemen the following Facts appear.

Mr. Jackson.
Appendix, 200,
201.
Mr. Warren,
Appendix, 205.
Mr. Blenkinsop,
Appendix, 218,
219.

Mr. Wm. Parnell, late Representative of the County of Wicklow, and not a Member of the Kildare-Place Society, conceiving Mrs. Trimmer's Selections from the New Testament to be a Book well adapted for Circulation among the lower Classes of Society, was desirous of re-publishing it, and with that View submitted it to the Inspection of Mr. Doyle of Bray, a Roman Catholic Clergyman, who introduced Mr. Parnell to Dr. Troy, for the Purpose of obtaining his Permission to have this Work published for the Use of Schools. Dr. Troy desired Mr. Doyle carefully to peruse it, and see if it contained any thing objectionable. The Work was examined by Mr. Doyle accordingly; he made several Alterations, and suggested the Propriety of leaving out certain Passages. The Work in this corrected Form was then submitted by Mr. Doyle to Dr. Troy, from whose hands Mr. Blenkinsop, the Printer, received it, with Authority to print it. An Edition of 1,000 Copies was then printed by the Orders of Mr. Parnell, in exact Conformity with the corrected Copy, and with the Permission of Dr. Troy, certified in the Title Page. We have ourselves examined the identical Copy which Mr. Blenkinsop received from Dr. Troy, and find that in the printing of the Edition for Mr. Parnell, every Alteration and Omission suggested by Mr. Doyle has been adopted, except in one Instance, about which a Doubt may be entertained. The Passage occurs in the Angelical Salutation of the Virgin Mary, in the 1st chapter of St. Luke's Gospel, verse 28. In the Copy given by Dr. Troy to the Printer, the Words "thou that art highly favoured" appear to have been struck through with a Pen, and the Words "full of Grace" to have been written above. These latter Words "full of Grace," appear to have been again struck out, and the Words "that art highly favoured" stand written over the printed Words which are struck out. The Passage, as finally printed, is "thou art highly favoured."

After this Edition was printed, Mr Parnell appears to have become desirous that the Kildare-Place Society should adopt this Work, and upon the Suggestions being made to them, the General Committee directed a Sub-committee to report on the Nature of any Variations from the authorized Version of the Protestant Church, and also from Mrs. Trimmer's Selections, and to state their Opinion whether, in the Form which it had assumed, it was a Work calculated for general Circulation, and one which the Society might adopt. The Gentlemen who prepared this Report had the Advantage of Mr. Parnell's Attendance at one of their Meetings, and upon each Variation or Alteration that occurred, either from Mrs. Trimmer or the authorized Version, Mr. Parnell assigned a Reason for such having been made by the Roman Catholic Clergyman who had prepared the Book. The Committee reported in favour of the Work, and upon their Report the Book Sub-committee were directed to purchase from Mr. Blenkinsop the 900 Copies of the First Edition which remained unsold, and they were further desired to inform themselves fully of the Nature of Dr. Troy's Sanction, in order that the Possibility of Misapprehension might be removed before the Society should undertake to reprint it.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

On the 11th of February Mr. Parnell transmitted to the Book Sub-committee the Result of his Correspondence on the Subject, and laid before them a Certificate in Dr. Troy's hand-writing, in these Words:

" I hereby certify, that the Selection from the Scriptures, lately published by Mr. Peter Blenkinsop, Printer, of Dublin, has been approved by me.

" Dublin, 28th January 1818.

(Signed)

" J. T. Troy, D. D., &c. &c."

Appendix, 218,
219.

It appears from the Evidence of Mr. Blenkinsop, that he received from Dr. Troy's own hand, the Copy of the Work from which he printed. The General Committee, on the 22d April, directed that a new Edition of 25,000 Copies should be printed by Mr. Blenkinsop.

While this Work was in the Press, and after the greater Part of the Sheets had been printed off, a Proposal, purporting to be from Dr. Troy, was made on the 4th of July 1818, to the Society through Mr. Blenkinsop, that certain Alterations should be made in the Text of the Book. These proposed Alterations related to Texts, which are held by the Roman Catholic Church to be incorrectly translated in the authorized Version. The Particulars will be found stated in the Evidence of Mr. Jackson.

In reply to this Application, the Society informed Mr. Blenkinsop, that the Edition of the Scripture Lessons had been printed with the Approbation of Dr. Troy, and was in Circulation before the Education Society had taken any Steps in the Matter; that they had been induced to adopt this Work in consequence of his Sanction being prefixed to it, seeing, at the same time, nothing in it contrary to the Principles of the Protestant Persuasion; that they had, in consequence, applied to Dr. Troy for a Renewal of his Sanction, which he had been pleased to give; that they had subsequently, on the Faith of Dr. Troy's renewed Approbation of the Work, ordered 25,000 Copies to be printed exactly conformable with the First Edition which had been disposed of; and that in their Annual Report they had stated those Facts to the Public; that they therefore could not then enter into any Consideration of the proposed Alterations.

The foregoing Statement can leave no doubt that the Publication of this Work actually received the Permission of Dr. Troy, both when printed for Mr. Parnell, and subsequently when printed for the Society. The Circumstances under which the Approbation was given, and Dr. Troy's View of the Publication, are fully explained in a Letter addressed by him to Dr. Trench, of which the following is a Copy:—

" Very Reverend Sir,

" Dublin 23d July 1818.

" In reply to your obliging Letter of the 18th instant, handed to me on Tuesday last by Mr. Galway, I have to state that I did authorize Mr. Blenkinsop, of this City, to publish historical and moral Extracts from the Gospels and Acts of the Apostles, on Condition they would not in any Manner refer to controverted Doctrines, and desired a Roman Catholic Clergyman to compare them with the Douay Version of the Testament. On his Report to me I sanctioned the Publication alluded to in your Letter.

" In this Publication I have discovered that the Protestant rather than the Douay Translation has been followed, particularly on controverted Points, such as the Eucharist or Lord's Supper, the Veneration of the Blessed Virgin, Mother of God, the Supremacy of St Peter, and that 'Repentance' is substituted for 'Penance.'

" However, as I cannot object to the Extracts in general, and under the Expectation that a future Edition of them will be more conformable to my original Intention, I have not withdrawn the Sanction of my Name from the Publication.

" Allow me, Very Reverend Sir, on this Occasion, to observe, that the Catholic Church in all Ages has prohibited the indiscriminate use of the Scriptures in the vulgar Tongues without Note or Comment, also the Interpretation of them by every one's private Judgment. This Interpretation has been the fatal and prolific Hive from which Swarms of Sectaries daily issue, each one finding his Religion in the Bible, which has disfigured and distracted the Christian Church since the Days of Luther; wherefore the Catholic Church condemns the in-

" discriminate

"discriminate Use of the Scriptures in vulgar Tongues without Note or Comment, and permits it only to the learned or to the lettered of the Laity.

"I have the Honour to remain,

"Very Reverend Sir,

"Your very humble and obedient Servant, (Signed) "J. T. TROY.

"The Very Reverend C. Le P. Trench, D.D."

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

In this Letter Dr. Troy complains that certain Passages are not conformable to the Douay Version, and he seems to have believed that Mr. Doyle must have recommended the Alteration of those Passages, but no Alterations appear in the Copy delivered by Dr. Troy to Mr. Blenkinsop, which were not adopted in the printing, excepting, perhaps, in the Instance before mentioned, relating to the Angelical Salutation of the Virgin Mary.

Mr. Blenkinsop has stated to us that he has heard very bad Faith imputed to the Kildare-Place Society with respect to this Work, but that they have been guilty of none in the World; and that wherever he has had an Opportunity he has contradicted it.

5. The Object next in Order proposed by the Society, is to supply gratuitously to Schools in connection with them, and to all Purchasers at Cost Prices, Spelling Books, Stationery, Slates, and other School Requisites. Bibles and Testaments are not included amongst the Books supplied by the Society, and it is frequently a Matter of Surprise to the Persons who receive Books from them, that the only Work which the Society requires under all Circumstances to be used in the Schools is not included in the Grant.

The Society have adopted this Course for the Purpose of avoiding a Competition with other Societies which distribute the Bible gratuitously; we, nevertheless, are persuaded that their Rules would have been much more strictly complied with, if they had from the first supplied the Schools with Copies of both Versions of the Scriptures.

The Rule of the Society is held to be sufficiently complied with if either Version is employed.

Under this Head, we have only to state the Amount issued in each Year:

YEAR.	Amount given gratuitously.	Amount sold at low Prices.
	£. s. d.	£. s. d.
In 1817 - - -	93 1 6½	146 6 7
1818 - - -	215 3 8½	343 0 6
1819 - - -	327 8 0	399 11 0
1820 - - -	588 12 8½	409 2 11½
1821 - - -	559 0 4	559 0 9½
1822 - - -	1,401 10 4½	769 5 10
1823 - - -	2,475 15 5	720 7 0
1824 - - -	3,395 0 11	707 12 9

6. The next Head for Consideration is the Maintenance by this Society of a regular System of Inspection of all Schools connected with it, and the Employment of Gentlemen of Education and Character for that Purpose.

The Society have at present Six Inspectors, Mr. Donelan, Mr. Malachy Daly, Mr. Griffith, Mr. Mills, Mr. Robert Daly, and Mr. Fitzgerald; the Two former are Roman Catholics, the others are Members of the Established Church. We have examined

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

examined all these Officers as Witnesses, and to their Evidence we wish to direct particular attention.

It is the object of the Society to effect an Inspection of each of their Schools at least Once in the Year. Their Practice is to divide the Country into Circuits, and the Rewards are measured out according to the Reports of the Inspectors. Any Deviations from the System, or Neglects observed in any Schools, are noted and supplied to the Inspector of the ensuing Year, who reports particularly whether or not they have been rectified.

Gratuities to Schoolmasters.

7.—The last Object of the Society remaining to be noticed is the Encouragement, by Annual Gratuities, of such Masters and Mistresses as are found particularly worthy of Approbation. The Uncertainty of the Amounts to be thus awarded, added to the Expectation that they will be proportionate to Merit, has operated in a salutary Manner and enabled comparatively small Sums to produce considerable Effects. The Gratuities awarded by the Society vary from £. 1 to £. 10. A larger Sum is sometimes given under peculiar Circumstances.

The Total Amount of these Gratuities in successive Years has been as follows:—

			£.	s	d.
For the Year ending 4th May 1818	-	-	277	0	7
Ditto 5th January 1819	-	-	98	18	9
Ditto 1820	-	-	222	10	0
Ditto 1821	-	-	445	1	2
Ditto 1822	-	-	649	11	0
Ditto 1823	-	-	1,768	10	0
Ditto 1824	-	-	3,361	0	0
Ditto 1825	-	-	4,009	0	3

The Direction and Management of these various Departments of the Society are allotted to Six Sub-committees, viz. of Correspondence, Books, Library, House, Model School, and Accounts, which are formed out of a General Committee of Thirty-one Members, for whose approbation every Act of the Sub-committee is referred.

The General Committee meets every Saturday Morning at about Eight o'Clock, that early Hour having been selected for the Accommodation of the Members, who are most of them engaged in professional Pursuits; their Attendance has been regular, and their Exertions unremitted, notwithstanding their other Avocations. As to the Probability of the Continuance of this Exertion, Mr. Jackson says, "I have every Hope of it. I should be extremely sorry to think otherwise. We began upon a small Scale, and the Institution has gone on thriving and prospering under our Care. We have all become attached to it, and I am sure it would cost each of us a Pang to be obliged to desert it."

Of the General Committee, Twenty-one appear to be Members of the Established Church, Four of the Society of Friends, Two Presbyterians, and Two Roman Catholics. There are Two Vacancies.

The Committee is appointed at the annual Meeting of the Society; the same Persons are generally continued from Year to Year, if they are desirous of being so.

The Society has Eight Vice Presidents, of whom Six are of the Established Church and Two Roman Catholics. The Proportions are accidental; there is no Rule upon the Subject. We have already observed, that of the Six Inspectors Four are of the Established Church and Two are Roman Catholics. The Master of the Male and the Mistress of the Female Model School are each of them Roman Catholics.

It has frequently been imputed to this Society that their real Object is to make Converts from the Roman Catholic to the Protestant Religion. No Fact has come to our Knowledge that leads us to doubt their own repeated Disclaimers of having any such Intention. Mr. Jackson, the Secretary, has stated in his Evidence that he cannot call to mind any Instance of an Attempt to make Proselytes in any School connected with the Society; he has heard that in some of their Schools, which were also connected with other Societies, it has been alledged that something improper in that respect has been done, but that there has never been an Instance authenticated, authenticated, that he can never recollect even a Charge of that Nature having been brought under the View of the Correspondence Committee.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

Mr. Donelan has assured us, that he would not act as the Inspector of the Society if he were not convinced that they had the Intention only of giving Education without proselytising; that as far as he has known, they have endeavoured to protect the Roman Catholics in every possible way consistent with their Laws; "that he has been in the Habit of applying to the Roman Catholic Clergy for Information on this Subject, and has never met with any thing like a Proof of such an Assertion;" that before his Acceptance of the Office he had a Communication with Dr. Troy, and another with Dr. Curtis, who gave their most unqualified Approbation of his undertaking it; and that he believes the Appointment was proposed to him for the specific Purpose of giving a Pledge to the Roman Catholics of the Sincerity of the Motives of the Kildare-Place Society.

Appendix. No. 208.
209.

We have thought it right to inquire the Views entertained by the Society itself of the Advantages to be derived from the Use of the Scriptures in Education. Mr. Warren says, "I think it of inestimable Value to make the Peasantry in any Degree acquainted with the Scriptures. I do not think we can expect any very decidedly religious Effect to be produced upon Children when they are prevented from having any Explanation given them; but I am satisfied that great Advantage will arise from making them know that the Book in which they read is the Word of God; that when in future Life they are suffering under Illness or Affliction, or any other chastening Dispensation of the Almighty, they may be enabled to take up that Book in which they will be sure to find Consolation, instead of being afraid to look into it. I think it also of greater Value that they should be aware that the Book upon which they are so often obliged to take their Oath is the Word of God. I am perfectly satisfied they are not acquainted with that Fact. I know of many Instances in which the lower Classes have mistaken other Books for the Scriptures; and a Friend of mine, who was lately at Loughrea, told me that a poor Man in that Neighbourhood told him he thought the Bible was written by Luther for the use of the Protestants."

Appendix, No. 205.

On this Point Mr. Donelan informs us, in Answer to a Question, Whether the Peasantry could in most Instances distinguish between a Testament and any other Book of the same Size, upon a religious Subject put into their hands? "Upon my word, I think they could scarcely do it, except where the Exertions of the Bible Society have succeeded; but in many Parts of Connaught the Peasant does not know what a Bible or Testament is." To another Question, Whether they generally understand that the Bible contains the Word of God, the History of our Saviour, the History of the Creation, and the Redemption of the World? he says, "I think we may say, in general, they do not; they have some general Notion of it, but it is a very vague Idea; in some few Instances you will meet with an utter Ignorance of it altogether."

Appendix, No. 208.

The Rise and Progress of the Opposition which the Society has encountered deserve particular Attention.

The Society does not appear to have received Support at any Time from the Dignitaries of the Established Church. The Schools of the Association for discountenancing Vice are naturally preferred by them; but as there is not in the Rules of the Kildare-Place Society any Principle inconsistent with the Doctrine or Discipline of the Established Church, the Society has not received from them any positive Opposition. It has, however been approved and supported by the general Body of the Protestant Clergy and Gentry.

With respect to the Feelings of the Presbyterians towards the Society, we have inquired from Mr. Cooke, the Moderator of the Synod of Ulster, and he informs us, that "they feel a lively Interest in all its Operations; that they feel exceedingly grateful, both to the Members of the Society for their Attention to their Applications, and to Government, for granting them Aid; and he thinks that the People are every Day seeing the beneficial Effects of their Labours; that the Exclusion of Catechism during School Hours does not excite the least Feeling of Dislike or Opposition on their Parts; that they consider it as a Concession to the general Purposes of Education; and while he knows that the Presbyterians

Appendix, No. 261.
262.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

“rians generally wish for Catechisms being taught, either out of School Hours or by Parents at Home, he knows they do not object to the Rule of the Society; that they consider it a fair thing to make any reasonable Concession on their Parts to advance the general Interest of the whole Community.”

With respect to the Roman Catholic Clergy, the Case has been otherwise; they have opposed the Society, particularly of late, with the utmost Industry and Zeal. We therefore felt it our Duty to inquire into the general Nature of their Opposition, and we have examined as well the principal Officers of the Society, as also high Authorities in the Roman Catholic Church upon the Subject.

Appendix, No. 200.

Mr. Jackson, Secretary to the Society, considered the Opposition which was existing at the time of our Inquiry to have arisen from a Desire on the Part of the Roman Catholic Clergy to display their Power to the Commissioners; he considered, that it was produced by the Commission; that it had been particularly violent after the Commission had issued; it seemed as if some Direction had been issued from Authority to the Parochial Clergy throughout the Country, to oppose the Schools in Connexion with the Institution, and as if many of them obeyed such Orders with Reluctance. He stated that several Schools of the Society were connected with the Association for discountenancing Vice, and several also with the London Hibernian Society; he was not aware of the Impossibility of an honest Compliance with the Rules of the Association and the Kildare Place Society in the same Schools; but his Attention having been particularly called to the Rules of the former, he said the Subject had been brought under his View by our Examination, in a Light that it never was before; that it did appear to him that the Spirit of the Rules, either of the Association or of the Kildare-Place Society, must be violated; and that he had not the slightest Doubt, that if the Committee of the Kildare-Place Society were aware of that, there would be an End of all Connexion with the Association. He inclined to think, that where the Rules of the London Hibernian Society were observed, the School was more objectionable to the Roman Catholics than if it were subject only to the Rules of the Kildare-Place Society.

Appendix, No. 205.

Mr. Warren attributed the Opposition of the last Year to the same Cause as Mr. Jackson: he thought the Friends of the Society were increasing in a greater Proportion than their Opponents, up to the Period of the Parliamentary Discussions of the last Session. If he were asked to name the Time when he thought the Society had the greatest Number of Friends amongst the Roman Catholic Parochial Clergy, he would mention the present Moment; he expressed a confident Opinion, that the Society, if not interfered with by Parliament, would triumph over the Opposition then given to it. He considered that a great Number of the Roman Catholic Parochial Clergy were favourable to the Society, and that the Opposition which many gave to it was stimulated by Orders from their Superiors. He was of Opinion that the London Hibernian Society and the Capel-Street Association had Proselytism in View. Many of the Schools of the Kildare-Place Society were in Connexion with these Institutions; he thought that Connexion inexpedient, but not inconsistent with the Rules of the Kildare-Place Institution; he thought that there would be an Inconsistency in making a direct Grant to either of these Societies, but not in affording Aid to Individual Schools in Connexion with them.

Appendix, No. 208.

Mr. Donelan, one of the Inspectors of the Society, and who is a Roman Catholic, stated, that he had visited about 210 Schools of the Society during the last Autumn, in various Counties, but principally in the South; that the Schools were generally opposed by the Roman Catholic Clergy; that he considered their Opposition to have been increased by the Commission, and that he thought that the Object of the Roman Catholic Clergy was to overturn the Kildare-Place Society, and to prove to the Commissioners that its System was totally inefficient for the Circumstances of Ireland. We inquired of him what particular Measures were resorted to by the Roman Catholic Clergy, to induce the Parents to withdraw their Children from the Schools of the Society; he said they refused to give them Absolution, and to church the Women after Child-birth, or to administer the Consolations of Religion to them at the time of Death; the Refusal extends both to the Father and the Mother; if the Children still remained at the Schools, they had recourse to the last Resource, that of cursing; he adds, that what the poor People consider as the Curse of the Priest,

55

Priest, is that it will bring down the Vengeance of Heaven in every respect; the vulgar Expression, he says, is that they will have neither "Luck nor Grace."

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

In answer to other Questions put to him, he said, what he had stated as to the Conduct of the Roman Catholic Clergy, he did not state of his own Knowledge. Personally, he knew no Instance of such Conduct—he had not heard of many such Instances in an authentic way—he had not heard of such Facts in a way that he could consider well authenticated, except in Six or Seven Instances. He is himself a Roman Catholic—he attends the Roman Catholic Worship, and he never heard a Priest curse Parents for sending their Children to the Schools of the Society, he has only heard them exhort the Public against doing it—he disapproved of the Connexion subsisting between Schools of this Society and the London Hibernian Society—he considered that the Object of the latter was Proselytism, and he was so satisfied of this, that it had become Matter of Difficulty with him, whether he could conscientiously act as an Officer of the Kildare-Place Society, if it permitted its Schools to continue in Connexion with the Hibernian Society—he knew some Instances of Tracts of a controversial Nature, and highly offensive to the Roman Catholics, having been in the Schools. The Conduct of local Patrons was sometimes calculated to excite Suspicion in the Minds of the Roman Catholics—he was sincerely convinced that the Roman Catholic Clergy were anxious to obtain the Benefits of Education for their Flocks. They objected to the particular System of the Kildare-Place Society, not to Education in the Abstract. What they objected to, was the Rule with respect to the use of the Testament; when they were able to controul that Rule, as they could in Schools under their own Directions, by selecting the Passages of the Testament which should be read, they, in many Cases, approved of or adopted it. The Opposition of the Roman Catholic Clergy was very successful. The Leaning of his Mind was, that the System of the Kildare-Place Society would ultimately prove impracticable, and that the Opposition of the Roman Catholic Clergy would succeed. It was his Opinion, that the Peasantry would never be induced to break the Bond which united them to their Clergy; he said he had seen all the Influence of the Landlord come in open Collision with the Parish Priest, and that his Experience had been, that the Power of the Parish Priest had been generally paramount.

Mr. Griffith, another Inspector of the Society stated, that he had visited about 231 Schools of the Society last Autumn, in the Counties of Kildare, King's County, Tipperary, Clare, Galway, Limerick, Kerry, Kilkenny, Queen's County, and a small Part of the County of Cork. He says, that he has heard from the People, in many Cases, that the Priests had announced their Determination not to visit them when they were dying, or administer the Sacrament to them; and he adds, "I have known Instances where it has been put to the Proof, that they have actually refused the Sacrament." And in another Place he says, "that all the Measures he has heard of are of extreme Violence, denouncing the People, and stating from the Altar that if they read the Bible or took it into their Houses, they should be damned; that the Devil was in the Bible;"—he adds, "I do not speak of those Cases from my own Knowledge, but only from a strong Conviction on my Mind, owing to the Authority from which I had them."

Appendix, No. 210.

In answer to other Questions he stated, that he heard of the Facts he mentioned with respect to the Roman Catholic Clergy from Protestants, not from Roman Catholics; he said, he was not aware that the Priests were obliged to read Part of the Bible every Day, or that the Mass of each Day contained an Epistle and Gospel taken from the New Testament. He found the Opposition of the Roman Catholic Clergy much more extensive and effectual than it had been; he attributed this partly to the Commission and partly to the Excitement produced by the polemical Discussions which had taken place in some of the Southern Counties, and to the general political Agitation in the Country. He disapproved of the Connexion that subsisted between the Kildare-Place Society and other Societies. He was satisfied that much of the Odium which attached to the Kildare-Place Society, with respect to the Roman Catholics, was owing to it;—he expressed an anxious Wish that the Schools of the Kildare-Place Society should be separated from all other Societies, and also from the Controul of local Patrons, as he thought much of the Prejudice which was excited against the Society was

Kildare Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

was owing to the over Zeal and Indiscretion of some of them. He stated, that in some Cases the Patrons gave oral Explanations of the Scriptures to the Children in the Schools, and that the Persons who did so were generally of a proselyting Character.

Appendix, No. 214.

Mr. Daly, another Inspector of the Society, visited during the last Autumn several Schools situated in the North-west of Ireland, passing through the several Counties of Meath, West Meath, Fermanagh, Cavan, Tyrone, and Donegal. He found the Attendance much less than he expected, which was owing to the Opposition of the Roman Catholic Clergy—he said he had a strong Opinion that their Opposition would be permanent in preventing Roman Catholics from attending the Schools of the Society. The Clergy generally disapproved of the System, and he thought their Authority was equal to keeping the Children away—he thought their Objection was not to the reading of the Testament at all, but to reading it without Note or Comment. He found many Instances in which Explanations of the Testament had been given in the Schools, as well in those which were only in Connexion with the Kildare-Place Society, as in those in Connexion with the London Hibernian Society—they were Explanations of a polemical Nature.

Upon this Part of the Subject, the Evidence which we have received from Two Roman Catholic Archbishops, Dr. Murray and Dr. Kelly, and from a Roman Catholic Bishop, Dr. Doyle, has been as follows :

Appendix, No. 257.

Q. “ In the course of the last Summer, the Commissioners had Occasion to inspect very many Schools in many Parts of Ireland, and in many of them they found that the Children of the Roman Catholic Persuasion had been withdrawn in consequence of the Interference of the respective Priests ; was the Interference of the Priests at all in your Opinion connected with the Appointment of this Commission, and were the Children withdrawn in any Parts of the Country more or less on that Account ? ”

(Doctor Murray.) “ I am not aware of any Case in which the Children have been withdrawn in consequence of the Appointment of this Commission.”

Q. (To Doctor Kelly.) “ Are you aware of any Instances in Connaught of the Children being withdrawn in consequence of the Appointment of this Commission ? ”

A. “ I have known no Instance of it whatever ; it has been quite otherwise since this Commission has sat. Children have been permitted, in my Part of the Country, to continue at Schools, from which they would have been withdrawn but for my Recommendation and the Suggestions of many of the Clergy. Matters were recommended to remain as they were, until the Report of this Commission should be made public.”

Q. “ If any one has surmised that there were general Orders, which emanated from the Roman Catholic Bishops of Ireland immediately prior to, or contemporaneous with, or subsequent to the Appointment of the Commission, simultaneously to withdraw their Children from Schools in which Scriptural Education was allowed, such Surmise was founded on Misconception and Error ? ”

A. “ So I conceive.”

Q. (To Dr. Murray.) “ Is it known to you that the Exertions which were made to withdraw the Children from the Schools took place to a greater Extent in the course of last Summer than they had heretofore ? ”

A. “ I have already mentioned that I was not aware of any Case in which Children had been withdrawn within my Jurisdiction during the last Summer.”

Q. (To Doctor Doyle.) “ Is that your Impression with respect to your Diocese ? ”

A. “ From what Description of Schools.”

Q. “ From any Description of Schools in which the Scriptural Plan of Education was pursued ? ”

A. “ They were withdrawn from several of such Schools for other Causes, but they have not been withdrawn from any School in my Diocese in consequence of the Appointment of the Commission ; on the contrary, I think the Attendance of the Children at such Schools since that Period has rather increased than diminished.”

Q. “ The Question is, whether subsequent to the Appointment of this Commission, whether in consequence of it, or not, there has been any increased Exertion

“ on

"on the Part of the Roman Catholic Priests in Ireland to withdraw the Children?"

A. "Subsequently to the Appointment of this Commission I was myself led to use Exertions to have Children removed from Schools connected with the London Hibernian Society, but those Exertions had no Connexion with the Appointment of this Commission. I looked on the Schools very quietly which were frequented by Children of my Communion subsequent to the Appointment of the Commission, and much more so than I would have done had not the Commission been appointed, for in that case I would have felt myself called upon to use more Exertions than I did, for this Reason, that having petitioned Parliament during the last Session to adopt some Measure for giving a generally improved System of Education to the Poor of Ireland, had I found that Parliament and the Government were totally regardless of our Prayer on that Subject, I should have felt myself bound to consider them as tacitly approving the System which was in operation, and feeling so, I should have felt myself called upon to use increased Exertion to withdraw Children from a System in which in my Opinion not only Individuals who could do Evil were engaged, but to which the Government itself freely lent its Aid; finding however that a Commission had been appointed, my Views were changed, and I resolved to pursue the Plan I had adopted Three or Four Years ago, and quietly waiting till the Result was known, act then as Circumstances might dictate."

Q. (To Doctor Murray.) "Has a different Course been pursued in the District under your Observation?"

A. "I was not aware of Children having been withdrawn during the last Summer, more than at any former Period."

Q. "Is not the Objection generally taken to the Attendance of the Children on Schools in which the Testament is read without Note and Comment?"

A. "Yes, it is."

Q. "And that, whether they are under the Inspection of the London Hibernian Society or any other Society?"

A. "There is an Objection to it under whatever Society the School is placed."

Q. "The London Hibernian Society require that the Children shall not only read the Testament, and read the Testament as a Common School Book, but also that the Children shall get Portions of the Testament by Heart, which Portions are to be selected by Officers of that Society. The Kildare-Street Society require that the Testament shall be read, but it allows the Patrons of the Schools to select the Passages which shall be read, and to appoint the Periods at which they shall be read, and does not require that the Book shall be used as a School Book: Do you not consider, that the Kildare-Street Regulations may by possibility be so acted upon as not to be inconsistent with the Discipline of the Roman Catholic Church; and do you conceive that the Hibernian Society's Principles can be so acted upon?"

A. "The System of the Hibernian Society cannot be reconciled with our Discipline. With respect to the Kildare-Street Society, it may in some Places be less obnoxious than others. There are Cases in which Schools may derive Advantage from the Kildare Place Society with less Danger than others; and that is where the Patron is a Catholic, and where the School is under the Superintendence in some Degree of a Catholic Clergyman, who will deem it his Duty to select the Passages of Scripture to be read to the Children, and not to allow any unfair Interpretation to be put upon those Passages, and at the same time will have Opportunities of giving religious Instruction to the Children out of School Hours. At the same time, it is fair to say, that our Objections to the Kildare-Street Society have of late greatly increased, since we learned its Connexion with other Societies, the Object of which is avowedly to proselytize, and since it has avowed itself to be, though not in Name, in Reality a proselytising Society, by putting forward a Principle which we hold to be erroneous, and endeavouring to enforce that Principle with Catholic Children. In the Instructions which it gave to its Inspectors, I think last September, one of its fundamental Principles is there acknowledged to be, that the sacred Scriptures be read in all the Schools to which it communicates Aid; 'that the Children who thus read may become acquainted with the Principles of the Christian Religion;' that is, of course, that each Child, on inspecting the sacred Volume, may select such Principles of religious

Appendix, No. 227.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

“Faith and Practice as he may think he can there discover, and that by private Judgment, with an almost total Absence of Culture of Mind, and before his Reason has arrived at Maturity. That this Child is in this State to make out his religious Belief and Practice from the sacred Volume, is a Principle which we conceive to be erroneous; and as long as that Principle is affirmed by the Kildare-Street Society, so long we must endeavour to oppose its Diffusion. At the same Time, there are Cases, as already mentioned, in which it is less injurious than others, where the Schoolmaster is a Catholic, and a Catholic Priest has an Opportunity of attending under the Circumstances to which I have referred.”

Q. “The Roman Catholic Prelates and Clergy of Ireland object to the Testament being used as a School Book, or being read by Children?”

A. “We do.”

Q. “Do you object to the Testament being read by Persons of mature Years, and of Education?”

A. “No, of course not.”

Q. “Do you rather recommend than forbid it?”

A. “I do not know whether there may have met the Eye of the Commissioners a Publication signed by all the Bishops of Ireland, printed by Mr. Coyne. In this, all the Bishops recommend to the Faithful to read the Scriptures, but to read them in those Dispositions of Prayer and of Obedience to the Authority of the Church, which we think necessary, that they may be read with Profit.”

Q. “The Objection to reading the Scriptures, where it is made, applies to the Person who reads, and to the Manner of reading it, rather than to the Act of reading it by a Person of competent Knowledge, and who reads it with a proper Disposition?”

A. “Certainly, it is.”

Q. “It is considered that Persons of the Age which Children are, when attending Schools, are not competent to come to a right Knowledge of its meaning?”

A. “Our Principles are the same as those of St. Paul. We wish to give to Children Milk, and not strong Meat. We give them, therefore, in the Form of Catechism, the first Principles of the Religion of Christ, and as they grow up in Faith, we give them the strong Meat of the Gospel to digest.”

Q. (To Dr. Doyle.) “If the Children are not withdrawn willingly by their Parents, to what Means do the Priests have recourse in order to carry their own Wishes into execution?”

A. “I have never found it necessary to resort to any other Means than merely to recommend, either privately or publicly, to the Parents, to withdraw their Children; and on my doing so, or the Priest doing so, I have found uniformly that the Children were withdrawn; so that finding those Means sufficient, I have not had even one Occasion to resort to others.”

Q. “Was that Admonition given publicly or privately?”

A. “I have often given it myself publicly. If the Matter suffered Delay, I desired the Schools might be left unmolested till my Visitation; for it often happened that they were protected by a Landlord or Proprietor, or a Man of Influence, and that if the Priest interfered in public to have the Children withdrawn, he might bring down upon himself, or the People, the Enmity of such Individuals; and therefore, as it was somewhat of an odious Duty, odious in its Discharge, I preferred taking it upon myself, and therefore it was I who generally, at the Visitation of the Parishes, directed the People to withdraw the Children, or desired the Priest would see it done in the course of a short time afterwards. There have been some few Instances where I have been consulted by the Priest, and not being able to go within a short time to that Parish, I have desired him to see that the Children were withdrawn; and I have been informed that he had done so, and that my Wishes were fulfilled.”

Q. “Has any Instance occurred within your Knowledge, of the Priest having made use of his spiritual Authority to compel the Parent of any Child to withdraw it, if he appeared unwilling to do so?”

A. “I have no Recollection of any Instance of the kind in my Diocese, except One, which perhaps might be included in the Question which has been asked. There was a School under the Protection of Lady Aylmer, in the County of Kildare; this School was frequented by some Catholics, and I was informed by the Parish Priest that there was no Catholic Teacher in it, and that the Persons “employed

59

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

"employed used many Exertions to disturb the Faith of the Children; I desired him therefore to advise the Parents to withdraw their Children. He told me afterwards that they all did so, except the Gate-keeper of this Lady, who, apprehending that he would lose his Situation, and undergo a Persecution, (which frequently follows, at least in some Parts of Ireland, from the Children being withdrawn from such Schools), he suffered one or more of his little Children to continue to attend it, and I think the Priest told me, that in consequence of his (the Gate-keeper) doing so, he refused to administer the Sacraments to him, and, I believe, to his Wife. That is the only Instance of the kind which has come to my Knowledge, as I now recollect."

Q. "Do you not conceive, that if the Parent of a Child having been cautioned against sending his Child to a particular School, inasmuch as in that School the Religion of the Child was likely to be tampered with or endangered, still continued to send his Child, he would be guilty of a sinful Error?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Would it not be the Duty of his Confessor, on his stating the Fact to him, to require, either that he should abandon that Error, or if he refused to do so, to refuse him Absolution?"

A. "Yes, that would be the Duty of the Confessor."

Q. "No Person could be admitted to the Sacraments while in the Practice of Sin; he must repent of Sin, and resolve not to persevere in it, before he can receive a Sacrament?"

A. "That is the Case, with the Exception of the Sacrament of Matrimony, which being a Civil Contract as well as a Religious Rite, we sometimes solemnize it where we are not certain that the Party is not in a State of Sin."

Q. "The Sacrament of Penance?"

A. "That cannot be administered but on Repentance."

Q. "Do you conceive that a Priest of the Roman Catholic Church would be justified, not only in refusing the Rites of the Church on the Grounds stated, but in imprecating Curses on the Heads of the Parents of Children who should persist in sending their Children to Schools disapproved of by him?"

A. "The Priest who would imprecate Curses on any one for any Crime whatever of his own Authority, would act extremely wrong; and if by Curses is meant Excommunication, he has no Right to excommunicate any Person, for the Right to inflict that Censure is reserved to the Bishop, or the Person deputed by him."

Q. "Would a Priest be justified in praying or expressing a Wish that any temporal Evil, Sickness, or Disease might visit any Person, who sent a Child to a School disapproved of by him?"

A. "He would not; and if I found any Priest under my Direction had done so, I should reprimand him in the most severe Terms, for abusing his Office, for our Duty is to bless and not to curse."

Q. "If it should be found that a Priest had so done, he would incur your Censure?"

A. "I should reprimand him most seriously."

Q. "Did you ever hear the Expression in common Parlance, of the Priest's Curse?"

A. "I may have heard the Expression used, but do not recollect it."

Q. (To Doctor Murray.) "Is the Phrase of the Priest's Curse familiar to you?"

A. "It is not."

Q. "Did you ever hear it used by any Peasant, 'the Priest's Curse be upon you?'"

A. "No, never in my Life."

Q. "As an Imprecation from one Peasant to another,—as a Malediction?"

A. "I never heard that Expression from one Peasant to another."

(Doctor Kelly.) "Nor have I."

From these Examinations, and from the general Communications which, in our various Tours, we had personally with all Orders of the Roman Catholic Clergy, but generally under Circumstances which prevented their being formally recorded, we collect, that the use of the Testament without Note or Comment as a School Book, or the reading of it by Children, save under the Directions of their Pastors, or Persons approved by them, is considered contrary to the Discipline of the Roman Catholic Church; but inasmuch as the Kildare-Place Society neither requires the whole Testament to be read through, nor points out the Parts which shall be read,

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

read, and leaves the Selection, both of the Passages, and of the Children who shall read them, to the Master or Patron, and admits the use of either the authorized or Douay Version, the Rule of the Society that the Testament shall be read without Note or Comment, may be so qualified in Schools under the Directions of the Roman Catholic Clergy (where the Master is a Roman Catholic), as to be observed in them without any Violation of their Discipline. It appears that several Roman Catholic Clergymen, upon understanding that the Rule might be qualified in this way, have obtained Aid from the Society.

Appendix, No. 223.

We have inserted in the Appendix Letters from Fifty-nine Roman Catholic Clergymen, expressive of their Sentiments towards the Society at the respective Periods when those Letters were written, conveying, in strong Terms, their Approbation of its Principles, and their Gratitude for the Aid which they derived from it. This seems to have been considered by the Society as affording Reason to conclude, that there was nothing in its Rule with respect to the use of the Testament to which Roman Catholics in general could fairly object; that the Opposition given to it was therefore founded in Error, and could not be permanent, or at least permanently successful. In coming to this Conclusion, the Society do not appear to have considered the very opposite Character which the Rule assumes, when applied to Schools under the Direction of the Roman Catholic Clergy, and when applied to Schools not under their Direction. The Patron or Master of the School may select the Children who shall read the Testament, the Version which shall be used, and the Passages which shall be read; when this is done for Roman Catholic Children, by or under the Directions of the Roman Catholic Clergy, it is compatible with the Principles and Discipline of the Roman Catholic Church; but when it is done for them by Persons of a different Religion, it is incompatible with both. Hence, some Schools of the Society have been supported by the Roman Catholic Clergy, while others have been opposed by them, the former (being generally those under their own Superintendence) have been few, the latter (being those over which they have had no Controul) have been many; their Support has therefore been limited, their Opposition extensive.

It is not however to be understood that this Opposition has been produced solely by an abstract Objection to the Rule respecting the Testament, as applied to Schools not under the Superintendence of the Roman Catholic Clergy; it has been materially increased by Circumstances connected with the particular Management of several Schools of the Society.

Of these Schools, there are 57 in connexion with the Association for discountenancing Vice, according to the Rules of which, the Patron must be the Protestant Clergyman of the Parish, the Master must be a Protestant, the Version of the Testament used must be the Protestant authorized Version, and the Protestant Catechism must be taught in the Schools to the Children of the Established Church. There are 370 others in connexion with Two Societies, which we shall notice in a subsequent Part of this Report; the London Hibernian Society, and the Baptist Society; 340 with the former, and 30 with the latter. In these Schools, and of course in the Schools of the Kildare-Place Society which are in connexion with them, the Testament is used as a common School Book, and the Children are obliged to commit to Memory whole Chapters from it, which are selected for them by quarterly Inspectors. This System the Roman Catholic Clergy universally condemn, and they in general consider that the Object of the London Hibernian and Baptist Societies is Proselytism. Mr. Donelan, it will be observed, also considers that such is their Object, and says he is so satisfied of it, that it has become Matter of Difficulty with him, whether he could conscientiously act as an Officer of the Kildare-Place Society, if it permitted its Schools to continue in connexion with the London Hibernian Society. But it is not in those Schools only which are in connexion with other Societies that Practices exist which are objected to; it appears that they have occurred sometimes in Schools belonging exclusively to the Kildare-Place Society. This is not in any Degree attributable to the Managing Committee, but to the Conduct of particular local Patrons, who occasionally avail themselves of the Opportunities their Situation affords them, to interfere in the Schools upon religious Subjects, in a way calculated to excite Distrust and Jealousy amongst the Roman Catholic Clergy. To use the Words of Mr. Griffith, "a great deal of the existing Prejudice against the Society is owing to the Indiscretion and Over-zeal of some of the Patrons."

With respect to the Character of this Opposition, it appears to vary according to the Circumstances of particular Cases, and the Temper of particular Individuals.

It

61

It is stated to us on the Part of the Roman Catholic Clergy, that in general, where the Roman Catholic Clergyman of a Parish condemns a particular School, he announces from the Altar, that it is improper for Parents to send their Children to it, and exhorts them against doing so; if any Individual resists this Injunction, and sends his Children notwithstanding, he is deemed guilty of Contumacy towards the Church, and of putting the Faith of his Child in danger; he is therefore refused the Sacraments while he perseveres in this Conduct, in like Manner as he would be while persevering in any other Spiritual or Ecclesiastical Offence. We have heard of Instances of Clergymen proceeding to imprecate Curses on the Parents who should send their Children to forbidden Schools. Such a Practice we hope has been very rare. It is condemned in the strongest Terms by the Roman Catholic Prelates, whom we examined upon the Subject.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

Appendix, No. 257.

When the Rules of the Society are violated, the course taken, in such Instances as have come to the Knowledge of the Society, is, that upon the Inspector communicating to them the Facts, the Society, by withholding the Gratuity from the Master, and by entering into Communication with the Patron, bring the Matter to the Issue of, either the Practice being rectified, or the Connexion between the School and the Society dissolved. We have reason to believe that the Instances in which it has been necessary to resort to the latter Alternative, have been very rare.

The Connexion which exists between the Kildare-Place Society and so many Schools which are also in Connexion with the London Hibernian Society, is thus explained to us. Mr. Jackson informed us, that in the Year 1820 His Grace the Archbishop of Tuam, as Vice President of the London Hibernian Society, applied for Aid for that Society to the Kildare-Place Society, "in any way which might appear to the Committee most fit." Mr. Jackson states that the Committee held it quite necessary that they should understand the Principles of the London Hibernian Society, in order to enable them to judge whether they could consistently comply with the Application on that Occasion; and that he therefore requested His Grace would procure the several Reports of that Society for their Inspection. The Committee, however, never did receive the Reports referred to, and accordingly they never did assist the Society, although Mr. Jackson states, that the Committee would have been happy to have had such a respectable Person as His Grace to confide in, but that they did not feel themselves at liberty to make the Grant without first ascertaining that the Principles and Acts of the London Hibernian Society, from the beginning, had been such as were consistent with those upon which the Kildare-Street Society was established; they have not, however, felt precluded from giving Assistance to individual Schools, though connected with the London Hibernian Society, provided an Undertaking was given, as in other Cases, to conform to the Rules of the Kildare-Street Society. *

Appendix, No. 202.

Upon

* By a Return recently transmitted to the Commissioners, it appears that the Munster Hibernian School Society have received Grants of Money from the Kildare-Place Society, to enable them to pay their Teachers.

The following Observations are subjoined to a List of 92 Schools in the Counties of Kerry, Cork, Waterford, Limerick, Tipperary, and Wexford, belonging to the former Society.

"The Society for promoting the Education of the Poor in Ireland have assisted all the Schools, either by Grants of Money towards building and furnishing the School Houses, or by Grants of Books and School Requisites; also by granting annual Bounties to the Teachers, and training many of them in the Model School. The Schools have been assisted in these various Ways, through their local Managers, and not through the Munster Hibernian School Society; but as a chief Part of the Remuneration of the Teachers falls upon the Munster Society, the Society for educating the Poor of Ireland have granted the following Sums to aid them in making their quarterly Payments to the Teachers."

In the Year 1822	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	£. 93	0	0
— 1823	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	282	0	0
— 1824	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	491	11	8

(Signed)

E. TOTTENHAM, Vice Treasurer.

W. C. LOGAN, } Secretaries.
A. BATWELL, }

Cork, 4th April 1825.

Kildare-Street
Society for the
Education of the
Poor.

Upon the whole, it appears to us, that while the Society have succeeded beyond their own most sanguine Expectations in some of their Objects, they have failed in others. They have certainly failed in producing universal Satisfaction; and it is observable, that while in Matters which they consider of lesser Importance, for Instance, the Issue of Books, the Arrangement of the Model School, the training of Masters and Mistresses, their System of Rewards, and their directing the Public Mind so powerfully to Education, they have conferred the most extensive and undoubted Benefits on Ireland, the Three Points which they distinguish from all others, as being fundamental and indispensable, are those in which their Failure, to a certain Extent, cannot be denied. The Compliance with these Three fundamental Rules, we are convinced, is in many Cases merely nominal: the use of the Scriptures is frequently a Matter of Form; Catechisms are taught as freely in many of their Schools as in any others, merely by the Fiction of treating the appointed Times as not being School Hours; and the Selection of Masters and Mistresses, though nominally uninfluenced by religious Considerations, are truly and practically confined to Roman Catholics, when the Patrons are the Roman Catholic Clergy, and to Protestants, when the Schools are in Connexion with the Association for discountenancing Vice, or the Patrons are Clergymen of the Established Church.

Appendix, No. 253.

It appears to us, that the Objection which may with the greatest Propriety be urged against the Society, is the very opposite to that which during their course they seem most to have apprehended: they feared that they should be considered as going too far upon the Subject of Religion; in our Opinion, they do not go far enough. While they have abstained, as a Matter of Necessity, from giving particular Instruction in Religion, they have rested upon a Compromise, the Terms of which they have never been able perfectly to realize, and which, even if realized, no Person is of Opinion would have been completely satisfactory. His Grace the Archbishop of Dublin says, "The System just described is one I have never been able to approve of, standing by itself; if connected with another, it may be made to be usefully instrumental. A Child may, by reading a certain Portion of the Scriptures, be rendered tolerably familiar with the Words and Subject, as far as it is a Matter of History, or exceedingly plain Instruction; at the same Time, there will be of course a kind of Undefinedness in the Minds of young Persons, even as to the Meaning of simple Sentences, that will mislead them if left entirely to themselves; but I am willing to suppose, that in Cases where any Attention is paid to Clerical Duties, some Religious Teaching is superadded to this simple Reading of the Testament, either by the Means of Sunday Schools, or on Week Days out of School Hours, so as not to interfere with the Rules and Conditions of the Schools regulated under this particular Plan of a comprehensive System, which has rendered it necessary to give the Testament by itself, without Note or Comment. If the System were to go no further than this, it would be one which could not be approved of, and therefore it is only to be viewed as Part of a Scheme; and in point of Practice, the Evil has been in a good Degree remedied."

The chief Defect in the present System is, that while a Compromise is rested on in the Schools of the Society, the supplemental Education in Religion, which all admit to be indispensable, is in Fact very insufficiently provided, and in some Instances which have fallen under our Observation, we regret to say, it is altogether neglected. The Catechetical Examination afforded in many of our Churches to such Children as attend, however valuable, as far as it extends, is evidently inadequate to supply what is required; and we cannot but consider it as in the highest Degree desirable to provide for such supplemental Instruction being effectually given in the Schools themselves, under Circumstances that shall excite no Jealousy or Distrust.

Lord Lieutenant's School Fund.

Lord Lieutenant's
School Fund.

A PARLIAMENTARY Grant was made in the Year 1819, empowering the Lord Lieutenant to issue Sums of Money from the Consolidated Fund in aid of Schools established established by voluntary Subscriptions, and Grants for the same purpose have since Lord Lieutenant's School Fund.

B3

been annually continued. The several Grants have been as follows;

In 1819	-	-	-	-	-	£. 3,250	0	0
1820	-	-	-	-	-	3,250	0	0
1821	-	-	-	-	-	4,333	6	8
1822	-	-	-	-	-	4,333	6	8
1823	-	-	-	-	-	7,583	6	8
1824	-	-	-	-	-	10,833	6	8

The Management of this Fund has been entrusted to Three Commissioners, the Reverend James Dunn, James Digges Latouche, Esquire, and Major Benjamin Blake Woodward. These Gentlemen give their Services gratuitously; no particular Power or Authority over the Fund has been delegated to them, but the Lord Lieutenant refers to them all Applications for Aid, and acts upon their Report. These Commissioners did not receive any Instructions as to the particular Principles upon which the Fund should be administered. Mr. Digges Latouche and Major Woodward, whose Evidence is given in the Appendix, state, that it has been applied in aid of the building or purchasing of School Houses, unaccompanied by any Condition, either with respect to the Government of the Schools or the Mode of Instruction; and that the Points to which the Commissioners direct their Attention previous to recommending a Grant are the Quantum of private Subscription, the Endowment of Land, the Number of Children likely to be educated, and the Prospect held out of an adequate annual Fund for the future Support of the School. They state that in general they require a Grant of Land in perpetuity; that they allow the Applicant to put it into any safe hands; that they do not require it to be made to the Protestant Clergy, or any particular Persons; that they have had Leases made to Roman Catholic Clergymen, and to private Lay Trustees, wherever the Proprietors of the School wished it, but that in general they have been made to the Minister and Churchwardens of the Parish; that a great many of the Schools which they have assisted have been established by the Parochial Clergy; that many of the School Houses, after they have been built, have been adopted by the Association for discountenancing Vice, and by the Society for the Education of the Poor; that a great Number of them have become parochial Schools, and that when the Lease is made to the Minister and Churchwardens, the Appointment of the Master is vested in them.

Mr. D. Latouche,
Appendix, No. 231.
Major Woodward,
Appendix, No. 239,
240

Applications for Assistance from the Fund are made by Memorial to the Lord Lieutenant; this Memorial is then referred to the Commissioners, who forward to the Applicant a Paper of printed Queries, to ascertain the Quantity of Land to be granted, the Amount of the private Subscriptions, the Number of Children to be educated, and the estimated Amount of the Building. Upon the Return of Answers to these Queries, they dispose of the Case, and in general reject the Application, unless Half the Amount of the Estimate be raised by private Subscriptions. If they approve of the Application, they require a Grant of the Land to be made to the Minister and Churchwardens of the Parish, or to other proper Trustees; and upon this being done, and the House being built, the Money is paid. The Lease or Conveyance of the Land is then lodged with the Commissioners, and from thenceforth they interfere no further with the School, nor make any Inquiry as to the manner in which it is managed, or what may be the System of Instruction which the Patron or Teacher thinks proper to pursue.

It appears, that the Commissioners have received, by virtue of the different Grants which we have already mentioned, the Sum of £. 33,583. 6s. 8d. (Irish Currency); and that they had expended, prior to the Month of August last, the Sum of £. 31,355. 10s. 5d., leaving at that time a Balance in hand amounting to £. 2,227. 16s. 3d., almost the whole of which however had been appropriated for School Houses not yet finished.

Many Applications for Grants to Roman Catholics are stated by Major Woodward to have been rejected. The Reasons assigned by him are, "Because their Plans were so very high, and their Subscriptions so very low, that it would have swallowed up the Fund." He adds, "they were Schools which would have required a Grant of Three or Four hundred Pounds, and that in exceedingly insignificant Parts of the Country. We consider £. 200 as almost our maximum Grant."

Major Woodward also informs us, that in consequence of a great Number of Applications for Grants coming at once from Roman Catholics in the Diocese of Tuam,

Lord Lieutenant's
School Fund.

Tuam, he had a Conversation with Dr. Kelly on the Subject, in which he stated his Apprehensions, that the Fund would not be nearly sufficient to meet the Applications which were expected from that Quarter, and that it was likely they should call for a List of Subscribers, in order to shew in what way the Fund was raised in aid of the proposed Schools. It does not appear, however, that any List of Subscribers has been actually called for, or any Application rejected on account of the Manner in which the proposed Contribution had been raised.

Appendix, No. 233.

Grants to Roman Catholics have also been discouraged by the Commissioners having adopted a printed Form of Conveyance, which makes the Minister and Churchwardens Parties to it, and vests in them the Government of the School to be established under it. In a Letter addressed to Major General Bourke, of the County of Limerick, by Major Woodward, in 1822, (in consequence of this Form of Conveyance having been objected to,) Major Woodward stated, that the general Principle upon which the Fund was administered was, that Education should be placed in the hands of the Established Clergy, and that the Commissioners had in very few Instances indeed been induced to depart from the general Rule. The Correspondence which took place upon this Occasion between General Bourke and Major Woodward will be found in the Appendix. When we examined Major Woodward upon the Subject, he had no Recollection of having written the Letter in question; and upon being shown a Copy of it, he stated, that the Commissioners did not at present act upon the Principle stated in it. Mr. Latouche informed us, that he was not aware of such a Letter having been written, and that he should not have approved of it.

Although the Commissioners are not bound by any Rules which confine their Grants to the Clergy of the Established Church, yet the Mode of administering the Fund appears to have had the practical Effect of encouraging Applications from them, and discouraging Applications from others. We think this is apparent from the Fact, that out of 431 Grants made out of this Fund, 12 only have been made to Roman Catholics.

Mr. Latouche, it appears, understood from a Conversation with Major Woodward, that several Applications from Roman Catholics had been refused, in consequence of the Funds brought forward by them having been raised from the People by the Priests, through such an Exercise of Authority as amounted to a Species of Taxation; but Major Woodward states that Mr. Latouche must have misunderstood him; that what he meant was, not that the Funds produced by the Roman Catholics had been obtained through Taxation, but that they were made up of several small Subscriptions collected from a considerable Number of Individuals, and that if Applications grounded on Contributions so produced should be encouraged, the Fund would not be sufficient to meet them. It is obvious that Major Woodward's Views lead to favor Applications from wealthy Individuals, rather than Applications from those of a more humble Class. The Idea that Applications from the latter, if encouraged, might increase so as to exceed the Limits of the Fund, does not appear to us to afford any Reason for discountenancing them; on the contrary, the Anxiety to promote Education which those Contributions evince on the Part both of the Roman Catholic Clergy and even the poorest of the Laity, deserves, in our Opinion, Encouragement and Attention.

It appears to us, that where Aid is granted the Schools are in no Degree placed under the Controul of the Commissioners, and that no Security whatever is taken as to the System of Education to be pursued in them, though eventually it may prove of a highly objectionable Nature.

We make no Doubt that many excellent Schools have derived Assistance, and may even owe their Existence to this Fund; but we think that the System is by far too vague and indeterminate to be continued, and that it ought to give way to one of a more secure and definite Character; and we shall in the Sequel of this Report recommend that this Fund shall henceforth be applied in another Manner.

Sunday School Society for Ireland.

THIS Society was founded in 1809; its Object was to promote the general Establishment of Sunday Schools for the religious Instruction of the People, and the Principle by which its Proceedings are governed is thus explained in the Remarks which they circulate for the Purpose of Information and Guidance among those Patrons and Conductors of Schools who are invited to a Connexion with them.

"The Principles on which this Society has been instituted are, that it shall promote the Establishment and facilitate the conducting of Sunday Schools in Ireland, by disseminating the most approved Plans for the Management of such Schools, by supplying them with Spelling Books, and Copies of the Sacred Scriptures, or Extracts therefrom, without Note or Comment, (the only Books which the Society disseminates amongst the Scholars) either gratuitously, or at reduced Prices; and that it shall not assume to itself any Controul over the internal Regulations of the Schools in Connexion with it, nor use any other Interference in their Concerns, than that of kind Admonition and Advice."

The Spelling Books referred to in this Regulation were compiled for the Society, and the reading Lessons which they contain are exclusively taken from the Scriptures.

The Business of the Society is conducted by a Committee of 17 Members.

No direct pecuniary Assistance is given, either in Salaries or in any other Form. At one Period small Sums of Money were occasionally supplied to the Schools; but this was found to be inexpedient, and a Resolution was passed in 1823, that no further Grants of Money should be made.

The Society requires from the Schools which they assist a Yearly Report of the Number of Scholars in Attendance, their Progress in reading, and other Particulars, for which Purpose printed Queries are forwarded to the Superintendants. Some of the Schools in Connexion with them are likewise on the List of other Associations; but the Society does not inquire into this Circumstance, nor is it an Objection that the School applying for Help is likewise a Day School.

The Society offers its Aid, without Exception, to every School which meets upon Sunday, as the Nature of the Assistance which they give ensures its Application to the Purpose of religious Instruction. Reading is necessarily taught to such Persons as come altogether uninstructed.

The Funds arise from voluntary Contributions.

This Institution has derived important Assistance from the Hibernian Bible Society, the Association for discountenancing Vice, and the Irish Society in Dublin, from the British and Foreign Bible Society, the Sunday School Union Society of London, and various Local Associations which have either made Donations of Books or of Money for the Purpose of purchasing them.

The Receipts of the Society from Subscriptions and Donations in Money, for the Year ended 3d March 1824, amounted to £. 2,104. 12 s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d.; and the Produce of Books and Monthly Extracts of Correspondence sold at the Society's Depository, to the further Sum of £. 316. 19 s. making the total Income for that Year £. 2,421. 11 s. 1 $\frac{1}{2}$ d. During the same Year a Grant of 12,000 Testaments was made by the British and Foreign Bible Society, in addition to other large Contributions from the same Body in preceding Years.

No Application has been made by this Society for Parliamentary Aid, although they had Reason to expect that a Recommendation to this Effect, if applied for, would not have been refused. But the Managers conceiving that a Dependence on such Funds would materially alter the Character and Spirit of their Establishment, by relaxing the Exertions of private Benevolence, and leading to an Expectation of pecuniary Reward on the Part of some of the Teachers, considered it their Duty not to solicit such Aid. The only Assistance which they derive from the Public is the Privilege which they enjoy, in common with most other religious and charitable Societies, of conducting their Correspondence through the Medium of the Post Office in Dublin, free from Charge.

Appendix, No. 239.

Sunday School
Society.

In the Year ended 3d March 1824 the Society published

17,500 Sheet Reports.
3,500 Pamphlet Reports.
30,000 Spelling Books, No. 1.
30,000 Spelling Books, No. 2.

During the same Year they afforded gratuitous Aid in Books to 682 Schools; namely,

17,570 Testaments.
16,803 Spelling Books, No. 1.
17,710 Spelling Books, No. 2.
9,154 Alphabets.
3,505 Freeman's Card for Adults.

The following Books were also sold, at reduced Prices, in that Year, to the Conductors of Sunday Schools, who had either received gratuitous Assistance during the Year, or who were unwilling to draw on the Funds of the Society; viz.

610 Bibles.
2,227 Testaments.
7,035 Spelling Books, No. 1.
4,169 Spelling Books, No. 2.
3,172 Alphabets.
1,072 Freeman's Card for Adults.
78 Hints for conducting Sunday Schools.

The entire Issues from the Depository, gratuitously and at reduced Prices, during the Year referred to, have therefore been 610 Bibles.

19,797 Testaments.
23,838 Spelling Books, No. 1.
21,879 Spelling Books, No. 2.
12,326 Alphabets.
4,577 Freeman's Card for Adults; and
78 Hints for conducting Sunday Schools.

The following are the total Number of Books which have been granted gratuitously, and at reduced Prices, since the Formation of the Society; viz.

8,648 Bibles.
139,273 Testaments.
112 Scripture Extracts.
391,876 Spelling Books, No. 1 and 2.
118,537 Alphabets.
18,782 Freeman's Card for Adults.
1,602 Hints for conducting Sunday Schools;

and the Sum of £. 427. 10s. 6d. has been expended in Grants of Money to the Schools since the Formation of the Society; but no Grants in Money have been given since April 1823.

The Society has lately made Arrangementss for printing an Edition of 30,000 Copies of an additional Spelling Book.

According to the general Return made to the Society in March 1824, the Number of actually existing Schools receiving its Aid was 1,640; the Number of Scholars reported as attending them, 157,184; and the Number of gratuitous Teachers, 12,578. This Number is exclusive of 70 Schools, which derived no further Aid from the Society than the Privilege of purchasing Books at a reduced Price.

In the Province of Ulster, where their Schools have been carried to the greatest Extent, the Proportion of Scholars, by the general Returns in March 1824, was 1 in 16 of the Population, according to the Census of 1821. In the County of Armagh it was 1 in 11. In the County of Londonderry, 1 in 12. In Antrim, Down, and Tyrone, 1 in 13. In Leinster, the general Proportion was 1 in 86. In this Province the County of Wicklow is pre-eminent, giving the Proportion of 1 to 23; and though in the other Two Provinces the Scale is greatly inferior, being in Connaught 1 in 193, (of which the highest Proportion is in Leitrim), and in Munster being being 1 in 354, (of which the highest Proportion is that in the County of Cork,) yet even in these Provinces the Numbers are increasing; various new Applications for the Establishment of Schools have been made from both during the last Year.

The Number of Scholars in the Schools of the Society over Ireland generally, appears to have been, at the Period referred to (March 1824), in the Ratio of one to 44 of the whole Population. It is to be observed, however, that this does not furnish the total Number of Scholars receiving Instruction in Protestant Sunday Schools, as there are others not connected with this Society, which are either aided by other Associations, or carried on by Individuals who do not apply for Assistance. The comparative Extent to which the System has been already carried in Ulster may be estimated from the Circumstance, that the Sunday School Teachers in that Province are nearly double the Number of the Scholars in the whole Province of Munster. The Teachers in Ulster being, according to the General Report of the Society in 1824, 9,471; and the Scholars in Munster being, by the same Report, 5,663. The Number of Scholars in Ulster in March 1824, was 125,272. The total Number in the other Three Provinces of Ireland was 31,912.

It appears that in the North of Ireland Instances occur, where Servants make it a Condition of their Engagement, that they shall be allowed a certain Portion of Time on Sunday for their Attendance at the School.

From a Communication which has been transmitted to us by the Secretary of the Society, subsequent to his Examination, in order to show the actual State of the Schools down to the latest Returns furnished to them, it appears that during the Year which ended in March last (1825), although there was an Increase of 62 Schools, and 250 gratuitous Teachers, there was a Decrease of Scholars to the Amount of 6,353. This Reduction in the Number of Scholars is ascribed by the Secretary to the following Causes; viz.

First.—More accurate Information of the State of the Schools (obtained through the Medium of Parochial Maps, prepared by the Society), from which it was ascertained that several Schools retained on the Society's List had failed, but the Failure of which had not been reported to the Society by their several Conductors.

Second.—An improved System in the Management of Schools, in consequence of which their Conductors have furnished more accurate Returns of the Number of Scholars in actual Attendance.

Third.—It is ascribed principally to the General Establishment, during the last Year, of Schools held on Sundays in the Roman Catholic Chapels, which Measure has withdrawn from the neighbouring Sunday Schools many of the Children of that Communion.

The following Statement, taken from the latest Report of the Society, will show the progressive Increase in the Number of its Schools, from the Period of its Establishment in November 1809 to the present Time.

1810	-	-	November	-	-	2 Schools, and	87 Scholars.
1811	-	-	Do.	-	-	44	5,172 Do.
1813	-	-	April	-	-	117	15,800 Do.
1814	-	-	Do.	-	-	175	23,529 Do.
1815	-	-	Do.	-	-	252	28,598 Do.
1816	-	-	Do.	-	-	335	37,590 Do.
1817	-	-	Do.	-	-	418	49,981 Do.
1818	-	-	Do.	-	-	522	57,819 Do.
1819	-	-	Do.	-	-	762	81,114 Do.
1820	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,021	108,774 Do.
1821	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,247	127,897 Do.
1822	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,395	144,848 Do.
1823	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,519	149,782 Do.
1824	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,640	157,184 Do.
1825	-	-	Do.	-	-	1,702	150,831 Do.

The most remarkable Features of the Plan on which this Society acts are its Simplicity, and the important Results which are produced when compared with its very limited limited Expenditure. This must be ascribed in a great Measure to the Description of the Teachers in the Sunday Schools, and to the Circumstance that their Services are gratuitous; a Peculiarity which is however of still greater Importance in a moral View than in reference to Considerations of Economy.

It is another Characteristic of the System, that the Society assumes no Direction or Controul whatever as to the Management of the Schools or the Plan of teaching. Although they distribute the Scriptures without Commentary, they abstain from inquiring whether any such is superadded by the Teachers. In like Manner they do not forbid the use of Catechisms, although none are supplied by them. Another Peculiarity which has led to the Extension of these Schools is, that they are formed with great Facility. There is no stipendiary Master to be sought for and engaged, and no Apparatus but a few Books to be provided. The Children of a District are often invited, if the use of a School Room cannot be had, to assemble in the Church or other Place of Worship before or after Divine Service, or they are brought to any other Place convenient for the Purpose.

The Mechanism of the School is also productive of important Advantage. The Instructors are sufficiently numerous in most Cases, to allow a Division of the Scholars into small Classes, and thus to admit of a much closer and more scrupulous Attention to the individual Scholars. Another, and still greater Advantage of the Plan allowed and recommended by the Society, and as it is practised in most, if not all of those Schools, is, that the Scholar does not learn his Lesson mechanically and by the Efforts of Memory alone. It is the great Object of a Sunday School Teacher, to communicate not merely the Power of Reading, but to insure the Understanding of what is read, which in many other Cases the Teacher has not the Opportunity, though he may have the Ability of effecting. The Children themselves have a peculiar Pleasure in attending these Schools; and Instances have been stated to us, where the Endeavour to prevent their resorting to them, or to withdraw them to other Places for Instruction, has proved unavailing. A few Schools have been opened for the Instruction of Adults exclusively. But the Sunday School is attended occasionally by grown Persons, and by many Youths who are above the Age of ordinary reading Scholars. It appears from a published Report of the Society for the Year ended April 1822, that the Number of Persons attending the Schools at that time, who were above the Age of 15, was, in the Province of

Ulster	-	-	-	-	14,048
In Leinster	-	-	-	-	2,119
In Connaught	-	-	-	-	616 and
In Munster	-	-	-	-	346

Making a Total of - - - 17,129

The Sunday Schools in general are composed of a more mixed Description of Persons, both in respect of Age and Station, than the Attendants on the ordinary Day Schools; and in consequence of the Places where they are sometimes held, such as the Cottages of the Poor themselves, or the Dwelling of the Patron and Teacher, those Individuals are often induced to join them who would be deterred by its publicity from appearing at the ordinary School House. This System of Instruction has found its way also into some of the Hospitals and Gaols, and has extended its Influence to many Quarters which were before inaccessible to the Means of moral and intellectual Improvement.

Of the general good Effects produced by this Class of Schools, and their Influence in promoting the moral Culture of the People, we have received very strong Proofs from the Testimony of those who have attended to their Operation. Mr. Latouche, who has acted gratuitously as its Secretary, since its first Establishment, and to whose Exertions the Society has been much indebted, thus expressed himself on the Subject: "The best System of Sunday School Instruction is " where it is spread over the Parish, and where the Teachers and Children live " near each other, because it should not be supposed that the Instruction of the " Sunday School is merely that which takes place on the Sunday. The Teacher
" forms a parental Affection for his Pupil, and the Pupil a filial Feeling towards " his Teacher, and that is carried on during the Week, and if a Child is seen " doing

“ doing any thing wrong in the Week Day, the Teacher considers he has a right
 “ to find Fault with him, and keeps his Eye upon him—then again, the Teacher, “ as it has been represented to me, becomes more circumspect in his Conduct, he “ knows he is under the Eye of his Pupils, and he would be ashamed to be seen “ doing a thing on a Week Day that he told the Children not to do on the Sunday;—
 “ then again the Lessons for the next Sunday are to be prepared during the Week;
 “ they are generally Portions of Scripture to be committed to Memory, that “ brings necessarily not only the Scriptures before the Child’s Mind, giving him “ something to think of, but it brings it before the Members of his Family, as he “ frequently puts the Book into the hands of his Family to hear him his Lessons,
 “ so that the Holy Scriptures are brought more closely in contact with the Poor
 “ by the Sunday Schools.”—“ The Sunday School is a kind of Channel in which “ all the good Feelings and better Principles of the upper Classes can be conveyed “ to the lower; it brings them in contact together, and tends considerably to har“ monize the different Ranks of Society.” “ I think it is among the Clergy of the “ Established Church that Sunday School Instruction has increased and is likely “ to increase—the high Approbation of several Dignitaries of the Church has been “ given to the System of Sunday School Instruction.” “ I am convinced that the “ Feelings of the Presbyterian Population in the North are very favourable to Sun“ day School Instruction, and they are becoming progressively more so, from the “ Experience they have had of the excellent Effects of it.”

The Testimony of the Reverend Dr. Elrington, the Reverend Mr. Cooke, and others, whom we have examined on the Subject, is to the same Effect. It is impossible, indeed, to witness the Proceedings of these Schools, even in the most cursory Manner, without perceiving their beneficial Tendency. The Influence on moral Character, which has already been produced in those Parts of Ireland where Institutions of this kind have been formed, is attested by undoubted Authority. A marked Improvement in Principle and Conduct, an increased Respect to moral Obligation, a more general Observance of relative Duties, and a greater Deference to the Laws, are invariably represented as among the Fruits of the Education there received; and we entertain no Doubt that it is one of the most powerful Instruments for raising the Character and advancing the general Welfare of the People.

Among the Benefits which result generally from the Exertions of the Sunday School Society, we think it important to notice those which are produced by the increased Intercourse and the more near Approach which these Institutions are the Means of producing between the different Classes of the People. A mutual Attachment and Interest is created between the Teacher and the Pupil, which is productive of Benefit, while the course of Instruction continues, and is not likely to terminate with the Occasion which gives rise to it. It affords a new and powerful Incitement for good Conduct, the Effects of which are not confined to the Scholar, and which by tending to remove Prejudice and to conciliate Regard, is necessarily productive of Improvement in the general State of Society.

The London Hibernian Society.

WE now proceed to notice in detail “ The London Hibernian Society, for establishing Schools, and circulating the Holy Scriptures in Ireland.”

London Hibernian
Society.

This Society originated with some Individuals who associated in London, in the Year 1806, for the Purpose of diffusing religious Knowledge in Ireland. They proposed, as it is stated in their Regulations printed in 1808, to effect this Object, “ by the Ministry of the Gospel, by the Dispersion of the Holy Scriptures and “ religious Tracts, by the Formation and Support of Schools, and by every other “ lawful and prudent Measure calculated to promote pure Religion, Morality, and “ Loyalty.”

London Hibernian
Society.

The particular Principles upon which the Society intended to proceed in the Establishment of Schools, are not explained in the original Plan and Regulations; but we find the following Statements in a Report by a Deputation, which, under the Directions of the Society, and in furtherance of their Objects, visited Ireland in 1808.

“ The great Body of the Irish wander like Sheep, that have no faithful Shepherd to lead them. Legendary Tales, Pilgrimages, Penances, Superstitions, Offerings, Priestly Domination, the notorious Habit of reconciling Sanctimonious Accents and Attitudes with abandoned Practices, and all that shocks and disgusts in the Mummery of the Mass House, cannot fail to fix a mournful Sentiment in the Heart of every enlightened and pious Observer.” “ Popery appears to be exhibited and inculcated there (as it probably is in every Country where it obtains footing) with such a decided Partiality in favour of its most fantastic and anti-christian Features; the Manœuvres of its Priests are so various, so subtle, and alas! so efficient, and the moral Aspect, from these, and other Causes, is so discouraging, that the Deputation confining themselves to this View of Ireland, see nothing but formidable Barriers erected against every Attempt to bless her Inhabitants with the Light of Life; nor must it be concealed, that the numeral Predominance of Roman Catholics is itself a prolific Seed of Disunion, not so say political Disaffection. The Hope, therefore, that the Irish will ever be a tranquil and loyal People, and still more that Piety and Virtue will flourish among them, must be built on the anticipated Reduction of Popery.”

“ Wherever Schools are introduced, though by Protestants, Catholics allow their Children to reap the Advantage of them, nor will the Establishment of a School by those of their own Communion invariably detach them from the former. Comparisons are instituted, and the School of the Protestants has been known to obtain the Preference. In such Cases, however, Protestants have previously distinguished themselves by Prudence and Forbearance, as well as other Qualifications, that is, while they have placed in view the leading Principles of Religion, they have abstained from Invectives against Popery, and from every Attempt to make Proselytes. To a certain Degree the Society must adopt their Precautions, but there will be frequent Opportunities of disclosing to the Catholic Youth the Systems of both Churches in their amplest Extent.”

“ The Papers issued by the Society have announced the Ministry of the Gospel, the Formation and Support of Schools, and the Dispersion of the Holy Scriptures and religious Tracts, as the principal Methods by which, in a humble Dependence on the Blessing of God, the Society propose to extend Divine Knowledge in Ireland.”

“ What concerns the Department of the Ministry is unspeakably important, and will demand incessant Attention and the most scrupulous Care.”

“ In order to ensure greater Probability of Effect, it appears advisable to chuse populous Towns, which the Ministers shall occupy as central Stations, where they shall preach every Sabbath, but from which they shall be recommended occasionally to spread themselves through all the Vicinity.”

“ With regard to the Choice of Stations, it should be regulated, in a great Degree, by the comparative Prevalence of Popery. In several Parts of the North, Protestants are the more numerous Body. Now whatever Disadvantages some of these may lie under, they have the Scriptures in their hands, and even where they would be perverted or grossly neglected by the Ministers of their own Parish or Denomination, they have perhaps a few Associates who would be happy to afford them Spiritual Assistance, or they may have it in their Power to attend other Ministers who would feed them with Knowledge and Understanding; so that, if they are ignorant, it is far more probable than in the Case of Papists that they are willingly ignorant. The most legitimate Field of Labour for the Hibernian Society is, therefore, in the confessed Religion of Popery, where there are few or no Protestants to shew the deluded Multitude a more excellent Way. Yet there are, unquestionably, many Places where Protestants have been labouring for Years, and not quite in vain, which, on account of their vast Population, may be resorted to by the Agents of the Hibernian Society, nor will good Sense and Candour suspect of Hostility or illiberal Competition.”

“ On

" On every band the Determination should be to detach, by the Power of Truth and of superior Piety, as many as possible from the Folds of counterfeit Shepherds, but to adopt no Measure that tends to diminish the Flocks of the vigilant and faithful ; to make perpetual Inroads on the Kingdom of Satan, but by no Means to divide and disturb the Family of Jesus Christ."

" Wherever there is a ministerial Station, there should also be, in addition to a Sunday School, a School (at least for Boys) throughout the Week."

It appears by the printed Reports, and by a Letter addressed to us by Mr. Gordon, an active Member of the Society, on behalf of their General Committee, which Letter is given in the Appendix, that the Recommendations contained in the Report of the Deputation, were carried into immediate Effect, and that the Society continued to combine the Employment of Preachers with the Establishment of Schools until the Year 1814, when their Plan was to a certain Extent altered, and the Employment of Preachers entirely given up. The Society had then established 242 Schools, upon which, as stated in their Reports, there were in Attendance 11,916 Scholars. From that Time the Establishment of Schools, and the Circulation of the Holy Scriptures, became its primary Objects.

Appendix, No. 248.

The Society have now Three Classes of Schools, Day Schools, Adult Schools, and Sunday Schools. It is stated in the 18th printed Report of the Society, that the Day Schools were, in the Year 1823, as follows : In Ulster, 326 Schools, having 31,702 Scholars ; in Leinster, 31 Schools, having 2,665 Scholars ; in Connaught, 204 Schools, having 18,271 Scholars ; in Munster, 92 Schools, having 8,749 Scholars ; making in all 653 Schools, and 61,387 Scholars.

It is stated in the same Report, that the total Number in Attendance at the Adult Schools during the same Year amounted to 10,117, and that there were 17,145 in Attendance on the Sunday Schools, making altogether 88,649 Scholars in the Schools connected with the Society. But from this Total it is stated, that the Number in Attendance at the Sunday Schools (being generally a Duplicate Attendance), should be deducted, so that the actual Number is stated to be 10,117 Adults, and 61,387 Children.

Of the Day Schools, about 340 are in Connexion with the Society for the Education of the Poor, and a few also with the Association for discountenancing Vice. The Schools so connected, indirectly receive, through those Societies, considerable Aid and Support from the Public.

Appendix, No. 228.

Some Schools have also received Aid from the Lord Lieutenant's Fund.*

The following Extracts from the Regulations of the Society shew the System upon which the Schools are at present conducted :

" Resident Visitors."

" Clergymen of every Denomination connected with the Children under Instruction, in any of the Schools, are solicited to superintend the Concerns of the Schools."

" The Resident Parochial Minister is officially the stated and permanent Visitor, but not to the Exclusion of Clergymen of other Denominations, or Gentlemen resident in the Neighbourhood."

" Selection of Teachers."

" In selecting Teachers to preside over any of the Society's Schools, moral Character and Competency for the Office are the only Requisites required. Individuals so qualified, of every religious Denomination, are alike eligible."

" Inspectors."

" A competent Number of these are provided by the Society. Their Business is constantly to itinerate through the Districts—to open Schools—to hold quarterly, and take occasional Inspections—and where necessary, to settle with and pay

* The Society, as already mentioned, also circulates the Scriptures ; and it is stated in the 18th Report, that the Number of Copies issued from the Depositary, in the course of the Year 1823, amounted to 2,005 English Bibles, 12,297 English and 2,000 Irish Testaments.

London Hibernian
Society.

“ pay the Teachers. They are respectfully to attend to the Suggestions of the Visitors, and are authorized to apply for and receive Subscriptions and Donations.”

“ Books to be used in the School.”

“ To guarantee the pledged Non-interference of the Society with the religious Tenets of those under their Care—to secure unto their Pupils moral Principle, without any Interference with the peculiar Doctrines of their respective Denominations—and with a View to obviate that Species of Animosity which Attention to religious Distinctions generates, no Books on religious Controversy, Tracts, or Catechisms, are to be admitted into the Schools. The Holy Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, without Note or Comment, in the English and Irish Languages, and the Society’s Spelling Books, are the only Books provided by the Society.”

“ Remuneration of Teachers.”

“ Teachers are to be paid at the Termination of each Quarter, agreeably to the Result of the Inspection then to be taken by an Inspector.”

“ The Basis of the Calculation for the Settlement with the Teacher is not the Number of Pupils on the Roll, but the Number then present for Examination. Inspectors, however, are at Liberty, with respect to such Pupils whose Absence is satisfactorily accounted for, to give the Teachers Certificates, which will entitle them to Payment for such at the next Inspection, on their then manifesting Proficiency for Half a Year.”

“ Scale of Proficiency for ascertaining the Average payable.”

“ Pupils entered in the following Classes must be qualified to pass into the next Class in Succession, within the following Periods :

“ Alphabet Class, in Two Months.”

“ Junior Spelling Class, in Four Months.”

“ Senior Spelling Class, in Three Months”

“ Spelling Book Readers, in Three Months.”

“ Allowing Six Months from the Alphabet to entrance into the Senior Spelling Class, and Six Months from commencing in that Class for qualifying to enter the Testament Class.”

“ Writing.”

“ Each Pupil is to commence Writing on entering into the Spelling Book Reading Class.”

“ Cyphering.”

“ Each Pupil on entering the Testament Class is to commence the Study of Figures.”

“ Tasks.”

“ Each Pupil in the following Classes is, at the General Inspection for the Quarter, correctly to repeat from Memory as follows :

“ Spelling Book Readers Class.”

“ Four Pages in the Reading Lessons, and Two Pages of the Spelling Columns in Spelling Book, Part the Second.”

“ Testament Class.”

“ Four Chapters at least in the Gospels or Epistles, selected by the Visitor, or the Inspector at the preceding Inspection, and Four Pages of the Spelling Columns aforesaid.”

“ The Teachers are not to be paid for any Pupils whose Proficiency does not correspond with all the preceding Requisitions, and it is discretionary with the Inspector to deduct the Value of the absent Days of those Pupils who barely pass.”

“ Instructions in reading Irish.”

“ The Art of reading Irish in the Roman and Celtic Characters is to be taught to all Pupils who may desire it, and all Masters in Districts where the Irish is
“ the

" the common Language of the adult Population, are required to form an Irish
 " Class, and for the extra Attention and Trouble attending the Instruction of Irish " Classes an additional Allowance of Half Pay is granted to the Teacher."

" Night Schools."

" In the Winter Season the Society permits their Teachers to hold Night Schools
 " for the Benefit of the more adult Population in the Neighbourhood, whose early " Education has been neglected ; where necessary, the Society provides Candlelight,
 " &c. The Master is not entitled to Payment for any of his Day School Pupils
 " who may attend."

It is one of the general Instructions, that " no Teacher is to obtrude on the " Attention of his Pupils the Peculiarities of his religious Denomination ; he is,
 " however, to require their Attention to the Grammatical Import of their Reading
 " Lessons and Tasks, and to the moral Duties therein inculcated."

The Society employs Eleven Inspectors, and Twenty cursory Inspectors, to visit and report the State of the Schools. They also employ itinerant Readers, whose Duty it is to proceed through the Country, reading and expounding the Scriptures where Opportunities offer, and occasionally visiting the Schools.

There are Thirty-five District Agents in the Country, who pay the Masters, keep Depôts of the Books, and otherwise forward the Objects of the Society. Of these Agents, Thirty-two are Protestants of the Established Church, Three are Protestant Dissenters.

In the total Number of Schools connected with the Society, is included a Class consisting at present of 92, which belong to a Branch of the Society called " The " Munster Hibernian School Society." The latter Schools are supported from the separate Funds of the Branch Society ; they are however under the same System of Inspection and Management as the other Schools, except that the Douay Testament is generally used in them. The Funds of the Munster Society are not applicable to the Payment of the Scripture Readers, or Cursory Inspectors of the London Hibernian Society, nor has the Munster Society Scripture Readers in their own Employment.

The London Hibernian Society has from its Commencement been opposed by the greater Part of the Roman Catholic Clergy. Some Members of that Body have however at all Times had Schools under their own Superintendence, in connexion with the Society ; and Instances were stated to us by Captain Pringle, (a Witness to be afterwards referred to more particularly,) where Roman Catholic Clergymen expressed to him their full Approbation of the Principles of the Society, although some of them have lately withdrawn from and opposed it.

The Opposition so generally given by the Roman Catholic Clergy has been rested both upon the Ground that the use of the Scriptures in the way prescribed by the Rules of the Society is contrary to the Discipline of the Roman Catholic Church, and their Apprehension that the real Object of the Society is to disturb and undermine their Religion.

The London Hibernian Society positively disavows that their Object is to make Proselytes from the Roman Catholic to the Protestant Communion. In the Letter before-mentioned, addressed to us by Mr. Gordon, the following Explanation is given on this Subject: " The first and most popular of the Objections to which the Committee would " advert, is the Objection which charges the Institution with the Design and Practice
 " of Proselytism ; and a precipitate and indiscriminating Zeal has pretended to rest
 " the Justification of this Charge upon the published Statements of the Society,
 " but more particularly upon the Extracts of Correspondence which are usually " given in the Appendix to its Reports. Before the Committee make any Obser" vation upon the Justice of such a Charge, or the Extent to which it is sup" ported by the Publications of the Society, they beg to define the Sense in which " they understand the Expression, and this they are enabled to do in the Language
 " of their last Report to the Public. ' Proselytism, as confined to a mere external " Change of religious Profession, forms no Part of the Society's System. No In" terference with ritual Distinction is permitted in the Schools: no Attempt at " such

Appendix, No 248.

London Hibernian
Society.

“ such Interference has come within the Knowledge of the Committee; and there “ is not probably a School in the Society’s Connexion where the Parents of “ Roman Catholic Children in attendance would not readily bear Testimony to “ the good Faith which has been kept by the Institution, in the Observance of this “ Understanding.’ To these may be added the Sentiments of the Committee of “ 1811, delivered in the Report of that Year. Referring to the ‘ Divine Energy
 “ of true and vital Religion,’ the Committee observe, ‘ without this holy and “ saving Energy, should the greatest Numbers be converted to the Name of Pro“ testantism, such Proselytes would receive but little Benefit from the Change;
 “ they would bring no Blessing to the Society; and as large Experience has “ taught, they would almost without Exception relapse into Popery.’ As far there“ fore as Proselytism includes a Reference to a particular Creed, the Committee “ would discharge the Idea from both the Intention and Practice of the Society;
 “ but in conveying more distinctly to the Commissioners their Understanding upon
 “ the Subject, they would lay down the broad and intelligible Distinction which “ subsists between Proselytism in the Sense in which they have disclaimed it, and “ those Changes, or more properly Conversions, which, in the Language of the same “ Report, ‘ are as applicable to the Protestant as the Roman Catholic, and uni“ formly described to consist in a religious and moral Transformation of Character, “ never in exchanging the mere Ceremonial of the one Church for that of the other.’ In“ stances of such Conversion as this will ever be found to be a Consequence of the “ unrestricted use of the Scriptures; and as they owe their Reality to the Divine “ Efficacy of that Word, so will Society be indebted for their Number to the “ Extent of its free Circulation. Such Conversions as these the Committee unequi- “ vocally associate with the Plan and Designs of the Society; and if the Question “ should be asked, as it not unfrequently is, whether such Conversions involve an “ Abandonment of the Roman Catholic Church, the Committee, in speaking from “ Experience, will candidly avow their Conviction that they do. The Evidence “ then, which is founded upon the Fact, that the Society makes Proselytes from the “ Roman Catholic Communion, amounts to nothing more than the Proof that its “ Practice is consistent with its avowed Profession of introducing the Minds of its “ Pupils to a general Acquaintance with the Truths of Scripture.”

“ With respect to the particular Class of Proofs which are said to be discoverable
 “ in the Correspondence of the Society, the Committee would draw the Distinction “ between Instances of reported Conversion, and Cases of practical Interference “ with the Tenets of the Children in School. Cases of the Description which are “ usually stated in the Report, are Facts of Conversion wrought by the simple Efficacy
 “ of Divine Truth, not by Interference upon the Part of the Society with the religious “ Peculiarities of the Scholars; and however the Policy of such Statements may be “ questioned by some, the Statements themselves supply no Proof of improper “ Deviation from a strictly neutral Practice in the Schools.”

The 18th Report of the Society contains the following Statement. “ Such Con“ versions as are contemplated by the Hibernian Society, are as applicable to the “ Protestant as to the Roman Catholic, and are uniformly described as consisting “ in a religious and moral Transformation of Character, never in exchanging the mere “ Ceremonial of the one Church for that of the other.”

“ It cannot indeed be concealed that they involve in general Cases the Abandon“ ment of the Romish Communion, and the Committee have no Disposition to “ deny that such Consequences are the legitimate Effect of Scriptural Instruction, “ although any Explanation of the Principles by which it is to be accounted for
 “ would be foreign to the Object of their present Statement.”

Appendix, No, 244.

Mr. Gordon was himself examined by us, and being asked, Whether it was the Object of the Society in any way to promote the Reformation in Ireland? his Answer was, “ There is no such Object on the Part of the Institution. The “ Design is simply to enlighten the Children and Adults coming within the Sphere
 “ of its Operations, in the fundamental Truths of Christianity. the Object is not “ to make them Protestants, but Christians. We do not contemplate the Church of “ Rome, or any other Church, in our Plan; our Object is simply to bring Roman “ Catholics acquainted with the fundamental Truths of Christianity, leaving it to “ themselves

"themselves to chuse what Church they please." He was further examined as follows:—

Q. "Will you describe what you take to be the Fundamentals of the Christian Religion?"

A. "That Question requires, that I should enter upon a Confession of what I believe to be the Faith of Christians."

Q. "Do you believe, that the fundamental Principles of Christianity are set forth in the Apostles' Creed?"

A. "I do."

Q. "Do you think the Roman Catholics hold that Creed?"

A. "I feel it difficult to say; I believe they hold it; but in the popular Definition of their System they hold Tenets at Variance with that Creed."

Q. "Do they hold the Doctrines of the Creed?"

A. "They profess to hold them, but I cannot reconcile the Creed with what they profess to hold in addition."

Q. "According to your Notions of their Doctrines, you do not consider they hold that Creed?"

A. "They may hold it, but if they do, I apprehend they must hold in a different Sense to what I do the Dogmas of their System."

Q. "You mean that they do not hold it as Christians do?"

A. "I should say, that they could not hold it as Christians do, holding with it every other Part of their System."

Q. "What are the other Doctrines?"

A. "The Doctrines of human Merit, and the Worship and Invocation of Saints and Angels."

Q. "When you wish to enlighten the Roman Catholics, do you not wish they should cease to invoke Saints and Angels?"

A. "If the Invocation of Saints and Angels is understood by the Roman Catholics in the Sense in which I understand it, I should certainly say, Yes."

Q. "You know the Sense in which the Roman Catholic Church teaches that Doctrine?"

A. "I know that they differ in their Statements of it. I consider that the Invocation of Saints and Angels, in any Form is inconsistent with Christianity."

Q. "Do you find that an Opinion is entertained by the Roman Catholic Body, that it is the Object of the Persons who promote the Schools of the London Hibernian Society, to interfere with and unsettle the Belief of the Roman Catholics in their Religion?"

A. "In answering that Question, I must make a Distinction between the Pastor of the Roman Catholic Church, and the Classes of Society who are contemplated by the Objects of the Institution. On the Part of the Clergy, as far at least as my Acquaintance extends, I have never discovered an Exception to unqualified Opposition; it has sometimes rested on one ground, and sometimes on another, but it has always existed. With respect to the Bulk of the Peasantry, I have not met with any thing but the most cordial Approbation of the System; and in proof of this Statement, I would refer to a Case in which the Society made an Experiment to ascertain the Feelings of the lower Orders, by proposing for Signature a Certificate from the Parents of the Roman Catholic Children in attendance in the Schools; upwards of 400 Copies of this Document were signed by Roman Catholics, and probably Three Times that Number would have been procured, had not the Roman Catholic Clergy discovered the Design, and repressed the Signatures.* I should also state, that I have met with nothing but sincere Gratitude on the Part of the lower Orders, for the Provisions that the Society has extended to their Offspring; they have considered the System rational and fair, and the Practice of the Schools above board; and so far from any Objection to placing their Children at such Schools, there is an eager Desire to profit by the Opportunity, until the School is denounced by Ecclesiastical Authority."

Q. "Do

* The Nature and Terms of the Certificates described by Mr. Gordon are explained at length in the Evidence of Captain Pringle, to which we refer. (Appendix, No. 242, 243.)

London Hibernian
Society.

Q. "Do you think there are at this Moment a considerable Number of Roman Catholic Parents who are out of the Communion of their own Church, although not in Communion with the Protestant Church?"

A. "Yes, a considerable Number, and a still greater Proportion is in a Situation immediate between that Class and a Belief in the Dogmas of their System."

Q. "Have the goodness to explain the Situation in which the Persons are, whom you describe as not being in Communion with that Church?"

A. "I should not conceive it correct to call them Protestants, inasmuch as they have not protested against their own Church; the Term Protestant implies a Preference for some particular Creed, as opposed to another; and I conceive there are a great Number of Roman Catholics who have received sufficient Light to discover a Discrepancy between the general Information of the Scriptures, and the Tenets of their own Church, but who are either lingering within her Pale, or if they have passed its outward Limits, have not yet entered into any other Communion."

Q. "Do those Persons attend any Place of Worship?"

A. "They sometimes attend one Place, and sometimes another."

Q. "Are they Persons above the lowest Class of Life?"

A. "No; they are Persons in the lowest Class of Life, but including respectable Farmers."

Q. "Do they receive the Sacrament according to the Forms of the Roman Catholic Church?"

A. "In reference to the Class which may be considered the most advanced in the Secession, they have given up the Sacraments; the Surrender of them will depend upon the Strength of their Conviction with respect to the Errors of the Church."

Q. "Are you at present speaking of the Class of Persons who have been interdicted from the Sacraments by their Clergy, as a Punishment for sending their Children to the Hibernian Society's Schools, or what other Class?"

A. "I am not speaking of the Class which has been interdicted by the Clergy, because such Persons continue Roman Catholics in belief; the Suspension of the Sacraments is not only contrary to their Feelings, but amounts, in many Instances, to a Denial of what they consider necessary to their Salvation, although even under that Impression they will often persevere in sending their Children to the Schools."

Q. "Describe the Class to which your Two or Three last Answers have Reference?"

A. "There is a numerous Class who, from reading the Scriptures, have received as much Light as has fixed a Distinction in their Mind between the Truths of Revelation and the Tenets of the Roman Catholic Church; and they have either forsaken that Church, or from political Motives, such as the Dread of Persecution, are continuing in nominal Connexion with her at the Expense of a satisfactory Conviction of the Discordance of her Doctrines with those of the Scriptures."

Q. "Is it in any particular Description of Schools that the Class of Persons of whom you are now speaking are to be found?"

A. "It is chiefly among the Adults."

Q. "What may be your Idea of the Extent of this Class of Persons, and where are they to be found?"

A. "In every Part of Ireland where the System of Scriptural Instruction has been active. I cannot speak as to the Extent of the Class; but such a Description of Persons is well known to the Schoolmasters and Readers of the Society, and also to Clergymen and others who have access to the lower Orders."

Q. "As a Matter of Conjecture, would you estimate their Number by Hundreds or Thousands?"

A. "I should say many Thousands; it is widely extending in Operation."

Q. "You have spoken of this as being the result of a System; what do you mean by a System?"

A. "I mean, in this Instance, the Combination of religious Instruction in the Schools with reading and circulating the Scriptures out of the Schools."

Q. "In one of your former Answers you were understood to say you did not attribute this growing Change of Opinion to any Instruction in the Schools given by the Society, but to the Operation upon the Minds of the Adults?"

A. "I of

A. "I of course include the Adult Schools. The Society has 12,000 Adults in those Schools, and the Instruction to which I refer has necessarily a full Effect upon that Portion of its Attendance; there is also an Effect produced upon the juvenile Part of the Attendance; a great many Instances have occurred in which Children, from reading the Scriptures, have left the Roman Catholic Communion."

Q. "Children of what Ages?"

A. "Between Fourteen and Eighteen; and I have known some Instances as early as Twelve."

Q. "Are there many Instances of Children in your Schools between Fourteen and Eighteen?"

A. "There are a great Number of such Instances, but fewer than formerly; the Proportion has been altered by the Opposition, but there still remain a considerable Number."

Q. "When you spoke of the 12,000 Adults, do you mean that they are collected in Schools where none but Adults are educated, or that they are scattered among the Schools where there are Children?"

A. "They are in Schools exclusively for Adults."

Q. "There is not a Mixture of Adults and Children in the same Schools?"

A. "No."

Q. "Are you yourself surprised that the Roman Catholic Clergy should oppose Schools that produce the practical Result you have stated?"

A. "Not at all; I should be very much surprised if they did not oppose them."

Q. "Do you conceive that the Parents of the Children are equally conscious with the Clergy of those possible Results?"

A. "I consider that the Parents are not under the Influence of the same Principles which govern the Clergy. The people are willing to receive their Religion from the Scriptures, if they were permitted; and they have a much more intelligible Notion of the Religion which they receive from this Source, than of that which is taught by their Church, a great deal of which consists in Mystery."

Q. "The Question is, whether the Parents in any particular District would continue to send their Children to an Hibernian Society School, if they were conscious it had been the Result of that School to change the religious Views of the Persons who had passed through it?"

A. "Certainly not; and this will be best explained by the Fact that Parents have frequently objected to the Attendance of their Children upon the Schools previous to their own Acquaintance with the Scriptures, who have afterwards replaced their Children at the same Schools from whence they had been withdrawn."

Q. "You have stated that many of those who ceased to be Roman Catholics were prevented by Fear from conforming to the Established Church?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you think that Fear would operate upon their Minds at the Hour of Death?"

A. "Yes; many of these Persons having no intelligible View of the Sacraments and Doctrines of the Church of England, they would not, I should think, make Application to her Clergy; they would not be deterred by Fear, but by Ignorance; and having received the Light from Scripture, which enabled them to discover the Distinction between Christianity and the Doctrine of the Church of Rome, they would no doubt repair to the same Source for Support and Consolation."

Q. "You consider that those Thousands are in a floating State, not being Members of the Church of England, nor Members of the Church of Rome, nor of any other Church?"

A. "They certainly are not in connexion with the Church of Rome, if we consider that such Connexion implies Conformity to her Ritual. I regard them as Persons holding the Doctrines of Christianity as they are laid down in the Scriptures; and although they derive no Benefit from the Rites of the Roman Catholic Church, they are not without the Consolations of Religion."

Captain Pringle, Superintending Inspector for the Society in Ireland, was also examined upon the same Subject, as follows:

Q. "Do you think that the Character of a Proselyting Society fairly attaches to the London Hibernian Society."

A. "No, I do not."

London Hibernian
Society.

Q. "Do you not think that it may be the Tendency of your Schools to induce the Roman Catholic Children to become Protestants?"

A. "I think the Tendency would be to point out the Discrepancy between the Roman Catholic Tenets and the Testament, but not from any Means we use of any particular Nature to induce it."

Q. "Do you mean, if Conversion takes place, it will be chargeable upon the Testament, and not upon your Society?"

A. "Yes, we leave it to its own Operation."

Q. "Do the Society afford any Reward or Encouragement to the Children who express a Change of Religion?"

A. "No, not any."

Being asked, "Is it your Wish, through the Medium of these Schools, that Roman Catholics should become, according to your View of their present Situation, more enlightened?"

He answered, "Certainly."

Q. "That they should cease to be Roman Catholics?"

A. "My Wish is not that they should cease to be Roman Catholics, without Conviction or Reason for it, but if they should be convinced from Scripture, that they should follow up the Conviction from this Sentiment, whatever it may lead to."

Q. "Is it your Wish they should become convinced they are at present in Error?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Is it one of your Objects to give Effect to that Wish in establishing Schools?"

A. "Merely in the general way of Scriptural Information."

Q. "I am not considering the Means, but the End you seek?"

A. "My Wish is that a Person should be brought from Error."

Q. "And you think making Roman Catholic Children read the Scriptures, and commit Portions of them to Memory, without learning any Catechism, may produce the End you seek?"

A. "I think so, from the Discrepancies between the Tenets of the Roman Catholics and the Scriptures."

Q. "That it may make the Roman Catholics become Protestants?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "What Species of Protestants do you wish them to become?"

A. "I have no Wish upon that Point."

Q. "Whether Protestants of the Church of England, or of the Presbyterian Church of Scotland, Protestants professing Arian Principles, or otherwise?"

A. "I should wish them to adopt what I consider nearest the Truth?"

Q. "Which do you consider nearest the Truth?"

A. "I belong to the Church of Scotland, and have a Preference for that, but I have no Doctrinal Objection to the Church of England; I would rather they become Members of the Church of England."

Q. "Are you aware that a considerable Number of Persons who call themselves Protestants in Ireland, and who may have been Roman Catholics, profess what is called Arianism?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Would you wish that the Roman Catholics, by reading the Scriptures, should become Arians?"

A. "No."

Q. "Which would be most desirable, that they should become Arians, or remain Roman Catholics?"

A. "Remain Roman Catholics."

Q. "You have stated that you rather preferred having Roman Catholic Teachers?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Why do you prefer having Roman Catholic Teachers?"

A. "Because they are a great deal more acceptable to the People, and it takes away the handle of the Priests when they say the Society is a proselyting Society."

Q. "But many of your Teachers become Protestants, and then you continue them."

A. "Yes, or they become Readers; they generally lose their School."

Q. "Do

Q. "Do you not conceive that a Protestant who has become so after being a Roman Catholic, is much more obnoxious to the Roman Catholics than if he had never been so."

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you not generally hope that the Roman Catholics you employ as Masters will become Protestants?"

A. "I should wish them to get a clear View of the Doctrines of the Scriptures; and to follow them conscientiously."

Q. "Do you not wish them to become Protestants?"

A. "I do not wish them to become nominal Protestants."

Q. "Do you not wish them to become convinced they are in error as Roman Catholics?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Then how do you reconcile the Wish of having Persons who were Roman Catholics, in order to please the Roman Catholics, with the Wish of having Converts who must become more disagreeable to them than if they were originally Protestants?"

A. "It is not a necessary Effect that they should become so, and it is generally some Time before they do; the School is carried on for a considerable Time in that way, and People go to the School and become acquainted with it, and then they are able to judge for themselves of its Merits."

Q. "If they would originally object if the Person was a Protestant, do you not think, when your Wishes are effected by the Person becoming a Protestant who was a Roman Catholic, they would object more strongly than before?"

A. "Yes, to that Person they would."

Q. "Do you not in some Degree, in wishing to have Roman Catholics appointed Masters, contemplate the Conversion of those Persons through their Connexion with your Society?"

A. "Yes, I do."

Q. "Is not that in some Degree an operating Motive in your Mind, in wishing to have Persons who are Roman Catholics appointed Masters to your Schools?"

A. "Yes, it is."

Q. "You have spoken repeatedly of Conversion, explain what you mean by the Term?"

A. "To be led to take right Views of the Character of God, as he is displayed in the Person of his Son."

Q. "According to that Definition, do you think that there are some Members of the Church of Scotland who still require to be converted?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you think the same of the Members of the Established Church?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you think the same of the Members of the Roman Catholic Church?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you use the Word Conversion in reference to any one of those Churches in a Sense different from what you do to the other?"

A. "No, certainly not."

Q. "Do you conceive the Church of Scotland to be right in her Notions of God?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "You therefore consider that all faithful Members of the Church of Scotland have a right Knowledge of God?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you conceive the same of the Church of England?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Do you conceive the same of the Church of Rome?"

A. "No."

Q. "Then a Man who is of the Church of Rome, to be brought to a right Knowledge of God, must, according to your Notions, abjure his Church?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Then the Conversion of a Roman Catholic necessarily means the Abandonment

London Hibernian
Society.

ment of the Roman Catholic Religion; the Conversion of a Protestant means the Abandonment of any Errors he may have been subject to, but does not necessarily imply a Change of Church?"

A. "Yes; but I would explain. I think there may be Persons who remain nominally in the Church of Rome who do not hold all the Errors in the very palpable Way in which they appear to me. I would answer the other directly, and at the same Time I would qualify it in that particular respect."

Q. "You conceive the Church of Scotland does not teach any Errors?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "You conceive the Church of England does not teach any Errors of Doctrine?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "But you conceive the Church of Rome does teach Errors?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "And therefore, when you seek the Conversion of a Roman Catholic, you wish him to abjure what you conceive to be the Errors of the Church of Rome?"

A. "Yes."

Captain Pringle being examined as to the Nature of the Instruction given by the Readers in the Employment of the Society, and the Effect produced on the adult Population by that Instruction, stated, "I think I have observed, according as the Roman Catholics get Scriptural Information, their Respect for the Tenets of the Roman Catholic Religion is lessened."

He was further examined as follows:

Q. "From the Experience you have had of the Effects produced by those Readers, is it your Opinion, that in proportion as they succeed in giving to their Hearers Instruction in the Scriptures, in an equal Degree they lessen their Observance of the Peculiarities of the Roman Catholic Worship?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Have many, in consequence of the Instruction of those Readers, actually become Converts, and abandoned their Communion with the Roman Catholic Church?"

A. "I have heard of some occasional Instances, I cannot say I know a great Number, through these Agents."

Q. "Are the Persons who actually become Converts exposed to much personal Annoyance from the Roman Catholics, whose Faith they have abandoned?"

A. "Very great."

Q. "Can a Convert remain quietly in the Country he formerly lived in?"

A. "No; he is exceedingly molested."

Q. "Do they venture to remain there at all, or do they always change their Residences?"

A. "Some of them venture to remain, and some change their Residences; if their Friends and Relations oppose them, then they change."

Q. "Is it generally found that those Persons who have been instrumental in producing upon the Mind of a Roman Catholic a Change, to induce him to abandon one Religion and adopt another, are disposed to protect the Individual, and, more or less, to provide for him?"

A. "No, not all."

Q. "Does the Convert find it more easy to get Employment after his Conversion than before?"

A. "No; it is much more difficult afterwards to get Employment."

Q. "Is he better received by the Protestant Population than he would have been before?"

A. "Yes."

Q. "Is he not looked upon with Shyness by his new Protestant Friends?"

A. "Yes, for a certain Time, till they see the Soundness of his Principles, and Reality of the Change."

Q. "Do the Converts principally conform to the Established Church, or to any other Denomination of Protestants?"

A. "I have known some of both; some have gone to the Established Church, and a good many others to Protestant Dissenters, the Independents, and Baptists."

Q. "Have

Q. "Have the greater Number become either Independents or Baptists, or Members of the Established Church?"

A. "Of those I am personally acquainted with, the greater Number have become Independents."

Q. "Will you state, as nearly as you can, the whole Number of Roman Catholics who have been converted to the Protestant Faith?"

A. "I could not give any accurate Idea."

Q. "Is it a Hundred?"

A. "I should think full that."

Q. "Is it Two hundred?"

A. "I have not been in the way of getting Information upon the Subject. I have met with a great Number of Instances myself of Persons who, from reading the Scriptures, have renounced the Roman Catholic Religion; and I have heard from Mr. Blest, that a great Number had renounced it, to his Knowledge."

Q. "Have you known many Instances of Children in the London Hibernian Schools renouncing their Religion?"

A. "The Children are not sufficiently grown up to judge for themselves; but of those Five Inspectors that were Roman Catholics, Three were Pupils in the Schools, and grew up as Protestants, and are Independents."

Q. "Have you known Instances in which the Children, while Children in the School, have renounced the Roman Catholic Religion, and become Protestants?"

A. "No, I have not."

Q. "In the grown-up Persons you allude to, is the Change announced in any public Form of Recantation, or do they quietly pass from one to the other?"

A. "They quietly pass from one to the other."

Q. "You have not known of a regular Recantation?"

A. "No."

Q. "Of the Converts, are the majority Men or Women?"

A. "Principally Men, I have met with; I have come more in contact with them."

Q. "Have such as you have come in contact with been perfectly sincere, as far as you could judge of the human Heart?"

A. "I have met with some I doubted of; I had not the same Confidence in them as others; but I have thought they were generally sincere."

Q. "Have you any Doubt the majority were sincere?"

A. "No."

Q. "Of the Cursory Readers who are not Roman Catholics, what Number are of the Established Church, and what Number Dissenters?"

A. "I do not know them; I do not make any Inquiry."

Q. "Are there any you know that belong to the Established Church?"

A. "Yes; I think one that I recollect belongs to the Established Church. I never attend to the point, or make Inquiry."

Q. "What is your own Religion?"

A. "A Presbyterian of the Church of Scotland."

Q. "Are there any Readers Presbyterians of the Church of Scotland?"

A. "I do not know of any."

Q. "Then it would follow they are different Classes of Dissenters?"

A. "Yes, as far as I know."

Q. "To what Circumstance do you attribute it, that when those Roman Catholics have made up their Minds to renounce the Roman Catholic Religion, and to adopt the Protestant, that they prefer that of the Dissenters to the Established Church?"

A. "I think, from there being at Sligo a zealous Independent Minister whom they hear, who is anxious about religious Matters; they go to him, thinking to get more Information from him. I mean Mr. Urwick."

Q. "Do you think, if they considered the Ministers of the Established Church in that Part of the World equally zealous and anxious to afford them such Information and Explanation, that they would be equally disposed to go to them as they are now to the Independent Place of Worship?"

A. "I have no Reason to think the contrary, if they were equally zealous."

London Hibernian
Society.

Q. "The principal Persons of the Hibernian Society at Sligo, and that Neighbourhood, are of the different Denominations of Dissenters?"

A. "The only Person is Mr. Blest, who is the Agent: he is an Independent; he is the principal Person there. Mr. Urwick has no Connexion with the Society; he happens only to be a Minister there."

Q. "Are not the major Part of those connected with the Management of the Society in the Vicinity of Sligo Members of the Established Church?"

A. "The Patrons of the Schools are in great Numbers of the Established Church, and Clergymen of it."

Q. "Is the Appointment of the Inspectors, and such Persons, very much in Mr. Blest?"

A. "Yes, it is; but he listens to Recommendations, he is very much influenced by the Recommendations of Persons connected with the Society."

Q. "Do you think that Mr. Blest, ceteris paribus, prefers the appointing Dissenters to Members of the Established Church, as the Inspectors or Readers?"

A. "No, I do not; I think he is anxious to get Readers and Inspectors of the Established Church. The last we appointed was of the Established Church."

Q. "To what do you attribute that?"

A. "That they would be more useful."

Q. "Why so?"

A. "That the Clergymen of the Established Church will give the Preference to them."

Q. "With that View, and that Preference, how does it happen they are not of the Established Church?"

A. "They have recommended themselves in subordinate Situations for those Situations they now hold."

Q. "With all Mr. Blest's Prepossessions, there is only one Officer of the Established Church?"

A. "There are Two now among the Inspectors, besides what may be among the other Agents."

Mr. Donelan, to whose Evidence we have had Occasion formerly to refer, being asked, "Have you seen enough of the London Hibernian Schools to be able to judge of the general Effects produced by them?"—answered, "I conceive it is deficient in Two very essential Points, the Non-attainment of Proficiency in Literary Education, and secondly, I consider their great Object is Proselytism."

Appendix, No. 208,
209.

Mr. Donelan proceeded, however, to make a considerable distinction of Character, as in his Opinion existing between the Parent Society and the affiliated Branch in the South of Ireland. Being asked, "Does that Observation apply to the Munster Hibernian Society?" he answered, "No, it does not, because they only adopt a Part of the System of the Parent Society; they adopt their Mode of Instruction, and the Practice of committing the Scriptures to Memory, but they do not adopt that to which I most particularly object, viz. the Office of Readers. I consider the Members of the Munster Hibernian Committee as upright and as perfectly fair in the Management of their Schools as Men can be."

The same Witness being asked, if the Readers employed by the London Hibernian Society interfered at all with the Schools, or were employed as Inspectors; stated the Impression on his Mind to be, that the Employment of the Readers was blended with and formed an inseparable Part of the System; but he stated at the same Time, that this Objection was never urged to him by the Roman Catholics, and that it has not been much known.

The Opinions of the Society, as to the probable Continuance of the Opposition which they have met with from the Roman Catholic Clergy, and the Degree of Success which has attended it, will be explained by the Evidence of Mr. Gordon.

Q. "Have the Exertions of the Priests to prevent the Children of the Roman Catholics attending the Schools been, generally speaking, successful?"

A. "Certainly not."

Q. "Have they to any considerable Degree prevented the Children of the Roman Catholics attending the Schools of the London Hibernian Society?"

A. "They succeeded, during the most serious Period of the Opposition, in thinning

“ning very considerably the Attendance upon the Schools of the Institution; but “there has been a general Return of the Pupils, and I should suppose, that at the “End of the Year the Society will present a greater Return of Roman Catholics “than it reported upon the List of last Year. I should state, that this View is to “be taken in connexion with a Continuation of the Opposition.”

Q. “Do you mean, even if the Opposition continue, that will be the Result?”

A. “It has been realized in a great Measure already.”

Q. “Do you consider that the Opposition is as vigorous as it was Six Months “ago?”

A. “I consider that it is just the same; there is a Difference in the Effect, not so “much from a Diminution of the Opposition, as from a Failure of the opposing “Authority.”

Q. “Is it your Impression, that the Roman Catholic Clergy are likely to continue “that Opposition on their Part?”

A. “Yes; for the Reason that the Principles of the different Institutions against “which it is directed are unchanged, while their Progress is increasing, and if the “Roman Catholic Clergy considered at the Onset that their Principles were in “Danger from the Influence of those Institutions, they will naturally continue their “Exertions in Opposition.”

Q. “Do we understand you right, in stating that it is your Impression, that not“withstanding such a Continuance of Opposition, that the Schools connected with “those Institutions will be fuller than they have hitherto been.”

A. “I would make a Distinction between the Schools being fuller, and their “Number increasing; the Average of Pupils will probably be greater, but that “may be owing to the Multiplication of the Schools, and not to the Increase of “the Attendance on Schools individually.”

Q. “Would it not necessarily follow, from your View, that in each of those “Schools there must be a considerable Number of Roman Catholic Children at“tending, not only under the Disapprobation, but also in Defiance of the Priests?”

A. “That is actually the present State of the Attendance. The greater Part “are remaining in Opposition to the declared Disapprobations and Denunciations of “the Priests.”

Q. “What do you conceive to be the probable Result of such a State of Things;
“what would be the Consequence of it?”

A. “I conceive that it will grow into a Rejection of the Authority of the Priest“hood, as it respects the Education of the Youth of their Communion. If they “should continue to oppose their Authority, Parents will determine for themselves,
“in retaining their Children at the Schools.”

Q. “The Commissioners have understood, and they would be glad to know, “what may be your Impression with respect to it, that the Rites of the Church are “actually denied to Parents who persist in sending their Children to those “Schools.”

A. “It is true; and the Practice has a Two-fold Effect upon the Bulk of the “Population: In many Instances they make no Application to their Clergy until the “Children have been taught to read at the Schools; but in a greater Number of “Cases they consider the Denial of those Rites to be harsh and unmerited, and “they are beginning to lose the Dread of those Consequences which a few Years
“since would have decided the same Individuals in a course of Obedience.”

Q. “Are we to understand, that without any Reference to what might be the “Consequences of this Principle of Education, that it is your Impression that the “mere Circumstance of the Resistance to that Education does diminish or endanger
“the Influence of the Clergy over their Flocks?”

A. “It does; and it has gone much further to diminish their Authority, than “the Influence of the Education to which it is opposed.”

Q. “Do you think the Roman Catholic Clergy are of that Opinion?”

A. “I think in many Instances they are acquainted with the Fact.”

Q. “Have you known an Instance in which the determined Opposition of the “Priests to any School has not been successful?”

A. “I am acquainted with Hundreds of such Instances.”

Q. “Notwithstanding the most determined Opposition on the part of the Priest,
“the School has flourished with Roman Catholic Children?”

A. “Yes, in Hundreds of Instances.”

Q. “Have

London Hibernian
Society.

Q. "Have you known any Instances of the Parents of such Children having, in consequence of the Interdict and Refusal of the Rites of their Church from the Priests, under such Circumstances becoming Converts to the Reformed Religion?"

A. "I am not personally acquainted with such Instances; but I believe that many such have occurred; I believe so upon authentic Information. And in a greater Number of Cases, although the Parties have continued in nominal Communion with the Church of Rome, they are nevertheless convinced that the Conduct of the Clergy has been both oppressive and improper."

Q. "Has that led them to condemn the individual Clergyman, or the Religion itself?"

A. "The Clergyman, more than the Religion."

In Illustration of the Consequences which are stated to result from the Operations of the Society, we may refer to the following Passage from the Report of the Society for 1812. "Every Catholic Schoolmaster who enters into the Service of the Society, and introduces the Holy Scriptures into his School, immediately withdraws from his Priest as to Confession, which Circumstance frequently leads to a further Alienation from his Influence, and at length to a gradual Abandonment of the whole System of Popery." In this way "several of the Society's Schoolmasters have by Degrees become sincere Converts to genuine Christianity." The Experience of the last Year has also afforded ample additional Evidence, that the Native Irish who have renounced Popery, and have been qualified under the Direction of the Society, are best adapted to promote its Objects; they are more perfectly acquainted with the Character, Prejudices, and Habits of the Catholic Poor; they enter with greater Ardour into the Designs of the Society, and discover superior Zeal and Activity in promoting them."

There are also many Instances of Conversions from the Roman Catholic Church mentioned in the Correspondence of the Society annexed to the several annual Reports, and it appears that at present several of the Inspectors, and the Readers in general, are Converts from the Roman Catholic Faith.

Upon the whole it is evident, that the Objects and Proceedings of the Society have given rise to a very natural Persuasion in the Minds of Roman Catholics, that its Members are actuated by a Spirit of Hostility to their Church. The course of Instruction in their Schools is contrary to the declared Rule and Discipline of that Church, and the Interest of the Schoolmaster is so directly connected with and dependent upon the Progress of the Children in the particular course prescribed, that there is no Opportunity for that Latitude, or for those Evasions which are found to exist in the Schools of some of the other Societies. It is therefore not surprising that the Progress of this Society should have been constantly and strongly opposed by the Roman Catholic Clergy.

Appendix. No. 242, 243. Captain Pringle has stated his Opinion, that the increased Opposition during the last Year may be attributed to the issuing of our Commission. We find, however, that the Resistance of the Roman Catholic Clergy was frequently complained of, in the Reports of the Society for preceding Years. It is mentioned in Terms particularly strong in the following Extract from the 17th Report, being for the Year 1822. "With respect to the Difficulties opposing themselves to the Progress of Scriptural Education, and particularly to Scriptural Education in the Form in which it is promoted by your Society, they are of Two Kinds, such as naturally result from the Resistance of Ignorance itself, and those of a more active as well as a more formidable Description, rising out of the implacable Hostility and persevering Opposition of a lamentably large Majority of the Roman Catholic Priesthood." It is also to be observed, that in the course of the last Year (1824) renewed Efforts were made by the Society to extend its System, and Public Meetings were held for the Purpose of encouraging the Establishment of Schools and Branch Societies in connexion with it, in different Counties in the South of Ireland.

The Society during the same Year increased the Number of its Inspectors from Nine to Twelve, and the Number of its Scripture Readers from Sixty to Seventy,

Seventy, of whom Twenty-eight are itinerant, the others discharge their Duty within specific Limits. It is stated in the Report for the last Year, published in May 1825, that taking the Whole of the Schools of the Society together, there was an Increase during that Year of One hundred Schools and 6,335 Scholars.

London Hibernian
Society.

With respect to the Numbers of Scholars, however, as in the case of other Classes of Schools on which it has been our Duty to report, we are not in possession of accurate and satisfactory Evidence. Accounts of a contradictory Nature have been received by us; and our Observation of the Schools, as well as other Information, lead us to entertain considerable Doubts as to the Extent of the Increase so reported, if it is meant to apply to the actual Attendance, and not to the Numbers that may have been entered on the Roll of the Schools.

The Effects of the general and strenuous Opposition made to the Schools of the Society were marked during the last Year by the withdrawing of a very great Number of the Children. A considerable Number of the Roman Catholic Masters also retired from the Employment of the Society. The Number of Instances where the Schools have received the Countenance and Support of Individuals among the Roman Catholic Body has in like Manner, and as might be expected, diminished during the last Year. According to the Report of the Society for 1823, Twenty-six Schools were in that Year under the Management of Roman Catholic Priests; Captain Pringle states in his Evidence, that a certain (though smaller) Number still continues to receive such Support.

Appendix, Nos. 242,
243.

The Funds of the Society are not of such Amount as to enable them to erect and furnish suitable School Houses, or to allow adequate Salaries to the Teachers; and the Schools are frequently opened in remote and obscure Districts, where little Assistance can be obtained from local Patronage or Superintendence. Accordingly, in those Schools of the Society which we personally visited, we found, that with the Exception of such as were also in connexion with the Society for the Education of the Poor of Ireland, or the Association for discountenancing Vice, or under the Superintendence of powerful local Patrons, the Buildings in general were common Cabins, and sometimes mere Hovels. The Masters are usually from the lowest Ranks of the Peasantry, and have themselves frequently received but very little Education. As might be expected in these Circumstances, too little Regard, generally speaking, is paid to Cleanliness, Order, and Regularity. In most of the Schools, there is a want of the useful Requisites, and Writing and Arithmetic appear to be less attended to than in any other Class of Schools. The great Object of the Schools, and that to which their Attention is almost exclusively given, is the Reading of the Scriptures, and committing those Portions of Scripture to Memory, which are to be repeated to the Inspectors at the next Quarterly Examination.

We do not mean that the Observations which we have made on the State of the Schools, and the Description of Teachers, should be considered of universal Application. We found Schools in connexion with the Society, where the Teachers were respectable, and the Children orderly, and well instructed in all Points. What we have said of the general Character of the Schools in these respects, is therefore subject to particular Exceptions.

These Schools are attended by Children of all religious Denominations. The relative Proportion of Protestants and Roman Catholics does not appear from the Returns which have been made to us; but Captain Pringle and Mr. Gordon, in their Examinations before us, concurred in the Opinion, that somewhat more than Two-thirds of the Children in attendance are Roman Catholics. Captain Pringle also stated his Belief, that by far the greatest Number of the Schoolmasters are of that Religion. Of the Protestant Masters, he considers that those of the Established Church are more numerous than the Dissenters.

The Baptist Society for promoting the Gospel in Ireland.

Baptist Society for promoting the Gospel.

THE Baptist Society was formed in the Year 1814. for the Purpose of employing itinerant Preachers in Ireland, of establishing Schools, and of distributing Bibles and Tracts, either gratuitously or at reduced Prices.

The general Objects of the Society appear to be the same as those of the London Hibernian Society. At the Second Annual Meeting held in 1816, the following Resolutions were adopted :

“ That the Committee be directed to encourage the Increase of native Irish Schools, founded upon the fundamental Principles of the Society ; viz. That the Scriptures alone be taught therein. And also of Readers of the Irish Scriptures, by proposing to pay One Half of the present Salary of Schoolmaster and Reader, to any Person who may be willing to co-operate with the Society, by paying the other Half of the Salary. The Master and Reader to be selected by themselves, approved of by the Committee, and subject to the Inspection of the Society’s Agents. The Persons to whom the Money is paid, shall be expected to superintend the Labours of the Teacher or Reader, and send, at least, a Quarterly Statement to the Committee.”

“ That those Ministers who make Congregational, or other Collections, in aid of the Funds of the Society, be Governors for Life ; and that, if residing in the Country, they be considered as Corresponding Members of the Committee.”

It appears that the Number of Day Schools belonging to this Society is at present 95, which are principally situated in the Provinces of Connaught and Munster ; 15 of them are exclusively for Females ; there are also 14 Evening Schools, principally for Adults, besides some Sunday Schools. The Number of Children are stated to amount to upwards of 8,000. The Agents of the Society are generally Baptist Preachers. This Society is opposed by the Roman Catholic Clergy equally with the London Hibernian Society. The Principles of both are the same, and as there is little if any Difference between their Practice, the Observations which we have made upon the Schools of the London Hibernian Society apply to those of the Baptist Society in all respects.

Irish Society for promoting the Education of the Native Irish through the Medium of their own Language.

Society for promoting Schools of the Irish Language.

THE Object of this Society is to promote Scriptural Education in Ireland by the Establishment of Schools, in which Instruction in Reading shall be afforded to such as are either unacquainted altogether with the English Language, or have so imperfect a Knowledge of it, as to render the Attempt to educate them by its Medium very difficult, if not unavailing.

It has been estimated that the Number of Irish who employ the ancient Language of the Country exclusively is not less than 500,000 ; and that at least a Million more, although they have some Understanding of English, and can employ it for the ordinary Purposes of Traffic, make use of their Native Tongue on all other Occasions, as the natural Vehicle of their Thoughts. This Estimate agrees with the Opinion of Dr. Stokes, who published the Results of his Inquiry in 1806 ; of Dr. D. Dewar, in his Observations on Ireland in 1812 ; and of Mr. C. Anderson in 1814 ; it has been adopted also on the more recent Investigations made by Committees of the British and Foreign Bible Society, and the Hibernian Bible Society, previous to the Resolution which they successively took of reprinting the Scriptures in the Irish Language, according to the Translation of Archbishop Daniell and Bishop Bedell. A similar Inquiry was made, and the same Conclusion drawn from it, by a Sub-Committee of the Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland, in the Year 1819, or thereabouts.

According to the Computation of Dr. Stokes, in 1806, the Number of Persons who could read Irish was at that Time about 20,000.

The

The Plan of the Irish Society was adopted from their view of the Inefficacy of the Measures which had been pursued for educating that part of the People, through the direct Medium of English Schools. The Act of 28 Hen. 8. c. 15. to which we have before adverted, was passed for the declared Purpose of putting an End to the Irish Language, by a Scheme of pure English Instruction; nearly Three Centuries have, however, elapsed without producing that Effect. For removing the Obstacles, and substituting something better suited to the Wants of this Portion of the People, the Expedient, which had been partially attempted in Ireland at different Periods, and which is recommended by the Example of other Countries, particularly Wales and the Highland Districts of Scotland, has been resorted to by the Members of the Irish Society; namely, to afford and encourage that Species of Education which the People are in the first Instance best prepared to receive. It forms no Part of the Design of the Society to preserve and perpetuate the Irish Tongue; it is used simply as a Medium; and the Apprehension that such use of it will retard the Acquisition of English, is conceived by the Promoters of the Plan to rest on a Mistake, and to be contradicted by Experience. According to the Evidence which has been furnished to us, the Establishment of Irish Schools has been the Means of extending the Knowledge of English in the Districts where they are situated, a Result which corresponds to the Effect of similar Schools in Scotland and Wales. One of the Superintendents, in a Letter to the Society, quoted in their Report for 1824, thus expresses himself: "One thing I have observed with Pleasure, through the Schools, " that wherever the People read the Irish Scriptures, it excites in them an uniform " Desire to know and read them in English. There are Instances of Scholars " commencing Irish without a Word of English, and who, when capable of reading " the Testament in Irish, have unceasingly exerted themselves until they become " Masters of it in English also; an Instance of this I met lately in one of the " Premium Schools; the Scholar was arrived at Manhood."

Another Superintendent, in a Letter annexed to the same Report, after stating the Proficiency of the Scholars, concludes thus: "But what to me is the most surprising and delightful Circumstance is, that in the Process of learning the Native Irish, they have made such Progress in English Reading."

The same Result is stated in the Report of the Society for the Year ending 17th March 1825. It is said, in the Words of one of their Correspondents, "that " the Study of Irish creates a Desire for Acquaintance with English, I now see clearly " borne out by Facts. Several of our Teachers, who were quite satisfied in Ignorance, have, since they directed their Attention to Irish, gone to School, and are " now become regular Scholars, to improve themselves;" and, in another Letter, "even in this Country, where English is generally used in common Conversation, " the English Scriptures would not be received or read, whereas the Irish Testament is held most dear and sacred; and what is most pleasing, where you now " meet an Irish, you will generally find an English Testament its Companion." From Kerry also we are informed, that "Wherever the Irish Scriptures have been " read, I have found an ardent Desire to be possessed of the English; and when an " Individual finds himself beginning to read in either, his first Anxiety is to acquaint " others with what he has himself learnt."

The Business of the Society is conducted by a Committee of Members, a Secretary who acts gratuitously, and Two Officers receiving Salaries. It is a fundamental Rule, that none but Members who belong to the Established Church shall be appointed on the Managing Committee.

The Funds arise from voluntary Contributions, the Amount of which, for the Year ending March 1824, was £. 904. 0 s. 9 d.

The great object of the Society is to enable the Irish Peasant to peruse the Scriptures in his own Tongue; and it appears from the Reports of the Society, and the Evidence of their Secretary, that these are readily received and sought for by Persons who put little or no Value on the English.

Appendix, No. 250.

There are about Fifty Day Schools under the Society, where Children are received. They have likewise encouraged the Formation of Schools for Adults. The total Number of Schools, as reported for the Year ending March 1824, was Seventy-eight, Two of which were circulating, the others stationary; and it appears by an

Extract

Society for promoting Schools of the Irish Language.

Extract from the latest Report, dated March 1825, that the Society employs Seven circulating Masters, and has now

	50	Schools and Teachers in Leinster,
	2	- - - in Ulster,
about	71	- - - in Munster,
about	21	- - - in Connaught,
Total	- -	144

There are some Schools in the South of Ireland, where the Irish is likewise taught, which are not included in the above List. English is taught as well as Irish in several of the Schools; and it is a Rule of the Society to employ only such Teachers as understand both Languages, so that they shall be capable of instructing the Scholars to translate Irish into English.

Books printed in the Irish Character are preferred, as being best adapted for the Purpose in view. The Society has printed in this Character their elementary Books, and an Edition of the Book of Proverbs, and they have purchased Selections from the Old Testament. Copies of the New Testament have been supplied gratuitously by the British and Foreign Bible Society, which Society has lately undertaken to print an Edition of the Irish Bible. The Hibernian Bible Society has likewise agreed to print an Edition of that Bible in a smaller Size. The Prayer Book and Homily Society printed some Years ago an Edition of the Prayer Book in Irish, and they have lately undertaken to reprint 1,500 Copies of the same Book.

In the course of the Year ending 17th March 1824, the following Books were distributed:

Portions of the Pentateuch	-	-	-	-	391
Proverbs	-	-	-	-	904
New Testaments	-	-	-	-	461
Parts of the Testament	-	-	-	-	2,886
Prayer Books	-	-	-	-	180
Primers	-	-	-	-	4,079

Of the Prayer Books, 40 were granted to the Chaplain of the Jail of Roscommon, for the use of that Prison.

In the course of the last Year, ending 17th March 1825, the Issue of Books has been as follows:—

New Testaments	-	-	-	-	-	632
Portions of New Testament	-	-	-	-	-	6,275
Portions of Old Testament	-	-	-	-	-	101
Elementaries	-	-	-	-	-	9,617
Prayer Books	-	-	-	-	-	26

In some of the Books formerly printed by this Society, the Text was given both in Irish and English, so as to afford a greater Facility for the Acquisition of the latter Language, and Publications in this Form are stated to have been well received, but want of Funds has prevented the printing of new Editions.

Books are in most Cases given gratuitously, as the Persons who are desirous of possessing them can seldom afford to buy them at any Price.

There are at present Six superintending Masters employed, with Salaries at £. 30 each, whose duty it is to proceed from place to place, for the Purpose of establishing Schools in those Districts where the Irish Language is spoken, making an Arrangement with such Persons as they can procure properly qualified for teaching, and who are paid at a certain Rate for each Scholar, according to a Scale of Proficiency fixed by the Society. It is the Duty of these Circulating Masters, as they are called, to inspect the local Schools Four Times in the Year, and they are themselves employed at other Times in teaching. One of the Six superintending Masters now in the Service of the Society is a Roman Catholic, and most of the stationary Teachers are of that Religion.

89

The Brothers of the Christian Schools in Ireland.

AMONGST the several voluntary Associations established for the Purposes of Education in Ireland, there is one which deserves peculiar Notice,—this is an Institute called “The Brothers of the Christian Schools in Ireland.”

Brothers of the Christian Schools.

It is composed entirely of Roman Catholics, and forms what at first view might be mistaken for a Monastic Order, but which is stated to be only a Congregation. Mr. Edmund Rice, of Waterford, is the Superior of this Institute. The Plan of it was submitted by him in 1802 to Pope Pius Sixth, who encouraged him to proceed with it, and it was approved of and confirmed by a Bull of Pope Pius Seventh, dated 5th September 1820. The Object of the Establishment is the Instruction of poor Boys. The Brothers take a Vow of Poverty (not to possess any thing of their own as an Individual Property), of Chastity, and of Obedience to the Superior; and fourthly, they vow to teach Children gratuitously during their Lives, and are not at liberty to retire from any Part of this Engagement, unless by Dispensation from the Pope, or from their Bishop. The Funds of this Institute are supplied partly from the Children and partly from Subscriptions. There are at present about 40 Brothers, under whose Superintendence there are Three Schools in Dublin, One in Waterford, containing about 700 Children, One in Cork, containing about 1,000, One in Limerick, containing 500, One at Carrick on Suir, One at Thurles, containing 200, One at Dungarvan, containing 250, One at Ennistymon, containing about 500, and One at Cappoquin. We have visited one of the Dublin Schools, situated in Hanover Street East, and those at Waterford, Cork, Limerick, and Thurles, and are informed that the same System is adopted in all of the others. They are all Day Schools, and those which we saw were completely filled with Pupils.

The School in Hanover Street East was opened in 1814; it contains in Four Apartments between 400 and 500 Children, all of whom, except Two or Three, are Roman Catholics: Mr. M. B. Dunphy is the Director, having been appointed by Mr. Rice, under the Inspection of the Roman Catholic Titular Archbishop of Dublin. There are also Three other Teachers, who are Brothers of the Congregation. The System of Education is prescribed by Mr. Rice and the Persons assisting him, and is the same in all Schools established under this Institute. The Illness of Mr. Rice prevented us from obtaining full Information from him of the general Purposes of his System; but we have learnt from Mr. Dunphy, to whose Evidence we beg particularly to refer, the Nature of the Instruction afforded in the Schools under his Direction.

Appendix, No. 252.

In the First or Lower School, the Children are very young, and are taught merely the Alphabet and Words of Two Syllables, the Prayers of the Roman Catholic Church, and the small Roman Catholic Catechism—in the Second, the Children are taught Words of Three Syllables, and progressively to read the Catechism, and to write—in the Third, they are taught Spelling, Reading, Writing, and the Elements of Arithmetic—and in the Fourth, the same course is pursued, with the Addition of English Grammar, Book-keeping, Navigation, Algebra, and Geometry. Some of the Boys in this School are 18 Years of Age, and there are a few Sailors still older, who are learning Navigation. The Roman Catholic Catechisms are also taught in all the Schools. There are Four of these Catechisms in use, the Small Catechism, the Abridgement of the Catechism, the General Catechism, and Fleury's Historical Catechism. The Evangelical Life of Christ and Reeves's History of the Bible are read in the Third and Fourth Schools and sometimes in the Second. There is no Copy of the Holy Scriptures in any of these Schools. The Catechisms are committed to Memory at home at Night, and are repeated next Morning to the Monitors; this Repetition occupies about Half an Hour, and one of the Masters every Day reads some religious Books to the Children for about the same Time. The Works used are those that contain and explain the peculiar Doctrines of the Roman Catholics. The very few Protestant Children who may have occasionally been in the Schools are not required to attend this Exercise. The Children are chiefly of the Class of Tradesmen, Labourers, Servants, and Clerks, and some are advanced considerably in Arithmetic, and a few in Geometry. All who are able, which is stated to be about One Half of the Number in the School, pay One Penny a Week, which is put into the General Fund, and given back again in the Shape of Rewards. The School opens at Ten in the Morning, and the Children during the Time of Attendance

Brothers of the Christian Schools.

Attendance in this as well as in the other Schools of the Confraternity we have visited are kept in good Order, and the Masters seldom have recourse to Corporal Punishment.

Appendix, No. 252.

In the religious Instruction afforded to the Children, we collect from Mr. Dunphy's Evidence that it is not unusual to advert to what the Teachers conceive to be the Errors of the Protestant Religion; and the peculiar and exclusive religious Tenets maintained by the Roman Catholics are, as might be expected, impressed upon the Minds of the Children. A List of the Books used in the Schools as Class Books, and also those forming a Library occasionally lent out to the Boys and their Parents, was furnished to us by Mr. Dunphy. It cannot be supposed that we should be able to appreciate correctly the Contents of all the Books contained in this List; but we feel justified in saying that there are some, in the latter List especially, which ought not to be put into the hands of Children. There are in this Collection Two Copies of the Book known by the Name of Pastorini's Prophecies, which it is right, however, to state Mr. Dunphy says were never sanctioned by the Archbishop or by any of his Priests, and that he gave Directions to have them called in last Spring, about the Time the Titular Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin wrote against the Work.

There was One other Book in the Possession of Mr. Dunphy, not returned in either of the above Lists, which, he says, perhaps One or Two Boys may have read a Part of once or twice, but which, he states, has not been used to any Extent in the School as a Class Book; and he adds, "it is not given to the Children at present, not from any thing hurtful in it, but having only One Copy, we do not use it now." This Book is entitled, "A Sketch of Irish History, compiled by way of Question and Answer, for the use of Schools;" printed at Cork, 1815. It appears to be a Work of the most objectionable Nature, and calculated to keep alive every Feeling of Religious Hostility to Protestants, and political Hatred to England. We might easily justify this Censure of the Work by producing Extracts from it; but we forbear, trusting that a better System of Instruction, and a kinder Feeling towards each other, amongst every Class of Christians, will at no distant Period exclude all Books of an offensive Nature from every Institution for Education. Mr. Dunphy states, in a Letter annexed to his Examination, that he did not return this Book in the List of those belonging to the School Library, although it had by some Accident been left in the School Desk; and he states that it was not a School Book, or belonging to the School, but the Property of the Brotherhood, and kept for their private reading. We observe, however, that the Words "Christian Schools, Hanover Street East," are written in the Title Page, and the Work itself purports to be printed for the use of Schools.

Mr. Dunphy states, that although the first Object of the Congregation is the Education of poor Children and Instruction in the Roman Catholic Religion, they are not prohibited from giving literary Instruction to Protestants; and that they have in fact had some few Protestant Scholars in the Schools; and that they endeavour to implant in the Children Principles of Loyalty and Fidelity to their Sovereign, not only from Duty, but in Gratitude, and that they teach Charity and Good-will to Mankind, without Distinction of Religion.

Schools conducted by Religious Brotherhoods.

Schools conducted by Religious Brotherhoods.

There are also Schools for Boys established in different Parts of Ireland by Lay Brethren of different Religious Orders. The System of Instruction is of course exclusively Roman Catholic, and is similar to that in use with the Brothers of the Christian Doctrine. Such of their Schools as we have visited appeared well conducted.

Nunnery Schools.

Nunnery Schools.

Besides the Male Schools just referred to, there are several for Females only, under the Care and Management of the different Nunneries established throughout the Country. The Nuns of the Order of the Presentation are instituted for the express Purpose of giving Instruction, and they have about 20 Schools under their immediate Direction; and there are about 10 others superintended by Nuns of other Orders. In all these Schools except Four, the Children are instructed free.

free. There are in the whole upwards of 6,000 Children attending these Schools, Nunnery Schools. of whom about 20 are Protestants. The following List shews the Name and Situation of each School, and the Number of Children it contains:—

LIST OF THE CONVENT SCHOOLS.

N ^o	Place where School is held.	COUNTY.	Religious Order.	Number of Girls.	Free or Pay Schools.
1	Carlow - - -	Carlow - - -	Presentation - -	300	Free.
2	Clonmel - - -	Tipperary - - -	D ^o - - -	300	D ^o .
3	Cork - - -	Cork - - -	D ^o - - -	157	D ^o .
4	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	100	D ^o .
5	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	120	D ^o .
6	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	570	D ^o .
7	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	Ursuline - - -	170	50 Pay.
8	Clonegal - - -	Wexford - - -	Not stated - -	30	Free.
9	Doneraile - - -	Cork - - -	Presentation - -	220	D ^o .
10	Drogheda - - -	Louth - - -	D ^o - - -	240	D ^o .
11	Dublin - - -	Dublin - - -	St. Theresa - -	115	D ^o .
12	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	Presentation - -	175	D ^o .
13	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	St. Clare. - -	213	D ^o .
14	Dungarvan - - -	Waterford - - -	Presentation - -	300	D ^o .
15	Galway - - -	Galway - - -	D ^o - - -	395	D ^o .
16	Kilkenny - - -	Kilkenny - - -	D ^o - - -	200	D ^o .
17	Killarney - - -	Kerry - - -	D ^o - - -	350	D ^o .
18	Limerick - - -	Limerick - - -	St. Clare - - -	350	D ^o .
19	Mountrath - - -	Queen's County - -	Confraternity - -	85	D ^o .
20	New Ross - - -	Wexford - - -	Mount Carmel - -	130	D ^o .
21	Ranelagh - - -	Dublin - - -	Not stated - -	100	23 Pay.
22	Thurles - - -	Tipperary - - -	Ursuline - - -	150	32 Pay.
23	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	Presentation - -	190	Free.
24	Tralee - - -	Kerry - - -	D ^o - - -	180	D ^o .
25	Tullow - - -	Carlow - - -	Not stated - -	200	D ^o .
26	Waterford - - -	Waterford - - -	Ursuline - - -	130	D ^o .
27	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	30	— Pay.
28	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	Presentation - -	430	Free.
29	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	D ^o - - -	200	D ^o .
30	Wexford - - -	Wexford - - -	D ^o - - -	180	D ^o .
Total - - -			6,310	4 Pay Schools.

Nunnery Schools.

We have visited many of these Schools, and have found them conducted with great Order and Regularity, and the Children are in general well supplied with Books and every School Requisite. The Nuns are the Teachers, and devote themselves to the Duty of Instruction with the most unwearied Assiduity and Attention. We were much impressed with the Appearance of Affection and Respect on the Part of the Pupils towards their Teachers, which characterizes these Institutions in a remarkable Degree. A few of these Convent Establishments, have also Boarding Schools annexed to them, but in general they are Day Schools.

It will appear from the Inspection of the List, that no Class of School, generally speaking, is more numerously attended. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the Instruction given is in the strictest Sense of the word Roman Catholic. The new System is generally introduced, and besides the usual School Instruction in Reading and Writing, they are taught Needle-work. The Children (except the few Protestants who attend) are all taught the Roman Catholic Catechism. The Scriptures are not read in any of these Schools; but Compilations from the Old and New Testament, such as Reeves's History of the Bible, and Gahan's Summary, are used, together with other Works inculcating the Doctrines of the Roman Catholic Religion.

The Sodality of the Christian Doctrine.

The Sodality of the Christian Doctrine.

In the Year 1800, a Society was established for the Purpose of giving Instruction in "the Principles of the Roman Catholic Faith and Christian Piety." It is composed of Laymen, and is called "The Sodality of the Christian Doctrine." It is, in fact, a Society of Catechists. The Duty of the Members is to attend every Sunday in the Chapel, and instruct the Children in the Catechism. Certain Indulgencies were granted by Pope Pius Sixth, for the Encouragement of the Members of this Society. Sodalities, or as they are frequently termed, Confraternities of this Character are established in many of the Towns and most populous Parishes of the South and West of Ireland, and appear to be daily extending themselves to other Parts of the Country. Each Confraternity has its own particular Rules and Regulations approved of by the Roman Catholic Bishop of the Diocese. The Members are obliged to receive the Holy Communion monthly, to exercise a vigilant Superintendence over the moral Conduct of each other, and to devote themselves on Sundays in the Chapel, to the catechetical Instruction of the Roman Catholic Children. A lending Library of religious Books is usually attached to each of these Confraternities.

In addition to the Sunday Schools which are under the peculiar Superintendence of the Members of these Societies, we have to observe, that there are, we believe, but few Chapels in Ireland in which religious Instruction is not imparted on Sundays to the Roman Catholic Children of the Parish. The several Roman Catholic Schoolmasters are frequently employed for this Purpose, under the Direction of the Roman Catholic Clergymen. The Instruction is exclusively catechetical. The Attendance is usually extremely numerous, in fact consisting of the Roman Catholic Children, who are in a course of Instruction at the several Day Schools within reach of the Chapel. In the City of Limerick, it occurred to One of the Commissioners to witness on one Sunday, upwards of 4,000 Children collected in Four Chapels for this Purpose, and in several Parishes similar Instruction is given on Saturdays as well as on Sundays.

Roman Catholic Free Schools.

Roman Catholic Free Schools.

There are also Day Schools attached to many Roman Catholic Chapels, some for Males and some for Females. In these Education is usually gratuitous, and the Master or Mistress remunerated by Salaries of 15*l.* 20*l.* or 25*l.* per Annum. The Funds proceed from voluntary Contributions by the Congregations. The Education is under the immediate Controul of the Roman Catholic Clergymen. We must defer any Statement of the Number of these Schools and of the Pupils attending them, until we can prepare an Analysis of the voluminous Returns which we have received. The Attendance on these Schools is in general extremely numerous; the Instruction administered is usually on the Lancastrian System; reading, writing, and the sedulous teaching of the various Roman Catholic Catechisms, form the general course of Education. The Supply of miscellaneous cellaneous Reading is very limited ; but we deem it right to observe, that none of the immoral Works complained of in so many of the ordinary Pay Schools have been found there. The Scriptures are not used in them.

93

HAVING explained, as fully as the Limits of a Report of this Nature will permit, the distinguishing Characters of the different Institutions which are now in Operation in Ireland, for the Purpose of promoting the Education of the lower Orders there, it becomes our Duty to shew the Grounds of the Opinion which we have formed, that none of them provide a System of general Education suited to the peculiar Situation and Circumstances of Ireland.

Remarks on the different Institutions for the Education of the poorer Classes.

In a Country in which such marked Divisions exist between different Classes of the People, as are to be found in Ireland, it appears to us that Schools should be established for the Purpose of giving to Children of all religious Persuasions such useful Instruction as they may severally be capable and desirous of receiving, without having any Grounds to apprehend an Interference with their respective religious Principles. In expressing this Opinion, we have the Satisfaction of finding that we entirely concur with the Views of the Commissioners of Education who preceded us, as stated in their 14th Report.

It is apparent that this important Object has not been fully attained in any Schools hitherto established. The present System is the Result of an accidental Combination of various Institutions, some of which were formed for other Purposes and with different Views than can now be entertained. Some indeed are more nearly adapted to the Wants and the Circumstances of the Times than others, but none of them have ever been placed on such a Footing as to obtain the cordial and general Support of all Classes.

In the View which we have already taken of the different Institutions, the Merits and Imperfections of each must have become in some Degree apparent. It is necessary for us, however, again briefly to advert to them, in order to shew that, neither separately nor collectively, can they be held to have effected the Object which appears to us so desirable to accomplish.

The Parish Schools, though in their original Institution they were clogged with no Regulations which would have prevented them from being of general Utility, became, by the Events of the Reformation, strictly Protestant ; and when the Act of William the Third prohibited Roman Catholics from teaching in Schools, these being wholly under the Direction of the Clergy of the Established Church, could never be likely to afford a System of Education, to which Children of all Persuasions could resort without Distrust or Jealousy.

The Charter Schools which came next in Succession, were long looked upon as Instruments by which the Children of the Roman Catholic Peasantry were to be educated in the Protestant Faith ; as such they have from the first Institution of the Society been the Objects of Suspicion and Aversion to the Roman Catholics, and though the original Object has been in some Degree abandoned, they still possess a Character decidedly exclusive, and are never likely to undergo such Modifications as could render them generally and extensively beneficial.

The respectable Class of Schools which are under the Care of the Association for discountenancing Vice, though far more extensive in their Operation and more liberal in their Character, can hardly be expected to inspire the Roman Catholics, or the Presbyterians, with Confidence, being under the immediate Superintendence of the Clergy of the Established Church, the Doctrines of which they have always consistently and avowedly taught to all who would consent to learn them. The Education of the Children of any other Persuasion is so entirely an accidental and secondary Object, that Presbyterians and Protestant Dissenters, as well as Roman Catholics, view this Class of Schools with some Degree of Distrust.

The Society for the Education of the Poor, more commonly known by the Name of the Kildare-street Society, which was selected and assisted by Parliament, in the Hope that it might provide Instruction for all, without interfering with the religious

Opinions

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

Appendix, No. 257.

Opinions of any, has not fully succeeded in effecting that desirable Object. We have already noticed the Objections made to it by the Roman Catholic Clergy. From our Communications with them upon our respective Tours, we can state, that the Opinions entertained by them are generally the same as those of the Roman Catholic Prelates whom we examined, and whose Evidence is inserted in the Appendix. We found that an Opinion prevailed generally amongst all Orders of the Roman Catholic Clergy, that a combined and systematic Attempt was making on the Part of several Societies to effect the Conversion of the Roman Catholics to the Protestant Faith. They believe that not only the Bible, Tract, and Missionary Societies, and the Society for promoting the Principles of the Reformation, are decidedly aiming at this End, but that the London Hibernian, the Baptist, and even the Kildare Place Society, have also the same Object in view. We found that they made little or no Distinction between these several Societies, although some of them in their Character and their Intentions widely differ from others. This Confusion has in some Degree arisen from the Circumstance, that the same Persons in several Instances take a prominent and active Part in the Management of more than one of these Societies, and the Roman Catholics have hence concluded, that their Objects are alike in all.

It forms no Part of our Duty to notice any of these Societies, but such as are connected with the Establishment of Schools; and of that Class we found that the London Hibernian and Baptist Societies were so conducted as to excite a greater Degree of Distrust on the part of the Roman Catholic Clergy than any of the others.

It is true, indeed, that general Directions are given by these Societies, that no Attempt shall be made in their Schools to instil Protestant Doctrines into the Minds of the Roman Catholic Children. The chief Object is to give them Scriptural Instruction. They are required not only to read the Scriptures in the Schools, but to commit considerable Parts of them to Memory, for which Purpose it becomes necessary that they should take the Book to their respective Homes. Scripture Reading by the Children of all Ages is the predominant and almost the sole Object of Instruction; and it is the avowed Wish of the Directors, that the Children should thus obtain for themselves an Acquaintance with the Doctrines of Christianity, without Reference to any particular Form of Creed or Worship.

The Opinion which is formed by the Roman Catholics of the Character and Intentions of the London Hibernian and Baptist Societies, must naturally be the Result of a Consideration of the Whole, and not of a Part of their Proceedings; and in this View it is important to observe, with respect to the London Hibernian Society, that the Circulation of the Holy Scriptures generally in Ireland is One of the declared Objects of the Society, and that it also employs a Class of Readers who are constantly engaged in travelling through those Parts of the Country which are inhabited by Roman Catholics, and in reading and expounding to them the Scriptures. So, likewise, with respect to the Baptist Society, its declared Object is not only to establish Schools, but "to promote the Gospel in Ireland," by the Employment of Itinerant Preachers, and by the Distribution of Bibles and Tracts, either gratuitously or at reduced Prices.

The Anxiety and Apprehension which we found to prevail amongst the Roman Catholic Clergy, with respect to Proselytism, induced us carefully to inquire whether many Children had in fact been converted from the Roman Catholic Faith through the immediate Instrumentality, either of the Schools of the Kildare-Place Society, or of the other Societies with which it is connected; and we have no Reason whatever to believe that the Conversion of any Children has taken place in any Case in which it cannot be sufficiently accounted for by the Religion of one or other of the Parents. The Roman Catholic Clergy, however, do not rest their Opposition to these Societies on the ground that Proselytism has actually been effected by them, but on an Allegation that such is their Object; that such is the Tendency of their Schools, and that such might be the Effect of their System if it were allowed to prevail. Whatever may have been the Nature of the Opposition which the Roman Catholic Clergy have given, we had abundant Opportunities of seeing that it had been very generally exercised, and its Effects were apparent at the Time of our Inspection, in the altered State of by much the greater Part of the Schools. That their Exertions to remove the Children are not made with with equal Success, or with equal Resolution in all Cases, is naturally to be expected; but that they have been to a great Degree successful, and will to the utmost be persisted in, we are led seriously to apprehend.

Having come to the Conclusion that none of the existing Establishments, whilst they continue to act on their present Rules, can provide such a System of Education as shall be cordially adopted and generally supported, it was our Duty to consider in what way that important Object could be best attained.

The Complaints of the Roman Catholic Clergy, that the Bounty of Government was not intended to be exclusive, but that it was rendered so by Rules which Individuals had the Power of applying to its Distribution, attracted our serious Attention; and referring to the Petition of the Roman Catholic Prelates, we, in the first Instance, considered, whether it was desirable to recommend a Grant of Money in aid of Schools, to be founded and directed by some Roman Catholic Body to be selected for that Purpose.

We had, in the course of our Inspection, paid particular Attention to Three Classes of Roman Catholic Schools; we mean the Schools of the Brothers of Christian Doctrine, the Schools of the Nuns for the Instruction of Females, and the Roman Catholic free Lancastrian Schools, generally attached to Chapels. These Three Classes appeared to be severally capable of Extension, and to admit of the Possibility of forming the Basis of a System of Education which might readily be made to comprehend a great Majority of the Roman Catholic Children.

We entered into the Consideration of this Subject, however, with our Minds deeply impressed by the Inexpediency of establishing a System of separate Education. We had observed, in our Examination of these Schools, that they possessed a Character so peculiar and distinct, that though Protestant Children were not systematically excluded, very few of them had ever been known to attend. In the Practice of these Schools, religious and general Instruction are so blended together, that unless the Course of teaching should be wholly changed, they could never afford any other than a strictly Roman Catholic Education, inculcated through the Medium of a Series of Catechisms, and in not more than One or Two of these Schools did we find that the Scriptures had ever been used. In many Instances the Schools of the latter Class appeared to be inadequately furnished with Books and other Requisites, and an anxious Wish was very generally expressed by their Conductors that these Deficiencies might be supplied by the Aid of Government. On examining the Books, however, we generally found them to be such as would be used only by Roman Catholics.

Were we to recommend a Grant of Money in aid of such Schools, the Result would be, that they would be eagerly supported by the Roman Catholic Body, their Numbers would increase, and the Masters would be better paid, the Schools better supplied, and the Instruction rendered more effective; but its Character would still remain the same. The Roman Catholic Children would also no doubt universally withdraw from every other Description of Schools, and from every Opportunity of being associated with Protestants; and after a short time Two Systems would be established in the Country, in which the Children of the Two Persuasions would be so educated as to be more than ever estranged from each other.

The Evils with which separate Education is evidently pregnant, necessarily fixed our Attention on the Benefits which would result from a contrary Course. A System of united Education from which Suspicion should, if possible, be banished, and the Causes of Distrust and Jealousy be effectually removed—under which the Children might imbibe similar Ideas, and form congenial Habits, would tend rapidly to diminish instead of increase the Distinctness of Feeling which is now but too prevalent. We were led therefore anxiously to seek for the Means of establishing a System of united and general Education.

We had learnt, in the course of our Inquiries, that no System could obtain a general and cordial Support in Ireland, which should not, in addition to elementary Knowledge of a literary Character, afford the Opportunity of religious Instruction to Persons of all Persuasions. We so fully concur in this View of the Subject, that our

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

our Objection to most of the Systems at present in Operation is, that they both attempt and effect too little upon this important Point. The Principle hitherto acted upon by the Kildare-Street Society, in particular, is to omit altogether the Points of religious Doctrine and Belief upon which a Difference of Opinion exists. For this purpose it has been found necessary to exclude all Catechisms, and to forbid all Comment or Explanation of the Scriptures; the Children of the most advanced Classes are taught to read the New Testament, and are left without Guide or Assistance to discover its Meaning. It is not to be denied that some Children may frequently obtain much Knowledge in this imperfect Manner; but it was evident to us, in the Opportunities which we had of examining the Children in these Schools, that they too generally comprehended but little of the Meaning of the Portions of Scripture which they had successively read. The System appeared to us to be one in which very much of what was useful was sacrificed to the Hope of excluding every thing on which Disagreement could exist.

In the Schools of the Association for discountenancing Vice, this Compromise is not carried to the same Extent as in the Schools of the Kildare-Place Society; for in them the Catechism is regularly taught to the Children belonging to the Established Church, though none others are compelled to learn it. We were led also to observe, that the Principle of withdrawing the Attention of the Pupils from all Points on which religious Difference existed, had been thought very objectionable by some of the Protestant as well as the Roman Catholic Clergy; and it is, we believe, the Opinion of most Persons of the Established Church and other Protestant Communions, as well as of the Roman Catholic Clergy, that Explanation and Comment upon the Scripture, and a certain Degree of catechetical Instruction, are necessary to religious Education.

Appendix, No. 261.

We had in the course of our Inspection been much struck with the State of many Schools, in which the Pupils paid for the Instruction they received, and in which there appeared to be perfect Harmony amongst Children of all Persuasions. These Schools were carried on as Objects of private Speculation, and not supported either by public Funds or by the Aid of Societies. Each Child was taught the Religion which its Parents wished it to learn; and the Master, who depended for his Livelihood on giving Satisfaction to his Employers, was content to impart as he could the Instruction necessary for each. In this Manner we frequently found the same Master teaching the Catechism of the Church of England to One Child, the Roman Catholic to another, and the Presbyterian to a Third, according to a Mode which is well described to us by Mr. Cooke, the Moderator of the Presbyterian Synod of Ulster. Although we do not mean to approve of the same Master teaching different and conflicting religious Doctrines, the State of these Schools led us to the Conclusion, that it was at least possible that both religious and general Instruction might be communicated in Establishments in which Children of all Persuasions should be taught together.

The modern Practice of mutual Instruction, wherever it has been introduced, has created the Necessity of adopting a more precise Uniformity of Reading than existed in the unimproved Schools to which we have alluded, and in which the Study of one Child has little or no Connexion with that of another. According to the Course now so general, the Children, who are divided into Classes, read successive Passages out of similar Books, and the Difficulty of avoiding the Conflict of religious Differences is thereby considerably increased.

On the fullest Consideration which we have been able to give to the Subject, we are of Opinion, that it is desirable to unite Children of the different religious Persuasions in Ireland, for the Purpose of instructing them in the general Objects of literary Knowledge, and to provide Facilities for their Instruction separately, where the Difference of religious Belief renders it impossible for them any longer to learn together.

We proceed to examine in what Manner religious Instruction can most effectually be given to Children of the Protestant Faith in Ireland. It appears from the Returns made by the Protestant Clergy, that of 137,570 Protestant Children, stated to be now

97
Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

now in the Course of Education, 91,026 are of the Established Church, 43,236 are Presbyterians, and 3,308 are Dissenters of various Denominations.

It has been satisfactory to us to learn, that though Differences of Opinion exist among Persons of these respective Classes of Protestants, there is nothing which would prevent them from receiving religious Instruction from Persons of their respective Communion in the same Schools, if such an Arrangement should be found convenient, nor would there be any Difficulty in their reading the Scriptures together. The authorized Version of the Bible is used by all Classes of Protestants, and the Exercise of private Judgment in the Interpretation of Scripture is recognized by all; there is no Objection therefore to their reading together in Classes, neither is there any Objection to the Children of the different Denominations of Protestants being taught their respective Catechisms, when they are assembled for the purpose of receiving religious Instruction.

Various Opinions are entertained with respect to the time which it is necessary to devote to religious Instruction, and in the different Schools now in Existence, the Practice is also various; we collect, however, that Portions of two Days in each Week would be fully sufficient.

It becomes our next Duty to inquire in what Degree the Clergy of the Established Church, can or ought practically to take charge of the Superintendence of the religious Education of their Flocks.

Upon this Subject we proposed the following Questions to his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin :

Appendix, No. 253.

Q. " Laying for the present out of Consideration any Obligations which the Statute Law may impose upon the Clergy, would your Grace be so good as to state what you conceive to be the Extent of the Duty of the Parochial Clergy of Ireland, with respect to the Instruction of Protestant Children of the Established Church within their respective Cures of Souls?"

His Grace's Answer was as follows :

" I conceive it to be their Duty to find out, in all the Families within their respective spiritual Charges, what Children will receive from them religious Instruction, and contrive the best means of giving it. I conceive it is the bounden Duty of every Clergyman, in every Parish, to go from door to door to know the young Persons of the Families, and to learn if they can procure their Attendance at any proper time and place, so as to give them religious Instruction. It is their bounden Duty to seek after them, and give them what you are now prescribing Modes and Facilities to effect."

The following Question was then submitted to his Grace :

" Of course, if any considerable Portion of the Protestant Peasantry of their respective Parishes were collected in Parochial Schools at specific times set apart for that Purpose, there could be no Doubt it would form a part of the Duty of the Clergy, in your Grace's View of it, to discharge that Duty, even laying out of Consideration any Obligation under the Statute?"

To which his Grace answered, " Yes, most certainly."

We then inquired his Grace's View with respect to the Obligations imposed by Statute Law upon the Clergy with respect to Parochial Schools.

His Grace's Answer was as follows :

" My View of the Duty of the Clergy, as growing out of the Act of 28th Henry Eighth, is, that there is no Obligation imposed on the Incumbent of a Parish to keep a Free School. The Law, as it appears to me, has become obsolete, or rather is virtually repealed, respecting certain Duties enjoined to the Clergyman, such as telling the Beads in English, &c. because these Duties themselves have passed away. But the Duty of keeping, or causing to be kept an English School, I conceive to be still in force under the Statute. The Mistake that has prevailed on this Head seems to be, that the Clergy are bound by this Act, and the Oath prescribed by it, to keep a Free School, whereas the Act expressly describes the School to be kept, not as a Free School, but on the contrary, as one in which a Stipend is to be paid by the Scholars resorting to it, conditioning only that the Stipend shall be such as is usually paid by Scholars in English Schools in that District of the Country; at the same time I conceive that the Clergy are to

Remarks on the
different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

“ the utmost of their Power bound to keep, or see that there be kept, an English
“ School for the Instruction of the Poor, although they are not bound to see that it “ shall be a Free School. The true Intention of the Law I consider to be conveyed
“ and enforced in the Act of the 7th of William Third, intituled, “ An Act to re“ strain Foreign Education.” In this Act it is declared that the Clergy shall, in their “ respective Parishes or Districts, keep English Schools, or cause them to be kept,
“ according to the true Intent and Spirit of the Act of Henry the Eighth ; and this,
“ I conceive, sets aside all those minor Considerations growing out of the change of “ times, and brings the Matter to the fair honest Equity of the Case, that the Clergy
“ were intended to be the Guardians of the Education of the Country, and to pro“ mote it in every fair and practicable way. I have always felt it as such, and “ considered that the Oath imposed on the Clergy at Institution bore broadly upon “ this, without entering into the Minutiæ of the legal Consideration which admit of,
“ and have led to, a great deal of Special Pleading ; but which, when gone into,
“ even with a liberal Interpretation, seem decidedly to preclude the Idea that the “ Clergy are bound to keep Free Schools.”

It is obvious to us, that the Intention of the Statute of Henry Eighth was not pecuniary Contribution, but Superintendence, and that it did impose the latter Duty. This Act, after reciting, amongst other things, “ the Importance of a good Instruc“ tion in the most blessed Laws of Almighty God ;” and further reciting His Majesty’s Disposition and Zeal, that “ a certain Direction and Order be had that “ all we His Subjects should the better know God, and do that thing that might
“ in time be and redound to our Wealth, Quiet, and Commodities,” proceeds, after a Variety of Enactments tending to the Suppression of the Irish, and the Introduction of the English Language and Customs, to require an Oath to be administered to every Clergyman at Ordination, and another at Institution, that amongst other things “ he should keep, or cause to be kept, within the Place, “ Territory, or Parish, where he shall have Pre-eminence, Rule, Benefice, or Pro“ motion, a School for to learn English if any Children of his Parish come to him
“ to learn the same, taking for the keeping of the same School such convenient “ Stipend or Salary as in the said Land is accustomed to be given.”

We cannot see in these Provisions, that the Obligation is limited to the mere teaching of the English Language. It appears that the better Knowledge of God and the civil and moral Duties of the People, were equally the Objects of the Legislature. Although the Reformation subsequently rendered obsolete the Direction, that the Clergy should “ bid the Beads in English,” we see nothing to annul the Obligations imposed by the other Provisions of the Act. But whatever Doubt might be entertained, if the Question rested upon the Construction of the Act of Henry 8th alone, we agree with his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, in thinking, that any such Doubt is removed altogether by the Act of William 3d, which enjoins the strict Execution of the Act of Henry 8th, with respect to Schools.

Every Clergyman accordingly is still required by Law to take an Oath at Institution, to that Effect, which is in the following Terms :

“ I do solemnly swear, That I will teach or cause to be taught an English “ School within the Vicarage or Rectory of _____ as the Law in that “ case requires.”

Ante, Page 3.
Appendix, No. 3.

Under these Circumstances, a Responsibility is imposed on the Clergy, which is the more inconvenient, as its Limits and Nature are but imperfectly defined, though it certainly exposes them to the Liability of being deprived of their Benefices, if convicted a third time of not complying with the Provisions of the Act. We therefore recommend, that this uncertain Duty should hereafter be limited to their personal Superintendence of the religious Instruction to be given to the Protestant Children of the Established Church in the public parochial Schools which we shall hereafter recommend to be established.

The careful Instruction of the Children in the Bible, not merely by making them read it, but by fixing their Attention to its Doctrines and Precepts, and by exercising their Minds in the Perception of their true Force and Meaning, is the first and most important Object of Protestant religious Education. In addition to this, the teaching one Catechism to the Children of the Church of England, and one also to the Presbyterians, is the Course which appears to be approved by Persons qualified to form an Opinion on the Subject. The Mode of giving religious Instruction, by teaching in Succession a Variety of Catechisms, has been condemned to us by high Authority, and has, we believe, deservedly fallen into Disrepute.
one

79

Remarks on the different Institutions for the Education of the poorer Classes.

It is stated by Mr. Daly, as the Result of his Practice in the Schools superintended by him in his Parish of Powerscourt, that he finds the Children who attend to the Comment and Explanation of a limited Portion of the Scriptures, which are given by him at certain Periods of the Week, make more Progress in religious Knowledge than others who range through a greater Extent without the Advantage of Exposition. The Nature and Extent of the religious Instruction to be administered to the Children of the Established Church will however be more properly arranged by the Clergy, under the Direction of their respective Diocesans.

Examination of Archbishop of Dublin, Appendix, No. 253.

Of Rev. R. Daly, Appendix, No. 258.

Of Rev. Mr. Carlile, Appendix, No. 263.

Of Rev. Mr. Matthias, Appendix, No. 259.

Of Rev. Mr. Cooke, Appendix, No. 261.

In many Parts of Ireland it would occur, that a very large Proportion of the Protestant Children in Attendance on the Schools would be of the Presbyterian Church; the Care of the Protestant Children would in these Cases respectively devolve on the Clergymen of the Established Church, and the Presbyterian Ministers, whose Inclination we are assured it would continue to be, as it now is their Practice, to attend particularly to the Instruction of the Children of their Flock in their Catechisms and other religious Exercises. To afford Facilities for this Purpose, we recommend, that in those Parts of Ireland where the Presbyterians are found in considerable Numbers, Provision should be made in each of the public Parochial Schools of United General Instruction, for the Appointment of a Teacher of that Communion, who, besides his Services in the common Instruction of the School, may assist in the separate religious Instruction of the Presbyterian Children, under the Superintendence of the Minister.

Having thus far explained our Views as to the religious Education of the different Classes of Protestant Children in Ireland, we now come to the Consideration of the religious Instruction of the Roman Catholics. We had learnt that they not only wished that their Children should receive Instruction in the Doctrines of their Faith, but were also anxious that such Instruction should not be left in the hands of Persons professing a different Belief. In the Reasonableness of this Desire we could not but acquiesce.

We therefore felt it necessary to have an Interview with the Four Archbishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, for the Purpose of ascertaining their Opinions in what Manner religious Instruction ought to be provided for the Children of Roman Catholics. The Substance of our Conference will best be understood from the Minute made upon the Occasion, which we shall here insert.

“ Minutes of a Conversation between His Majesty’s Commissioners of Education “ Inquiry, and the Most Reverend Dr. Murray, one of the Archbishops of “ the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland.

“ Board of Education Inquiry,

“ Dublin, Thursday, 16th December 1824.”

“ The Commissioners, being desirous of ascertaining the Views of Doctor Murray
“ and of the Roman Catholic Clergy in Ireland on some important Points connected
“ with a general Plan of Education, stated to Doctor Murray that they were anxious “ to establish such a System as should unite Children of all religious Denominations
“ in the same Schools, except when it should become unavoidably necessary to separate them for the Purpose of religious Instruction.”

“ They observed, that they considered this a Point of great Importance to the “ Interests of the State, as it was only by training up the Youth of all Persuasions in “ Habits of early Intercourse and Attachment, that they could hope to establish “ among them those reciprocal Charities upon which the Peace and Harmony of “ Society must depend.”

“ The Commissioners then stated, that they could not consider any System of “ Education as deserving that Name which should not seek to lay the Foundations of “ all moral Obligation in religious Instruction; and that with respect to the religious “ Instruction of Roman Catholic Children, they were anxious to ascertain the Sentiments of Dr. Murray and of the Roman Catholic Clergy.”

“ They

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

“ They therefore inquired whether there would be any Objection to common literary Instruction being received by Roman Catholics, as well from a Protestant as a Roman Catholic Master, and whether religious Instruction could be given to Roman Catholics by a Roman Catholic Layman approved of by the proper Roman Catholic Pastor ?”

“ Dr. Murray stated, that there could be no possible Objection to Roman Catholics receiving literary Instruction from a Protestant, nor to their receiving religious Instruction from a Roman Catholic Layman approved of by the proper Roman Catholic Pastor ; and he added, that the providing of proper Persons for such Purpose would be a great Relief to the Roman Catholic Clergy.”

“ The Commissioners then suggested, that Schools might be established, in each of which there should be both a Protestant and Roman Catholic Lay Teacher, by whom Education in common might be administered, so that the Children, united in the same Classes, should learn from the same Masters and use the same Books ; that for the Remuneration of such Teachers, adequate Means might be provided ; that the Roman Catholic Teacher might assist in the general literary Instruction, and might give separate religious Instruction to the Roman Catholic Children, subject to the Direction of their Pastors, and that the School Room, for a reasonable Portion of Time, on One or Two Days in the Week, might be appropriated exclusively to that Object.”

“ In these Suggestions for uniting Protestant and Roman Catholic Children in literary, and separating them only for religious Instruction, Dr. Murray expressed his Concurrence.”

“ The Commissioners then observed, that separate religious Instruction should not commence until the Difference of religious Belief should make it impossible for Instruction any longer to be received in common, and they inquired whether it would be objected to, on the Part of the Roman Catholic Clergy, that the more advanced of the Protestant and Roman Catholic Children should, at certain Times during School Hours, read Portions of the Holy Scriptures together, and in the same Classes, but out of their respective Versions, subject to proper Regulations, and in the Presence of their respective Protestant and Roman Catholic Teachers ; suggesting at the same Time, that Opportunities might be afforded to the Teachers of each Persuasion to explain to the Children separately the Portions so read.”

“ Dr. Murray answered, that serious Difficulties would exist in the way of such an Arrangement, and in lieu of it he proposed, that the Holy Scriptures should be used only when the Roman Catholic Children should be taken apart for the Purpose of receiving religious Instruction, and he said, that there could be no possible Objection to the Roman Catholic Children then reading out of the Sacred Volume itself the Gospels and Epistles of the Week ; he added, that no Objection would be made to an Harmony of the Gospels being used in the general Education which the Children should receive in common, nor to a Volume containing Extracts from the Psalms, Proverbs, and Book of Ecclesiasticus, nor to a Volume containing the History of the Creation—of the Deluge—of the Patriarchs—of Joseph—and of the Deliverance of the Israelites, extracted from the Old Testament ; and that he was satisfied no Difficulties in arranging the Details of such Works would arise on the Part of the Roman Catholic Clergy.”

“ The Commissioners then stated, that they considered it of the utmost Moment that no Books or Catechisms should be admitted either in the course of the literary or religious Instruction, containing Matter calculated to excite Contempt, Hatred, or any uncharitable Feeling in any Class towards Persons of a different religious Persuasion.”

“ To this Doctor Murray cordially assented.”

Signed “ T. FRANKLAND LEWIS.
“ J. LESLIE FOSTER.
“ W. GRANT.

Signed “ D. MURRAY, Abp.”

“ JAMES GLASSFORD.
“ A. R. BLAKE.”

“ 7th January 1825.”

“ The Commissioners having had an Interview this Day with the most Reverend Doctors Curtis, Murray, Kelly, and Laffan, and Four Archbishops of the Roman Catholic Church in Ireland, the Minute of the 16th of December last was read, “ and

101

“ and it was explained, that the Passage which related to the separate religious Instruction of Roman Catholics meant, that the proper Roman Catholic Pastors should have the Right of being present on those Occasions, and giving such religious Instruction as they should think proper; and that what was said of Masters applied also to Mistresses. The Archbishops who were not present on the 16th, expressed a Wish to consider the Matter until To-morrow.”

Remarks on the different Institutions for the Education of the poorer Classes.

“ January 8th.”

“ The Roman Catholic Archbishops mentioned above, having met the Commissioners this Day, expressed their Concurrence in the Views already expressed by Dr. Murray.”

Signed

“ PATRICK CURTIS, D. D.”

“ OLIVER KELLY, D. D.”

“ ROBERT LAFFAN, D. D.”

AFTER a careful Review of the whole of this Subject, the Delicacy and Embarrassments of which are exceeded only by its Importance, our Minds have been led to the Conclusion, that no better System for providing a general and united Education can now be adopted, than that which we proceed to recommend. It is not possible for us, in the present Report, to define every Part of its Details; it will, we trust, be sufficient to point out the leading Principles on which the System should rest.

WE propose, that public Schools of general Instruction shall be established, one at least in each Benefice, in which Literary Instruction shall be communicated to Children of all religious Persuasions; that Two Teachers, to be appointed by the general superintending Authority, (the Establishment of which we shall subsequently recommend,) shall be employed in each School, where the Extent of Attendance shall be sufficient to justify the Expense; that they shall each of them be Laymen, and that one of them shall be a Roman Catholic, where any considerable Number of Roman Catholics are in Attendance on the School; and that a Presbyterian Teacher shall be provided in those Schools, where the Number of Children belonging to that Communion shall render such Appointment necessary or expedient; that on Two Days in the Week the School shall break up at an early Hour, and the Remainder of the Day be devoted to the separate religious Instruction of the Protestants, the Clergyman of the Established Church attending for the Purposes at once of Superintendence and Assistance, and the Presbyterian Minister likewise, if he shall so think fit for the Children of his Communion. That on Two other Days of the Week the School Rooms of General Instruction shall in like Manner be set apart for the Roman Catholic Children, on which Occasions, under the Care of a Roman Catholic Lay Teacher, approved of as mentioned in the Minute which we have given, they shall read the Epistles and Gospels of the Week, as therein mentioned, and receive such other religious Instruction as their Pastors (who may attend if they think fit) shall direct. It may be right to notice, that in the Roman Catholic Church there are Epistles and Gospels appointed, not for Sundays only, but for almost every Day in the Year, and they comprize altogether a large Portion of the Old and New Testament.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS.

If the Attendance on a School should be so limited as to render both a Master and Usher unnecessary, the Master might be permitted to take Charge of the School of General Instruction, and be also the religious Teacher to the Children of the same Persuasion as himself. In such a Case, however, a Person of a different Religion, duly qualified and properly remunerated, might attend at those Periods in the Week when the School is set apart for the religious Instruction of Children of a different Persuasion from the Master, and perform, under proper Superintendence, the Duty of religious Teacher to those of his own Communion; and it might be possible for the Individual appointed to this Duty, to take charge of the religious Instruction in more Schools than one in a Parish or District. We suggest this Arrangement, however, as One which is possible rather than desirable; and express our Opinion, that the Establishment of Parochial Schools, sufficiently large to occupy a Master and Usher, is much the most eligible course.

We think it further necessary, that Means should be provided for supplying Testaments, according to the authorized Version, for the Protestant Children. With

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

respect to the Roman Catholic Children, an Edition of the New Testament for their Use has been submitted to us by the Roman Catholic Prelates. The Text of this Edition is the Douay Version; almost all the Notes, however, originally annexed to that Version, have been omitted. We find, in fact, that there are only Sixty-three Notes altogether to the Four Gospels; and these with the Exception of an inconsiderable Number, have no peculiar Reference to the Doctrines of the Roman Catholic Church, as distinguished from those of the Protestant Churches; and such as have this peculiar Reference, are expressed in a Manner which ought not, we think, to be offensive to any Description of Persons. The Summaries prefixed to the different Chapters are in like Manner, as it appears to us unobjectionable. To this Edition is also annexed a Table of the Epistles and Gospels throughout the Year, specifying the Portions of the Scriptures appointed to be read for those Purposes by the Roman Catholic Church.

Deeply impressed with the Importance and Necessity of introducing the Scriptures into all Institutions for the Education of the People, as a fundamental Part of the Instruction, we recommend that Copies of this Edition of the Testament, omitting the Address thereto prefixed, but retaining the Notes, should be furnished for the religious Instruction of the Roman Catholic Children, in every School established upon the System proposed. It will be for the Roman Catholic Clergy to supply such other Books for the Purpose of Religious Instruction as they may desire. We would suggest, however, that many Forms of Catechisms are now in use amongst the Roman Catholics in the different Districts of Ireland, and that it would be expedient that some One or Two should be selected or compiled for general Use.

It will be necessary also to provide* a Volume compiled from the Four Gospels, in the Manner adverted to in our Conference with the Roman Catholic Archbishops. Such a Book, together with the Book of Proverbs, and the Work containing the History of the Creation, the Deluge, and other important Events, extracted from the Pentateuch, may be profitably used in the Schools during the Period of united and general Instruction. We by no means intend such Works as Substitutes for the Holy Scriptures, although we propose that the Reading of the Scriptures themselves should be reserved for the Time of separate religious Instruction.

The Means by which a System of general Instruction can be properly enforced and administered are hardly of less Importance than the System itself. That Object has not hitherto been accomplished by any one of the Institutions which have been supported by the Public Funds in Ireland.

The Members of the Incorporated Society, the Association for discountenancing Vice, and the Society for the Education of the Poor, all distribute the Money granted to them under Rules laid down by themselves, the Execution of which, it does not appear to us, they have adequate Means of enforcing. The latter Society, by the Employment of Inspectors, have done more towards the Accomplishment of this Object than the others. Their Schools, however, as we have already observed, are often in Connexion with other Societies, which establish Rules incompatible with a strict Compliance with their own, and practical Evasions of their Rules are daily occurring. Of the Talents, Industry, and Integrity of the Gentlemen who compose the acting Committee of the Kildare-Street Society, we entertain the highest Opinion, but we think they have not the Power to effect all the Objects which they are desirous of accomplishing. We are of Opinion, that any Society consisting of a large and fluctuating Body of Subscribers, who are bound by no other Rules than those which they impose upon themselves, cannot permanently be the most proper Instrument for directing and controlling a System of

* A Work of this Description, entitled, "An Evangelical Life of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ, forming an Harmony of the Four Gospels," sanctioned by the Roman Catholic Prelates, has been examined by us. It consists of the Text of the Four Gospels, according to the Douay Version, interwoven into one consecutive Narration. The Order pursued is chronological. Where any Particular occurs in one Gospel that is not to be found in the others, it is inserted. Where the same Particulars are stated in Two or more, the Statement is inserted from that Gospel in which it is the most full.

The Notes, originally annexed in an Appendix to this Work, have been omitted in an Edition which we have examined.

of general Education, maintained principally by the public Money, in a Country which unfortunately abounds in Distrust and Jealousy on account of religious Opinions.

Remarks on the different Institutions for the Education of the poorer Classes.

For the Foundation and Management of such Schools of general Instruction, as we recommend, we think that a distinct Board should be appointed by Government, of Persons responsible for the Execution of the Duty committed to their Charge, and who should be invested with sufficient Authority to controul the Application and Expenditure of the Public Money appropriated to the purposes of general Education. The Board should, we think, appoint Inspectors, who should be enabled to examine upon Oath. The Schoolmasters also, we think, should be sworn to conform to the Rules laid down by the Board for their Guidance. It will be necessary for this Board to have the entire controul of all Money to be applied to the Maintenance of the Schools under their Care, from whatever Sources it may be derived;—to have a legal Right to the School House, either by a permanent Grant in the Case of a Parochial School, or by Possession being transferred to them for a Period not less than a Year, in the Case of a School belonging to a private Patron receiving Aid from the Board. They should have the sole Power also of appointing and dismissing all Masters and Assistants, and of admitting or rejecting all Books or Papers which may be read in their Schools.

The Establishment of such an Authority for the purposes we have mentioned, renders it necessary to consider what Course should be adopted, with respect to the Societies now supported or assisted by public Grant.

The First which presents itself to our Notice, is the Incorporated Society. It has been our Duty to give so detailed an Account of the Schools under its Direction, that little more can be now necessary, than to state our Conviction, that no Care or Anxiety, however great on the Part of the many benevolent and distinguished Persons concerned in its Management, can ever successfully counteract the Defects inherent, both in its Plans and Constitution; and we are therefore obliged to suggest the Expediency of gradually withdrawing the Public Aid from that Society, and of leaving it to the Management of its own Funds, which we conceive considerably exceed £. 7,000 per Annum.

Incorporated Society.

We think that these Schools are now to be judged of, not as Institutions for Conversion, but rather as Places of Education, and as such we are clearly of opinion that, under all the Circumstances which it has been our Duty to detail, they ought no longer to derive Aid from the Public Revenue. The Course which we think should be pursued with respect to the Reduction of these Schools is, first, that all Children who are fit to be apprenticed should be disposed of with as little Delay as may be; and secondly, that there should be no new Admissions of Children until the total Number be so far reduced that the Establishment can be maintained by its own private Funds. It will then be for the Society to judge in what Manner they can most usefully apply the large Revenues which have been entrusted to them by the Donation or Bequests of charitable Individuals, and to decide whether it be still expedient to maintain Boarding Schools at so large an Expense, and, as we think, to so little Purpose. They have already acted upon the Principle of establishing Day Schools, and if hereafter they should determine to extend their Application of that Principle, the Superintendence and Management of the Schools maintained by them might readily be brought under the Powers of the Board which we have recommended to be established. A more desirable Course, and, perhaps still more conducive to the Interests of the Established Church, would, in our Judgment, be an Application of their Funds to the Assistance of the Association for discountenancing Vice, in the Distribution of Religious Books and the Promotion of catechetical Instruction.

We have next to consider of the Course which it is desirable to pursue with respect to the Association for discountenancing Vice. Of this Society, the Objects are Threefold; to promote catechetical Instruction, to distribute Bibles, Prayer Books, and other Books of religious Instruction; and to give Assistance to Schools established by the Clergy. We have already stated our Opinion, that the Obligation of providing Schools should be removed from the Clergy, and that they Association for discountenancing Vice.

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

they should be charged only with the Duty of personally superintending the religious Education of Children of the Established Church, in their respective Schools of general parochial Instruction. With that Duty, the Distribution of Bibles and Prayer Books, and the Promotion of catechetical Instruction, strictly conform, and we think the Association would constitute a most useful Auxiliary to the Clergy of the Established Church in those Objects. With respect to their present Schools, we think it desirable that they should be transferred as much as possible to the general Controul and Inspection of the new Board, and that every Facility should be given for that Purpose.

Kildare-Place
Society.

The Kildare-Place Society directs its Attention to the Publication and Sale of cheap and useful Books; a Model School for the training of Masters and Mistresses; and to the Maintenance of Schools for Instruction. The Selection and Arrangement of the Books have been extremely well conducted; and we have no Doubt that the various Works which they have prepared are as well calculated as any can be for Schools of general Instruction, from which every thing is to be excluded which can offend the religious Tenets of any Persuasion of Christians. We think, therefore, that the Arrangement and Circulation of such Books for the Use of Schools, and the Sale and Distribution and Grants of School Requisites, may still remain with the Society, subject to the Approbation or Rejection of the Board of Superintendence, as to all Schools under its Management. With respect to the Model Schools also, and the Establishment for training Masters and Mistresses, we find them to have been extremely well managed; and as the Maintenance of such an Establishment must, for a considerable time at least, continue to be highly desirable in Ireland, we think that the Superintendence and Direction of that Institution may, with great Advantage, be left to the Care of the Society. The Schools under their Management, we think, form a separate and highly important Subject for Consideration. It appears to us, in the first Instance, to be expedient for the Society to withhold all Grants to Schools in Connexion with, or deriving Aid or Assistance from any other Society, and that for this Purpose all Schools that derive Aid from other Societies should be called upon to decide to which they will continue to belong, and the Aid from this Society continued to such only as reject that of others.

We recommend also, that after the Appointment of the new Board, the Establishment of which we have suggested, the Society should not make any new Grant of Money in Aid of building any School Room, or undertake to pay the Master or Mistress of any School which is not at this time in Connexion with them, or to which they are not already engaged, but refer all Applications for the building of new Schools to such Board.

Every Facility and Power should, we think, be granted both to the Society and to private Patrons, to transfer their Schools to the Care and Superintendence of the same Authority.

We cannot entertain the Plan of destroying any existing Class of Schools which are useful to a considerable Extent, though not so much so as, we hope, they may be rendered. We are, however, of Opinion, that if after the Lapse of a certain Time the Schools of general Instruction which we recommend should be found to answer their Purpose, any Schools continuing to belong to other Societies, and refusing to transfer themselves to the Management of the new Board, should gradually cease to receive any public Aid.

In seeking for the Means of establishing in Ireland an adequate Number of such Schools as we have described, it is hardly necessary to state that a most zealous Wish to promote Education exists on the part of a great Number of private Individuals, who are ready to sacrifice to this Object a Portion both of their Time and Property.

In addition, therefore, to the Parochial Schools of general Instruction which we have proposed, we have no Doubt that Individuals will continue to contribute their Assistance, by founding Schools under their own Immediate Care. A Part, therefore, of the necessary Means for the Establishment and Maintenance of such Schools, Schools, may be confidently expected from private Contributions, and such Schools, we propose, should be liberally assisted by the new Board, upon Condition of submitting themselves to its Jurisdiction. As to the Funds for the Maintenance of the new Parochial Schools, we recommend that they shall be derived partly from the State, partly from Parochial Assessments, and partly from Payment by the Pupils. Looking to the Results of our own personal Examination into Schools of all Descriptions, to the practical Effects of the System so long and so beneficially in Operation in Scotland, we are satisfied that the Schools should be founded on the Principle of Pay Schools, and that the Payment should go to the Master and the Usher. At what Sum the Rate of Payment should be fixed must depend upon local Circumstances. By appointing, in certain Situations, a higher Rate of Contribution, a most eligible Class of Schools may readily be provided with Instruction suitable to a better Description of Persons. Although in all Cases Payment by each Scholar should be the Rule, we recommend that there should be lodged in certain Individuals a Power of dispensing with the Payment, and of admitting, as an Exception, certain free Scholars. Payment, however, should be the Rule, and gratuitous Instruction the Exception.

105

Remarks on the different Institutions for the Education of the poorer Classes.

By the gradual Reduction of the Charter Schools, and by the Transfer of a Part of those which are now maintained by the Association and the Kildare-Place Society, a large Amount of the public Funds at present granted for Education will become available for the new Schools of public and general Instruction. The Plan which we have recommended cannot be put into full Operation without the Aid of Powers which can only be obtained from Parliament. We think it, however, desirable to attempt, with as little Delay as possible, to establish Schools upon the System we have recommended, and we think the Grant to the Lord Lieutenant for the general Purpose of aiding Schools should at once be made applicable to this Object. We have already shewn, that according to the present Management of that Fund, it may be so applied as to assist Schools of any Description whatever. We recommend that the Commissioners should be enabled, out of the Grant made in this Session, to fulfil such Engagements only as they have actually entered into, and that the Remainder of the Fund, with such Addition as may be thought sufficient, should be applied under such Directions as any new Authority to be erected for the Purpose may think fit, to the Establishment of Schools of the Description which we have proposed.

Charter Schools.

In the early Part of this Report, it has been stated, that we addressed a Form of Return to the Parochial Clergy of the Established Church, to the Roman Catholic Clergy, and also to the several Presbyterian Ministers. The Form of this Return will be found in the Appendix. The Information thereby obtained from these several Authorities is extremely important. It is, however, so voluminous, that it will require a separate Report for its Elucidation, and we propose to devote to it our earliest Attention. At present we shall merely state the general Result. According to the Returns made by the Ministers of the Established Church, the total Number of Schools in Ireland (Sunday Schools excepted) is 10,387, and they contain 498,641 Pupils. According to the Roman Catholic Returns the Number of Schools is 10,453, and the Number of Pupils 522,016.

Appendix, No. 1.

In the Enumeration we have excluded Sunday Schools on both Sides, as the Children in Attendance upon them are almost universally to be found in the Day Schools also. The total Numbers in Education are, according to the Protestant Returns, thus distributed :—

Of the Established Church	-	-	-	-	-	91,026
Presbyterians	-	-	-	-	-	43,236
Protestants of other Denominations	-	-	-	-	-	3,308
Roman Catholics	-	-	-	-	-	357,249
Children in Education, whose Religion is not stated in the Returns	-	-	-	-	-	3,822
Total in Education, according to the Protestant Returns						498,641

The

Remarks on the different Institutions for the
Education of the poorer Classes.

The Numbers, according to the Roman Catholic Returns, are as follow :

Of the Established Church	-	-	-	-	-	83,180
Presbyterians	-	-	-	-	-	33,709
Protestants of other Denominations	-	-	-	-	-	3,794
Roman Catholics	-	-	-	-	-	397,212
Children in Education, whose Religion is not stated in the Returns	-	-	-	-	-	4,121
Total in Education, according to the Roman Catholic Returns -						522,016

In the year 1812, it appears by the Fourteenth Report of the Commissioners of Education, to which we have so often had occasion to refer, that at that Time the Number of Schools in Ireland might be estimated at 4,600, containing about 200,000 Pupils. It follows, that during the last 12 Years, the Number both of Schools and Pupils has considerably more than doubled.

It must not be forgotten, however, that Education is still in a great Degree administered in the Pay Schools of the Country unconnected with Societies, and, generally speaking, not subjected to any particular Controul or Superintendence.

We cannot more fully express the Conclusion which we come to upon this Part of the Subject, than in the Words of the Report above quoted :—" Were it there-fore even admitted that the Benefits of Education are not to the lower Classes of the People as great as we conceive them to be, yet the Necessity of assisting in obtaining it for them in this Country would not be diminished but increased; for such Education as has been objected to, under the Idea of its leading to Evil rather than to Good, they are actually obtaining for themselves; and though we conceive it practicable to correct it, to check its Progress appears impossible—it may be improved, but it cannot be impeded."

T. FRANKLAND LEWIS. (L. S.)
J. LESLIE FOSTER. (L. S.)
W. GRANT. (L. S.)
J. GLASSFORD. (L. S.)
A. R. BLAKE. (L. S.)

London, 30th May 1825.

APPENDIX.

APPENDIX

LIST OF APPENDIX.

Appendix

N ^o 1.—BLANK FORMS OF RETURN	pp. 1—12
2.—PARISH SCHOOL RETURNS	pp. 13—16
3.—EXTRACTS FROM THE 28 Henry VIII. cap. 15—12 Eliz. cap. 1.—7 William III. cap. 4.—8 George I. cap. 12.—5 George II. cap. 4.—50 George III. cap. 33.	17

Incorporated Society for promoting English Protestant Schools in Ireland.

4.—Charter of the Incorporated Society	20
5.—A Return of all Schools that have been kept by the Incorporated Society at any Time since their Incorporation	25
6.—A List of the existing Charter Schools and other Institutions vested in the Incorporated Society	27
7.—Extracts from “Observations on the present State of the Charter Schools in Ireland, “and the Means of improving them.” By William Disney, Esquire. Printed in 1806	28
8.—Examination of William Disney, Esquire, 1st January 1825 } Further Examination of ditto, 12th January 1825 }	33
9.—Extracts from the General Report of the Rev. Elias Thackeray, on visiting the Charter Schools in 1817: presented to the Society in February 1818	41

EXTRACTS from the particular Reports of the Charter Schools visited by the Rev. Elias Thackeray in 1817, and referred to in the preceding General Report; viz.

10.—	Ardbraccan	46
11.—	Cashel	ibid.
12.—	Castledermot	47
13.—	Castlemartyr	49
14.—	Charleville	50
15.—	Clonmel	51
16.—	Dundalk	52
17.—	Dunkerrin	53
18.—	Dunmanway	54
19.—	Killoteran	55
20.—	Lintown Factory	57
21.—	Maynooth	58
22.—	Monastereven	ibid.
23.—	Monivea	59
24.—	New Ross	60
25.—	Shannon Grove	61
26.—	Stradbally	62
27.—	Trim	ibid.

28.—Extracts from the General Report of the Rev. Elias Thackeray, on visiting the Charter Schools in 1818. Printed in 1819	64
--	----

EXTRACTS from the particular Reports of the Charter Schools visited by the Rev. Elias Thackeray in 1818, and referred to in the preceding General Report for that Year; viz.

29.—	Ardbraccan	66
30.—	Athlone	67
31.—	Ballycastle	69
32.—	Cashel	70
33.—	Castledermot	71
34.—	Castlemartyr	ibid.
35.—	Charleville	72
36.—	Clonmel	74
37.—	Clontarf	ibid.
38.—	Dunkerrin	75
39.—	Dunmanway	77
40.—	Innishannon	ibid.

Appendix	Page.
N ^o 41.— Kevin Street - - - - -	78
42.— Killoteran - - - - -	79
43.— Lintown Factory - - - - -	ibid.
44.— Longford - - - - -	80
45.— Monastereven - - - - -	82
46.— Monivea - - - - -	ibid.
47.— New Ross - - - - -	83
48.— Ray - - - - -	ibid.
49.— Roscommon - - - - -	84
50.— Shannon Grove - - - - -	85
51.— Sligo - - - - -	ibid.
52.— Strangford - - - - -	88
53.— Dundalk (visited in 1819) - - - - -	ibid.
54.— Examination of the Rev. Elias Thackeray, 31st December 1824 } Further Examination of ditto, 3d January 1825 } Further Examination of ditto, 4th January 1825 }	89
55.— Extracts from the General Report of the Rev. William Lee, on visiting the Charter Schools in 1819 and 1820 - - - - -	122
EXTRACTS from the particular Reports of the Charter Schools visited by the Rev. William Lee in 1819 and 1820, referred to in the preceding General Report; viz.
56.— Athlone - - - - -	126
57.— Ballycastle - - - - -	ibid.
58.— Castledermot - - - - -	127
59.— Castlemartyr - - - - -	128
60.— Charleville - - - - -	ibid.
61.— Clontarf - - - - -	130
62.— Dundalk - - - - -	131
63.— Dunkerrin - - - - -	132
64.— Dunmanway - - - - -	ibid.
65.— Innishannon - - - - -	133
66.— Killoteran - - - - -	ibid.
67.— Longford - - - - -	134
68.— Monivea - - - - -	ibid.
69.— New Ross - - - - -	135
70.— Santry - - - - -	ibid.
71.— Shannon Grove - - - - -	136
72.— Strangford - - - - -	ibid.
73.— Lintown Factory - - - - -	137
74.— Examination of the Rev. William Lee, 11th November 1824 - - - - -	ibid.
75.— Report of William Grant and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires, upon the Charter School at Sligo - - - - -	144
76.— Examinations taken at the Charter School at Sligo, September 14th, 1824, by Wil- liam Grant and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires - - - - -	145
77.— Report of the Local Committee of the Sligo Charter School, dated the 25th Sep- tember 1824 - - - - -	149
Evidence referred to in the preceding Report - - - - -	861
78.— Order of the Committee of Fifteen thereupon, dated 29th September 1824 - - - - -	151
79.— Letter from the Commissioners to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, dated 4th November 1824 - - - - -	ibid.
80.— Examination of John Connolly - - - - -	153
81.— Examination of John Doyle, 28th October 1824 - - - - -	156
82.— Further Examination of ditto, 2d November 1824 - - - - -	157
83.— Examination of Robert Robinson - - - - - (Boys from the Sligo Charter School.)	158
84.— Minutes of an Examination taken at the Charter School of Stradbally, by J. Leslie Foster, Esquire, on the 9th and 10th October 1824 - - - - -	161
85.— Copy of a Letter from the Catechist of Stradbally Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated October 15th, 1824 - - - - -	163
86.— Report of the Local Committee of Stradbally Charter School - - - - -	ibid.
87.— Copy of a Letter from Thomas Eustace, Usher of Stradbally Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated October 19th, 1824 - - - - -	ibid.
88.— Memorial of Thomas Eustace, Usher of Stradbally Charter School - - - - - (Referred to in the preceding Letter.)	164

Appendix

Page.

N ^o 89.—Minutes of an Examination taken at the Charter School of Castledermot, by J. Leslie Foster, Esquire, on the 12th of October 1824	- - - - -	165
90.—Examination of the Rev. R. L. Fitzgibbon	- - - - -	166
91.—A Return of Twelve Boys in the Charter School at Sligo, shewing their Ages, and the Time of their Admission, as stated in the Register, and also their Ages, as extracted from Five successive Half-yearly Returns, transmitted by the Master	- - - - -	170
92.—Report of the Local Committee of the Sligo Charter School, dated 11th October 1824	- - - - -	ibid.
93.—Examinations taken by the Local Committee of the Sligo Charter School, on the 11th October 1824	- - - - -	171
94.—Extract of a Letter from the Catechist of the Sligo Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 23d October 1824	- - - - -	ibid.
95.—Examination of John Phaire	- - - - -	172
96.—Examination of David Porter	- - - - -	173
97.—Examination of Daniel Kenzie	- - - - -	174
98.—Examination of James Kenzie	- - - - -	175
99.—Examination of Thomas Ludden	- - - - -	ibid.
100.—Examination of Philip M'Gann	- - - - -	176
101.—Examination of Maurice Behan	- - - - -	177
102.—Examination of Denis Gallagher	- - - - -	179
103.—Examination of James Gallagher	- - - - -	180
104.—Copy of a Letter from the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, to the Right Honourable Henry Goulburn, dated 16th December 1824	- - - - -	ibid.
105.—Resolution of the General Board of the Incorporated Society, referred to in the preceding Letter	- - - - -	181
106.—Copy of a Letter from the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, to the Right Honourable Henry Goulburn, dated 22d December 1824	- - - - -	ibid.
107.—Examination of the Venerable the Archdeacon of Dublin	- - - - -	ibid.
108.—Further Examination of ditto, January 6, 1825	- - - - -	194
109.—Extract from the Examination of the Reverend Dr. C. R. Elrington	- - - - -	198
110.—Examination of James Adamson, Esq. 28th October 1824	- - - - -	201
111.—Further Examination of ditto, 29th October 1824	- - - - -	210
112.—Further Examination of ditto, 30th October 1824	- - - - -	212
113.—Examination of Mr. John Vickers, 4th November 1824	- - - - -	215
114.—Examination of Mr. Thomas Stuart, 4th November 1824	- - - - -	219
115.—Further Examination of James Adamson, Esq. 4th November 1824	- - - - -	222
116.—Further Examination of ditto, 16th November 1824	- - - - -	226
117.—Further Examination of ditto, 11th January 1825	- - - - -	227
118.—Further Examination of ditto, 22d January 1825	- - - - -	233
119.—Further Examination of ditto, 24th January 1825	- - - - -	ibid.
120.—Further Examination of Mr. Thomas Stuart, 13th January 1825	- - - - -	238
121.—Further Examination of ditto, 22d January 1825	- - - - -	248
122.—Examination of Samuel Rickey, 11th November 1824	- - - - -	249
123.—Examinations taken at the Asylum in Charlemont Street	- - - - -	253
124.—Examination of Mr. William Moffett, 6th December 1824	- - - - -	260
125.—Examination of Mr. Thomas Moffett, 9th December 1824	- - - - -	264
126.—Further Examination of ditto, 24th December 1824	- - - - -	270
127.—Examination of Mr. James Moffett, 5th January 1825	- - - - -	271
128.—Further Examination of ditto, 8th January 1825	- - - - -	274
129.—Examination of Thomas Moyle, 30th October 1824	- - - - -	ibid.
130.—Further Examination of ditto, 2d November 1824	- - - - -	277
131.—Further Examination of ditto, 8th November 1824	- - - - -	278
132.—Letter from Thomas Moyle to the Incorporated Society	- - - - -	280
133.—Institutions for Teachers of both Sexes, at Santry and Kevin Street Schools	- - - - -	282
134.—A List of the Names and Ages of all the Boys admitted into the Teachers Class at the Santry Institution, with the Manner in which they have been disposed of	- - - - -	283

Appendix	Page.
N ^o 135.—Examination of the Hon. Colonel Gore 20th January 1825	286
136.—Examination of Mr. Andrew M'Ghee, 3d December 1824	288
137.—Examination of Mr. Francis Devine, 28th December 1824	290
138.—Further Examination of ditto, 30th December 1824	292
139.—A List of the Names and Ages of all the Girls admitted into the Teachers Class at the Kevin Street Institution, with the Manner in which they have been disposed of	297
140.—Examination of Mr. George Clarke, 10th November 1824	299
141.—Examination of Mr. John Nicholls, 13th January 1825	302
142.—Examination of William Bruce Bartley, 3d November 1824	305
143.—Examination of Michael M'Larney, 3d November 1824	307
144.—Further Examination of ditto, 5th November 1824	309
145.—Examination of William Lewis, 3d November 1824	310
146.—Further Examination of ditto, 5th November 1824	312
147.—Examination of Patrick Leonard, 3d November 1824	313
148.—Examination of Edward Cochrane, 8th December 1824	ibid.
149.—Copy of a Letter from the Catechist of the Strangford Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 15th February 1822	315
150.—Copy of a Letter from Mr. Thomas Fleming, Master of the Charter School at Strangford, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 18th February 1822	316
151.—Copy of a Letter from Mr. Thomas Eustace, Usher of the Charter School at Strangford, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 21st February 1822	318
152.—Memorial of Mr. Thomas Eustace to the Incorporated Society, dated March 3d, 1822	ibid.
153.—Copy of a Letter from the Catechist of the Strangford Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 13th March 1822	ibid.
154.—Statement of Mr. Thomas Fleming, Master of the Strangford Charter School, referred to in the preceding Letter	319
155.—Examinations taken by the Local Committee of the Strangford Charter School in March 1822	320
156.—Extract from the Report of the Local Committee of Strangford Charter School, dated 5th July 1822	321
157.—Resolution of the Committee of Fifteen, in reference to the preceding Report	ibid.
158.—Report of the Local Committee of the Strangford Charter School, dated 2d September 1822	322
159.—Order of the Committee of Fifteen, in reference to the preceding Report	ibid.
160.—Copy of a Letter from the Local Committee of the Strangford Charter School, dated October 4th, 1822	323
161.—Abstracts from the Applications for Admission of Children into the Strangford Charter School, 1821-1822	324
162.—Abstracts from the Applications for Admission of Children into the Dundalk Charter School, 1821-1822	326
163.—Extract from the Report of the Local Committee of the Strangford Charter School, dated 14th February 1823	328
164.—Extract from the Report of the Local Committee of the Strangford Charter School, dated 21st January 1824	ibid.
165.—Copy of a Letter from the Catechist of New Ross Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated December 10th, 1824	ibid.
166.—Copy of a Letter from Mr. Maurice Egan, Usher of the New Ross Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society, dated 13th December 1824	ibid.
167.—A Return of the Number and Ages of the Children now in the Boarding Schools of the Incorporated Society, including those upon the Ranelagh and Pococke Foundations	329
168.—A Return of the Number of Elopements, from the Year 1800 to the Year 1824	330
169.—Statement of the Number of Children admitted from May 1821 to January 1825, with an Account of their Parentage, &c.	331
170.—Return of Apprentices, Elopements and Deaths, from 1818 to 1824, inclusive	ibid.
171.—Extracts from the Reports made to the Incorporated Society by Mr. Robert Nelson, Inspector of Apprentices	332
172.—General Statement of Receipts and Disbursements of the Incorporated Society, with the Number of Children apprenticed, &c. &c. from the Time of granting the Charter, not including the Pococke and Ranelagh Foundations	334

Association incorporated for discountenancing Vice, and promoting the Knowledge and Practice of the Christian Religion.

Appendix	Page
N ^o 173.—Original Resolutions entered into by the Founders of the Association, on the 9th of October 1792	339
174.—Examination of the Reverend James Wilson, 3d November 1824	ibid
175.—Further Examination of ditto, 19th November 1824	350
176.—Examination of the Reverend Dr. C. R. Elrington, 22d January 1825	356
177.—Extract from the Examination of the Venerable the Archdeacon of Dublin, 6th January 1825	363
178.—Examination of the Very Reverend Dean Graves, 25th January 1825	369
179.—Examination of the Reverend William Lee, 18th November 1824	374
180.—Examination of Mr. William Watson, 24th January 1825	382
181.—Further Examination of ditto, 25th January 1825	385
182.—Examination of C. W. Walker, Esquire, 30th November 1824	386
183.—A List of the Number of Persons admitted as Members of the Association from the Year 1792 to 1824, inclusive	390
184.—A List of the Honorary Members of the Association	ibid.
185.—A List of the Vice-Presidents, Secretaries, and Committees of the Association	391
186.—Regulations respecting Aids to the Schools of the Association, dated April 3d, 1823	ibid.
187.—List of Schools, the Payment of Salaries to which has been suspended or withheld by the Association	393
188.—Extracts from a List of Applications made for Schools during the last Seven Years, which have been refused, with the Reasons of the Refusal thereof respectively	395
189.—A List of Schools which have acknowledged receiving Aid from other Societies than the Association, in the Returns for the Year ending the 31st of March 1824, with the Amounts so acknowledged	397
190.—Form of Lease for the Lands made over to Schools, as a Condition of obtaining the Aid of the Association	ibid.
191.—Form of Half-yearly Report	399
192.—Form of Certificate to be signed by the Clergyman of the Parish	400
193.—Extracts from the Report of C. W. Walker, Esquire, on the Seminary at Kildemo	ibid.
194.—Extract from the General Report of the Association for the Year 1822	402
195.—The Amount of the Grants of the Association in each Year, for the last Seven Years, that were applied to the Catechetical Premiums	403
196.—List of Books from which Catechetical Premiums may be selected	404
197.—An Account of the Expenditure of the Association from the 25th of March 1800 to the 5th of January 1824	405
198.—A List of such Schools as are at present connected with the Association for discoun- tenancing Vice	406

Society for promoting the Education of the Poor of Ireland, commonly called the Kildare Street Society.

199.—Extract from the Fourteenth Report of the Commissioners of the Board of Educa- tion (October 1812)	416
200.—Examination of Joseph Devonsher Jackson, Esquire, 1st December 1824	418
201.—Further Examination of ditto, 7th December 1824	429
202.—Further Examination of ditto, 22d January 1825	440
203.—Examination of Samuel Bewley, Esquire, 3d December 1824	441
204.—Further Examination of ditto, 24th January 1825	447
205.—Examination of Richard Benson Warren, Esquire, 28th December 1824	450
206.—Examination of the Reverend Charles Bardin, 2d December 1824	463
207.—Examination of Mr. John Veevers, 24th November 1824	470
208.—Examination of Matthew Donelan, Esquire, 8th December 1824	483
209.—Further Examination of ditto, 2d May 1825	497

Appendix

	Page.
N ^o 210.—Examination of William Vicars Griffith, Esquire, 20th January 1825 - - -	506
211.—Examination of Mr. Lewis Mills, 25th November 1824 - - -	516
212.—Further Examination of ditto, 26th November 1824 - - -	522
213.—Examination of Robert Daly, Esquire, 11th December 1824 - - -	524
214.—Examination of Malachy Daly, Esquire, 13th December 1824 - - -	529
215.—Further Examination of ditto, 15th December 1824 - - -	535
216.—Examination of William Fitzgerald, Esquire, 29th December 1824 - - -	539
217.—Examination of the Reverend James Doyle, P. P. 16th December 1824 - - -	542
218.—Examination of Mr. Peter Blenkinsop, 6th December 1824 - - -	547
219.—Further Examination of ditto, 3d January 1825 - - -	550
220.—Extract from the Examination of the Reverend Robert Daly, 15th December 1824 -	ibid.
221.—A List of Books used in the various Schools situated in Four Counties in Ireland, abstracted from the sworn Returns to the Commissioners - - -	553
222.—List of Publications sold by the Kildare Place Society - - -	560
223.—Extracts from the Correspondence of Roman Catholic Clergymen with the Kildare Place Society - - -	562
224.—Gratuities granted by the Kildare Place Society to Teachers of Schools under the Superintendence of Roman Catholic Clergymen; for the Year 1824 - - -	619
225.—Copy of a Letter from the Most Reverend Dr. Troy, to the Honourable and Venerable C. Le Poer Trench, Archdeacon of Ardagh, dated 23d July 1818 - - -	ibid.
226.—Reply to the Document read by Lord Cloncurry, at the General Meeting of the Kildare Place Society - - -	620
227.—Instructions to the Inspectors with regard to the Reading of the Holy Scriptures in the Schools of the Kildare Place Society - - -	625
228.—An Account of the Number of Schools in connection with the Kildare Place Society, which are also in connection with other Associations, Societies, or Institutions, as far as the same can be ascertained - - -	626

The Lord Lieutenant's School Fund.

229.—Examination of Major Woodward, 11th December 1824 - - -	627
230.—Further Examination of ditto, 15th December 1824 - - -	633
231.—Examination of James Digges La Touche, Esquire - - -	636
232.—Copy of a Letter from John Litton, Esquire, Secretary to the Commissioners of the Lord Lieutenant's School Fund, dated August 25th, 1824 - - -	639
233.—Copy of a Letter from Major General Bourke, to the Secretary of the Commissioners of Education Inquiry, dated 12th December 1824, with the Enclosures (A.) and (B.) -	640
234.—Queries to be answered by Applicants for Aid from the Lord Lieutenant's School Fund - - -	641
235.—Circular issued by the Commissioners of the Lord Lieutenant's School Fund, calling for Vouchers of Expenditure - - -	ibid.
236.—Draft Form of Conveyance - - -	642
237.—Form of Conveyance for Engrossment - - -	643
238.—An Account of the total Expenditure of the Grants made by Parliament in Aid of Schools in Ireland established by private Subscriptions, specifying the Conditions under which each Grant has been made, as well as the Causes of Rejection -	645

Sunday School Society for Ireland.

239.—Examination of James Digges La Touche, Esquire - - -	667
240.—Extract from the Fourteenth Report of the Sunday School Society - - -	678
241.—Report of the Secretary of the Sunday School Society for Ireland, dated 18th April 1825 - - -	680

The London Hibernian Society for establishing Schools and circulating the Holy Scriptures in Ireland.

242.—Examination of Captain Pringle, 7th January 1825 - - -	681
243.—Further Examination of ditto, 13th January 1825 - - -	695
244.—Examination of J. E. Gordon, Esquire, 22d February 1825 - - -	707

Appendix	Page.
N ^o 245.—Further Examination of J. E. Gordon, Esquire, 12th April 1825	720
246.—Further Examination of ditto, 16th April 1825	729
247.—Examination of the Most Reverend Dr. Oliver Kelly, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam, 4th April 1825	731
248.—Copy of a Letter from J. E. Gordon, Esquire, to Thomas Frankland Lewis, Esquire	732

The Baptist Society for promoting the Gospel in Ireland, instituted in the Year 1814.

249.—Examination of the Reverend J. West, 4th January 1825	736
--	-----

The Irish Society for promoting the Education of the native Irish, through the Medium of their own Language.

250.—Examination of Henry Monck Mason, Esquire, 22d January 1825	742
251.—Extracts from the General Rules prefixed to the Report of the Irish Society for 1824	748

The Brothers of the Christian Schools in Ireland.

252.—Examination of Mr. Michael Dunphy, 12th January 1825	749
---	-----

General System of Education.

253.—Examination of his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin, 11th January 1825	759
254.—Copy of a Communication from his Grace the Lord Primate, dated 8th March 1825	766
255.—Copy of a Letter from his Grace the Archbishop of Cashel, dated 24th March 1825	768
256.—Copy of a Communication from his Grace the Archbishop of Tuam, dated 5th March 1825	769
257.—Examination of the Most Reverend Dr. Murray, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Dublin; of the Most Reverend Dr. Oliver Kelly, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Tuam; and of the Right Reverend Dr. Doyle, Roman Catholic Bishop of Kildare and Leighlin, 14th April 1825	771
258.—Examination of the Reverend Robert Daly, 15th December 1824	798
259.—Examination of the Reverend B. W. Matthias, 30th November 1824	805
260.—Examination of the Reverend Henry Murray, 22d November 1824	808
261.—Examination of the Reverend Henry Cooke, 5th January 1825	809
262.—Further Examination of ditto, 6th January 1825	827
263.—Examination of the Reverend James Carlile, 25th November 1824	831
264.—Examination of James Digges La Touche, Esquire, 14th December 1824	844
265.—Examination of Paulus Æmilius Singer, Esquire, 29th November 1824	846
266.—Examination of F. W. Greene, Esquire, 7th December 1824	851
267.—Examinations taken by William Grant and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires, at Edgeworth's Town, 2d September 1824	854
268.—Return of the Number of Schools in the several Counties of Ireland, with the Number of Children attending the same; distinguishing Males from Females, and their respective religious Denominations	856

County of _____ Barony of _____
 Diocese of _____
 Parish of _____

N. 1. (A.)—A RETURN of all SCHOOLS kept within the _____ N. 2.—This Return is to be confined to the Parish of _____ N. 3.—The Parish School, if any, be kept under the provisions of _____ N. 4.—Dolls or Sunday Schools, are to be inserted in this Return, not _____

Appendix, N^o 1. (A.)

BLANK FORM FOR A RETURN OF ALL SCHOOLS

Kept within the several Counties, Baronies, Dioceses and Parishes of Ireland :

Under 15 separate Heads of Inquiry.

N^o 1. (A.)—A RETURN of all SCHOOLS kept within the N. B.—This Return is to be confined to the Parish of united.—The Parish School, if any be kept under the provisions of Daily or Sunday Schools, are to be inserted in this Return, not

N. B.—The Commissioners of Inquiry being empowered by His Majesty's Commission to summon such Persons as they may deem it expedient to examine upon Oath; but being anxious to avoid unnecessary inconvenience to individuals, will in ordinary cases dispense with the Attendance at their Office in Dublin of the Persons making these Parochial Returns; provided, however, that the Return in each case shall be full and explicit, and shall be verified by Affidavit before a Magistrate, in the annexed Form, previous to its being transmitted to the Commissioners.

Parish of _____ at the time of the Date hereof.

and is not to include any School in any other Parish with which this Parish may happen to be 28 Henry VIII. c. 15, is to be placed at the head of the List.—All existing Schools, whether omitting even any Hedge Schools, that there may be within the Parish.

N ^o 6.	N ^o 7.	N ^o 8.	N ^o 9.	N ^o 10.	Con- cluded on the next two pages.
State the Average Number of Pupils during the last Winter.	State the Average Number of Pupils during the Summer of 1823.	State the pro- portion of Chil- dren in the School who can read; whether 2 in 20, 3 in 20, 4 in 20, or in what other pro- portion.—State also the average time required in this School to teach a Child to read.	State the total Annual In- come of the Master or Mistress; distinguishing Salaries or annual Gratuities, if any, and from what sources they proceed; the In- come arising from Payments by the Scholars; and the Rates of Payment required from them.	Describe the School-house, the nature of its accommoda- tions, the Materials of its con- struction, and the probable cost of constructing one of similar size and Materials at present; state the length and breadth of the School-room; state also at whose Expense, and out of what Funds, the School-house was constructed.

THE OATH.—I, _____ do swear, That I have inquired, with due and reasonable diligence, into the matters contained in the above Return; and I do further swear, That the Statement therein made, as to each Head respectively, is the truth, according to the best judgment that I have been able to form upon the subject.

SWORN before Me _____ a Magistrate of the County of _____ residing at this _____ the Post Town of which is _____ by the above-named day of _____

N° 1. (A.)—RETURN of all SCHOOLS kept within the Parish of

N° 11.	N° 12.	N° 13.
State the Associations, Societies, Charitable Foundations, or Institutions, Confraternities, Convents, or Persons in any, and what Religious Orders (if any) with which each School is in connexion, and at what time, and under what circumstances, such connexion was formed; state also, whether the rules prescribed by such Associations, &c. have been faithfully adhered to, or deviated from in any and what respects, and by whom, and when.	State the Names, Ranks and Situations in life, of local or other Patrons, or Superintendents, if any, of each School, and the nature, extent, and occasions of their Superintendence; and state in particular, the nature and extent of Superintendence exercised over the School by the Protestant Minister and Curate, or by the Roman Catholic Priest or Coadjutor, or by any dissenting Minister, and whether they have any regular Days for visiting the Schools, and what Days.	State the time at which the School was taken under such Superintendence, as is referred to in the preceding Column.

N. B.—In case of the Incumbent being absent, the Curate or other officiating Minister is to proceed to fill up this Return, without waiting for his Assistance.—The Curate, or other officiating Minister, however, is in such case immediately to write to the Secretary of the Commissioners of Inquiry, mentioning where the Incumbent is, his Post Town, and the cause of his Absence, in order that the Commissioners may judge of the expediency of forwarding to him a Duplicate of this Return.

121

at the Time of the Date hereof,—continued.

These Blanks are to be filled up by the Person making the Return.

Extreme length of the Parish -
 Extreme breadth of Ditto - -
 Computed Number of Acres in } the Parish - - - - - }

N° 14.

Enumerate every book and printed paper, of every description, which is or has been read, taught, or in any way used, either for amusement or instruction, within the School, at the time of making this return, or within Six Months previous to it, so far as you can learn; and state from what sources, and in what manner, and at whose expense they have been supplied.—In case the Scriptures are used, state whether it is the Bible at large, or the New Testament alone; whether the Translation used be that of the Established Church, or the Douay Version; how many copies of each are used in the School at the period of making the return; what was the greatest number of each at any period within the Six Months next preceding (as far as you can learn); and state any causes which may have led either to the increased or diminished use of them within the School.

N° 15.

State whether any and what steps have been taken in the School, by whom, at what time, and in what manner, to induce Roman Catholics to become Protestants, or Protestants to become Roman Catholics.—State fully your Observations as to any increase, diminution, or secession of Pupils, which has taken place, either within the present Year, or at any period during the last few Years; the causes to which such are to be attributed; the mode in which they have been effected; your opinion as to the probability of their being permanent; the sentiments and dispositions of the people as to the attendance of their Children at the School; the extent and degree in which any endeavours to induce such increase or diminution have been successful or otherwise; and any further general observations which you may deem it expedient to offer.

Signed and returned to His Majesty's Commissioners } appointed to inquire into the State of Education in } Ireland, this day of 1824.

Incumbent.

Curate (if any).

N^o 1. (B.)

BLANK FORM for a Return as to the PARISH SCHOOLS kept under the Provisions of the 28th Henry VIII. c. 15. in the several Counties, Baronies, Dioceses, and Parishes of Ireland ;

UNDER 23 QUERIES.

County of - -
 Barony of - -
 Diocese of - -
 Parish of - -

N^o 1. (B.)—A RETURN as to the Parish School (if any) kept N. B.—This Return is to be confined to the Parish of this Parish may happen to be united.—If there be not any be a Curate) are so to certify upon this Return to the Commissioners non-Existence.—If there be such a School kept, they are to

QUERIES:	ANSWERS:	QUERIES:
1.—State the Name of the Place at which the School is held, and state the Name of the Townland.		8.—State the proportion of Children in the School who can read; whether 2 in 20; 3 in 20; 4 in 20; or in what other proportion. State also the average time required in this School to teach a Child to read.
2.—State the Name of the Master or Mistress; at what time the School was first opened; and on what days and at what periods of the Year the School is held.		9.—State the total annual Income of the Master or Mistress; distinguishing Salaries or annual Gratuities, if any, and from what sources they proceed; and the Income arising from Payments by the Scholars; and the Rates of Payments required from them.
3.—State the Religion of the Master or Mistress, and by whom he or she was appointed to the School, and when.		10.—State the Amount of the annual Stipend, if any, paid to the Master by the Incumbent of the Parish, and during how many and in which of the last ten Years it has been paid.
4.—State the Age, Character, and Qualifications of the Master or Mistress, and where he or she was educated, and whether trained in Kildare Place, or elsewhere, and where.		11.—State the length, breadth, and height of the School-room.
5.—State the average Number of Pupils in attendance, on the average of three months next preceding this Return.	Males. Protestants of the Established Church. Females. Presbyterians. Protestants of other Denominations. Roman Catholics.	12.—State whether the School-house is built with stone and lime, or how otherwise; in what manner it is roofed; how it is floored; and whether sufficiently lighted; and generally as to its repair; and state particularly the nature of its accommodation.
6.—State the average Number of Pupils during the last Winter.
7.—State the average Number of Pupils during the Summer of 1823.

N. B.—The Commissioners of Inquiry being empowered by His Majesty's Commission to summon such Persons as they may deem it expedient to examine upon Oath; but being anxious to avoid unnecessary inconvenience to Individuals, will in ordinary cases, dispense with the attendance at their Office in Dublin of the Persons making these Parochial Returns; provided, however, that the Return in each case shall be full and explicit, and shall be verified by Affidavit before a Magistrate, in the annexed Form, previous to its being transmitted to the Commissioners.

in the Parish of under the Provisions of the 28th Henry VIII. c. 15.

and is not to refer to the Parish School of any other Parish with which such School kept within the Parish of the Incumbent (and Curate if there sioners of Inquiry, together with such Explanations as they may wish to offer as to the Causes of fill up Answers to the following Queries.

ANSWERS:	QUERIES:	ANSWERS:	Concluded on the two following pages.
	13.—State when it was built, and out of what Funds, and (if the same can be ascertained) about how much it cost, and the probable cost of constructing one of similar size and materials at present.
	14.—State the nature and degree of assistance (if any) received by the School from the Association for discountenancing Vice, the Kildare-street Society, the London Hibernian Society, or any other Society, and at what time;—and under what circumstances the connexion was formed with such Societies respectively;—and state whether the Rules prescribed by such Associations, &c. have been faithfully adhered to, or deviated from in any and what respects, and by whom and when.
	15.—State with particularity the nature and extent of Superintendence exercised over the School by the Minister and Curate of the Established Church respectively, and whether they have any regular days for visiting the School, and what days.

THE OATH.—I, do swear, that I have examined, with due and reasonable diligence, into the Matters contained in the above Return; and I do further swear, that the Statement therein made, as to each Head respectively, is the truth, according to the best judgment that I have been able to form upon the subject.

SWORN before Me, residing at by the above-named a Magistrate of the County of the Post Town of which is this day of

N^o 1. (B.) —RETURN as to the Parish School (if any) kept in the Parish of _____ under the _____

QUERIES:	ANSWERS:	QUERIES:
16.—State the Names, Ranks, and Situations in life of local or other Patrons, or Superintendents, if any, of the School, and the nature, extent, and occasions of their Superintendence.		19.—State the extent in which, and the Regulations under which, the Scriptures are either read or got by heart.
17.—State the time when the School was taken under such Superintendence as is referred to in the preceding column.
18.—Enumerate every Book and printed Paper of every description which is or has been read, taught, or in any way used, either for amusement or instruction, within the School, at the time of making this Return, or within six Months previous to it, so far as you can learn; and state from what sources, and in what manner, and at whose expense, they have been supplied. In case the Scriptures are used, state whether it is the Bible at large, or the New Testament alone; whether the Translation used be that of the Established Church or the Douay Version; how many Copies of each are used in the School at the period of making the Return; what was the greatest number of each Version at any period within the six months next preceding (as far as you can learn); and state any causes which may have led either to the increased or diminished use of them within the School.		20.—Describe the nature and extent of Education afforded beyond mere reading. State in particular the Regulations as to Catechetical instruction; what Catechisms are employed; by whom the Catechetical instruction is given; and to what Classes and descriptions of Children it is communicated.
		21.—State whether any and what steps have been taken in this School, and by whom, and at what time, and in what manner, to induce Roman Catholics to become Protestants, or Protestants to become Roman Catholics.

N. B.—In case of the Incumbent being absent, the Curate or other officiating Minister is to proceed to fill up this Return, without waiting for his assistance. The Curate, or other officiating Minister, however, is in such case immediately to write to the Secretary of the Commissioners of Inquiry, mentioning where the Incumbent is, his Post Town, and the cause of his absence, in order that the Commissioners may judge of the expediency of forwarding to him a duplicate of this Return.

Provisions of the 28 Hen. VIII. c. 15.—continued.

These Blanks are to be filled up by the Person making the Return.

Extreme length of the Parish - -
Extreme breadth of ditto - - - -
Computed Number of Acres in } the Parish - - - - - }

ANSWERS:	QUERIES:	ANSWERS:
	22.—State fully your observations as to any increase, diminution, or secession of Pupils which has taken place, either within the present year, or at any period during the last few years; the causes to which such are to be attributed; the mode in which they have been effected; your opinion as to the probability of their being permanent; the sentiments and dispositions of the People as to the attendance of their Children at the School; and the extent and degree in which any endeavours to induce such increase or diminution have been successful or otherwise.
	23.—State any further general observations which you may deem it expedient to offer.

Signed and returned to His Majesty's Commissioners, appointed to inquire into the State of Education in Ireland, this day of 1824.

Incumbent.

Curate (if any.)

129

Nº 2.

A Return of the Number of PARISH SCHOOLS, established under the provisions of the Act of 28 Henry VIII. c. 15, in the several Dioceses in Ireland, under the Superintendence of the Clergy of the Established Church, and to the Support of which they contribute.

N° 2.—A RETURN of the Number of Parish Schools, established under the Provisions Superintendence of the Clergy of the Established Church, and to the Support of which the same; and the Number of Scholars attending such Schools, distinguishing

ECCLESIASTICAL PROVINCE.										DIOCESE.
Armagh - - - - -										{	Armagh	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Clogher	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Derry	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Down and Connor	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Dromore	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Kilmore	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Meath	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Raphoe	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Dublin - - - - -										{	Dublin and Glandelagh	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Ferns and Leighlin	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Kildare	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Ossory	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Cashel - - - - -										{	Cashel and Emly	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Cloyne	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Cork and Ross	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Killaloe and Kilfenora	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Limerick and Ardfert and Aghadoe	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Waterford and Lismore	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Tuam - - - - -										{	Clonfert and Kilmacduagh	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Elphin	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Killala and Achonry	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											Tuam and Ardagh	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
Recapitulation - - - - -										{	Province of Armagh	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											D° - Dublin	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											D° - Cashel	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
											D° - Tuam	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-	-
										Total - - - - -

In addition to the Annual Contributions above stated, the Incumbents in several cases instances have subscribed towards the building of the School-house. In some cases stated in his return is not included in the above Account.

Several other Schools have been returned to the Commissioners by the Clergy, as such Schools not appearing to have received pecuniary aid from the Clergymen of the of the Act of 28 Henry VIII. c. 15, in the several Dioceses in Ireland, under the they contribute; with the Total Amount of Annual Contributions from the Clergy to Protestants from Roman Catholics.

Number of Benefices.	Number of Parish Schools.	Amount of Annual Contributions from the Clergy.	NUMBER OF SCHOLARS.
			Protestants.	Roman Catholics.	TOTAL.
		£. s. d.
80	61	305 7 -	1,633	1,213	2,846
44	40	104 13 3	1,405	571	1,976
55	51	188 13 -	1,795	617	2,412
77	45	105 3 11	2,192	512	2,704
23	21	56 9 6	1,086	286	1,372
31	24	92 10 3	746	451	1,197
101	65	240 2 10	1,281	1,377	2,658
26	30	76 5 6	901	432	1,333
437	337	1,169 5 3	11,039	5,459	16,498
87	59	321 8 6	1,764	938	2,702
92	73	307 10 6	1,851	1,692	3,543
45	21	74 3 7	368	306	674
61	36	183 3 3	526	881	1,407
285	189	886 5 10	4,509	3,817	8,326
58	24	180 9 9	412	389	801
65	32	188 17 6	590	683	1,273
78	41	244 5 4	1,255	185	1,440
55	28	117 8 -	703	798	1,501
95	28	89 9 6	537	670	1,207
51	23	82 7 5	168	1,128	1,296
402	176	902 17 6	3,665	3,853	7,518
14	14	88 - -	317	444	761
34	23	86 14 -	420	602	1,022
20	10	20 11 -	320	368	688
50	33	146 5 9	925	760	1,685
118	80	341 10 9	1,982	2,174	4,156
437	337	1,169 5 3	11,039	5,459	16,498
285	189	886 5 10	4,509	3,817	8,326
402	176	902 17 6	3,665	3,853	7,518
118	80	341 10 9	1,982	2,174	4,156
1,242	782	3,299 19 4	21,195	15,303	36,498 contribute to the Schools by grants of Ground, Houses rent-free, Books, &c. and in many annual assistance is afforded by the Clergyman, the precise amount of which not being Parish Schools under their Superintendence, which are not included in the above List, respective Benefices.

Appendix, N° 3.

EXTRACTS.

(1.)—EXTRACTS from the 28th Henry VIII. c. 15. intituled, "An Act for the English order, habite and language."

"THE King's Majestie, our most gracious and most redoubted Sovereign Lord, pre-pending and waying by his great wisdom, learning and experience, how much it doth more conferre to the induction of rude and ignorant people to the knowledge of Almighty God, and of the good and vertuous obedience, which by his most holy precepts and commandments, they owe to their princes and superiours, then a good instruction in his most blessed laws, with a conformitie, concordance and familiarity in language, tongue, in manners, order and apparel, with them that be civil people, and doe profess and knowledge Christ's religion, and civil and politique orders, laws and directions, as his Grace's subjects of this part of this his land of Ireland, that is called the English pale, doth," &c.

The Irish habit and apparel prohibited, on pain of forfeiting it.

Sect. 9.—"AND further be it enacted by authority aforesaid, That every archbishop, bishop, suffragan, and every other having authority and power, to give order of priesthood, deacon and subdeacon, shall at such time as they or any of them, doe give to any person or persons, any of the said orders of priesthood, deacon or sub-deacon, give unto every person taking any of the said orders of priesthood, deacon or subdeacon, a corporal oath that he or they so taking order as is aforesaid, shall to the uttermost of his power, wit and cunning, endeavour himselfe to learn the English tongue and language, and use English order and fashions, if he may learne and attaine the same by possibility, in such place and places where his cure or dwelling shall be; and further, shall endeavour himselfe to move, endoctrine and teach all other being under his order, rule and governance, to accomplish and performe the same; and that also every such archbishop, bishop, suffragan, archdeacon, commissarie, and other having power and authority, to admit, install, collate, institute or induct, any person or persons to any dignity, benefice, office or promotion spiritual, as is aforesaid, shall at the time of the admission, institution, installation, collation and induction of such person and persons, to any dignity, benefice, office or promotion spiritual, give unto the said person and persons so admitted, instituted, installed, collated or inducted, a corporal oath, that hee and they so being admitted, instituted, installed, collated or inducted, shall to his wit and cunning, endeavour himselfe to learne, instruct and teach the English tongue, to all and everie being under his rule, cure, order, or governance; and in likewise shall bid the beades in the English tongue, and preach the word of God in English, if he can preach; and also for his own part shall use and exercise the English order and habite, and also provoke as many as he may to the same; and also shall keepe or cause to be kept within the place, territorie or paroch where he shall have pre-eminence, rule, benefice or promotion, a schole for to learne English, if any children of his paroch come to him to learne the same, taking for the keeping of the same schole such convenient stipend or salarie as in the said land is accustomedly used to be taken. And if any archbishop, bishop, or suffragan or other, having authority to give orders as is aforesaid, or having authority or power to collate, institute, admit, install or induct any person or persons to any dignitie, benefice, office or promotion spiritual, as is aforesaid, or any of them, doe give orders to any person or persons, without giving the oath aforesaid, or doe in any wise admit, collate, institute, install or induct any person or persons to any dignitie, benefice, office or promotion spiritual, without giving to such person or persons so collated, admitted, instituted, installed or inducted, such corporall oath as is aforesaid, that then every such archbishop, bishope, suffragan, ordinarie and other having power and authority to give orders, as is aforesaid, or to collate, admit, institute, install or induct any person or persons to any dignitie, benefice, office or promotion spirituall, as is aforesaid, shall forfeit for every time offending against this statute iii. li. vis. viii d. the one moietie to our sovereign lord the king, the other moietie to that person or persons that will sue for the same as is aforesaid.

Oath to be given to such as take orders, that he will endeavour to learn and teach the English language, and that a school shall for that purpose be kept in his parish, &c. taking the accustomed stipend.

Said oath to be given,
on pain of 3l. 6s. 8d.

Sect. 10.—"AND further be it ordeyned, established and enacted by authority aforesaid, That if any person or persons, being promoted, collated, instituted, installed or inducted in any dignitie, benefice, office or promotion spiritual, doe not observe, performe and fulfill the tenour, purport and effect of the said oath, that then such person or persons upon condemnation thereof, by due proces of the law, had as is aforesaid, shall forfeit for the first time vis. viii d.; and if such person and persons be eftsoones lawfully condemned for like offence then he shall forfeit xxs.; and if the third time he be lawfully condemned for like offence, then such dignitie, benefice, office, or promotion spiritual, which such person or persons have, where such offence is committed, shall be taken, deemed, and adjudged to be voyde, and that it shall be lawful to him or them, to whom the right, title, or interest of nomination, collation, presentation, election or gift thereof shall appertayne, to nominate, collate, present, elect or give the same to any other sufficient and able person or persons in like manner and form, as though the incumbent had died, any thing or things, by him afore then done notwithstanding.

And to be observed, on pain of 6s. 8d. for the first offence, 20s.
for the second, and the benefice to be void on the third.

Sect. 11.—“ Provided, and be it enacted by authority aforesaid, That this Act in anywise extend not or be prejudicial to any person or persons which hereafter shall be beneficed within this land, being bound to keepe residence in any metropolitan, cathedral or collegiate church, neyther to any person or persons so beneficed, which shall be at study in any universitie, eyther being in the king's service, or otherwise out of the land by the king's commandement, but that such paroch priest or priests, which shall have the service of any paroch church under him or them, shall during their absencie teach the English tongue, and keep a schole according to the form of this Act, upon pain of forfeiture to every such paroch priest of xxs. for every year that he shall omit the same: Provided also, That this Act shall take no effect ne execution, until it be openly proclaymed in due forme.

(2.)—EXTRACTS from 12th Eliz. c. 1, being “ An Act for the Erection of Free Schools.”

Ignorance of the people for want of school discipline.

A free school in every diocese.

The master of the English birth.

The deputy, &c. to have the nomination, except in Armagh, Dublin, Meath and Kildare.

The school-house in the principal shire town at the cost of the whole diocese, without respect of freedoms.

The overseers.

The Deputy, &c. by advice of majority of the council, shall appoint the salary; whereof the ordinary to pay one-third, the other two parts by the clergy of the diocese.

All ecclesiastical livings come to the Crown chargeable.

“ FORASMUCH as the greatest number of the people of this your Majesties realm hath of long time lived in rude and barbarous states, not understanding that Almighty God hath, by his divine laws, forbidden the manifold and haynous offences, which they spare not daily and hourelly to commit and perpetrate, nor that hee hath by his holy Scriptures commanded a due and humble obedience from the people to their princes and rulers; whose ignorance in these so high pointes touching their damnation, proceedeth only of lack of good bringing up of the youth of this realm, either in publique or private schooles, where through good discipline they might be taught to avoid these lothsome and horrible errors; it may therefore please your most excellent Majestie, that it be enacted, and bee it enacted by your Highnesse, with the assent of the Lords spirituall and temporall, and the Commons in this present Parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, That there shall be from henceforth a free schoole within every diocese of this realm of Ireland, and that the schoolemaster shall be an Englishman, or of the English birth of this realm: and that the Lord Archbishop of Armachanen, the Lord Archbishop of Dublin, the Lord Bishop of Meath, and the Lord Bishop of Kildare, and their severall successours for ever, shall have the nomination, institution and appointment of the schoolemasters within their severall diocesses, from time to time for ever, that is to say, everie of them in his own diocese: and that the Lord Deputie, or other governour or governours of this realm for the time being, shall have the nomination, institution and appointment of all and singular the schoolemasters in and for all and singular the other diocesses of this realm (the four diocesses before named excepted) from time to time for ever. The schoolehouse for every diocese to be builded and erected in the principall shire town of the diocese, where schoolehouses be not alreadie builded, at the costes and charges of the whole diocese, without respect of freedoms, by the devise and oversight of the ordinaries of the diocese, or of the vicars generall (sede vacante) and the sheriffe of the shire: and that the Lord Deputie, or other governour or governours of this realm for the time being, with and by the advise of the councell of the same, or more number of them, shall according to the quality and quantities of everie diocese, appoint to and for every schoolemaster such yearly pencion, stipend or salarie, where none is already appointed, as he with and by their advise shall think convenient, whereof the ordinaries of every diocese shall bear yearly for ever the third part; and the parsons, vicars, prebendaries, and other ecclesiasticall persons of the same diocese, shall pay yearly for ever the other two partes, by an equall contribution to be made by the said ordinaries.

Sect. 2.—“ And be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That all churches, parsonages, vicarages, and other ecclesiasticall livings, that have come by any title, meane, or conveyance to the possession and seisin of the Queen's Majestie, or any of her most noble progenitors, shall be charged to this payment and contribution, in whose hands or possession somever the same are or shall come.”

(3.)—EXTRACT from the 7th Will. III. c. 4, intituled, “ An Act to restrain Foreign Education.”

28 H. 8. 15 & 12 Eliz. 1. have not had desired effect from connivance at popish schools.

Said Acts, and all others in force concerning schools, to be put in execution. Justices of B. R. assize and peace to give this and said

Sect. 10.—“ AND to the intent that no pretence may be made or used, that there are not sufficient numbers of schools in this realm to instruct and inform the youth thereof in the English language, and other literature; be it further enacted, by the authority aforesaid, That one Act of Parliament, made in the twenty-eighth year of the reign of the late King Henry VIII. called, An Act for the English order, habit and language, whereby it is among other things enacted and provided, that every incumbent of each parish within this kingdom shall keep, or cause to be kept, within the place, territory or parish where he shall have preheminance, rule, benefice or promotion, a school to learn English; and also one other Act made in the twelfth year of the reign of the late Queen Elizabeth, intituled, An Act for the erection of Free Schools, whereby it is enacted and provided, that a public Latin Free School shall be constantly maintained and kept within each diocess of this kingdom, which have generally been maintained and kept, but have not had the desired effect, by reason of such Irish popish schools being too much connived at, and all other acts and statutes now in force in this realm concerning schools, shall from henceforth be strictly observed and put in execution, according to the good intent and design of the same; and for the more effectual doing thereof, the justices of His Majesty's court of King's Bench, each term, and the judges of assize in their respective circuits, and the justices of peace in their their general sessions of peace, are required to give this and the said former Acts in charge from time to time, to the several grand juries to be then impannelled and charged, and to be very circumspect in seeing the same put in due execution." Acts in charge, and to be very circumspect in the execution.

- (4.)—EXTRACT from the 8th Geo. I. c. 12. intituled, "An Act for the better enabling of the Clergy, having cure of souls, to reside upon their respective benefices; and for the encouragement of Protestant schools within this kingdom of Ireland."

Sect. 9.—"AND for the better encouragement of English Protestant schools, which are much wanting in this kingdom; Be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful for every archbishop and bishop with such consent, and signified as before-mentioned;" [namely, with the consent of his dean and chapter respectively, signified by certificate in writing under their hand and common seal; and where there is no dean and chapter, with the consent of the archdeacon and six beneficed clergymen of the diocese, signified in writing under their hands and seals. See sect. 5.] "And also for every dean, archdeacon, dignitary, prebendary, rector, vicar, and ecclesiastical person whatsoever, with the consent of his archbishop or bishop, such consent to be signified by certificate in writing, under the hand and seal of such archbishop and bishop respectively, by deed or deeds under their respective hands and seals, (such deed and deeds, together with such certificate of such consent as aforesaid, to be enrolled as aforesaid respectively), to make an absolute grant unto the churchwardens of each parish, and their successors for ever; who are hereby enabled to take and hold such grant accordingly, of any quantity of land to any of them respectively belonging, as glebe or otherwise, not exceeding two acres for an archbishop or bishop, and one acre for any other person before-mentioned, for the use of a resident Protestant schoolmaster, to teach the English tongue, from time to time, to be nominated by the person making such a grant, and his successors, and licensed by the archbishop or bishop of the diocese respectively." Bishops, dignitaries, and all ecclesiastical persons, with consent certified, may by deed (inrolled with certificate) grant to churchwardens, two acres for a bishop, and one for others, for an English Protestant schoolmaster, named by grantor and successors, and licensed.

Sect. 10.—"Provided, that no land granted as aforesaid for the use of any rector, vicar, or other ecclesiastical person, or of any schoolmaster, shall be reputed to make such rector, vicar, ecclesiastical person, or schoolmaster, or any person under any of them deriving, a freeholder to any intent or purpose of law whatsoever." No grant as aforesaid shall make any of said persons freeholders.

- (5.)—EXTRACT from the 5th Geo. II. c. 4. intituled, "An Act for the further explaining and amending the several Laws, for preventing frauds committed by tenants, and for the more easy renewal of leases, and for the further amendment of the law in certain cases therein mentioned."

Sect. 9.—"AND whereas by the Act of the eighth of King George the First, intituled, "An Act for the better enabling of the clergy having cure of souls, to reside upon their respective benefices, and for the encouragement of Protestant schools within this kingdom of Ireland, all archbishops and bishops may make a grant of two acres of their land, and other ecclesiastical persons of one acre, for the use of a resident Protestant schoolmaster, to teach the English tongue, and the fundamental principles of true religion; and whereas it does appear, that many popish children have been and are daily instructed in such English Protestant schools; for the further encouragement of the same, be it enacted by the authority aforesaid, That it shall and may be lawful for all persons whatsoever seised in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, in possession in any lands, with immediate remainder over to his her or their own issue, by his her or their deeds respectively, to grant any part of such lands not exceeding one acre plantation measure, of the yearly value of thirty shillings, and being no part of the demesne lands usually occupied with, or reputed as demesne to the mansion or chief dwelling-house belonging to such tenant in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, for the use of a resident Protestant schoolmaster, to teach the English tongue to such children of poor papists, and all others as will resort to the same; and that the minister and churchwardens, and their successors, for ever, of each respective parish where such acre of land is or shall be so granted or set apart, shall be and are hereby empowered and made capable of receiving such grant or grants of lands, not exceeding one acre plantation measure, for the use of such English resident Protestant schoolmaster, to teach the English tongue, and to no other intent use or purpose whatsoever; provided, that no such grantee or lessee shall be qualified to vote at the election of any member to serve in Parliament, as a freeholder by virtue of such grant or lease." To encourage English Protestant schools.
All tenants in fee tail or for life, in possession, immediate remainder to their issue, may grant to churchwardens, for ever, one acre, 30s. yearly, no part of demesne, for resident Protestant schoolmaster to teach English.

Not to give a vote at elections.

- (6.)—EXTRACT from the 50th Geo. III. c. 33. intituled, "An Act for enabling tenants in tail and for life, and also ecclesiastical persons, to grant land for the purpose of endowing schools in Ireland."

Sect. 1.—AFTER reciting the foregoing Act of the 5th Geo. II. c. 4. and that the provisions of the same, had been found insufficient, it is enacted, "That from and after the passing of this Act, it shall and may be lawful to and for all persons whatsoever seised of any lands in fee simple, fee tail, or for life, in possession, with immediate remainder to his her or their issue, of any interest in lands, by his or their deeds respectively, to grant any part of such lands, not exceeding half an acre Irish plantation measure, within the liberties of any city or corporate town in Ireland, nor two acres Irish plantation measure in any other part of Ireland, of whatever yearly value the same may be, and being no part of the demesne lands usually usually occupied with, or reputed as demesne to the mansion or chief dwelling-house, belonging to such tenant in fee tail or for life, to any person or persons, body or bodies corporate, whether aggregate or sole, who shall be approved of for that purpose by the bishop of the diocese in which such lands lie, and to his and their heirs or successors in fee simple, or for any lesser interest, such approbation to be expressed by such bishop being a party to, and signing and sealing such deed, in trust, and for the use of a resident schoolmaster, and subject to such conditions respecting the mode of appointing such schoolmaster, and his successors, and the plan of education and regulation of such school and its concerns as shall be specified in such deed, or as shall afterwards be agreed on by and between the person or persons so making such grant of land, or his or their heirs, on the one part, and all and every or any person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, their heirs or successors, on the other part, who shall advance or shall have advanced any of his or their money, or any part of the funds intrusted to their management, to the amount of not less than one hundred pounds sterling, either for the building of a school-house on the lands so granted, or for the endowment of the schoolmaster."

Grants of land in towns corporate, &c. by land owners, for endowment of schools, &c.

Grants by ecclesiastical persons.

II.—"And be it further enacted, That it shall and may be lawful in like manner, for every archbishop and bishop, and dean or dean and chapter, archdeacon, or other ecclesiastical dignitary, prebendary, rector, vicar, and all other ecclesiastical persons, with the consent of the archbishop or bishop of their respective dioceses, to make an absolute grant by deed or deeds under their respective hands and seals, of any quantity of land to any of them respectively belonging, in right of their respective archbishopricks, bishopricks, and other ecclesiastical dignities, or as glebe or otherwise, not exceeding one acre, to any person or persons, body or bodies politic or corporate, who shall be approved of by such archbishop or bishop; the consent and approbation of such archbishop or bishop to be expressed by his being a party to, and signing and sealing such deed in trust, for the use of a resident schoolmaster, and subject to such conditions respecting the mode of appointing such schoolmaster, and the plan of education and regulation of such school as is hereinbefore mentioned and expressed, with respect to such grant by other persons hereinbefore mentioned."

Grantee not entitled to vote at elections.

III.—"Provided always, and be it enacted, That no grantees or lessees, or his or their heir or heirs, successor or successors, shall be qualified to vote at the election of any member to serve in Parliament as a freeholder, by virtue of any grant or lease made by virtue of this present Act."

Appendix, N° 4.

His Majesty's Royal CHARTER for erecting English Protestant Schools in the Kingdom of Ireland.

"GEORGE the Second, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France and Ireland, King, Defender of the Faith, &c. To all persons to whom these presents shall come. Forasmuch as we have received information, by the petition of the Lord Primate, Lord Chancellor, Archbishops, Noblemen, Bishops, Judges, Gentry and Clergy of our kingdom of Ireland, That in many parts of our said kingdom there are great tracts of mountainy and coarse land, of ten, twenty and thirty miles in length, and of considerable breadth, almost entirely inhabited by Papists; and that in most parts of the same, and more especially in the provinces of Leinster, Munster and Connaught, the Papists far exceed the Protestants of all denominations in number. That the generality of the popish natives appear to have very little sense or knowledge of religion, but what they implicitly take from their clergy, to whose guidance in such matters they seem wholly to give themselves up, and thereby are kept not only in gross ignorance, but also in great disaffection to our person and government, scarce any of them appearing to have been willing to abjure the pretender to our throne. So that if some effectual method be not made use of to instruct these great numbers of people in the principles of true religion and loyalty, there is little prospect but that superstition and idolatry and disaffection to Us and our royal posterity, will, from generation to generation, be propagated amongst them. That amongst the ways proper to be taken for converting and civilizing of the said deluded persons, and bringing them (through the blessing of God) in time to be good Christians and faithful subjects, one of the most necessary, and without which all others are likely to prove ineffectual, has always been thought to be the erecting and establishing a sufficient number of English Protestant schools, wherein the children of the Irish natives may be instructed in the English tongue, and the fundamental principles of true religion. That in pursuance thereof, the parish ministers (throughout our said kingdom) have generally endeavoured, and often with some expense to themselves, to provide masters for such schools within their respective parishes, as the law requires them to do; but the richer Papists commonly refusing to send their children to such schools, and the poorer (which are much the greater number) not being able to pay the accustomed salary, as the law directs for their childrens schooling, such schoolmasters (where they have been placed) have seldom been able to subsist; and, in most places, sufficient masters are utterly discouraged from undertaking such an employment; nor is it to be expected that the residence of the Protestant clergy upon their respective benefices will ever be a sufficient remedy for this growing evil, if some effectual encouragement be not given to such English Protestant schools. To the intent, therefore, that Recites, that in many parts of this kingdom there are great tracts of land almost entirely inhabited by Papists.

That they are kept by their clergy in great ignorance of the true religion, and bred up in great disaffection to the Government.

That the erecting of Protestant English Schools in those places is absolutely necessary for their conversion.

That the English parish Schools already established are not sufficient for that purpose, nor can the residence of the parochial clergy only fully answer the end.

137

that the children of the popish and other poor natives of our said kingdom of Ireland may be instructed in the English tongue, and in the principles of true religion and loyalty in all succeeding generations.

And to the end that so good a design may the more orderly and effectually be carried on, know ye therefore, That We of our especial grace, certain knowledge, and mere motion, by and with the advice and consent of our right trusty and right entirely beloved cousin and counsellor Lionel Cranfield, Duke of Dorset, our lieutenant-general and general governor of our said kingdom of Ireland, and according to the tenor and effect of our letters, under our privy signet and sign manual, bearing date at our court at Richmond, the twelfth day of July, one thousand seven hundred and thirty-three, in the seventh year of our reign, have granted, ordained, declared, constituted and appointed; and by these presents We do, for us, our heirs and successors, grant, ordain, declare, constitute and appoint, that our right trusty and right entirely beloved cousin and counsellor Lionel Cranfield, duke of Dorset, our lieutenant governor and general governor of our kingdom of Ireland, and the chief governor or governors of our said kingdom for the time being; the most reverend father in God, our right trusty and right entirely beloved counsellor, Hugh, lord archbishop of Ardmagh, primate of all Ireland, and the archbishop of Ardmagh, for the time being, and the Archbishops of Ardmagh for the time being; our right trusty and well beloved counsellor, Thomas Lord Windham, our chancellor, and the chancellor, commissioner or commissioners, keeper or keepers of the great seal of our kingdom of Ireland, for the time being; the most reverend father in God, our right trusty and right entirely beloved councillor, John, archbishop of Dublin; the most reverend fathers in God, Theophilus, archbishop of Cashell; Edward, archbishop of Tuam; and the archbishops of Dublin, Cashell and Tuam, for the time being; our right trusty and right well beloved cousins, Robert, earl of Kildare; James, earl of Roscommon; Richard, earl of Cavan; Charles, earl of Mountrath; Richard, earl of Bellemont; and Thomas, earl of Kerry; our right trusty and well-beloved cousins, Nicholas, lord viscount Netterville; James, viscount Charlemont; Edward, viscount Mountcashell; Marcus, viscount Tyrone; and Brabazon, viscount Duncannon; the right reverend fathers in God, Wellbore, bishop of Meath; Charles, bishop of Kildare; Thomas, bishop of Waterford and Lismore; Peter, bishop of Cork and Ross; John, bishop of Clogher; Nicholas, bishop of Raphoe; Charles, bishop of Killaloe; Henry, bishop of Derry; Francis, bishop of Down and Connor; Josiah, bishop of Kilmore and Ardagh; Arthur, bishop of Ferns and Leighlin; William, bishop of Limerick, Ardfert and Aghadoe; Henry, bishop of Dromore; Robert, bishop of Elphin; Robert, bishop of Killala; Edward, bishop of Ossory; Mordecai, bishop of Clonfert; and the right reverend the bishops of Meath, Kildare, Waterford and Lismore, Cork and Ross, Clogher, Raphoe, Killaloe, Derry, Down and Connor, Kilmore and Ardagh, Ferns and Leighlin, Limerick, Ardfert and Aghadoe, Dromore, Elphin, Killala, Ossory, and Clonfert, for the time being; our right trusty and well-beloved Edward, lord Arthenree; William, lord Howth; Henry, lord Santry; Richard, lord Altham; and Thomas, lord Southwell; our right trusty and well-beloved councillors, John Rogerson, esquire, chief justice of our court of king's bench; Thomas Carter, esquire, master of the rolls; James Reynolds, esquire, chief justice of our court of common pleas; and Thomas Marley, esquire, chief baron of our court of exchequer, and the chancellor of our court of exchequer; the Chief Justice of our court of king's bench, the Master of the Rolls, the Chief Justice of the common pleas, and the Chief Baron of the court of exchequer of our kingdom of Ireland, for the time being; the Speaker of the House of Commons of our kingdom of Ireland, for the time being; our trusty and well-beloved William Caulfield and Michael Ward esquires, judges of our court of king's bench; George Gore and Robert Lindsay, esquires, judges of our court of common pleas; Sir John St. Leger, knight, and John Wainwright, esquire, barons of the court of exchequer of our said kingdom; Humphrey French, esquire, lord mayor of our city of Dublin, and the lord mayor of our city of Dublin, for the time being; the right reverend father in God Charles, bishop of Kildare, and our trusty and well-beloved doctor Jonathan Swift, deans of our cathedrals of Christ-Church and St. Patrick, Dublin, and the deans of Christ Church and St. Patrick, Dublin, for the time being; Henry Singleton, esquire, our prime serjeant at law; Robert Jocelyn and John Bowes, esquires, our attorney and solicitor-general of our kingdom of Ireland, and the Prime Serjeant, Attorney, and Solicitor-General, for the time being; Doctor Charles Whittingham, archdeacon of Dublin, and the Archdeacon of Dublin, for the time being; Doctors Richard Baldwin and Claudius Gilbert, provost and vice-provost of our college of the holy and undivided Trinity, near Dublin, and the provosts and vice-provosts thereof, for the time being; Sir Henry King, Sir Robert Maud, Sir Edward Crofton and Sir Thomas Taylor, baronets; Humphrey Butler, Henry Hamilton, Marmaduke Coghill, Thomas Butler, Richard Tighe, John Caulfield, Owen Wynne, John Folliott, Isaac Manley, Henry Sandford, Robert Dillon, Arthur Hill, Thomas Trotter, Michael Cuff, Henry Bingham, John Bourke, Henry Barrington, Nathaniel Clements, John Staunton, Richard Warburton, Richard St. George, Thomas Fortescue, Henry Boyle, Ephraim Dawson, Price Hartstonge, George Houghton, Robert French, Robert Cope, James Coghill, George Macartney, Hugh Henry, Robert Parkinson, Richard Tonson, William Stannus, Richard Wolesly, William Handcock, Anthony Shepherd, Toby Caulfield, Francis North, William Aston, John Eyre, Thomas Nesbitt, John Bingham, Thomas Newcomen, Charles Lambert, Arthur Dobbs, Thomas Pearson, Robert Napper, William Vesey, Anthony Malone, John Rochfort, Robert Blakeney, Samuel Whitshed, James Somerville, Nicholas Aylward and William Wall, esquires; Sir Maurice Crosby, baronet; Arthur

The Lord Lieutenant, and some of the chief nobility, gentry, and clergy of this kingdom, are appointed commissioners to execute the purposes of this Charter.

The said commissioners have a power to elect others in the room of their deceased members, and are constituted a corporation or body politic, by the name of the Incorporated Society in Dublin, for promoting English Protestant Schools.

Are made capable to receive and enjoy in perpetuity manors, lands, &c. the same not exceeding the yearly value of 2,000*l.* to be applied for the establishing and supporting English Protestant Schools in such places as they shall think proper.

The said Society is empowered to nominate and appoint proper schoolmasters and schoolmistresses, to be approved and licensed by the archbishops and bishops, respectively, to continue during the pleasure of the said Society.

The schoolmasters and schoolmistresses to be supported by this Society, and are to be provided with all things necessary for the instruction of the poor children in the principles of the Protestant religion, reading, writing and arithmetic, as likewise with useful tracts, and all necessary materials proper for teaching them housewifery, trades, &c.

The Society, and their successors, by the name aforesaid, to sue and be sued in all courts ; and to have a common seal.

The Society to have a general meeting quarterly ; viz. the first Wednesdays in May, August, November and February, or oftener ; and any seven to be a quorum.

Gore, Hugh Dickson and David Chaigneau, esquires, Doctor William Percival, dean of Emly ; Alexander Alcock, dean of Lismore ; William Cross, dean of Leighlin ; William Smith, dean of Ardfert ; James Ward, dean of Cloyne ; William Williamson, archdeacon of Kildare ; Giles Eyre, dean of Killaloe ; William Usher, archdeacon of Clonfert ; Doctor William Jackson, prebend of St. John's, Dublin ; Doctor Jeremiah Marsh, dean of Kilmore ; Nicholas Synge, prebendary of the cathedral of Tuam ; John Wynne, chanter of St. Patrick's, Dublin ; John Antrobus, prebendary of St. Michael's, Dublin ; Doctor John Hall, rector of Ardsallagh ; Doctor John Madden, rector of St. Ann's, Dublin ; Robert Grattan, curate of St. Nicholas within, Dublin ; William Cottrell, dean of Raphoe ; Lewis Saurin, dean of Ardagh ; Francis Hamilton, Anthony Dopping, dean of Clonmacnois ; Thomas Wall, archdeacon of Achonry ; Charles Este, archdeacon of Armagh ; James King prebendary of Tipper, Dublin ; Doctor John Owen, rector of Bovevagh ; Hugh Hill, treasurer of Ardmagh ; Thomas Smith, archdeacon of Glandelach ; and such others as shall be from time to time chosen, nominated and elected, in and to the places, and stead of such of them as shall decease ; shall be one society, corporation, and body politick, to have continuance for ever, by the name of the Incorporated Society in Dublin, for promoting English Protestant Schools in Ireland ; and that by the same name they shall have perpetual succession ; and that they and their successors (by that name), shall be able and capable in law, to purchase, have, take, receive and enjoy, to them and their successors, in fee and in perpetuity, any manors, lands, tenements, rents, annuities, pensions, tithes, or other hereditaments, in our kingdom of Ireland,* not exceeding in the whole, the clear yearly value of two thousand pounds sterling. And further, That they may take and receive any sum or sums of money, or any manner or portion of goods or chattels that shall to them be given, granted, devised or bequeathed by any person or persons, bodies politick and corporate, capable to make a gift or devise thereof ; and therewith and thereout to erect, maintain and support, in all places of our said kingdom of Ireland, where they shall judge the same to be most necessary and convenient, such and so many English Protestant Schools, as they shall think proper.

And we do hereby give to the said Society full power and authority to nominate and appoint fit and able persons, to be approved and licensed by the archbishops or bishops of this kingdom, in their respective diocesses, to be schoolmasters and schoolmistresses of the same, and to continue schoolmasters and schoolmistresses therein, during the will and pleasure of the said Society, to teach the children of the popish, and other poor natives of our said kingdom, the English tongue, and to teach them to read, especially the Holy Scriptures, and other good and pious books ; and to instruct them in the principles of the Protestant religion, established in our said kingdom, and to teach them to write, and to instruct them in arithmetic and such other parts of learning, as to the said Society shall seem meet, and to bring them up in virtue and industry ; and to cause them to be instructed in husbandry and housewifery, or in trades or manufactures, or in such like manual occupations, as the said society shall think proper.

The said Society, out of the fund aforesaid, providing for the said poor children, or for such of them as by the said Society shall be judged proper, all necessary materials and utensils, as also Bibles, Common Prayer Books, and other proper books, and giving them or to such of them as the said Society shall think proper, encouragements, by providing clothes, diet and lodging for them, as to the said Society shall seem meet, until such times as they shall judge the said children fit to be put out to trades or services or other employments, and to allow the said masters and mistresses, respectively, such yearly wages or salaries as to them shall seem reasonable and fitting, together with the benefit of school-houses, dwelling-houses, gardens, fields and other fitting accommodations for the said masters and mistresses, and children, for the purposes aforesaid, to be hired, taken, purchased and built by the said Society, according to the exigencies and conveniencies of the places wherein the said schools shall be erected : And we do hereby grant and ordain, That the said Society and their successors, by the name aforesaid, shall be able in law, to sue and be sued, plead and be impleaded, in any of our courts and other places whatsoever, and before any judge judges or justices whatsoever, in all and all manner of suits, complaints, pleas, causes, matters and demands, whatsoever kind, nature or form they be of and all and sundry other matters and things, to do in as full, ample and effectual manner as any other person or persons, bodies politic and corporate within our realm of Ireland, may or can do : And we do hereby give and grant to the said Society to have a common seal, with such stamp and inscription to be engraved and made thereon, as they shall think proper ; and that it shall be lawful for them and their successors, to change, break, alter and renew the said seal at their pleasure : And for the better carrying on the aforesaid pious design, We ordain and appoint, That the said society have a general meeting of the members thereof, quarterly, in Dublin, at such place or places as they shall think proper ; viz. the first Wednesdays in May, August, November and February, yearly, in all time coming and oftener, when and where the said Society shall think meet ; and any seven members of the said said Society, who shall convene at the said times and places, are hereby declared to be a quorum of the said general meetings, and to be able and capable to do and transact all acts, matters and things, relating to the affairs of the said Society; and the said Society, at their first general meeting, which we hereby direct to be on the first of the said quarterly days, that shall be thirty days next after the date of these presents (timely intimation whereof, the said Lord Primate or Lord Chancellor, or the Commissioners of the Great Seal of Ireland for the time being, are hereby empowered and required to give to the members of the said Society) are by plurality of voices of such as shall be present to elect from among themselves, a president and vice-president; and also to elect a treasurer, secretary, register or clerk, and such other officers and servants as they shall find needful, to continue till the first Wednesday in November next thereafter, and until others be chosen to succeed them. And the said president or vice-president, at the time of such election, is hereby empowered to administer an oath to the said treasurer, secretary, register or clerk, and the said other officers and servants, which oath they are hereby respectively required to take for the due and faithful execution of their respective offices: And we do further, for us our heirs and successors, direct and appoint, That upon the first Wednesday in November, in all time coming (or in case of any emergency preventing their meeting on that day, then at the next meeting thereafter) the said general meeting, shall make a new election of persons to serve in the aforesaid respective offices, or continue the former, as they shall think most convenient: And likewise, we do hereby ordain and appoint, That the said Society do, at their first general meeting, nominate and appoint fifteen of their number to be a committee, to meet in Dublin the first Monday in every month, or oftener, as need shall require, in such place or places as shall be agreed upon by the said Society; and the said committee or any three or more of them, at the time and place appointed for their meeting, are hereby empowered to carry into execution all such orders, rules and directions, as shall from time to time be made by the said Society, pursuant to the powers hereby given to them, the said committee to continue till the first Wednesday in November next following the said first meeting of the said Society, at which time, and on every first Wednesday in November,* yearly, the said Society shall nominate fifteen of their members to be a committee for one year, for the purposes aforesaid: And further, the said Society, at their general meetings, are hereby empowered, as they shall see cause, to nominate and appoint fit persons in any place of our dominions or elsewhere, to receive subscriptions, money or other things, contributed towards the aforesaid design: And we do hereby will and ordain, That the treasurer do lay before the said society, at their general meeting, on the first Wednesday in November, yearly, an account of his receipts and disbursements for the year then ending, which being examined and approved by the said Society, shall be entered in a book to be kept for that purpose, which book and all other the books and papers of the said Society shall, at all times be open and free for the perusal of the several members thereof, that they may see what lands, goods, chattels and sums of money, have been given to and received by the said Society from time to time, and how the same have been laid out and applied by virtue of these presents, or any authority hereby given.

* A.D. 1792, an additional charter was granted by His present Majesty, by which the Society is enabled to receive and enjoy any manors, &c. not exceeding in the whole the clear yearly value of three thousand pounds sterling, in addition to the lands which, by the first charter, the Society was empowered to hold. And they are also enabled to grant leases in possession, and not in reversion, on their estates, within any city, town corporate, or market town, for any term not exceeding 99 years ; and in any other place, for any term not exceeding three lives or 31 years, reserving the best rent that can be obtained for the same.

And we do hereby, for us, our heirs and successors, grant unto the said Society, at their quarterly meetings, in all time coming, and at no other meetings, full power to make such rules and ordinances, and from time to time to alter the same as they shall judge most convenient and needful for the good government of the said Society, and management of the affairs thereof, and the effectual promotion of the good ends intended hereby; and to give such instructions, directions, orders, encouragements and salaries to those they employ, as they shall judge needful and reasonable: Provided always, that the said rules, ordinances, instructions and directions be not repugnant to the laws and statutes then in force within our said kingdom of Ireland; and that the same be approved of and confirmed by the said lord primate, or one of the said lords archbishops for the time being, and one of our said lord chief justices, or chief baron for the time being; and also we do ordain, grant and appoint, that so often and whensoever the president or vice-president of the said Society, or any one or more of the persons constituting the said Society for the time being, or any other such person that shall be chosen hereafter, shall happen to depart this life, that then and so often the survivors of the persons constituting the said Society, shall be continued and remain incorporate by the name aforesaid, to all intents, constructions and purposes, according to the true intent and meaning of these premises, as if all the said persons of the aforesaid Society had continued; and then and so often it shall and may be lawful for the said surviving persons, or any seven of them as a quorum, at any general meeting as aforesaid, to elect, nominate, chuse and appoint a new president and vice-president, in the room and place of such president or vice-president so dying; and also, if they shall judge it proper and convenient, may chuse one or more fit person or persons, in the room and place of such person or persons which shall so depart this life, which person and persons so nominated, elected and chosen as aforesaid shall, together with the said surviving persons, be taken, reputed, and be the Society hereby ordained and appointed for the ends and purposes aforesaid, and in like manner to proceed as often as need shall require for the keeping up of the said Society; and farther, that upon the death of their treasurer, secretary, and other officers and servants, or upon the removal of them or any of them from their offices, for misdemeanors by them committed, they shall in like manner

The said Society, at the first general meeting, to elect a president, vice-president, treasurer, secretary, and register or clerk, &c.

The president or vice-president to administer an oath to the treasurer, &c. for the faithful execution of their offices.

That the said Society, at the first general meeting, upon the first Wednesday in November, or next meeting thereafter, make a new election of persons to serve in the said offices, or continue the former.

The Society, at their first general meeting, to appoint a committee of 15 of their number, which committee is to have a meeting in Dublin, and is empowered to carry into execution all rules and directions of the said Society; and a committee, in manner aforesaid, is to be chosen yearly, on every first Wednesday in November.

The Society to nominate persons to receive subscriptions, benefactions, &c.

The treasurer to lay before the Society, on the first Wednesday in November yearly, an account of his receipts and disbursements, the same to be entered in a book.

A power to make such rules, &c. as the said Society shall think necessary.

A proviso, that the said rules be not repugnant to the laws of this kingdom, and the same be approved by the Lord Primate, Chief Judges, &c.

That whensoever the president, vice-president, &c. shall die, the survivors to remain incorporate, and they, or any seven of them, may appoint a new president or vice-president, &c. in the room of such persons.

And upon the death or removal of their treasurer, they shall in like manner choose others to succeed.

* By an Act 34 Geo. 3d, c. 15, sec. 7, the election of officers and servants, and the appointment of a committee of fifteen, is to be holden on the first Wednesday in February (instead of November) in every year.

Any seven of them, at such general meetings, to remove from their offices any such treasurer, &c. for misdemeanors.

All leases of land or tenements to be made at a general meeting, and with the consent of the president, &c. the said meeting at least consisting of seven in number.

Every lease to be made not exceeding three lives, or thirty-one years in possession, and without fine.

Subscribers being Protestants to be admitted into the Society.

Proviso, to restrain the Society from diminishing their capital stock.

Clause, that the grant is valid in law.

Proviso of inrolment.

manner choose others to succeed in their places and stead, and so in like manner from time to time as need shall require. And the said Society, or any seven of them, at such general and quarterly meetings aforesaid, are hereby empowered to remove from their offices any such treasurer, secretary and other officers, for misdemeanors committed by them in their said offices and stations. And our will and pleasure is, that no lease or leases of any lands or tenements belonging to the said Society be made or executed but at some one of their general and quarterly meetings, with the approbation of the president or vice president and treasurer, and the major part of the other members then present, such major part being at least seven in number; and that every lease so to be made shall be of lands, tenements or hereditaments in possession and not in reversion, and for a term not exceeding three lives or thirty-one years, whereon there shall be reserved the best yearly rent that can be had or gotten for the said lands or tenements at the time of making such leases respectively, without any fine or other income to be had or taken for the same. And we further grant to the said Society, full power and authority at any of their quarterly meetings in time coming, to elect and assume into their number and society, such subscribers or benefactors to their fund, being Protestants, as they shall judge fit and qualified to assist in carrying on the design aforesaid, which persons so from time to time elected, shall be deemed and taken to be members and part of the said Society and corporation as if herein particularly named as such: Provided always, and we do hereby expressly declare our royal will and pleasure to be, that it shall not be lawful for the said Society to diminish their capital stock arising from the annual rent or income of any manors, lands, tenements, annuities, pensions, tithes or other hereditaments whereof they shall at any time be seised or possessed by gift, purchase or devise, but they shall confine their expensés yearly to such annual rent or income, and to such sums of money, goods and chattels, as shall from year to year be subscribed or given to them, or the interests and profits thereof; and lastly, we do declare and ordain, that these our letters patent and charter, and every clause, sentence and article herein contained, or the inrolment hereof made in our high court of Chancery in our said kingdom of Ireland, shall be in all things firm, valid, sufficient and effectual in the law unto the said Society and their successors, according to the purport and tenor hereof, without any further grant, licence or toleration from us, our heirs or successors, to be procured or obtained: Provided always, that these our letters patent be inrolled in the rolls of our high court of Chancery in our said kingdom of Ireland, within the space of six months next ensuing the date of these presents. In witness whereof, we have caused these our letters to be made patent. Witness our said lord lieutenant general and general governor of our said kingdom of Ireland, at Dublin, the 24th day of October 1733, in the seventh year of our reign.

Appendix, N° 5.

A RETURN of all the Schools that have been kept by the Incorporated Society, at any time since their Incorporation, with the Dates and Causes of their Discontinuance.

	SCHOOL.	COUNTY.	Year when the School was opened.	Year when the School was discontinued.	CAUSES OF DISCONTINUANCE.
1.	Castledermot -	Kildare -	1734	-	Still existing.
2.	Minola -	Mayo -	1735	1764	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
3.	Shannon Grove -	Limerick -	—	1810	D°.
4.	Ballynahinch -	Down -	—	1774	Perpetuity refused by the landlord.
5.	Castlecaulfield -	Tyrone -	1736	1773	Rent demanded considered too high.
6.	Ballycastle -	Antrim -	1737	-	Still existing.
7.	Creggane -	Armagh -	—	1812	Old, and wanting necessary offices, &c.
8.	Templestown -	Wicklow -	—	1776	Requiring too much to be expended in repairs, &c.
9.	Killogh -	Down -	1738	1772	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
10.	Kilmallock -	Limerick -	—	1773
11.	Stradbally -	Queen's -	1739	-	Still existing.
12.	Newtown Eyre -	Galway -	—	1773	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
13.	Dundalk -	Louth -	—	-	Still existing.
14.	Kilfinane -	Limerick -	—	1807	Requiring £.1,063. 14. 6. to be expended in repairs, &c.
15.	Newtown Corry	Monaghan -	1740	1773	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
16.	Ray -	Donegal -	—	1812	Altered into a day school.
17.	New Ross -	Wexford -	1741	-	Still existing.
18.	Ballykett -	Clare -	1743	1773	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
19.	Santry -	Dublin -	1744	-	Still existing.
20.	Waterford -	Waterford -	—	-	D°.
21.	Kilkenny -	Kilkenny -	1745	1817	This endowment has been transferred to the purpose of a factory, instead of that at Lintown.
22.	Ardbracon -	Meath -	1747	-	Still existing.
23.	Charleville -	Cork -	1748	-	D°.
24.	Strangford -	Down -	—	-	D°.
25.	Castlecarberry -	Kildare -	—	1798	Burned by the rebels.
26.	Clonmel -	Tipperary -	—	-	Converted into a day school.
27.	Trim -	Meath -	—	-	D°.
28.	Mountshannon -	Limerick -	—	1752	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
29.	Arklow -	Wicklow -	—	1812	House and offices reported ruinous; a temporary infirmary in the mistress's own house retained here.
30.	Kinsale -	Cork -	1749	1773	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
31.	Castle Martyr -	D° -	—	1824	D° - - house, old and ruinous.
32.	Clontarf, Strand	Dublin -	—	-	Still existing.
33.	Loughrea -	Galway -	1750	1812	Old and ruinous, requiring much repairs; water two miles distant.

Appendix, N^o 5.—continued.

	SCHOOL.	COUNTY.	Year when the School was opened.	Year when the School was discontinued.	CAUSES OF DISCONTINUANCE.
34.	Maynooth -	Kildare -	1750	1819	Small endowment; general expediency.
35.	Cashel -	Tipperary -	1751	-	Still existing.
36.	Dunmanway -	Cork -	—	1823	Want of funds to supply the general estimate. Day school.
37.	Newport -	Tipperary -	—	-	Converted into a day school.
38.	Ballykelly -	Londonderry -	1752	1819	Lease expired.
39.	Innishannon -	Cork -	—	-	Still existing.
40.	Frankfort -	King's -	1753	-	D ^o - - now called Dunkerrin.
41.	Longford -	Longford -	—	-	Still existing.
42.	Galway -	Galway -	1755	1795	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
43.	Monivea -	D ^o -	—	1760	Converted into a nursery.
44.	Sligo -	Sligo -	—	-	Still existing.
45.	Farra -	W. Meath -	1758	-	D ^o .
46.	Armagh -	Armagh -	—	1773	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
47.	Inniscarra -	Cork -	1760	1802	Want of an efficient local committee, and otherwise inconvenient.
48.	Monivea Nursery	Galway -	—	-	Still existing as a school.
49.	Shannon Grove D ^o	Limerick -	—	-	Still existing.
50.	Monastereven D ^o	Kildare -	1762	-	D ^o .
51.	Ballinrobe -	Mayo -	1739	1805	Renewal not to be obtained.
52.	Castle Island -	Kerry -	1763	1802	Discontinued on a general plan of œconomy.
53.	Roscommon -	Roscommon -	—	-	Still existing. } Ranelagh
54.	Athlone -	W. Meath -	1764	-	D ^o . } charity.
55.	Castlebar -	Mayo -	1768	1812	Fuel scarce, water bad, and insufficient; expensive repairs required.
56.	Newmarket -	Clare -	—	1806	Requiring repairs at much expense.
57.	Celbridge -	Kildare -	1809	-	Still existing.
58.	Baggot Street -	Dublin -	1804	-	D ^o .
59.	Charlemont Street	D ^o -	1772	-	D ^o .
60.	Kevin Street -	D ^o -	1814	-	D ^o .
61.	Lintown Factory (Pococke Charity)	Kilkenny -	1779	-	D ^o at the late school of Kilkenny.

Incorporated Society's House, Dublin,
1st February 1825.

(signed)

Ja^s Adamson, Sec^y.

Appendix, N° 6.

A LIST of the existing Charter Schools of Ireland, and other Institutions, under the Incorporated Society.

SCHOOLS:	Counties.	Sex.	Established Number of Children	Present Number.	Master.	Cathechist.
Ardraccan - -	Meath - -	boys -	60	61	James Pounds -	Rev. Michael Egan.
Ballycastle - -	Antrim - -	girls -	60	79	W. B. Nugent -	Rev. Stevenson Hunter.
Baggot Street - -	Dublin - -	girls -	60	53	Sarah M' Murray -	Rev. John Lewis.
Cashel - - -	Tipperary -	boys -	80	84	Mau. Roche -	Rev. J. M. Poole.
Castledermot - -	Kildare - -	boys -	70	74	Lucius Harvy -	Rev. J. Fitzgibbon.
Castle Martyr - -	Cork - - -	boys -	40	17	S. B. Upton - -	Rev. George Smith.
Charleville - - -	Cork - - -	girls -	50	56	Ann Sherlock -	Rev. William Dunn.
Celbridge - - -	Kildare - -	girls -	150	126	John Boyle - -	Rev. Caesar Otway.
Clontarf - - -	Dublin - -	boys -	120	130	James Moffett -	Rev. A. S. Adamson.
Dundalk - - -	Louth - - -	girls -	100	100	John Kidd - -	Rev. Robert Hume.
Dunkerrin - - -	King's County	girls -	80	103	Alexander Acheson	Rev. William Minchin.
Farra - - -	W. Meath -	boys -	100	111	Richard Ring -	Rev. D. Wood.
Innishannon - -	Cork - - -	boys -	50	34	George Sherlock -	Rev. Thomas Meade.
Kevin Street - -	Dublin - -	girls -	200	200	George Clarke -	Rev. Henry Murray.
Longford - - -	Longford -	boys -	60	29	William Prestidge	Rev. — Minchin.
Monastereven - -	Kildare - -	girls -	140	140	Henry Moorhouse	Rev. William Bagott.
Monivea - - -	Galway - -	girls -	100	103	George Cowen -	Rev. E. Synge.
Ross - - -	Wexford -	boys -	80	90	George Payne -	Rev. — Jones.
Santry - - -	Dublin - -	boys -	120	104	Francis Devine -	Rev. J. D. Long.
Shannon Grove -	Limerick -	boys -	100	86	James Waterstone	Rev. Thomas Franklin.
Stradbally - - -	Queen's County	boys -	80	82	Thomas Wallace -	Rev. H. Johnston.
Strangford - - -	Down - - -	boys -	200	78	Thomas Flemming	Rev. Charles Wolsely.
Sligo - - -	Sligo - - -	boys -	80	82	Joseph Hines -	Rev. W. Armstrong.
Killoteran near Water- ford - - -	Waterford -	boys -	60	52	Henry Palmer -	Rev. Henry Archdal.
Arklow Temporary In- firm - - -	Wicklow - -	girls -	-	30	El. Cullen
Charlemont Place Tem- porary Asylum -	Dublin - -	girls -	-	26	Hannah Vickers
			2,240	2,130

RANELAGH ESTATE.

SCHOOLS.	Counties.	Sex.	Established Number of Children.	Present Number.	Master.	Catechist.
Athlone - - -	W. Meath -	boys -	40	18	John Porch - -	Rev. J. R. Moffat.
Roscommon - - -	Roscommon -	girls -	40	18	George Clarke -	Rev. Thomas Blakeney.
			80	36
Brownstown late Lintown Factory	Kilkenny -	{ supported under the late Bishop Pococke's Charity.

DAY SCHOOLS.

SCHOOLS.	COUNTIES.	MASTER.
Dunmanway - - -	Cork - - -	William Norwood.
Clonmel - - -	Tipperary -	Andrew Martin.
Newport - - -	D° - - -	Edward Dunn.
Ray - - -	Donegal - -	Thomas Finucane.
Trim - - -	Meath - - -	George Mooney.

I certify this Return to be correct and true.

(signed)

Ja' Adamson, Secy.

Incorporated Society House, Dublin,
27th September 1824.

Appendix, N° 7.

Extracts from "Observations on the present State of the CHARTER SCHOOLS
" in Ireland, and the means of improving them." By William Disney, esquire.
Printed in Dublin, 1806.

N° 7.
Charter Schools.

" IT is generally felt and acknowledged by the members of the Incorporated Society, that the schools under their care are not in as flourishing a condition as could be wished. Though there are some that do credit to the establishment, it is to be lamented, that others, in spite of all the endeavours of the committee of fifteen, reflect disgrace on the Society. Abuses are continually discovered, and sometimes in schools, where every thing was supposed to be perfectly well regulated. The evil is corrected in one quarter, and in a few months, the same work is to be performed in another. Take the reports of the local committees of the several schools, and you are told, that every thing is in the most prosperous state, the children well clothed, fed and educated; the master, mistress and usher, conducting themselves in the most exemplary manner, and nothing wanting but more liberality on the part of the Society, to relieve the many grievances under which the master labours. Hear, on the other hand, the report of an unprejudiced stranger, and you will too often find the picture reversed, and the whole establishment of one of these applauded schools, in a state of universal neglect, abuse and decay. It is alledged, that many of the children relapse into popery, and it is certain the Society are not able to give a satisfactory account of all the children they apprentice."

" The original plan adopted with respect to the position of the schools, the greater part of which were designedly and on principle placed in the most popish counties of Ireland, has been a principal cause of their having fallen short of attaining the objects for which they were instituted.

" A few years ago, before the suppression of Newmarket, Castle Island, Ballinrobe and Inniscarra schools, there were thirteen of the Society's schools in Munster, eighteen in Leinster, six in Connaught, and but five in Ulster. The object of this arrangement was to diffuse protestantism over the popish counties, but the effect has by no means corresponded with the expectation formed from it. The children formerly (much more than at the present day) were of popish parents, and apprenticed at a very early age, from thirteen to fifteen; though they were apprenticed to Protestant masters, yet all their intercourse was with papists. They were sure to hear much of the religion of their parents, and its superiority over the modern heresy of protestantism; when their apprenticeship was over, all tie (but that of principle) to the established religion, was dissolved. Their interest, as well as their prejudices, led them to the adoption of another faith; and under these circumstances, it is not surprising that children sent into the world, before any thing like steady principle could be considered as fixed, should embrace the popular profession of religion. The case would probably have been very different, had the schools been placed generally in the more Protestant counties of Ulster. There the children would have met with Protestant habits, and formed Protestant connexions, the current of popular opinion on the subject of religion, would have been quite in favour of the lessons they had received at school, instead of directly in opposition to them, and in a worldly point of view they would have found it, " the thriving profession." If therefore the charter schools have failed of attaining one principal object of their institution, namely, " conversion to the Protestant religion," the plan originally adopted with respect to their position, may be considered as having mainly contributed to their failure in this respect."

Among other difficulties stated by the author, is that of "procuring the assistance of active and zealous local committees, the inefficiency of the local committees in general, and their partiality to the masters of the schools respectively under their care."

The author proceeds,—

" It must be acknowledged, there are some splendid exceptions to the truth of this observation, which are highly satisfactory to the Society, and reflect much credit on the individuals concerned; it is however, too generally true, and is one great impediment to the improvement of the schools, and to the preservation of good order and discipline when once established. The general course is for local committees to meet once in the quarter; very few visit in the intermediate time, and if they do, it is generally without taking any interest in what is going on, or making any useful observation; the quarterly reports contain little but commendation of the master, mistress and usher; and the Society have often been deluded into a persuasion, that a school was in a most flourishing state, when the visit of some stranger, or a member of the Society, has opened their eyes and discovered a system of abuse and irregularity subversive of all the purposes of the institution. Complaints against the master, rarely, if ever, come from the local committees. When a master is dismissed for the most flagrant misconduct, a memorial generally comes from the local committee, praying that he may be reinstated, and there have been instances of local committees renouncing their attendance altogether, in consequence of such representations not being complied with. These are matters of daily experience, and in consequence of this prevailing laxity, abuses are no sooner put down in one place than they start up in another. There are at this moment two large schools, that can be named, as flagrant instances of the truth of these observations, from one of which the master has been dismissed, and in the other is on further trial."

" The

"The difficulty of procuring masters, mistresses and ushers, properly qualified, has been a very great impediment in the way of education, and the general good conduct of these schools. It is a difficulty growing out of and connected with the general low state of education in the country, and will of itself diminish, with proper care in the persons, who from time to time may superintend this and similar establishments. It would excite indignation and disgust to see the description of men to whom the education of children in these schools has been sometimes (almost necessarily) committed. Men of vulgar habits, coarse manners, often ignorant in the extreme of every thing but the common rudiments of reading, writing and arithmetic; exhibiting nothing in conduct or example that could raise the minds of the children above the level of that semi-barbarism which has been the character of the lower class of the people in this country. This has not been universally, but it has been certainly very frequently the case, and it is in itself sufficient to account for a very general failure of success in the schools of this establishment.

"There has indeed been already a very great improvement in this very important article. A committee was formed about two years ago, for the express purpose of examining into the qualifications of candidates for these situations. The idea was taken from the practice of the Society in Scotland, and it has been attended with the most beneficial consequences. Antecedent to the institution of this committee, the election of masters was a mere lottery. There was no examination but what passed at a general board, composed of the Society at large. It was cursory and superficial in the extreme, never extended beyond reading, and the production of specimens of writing, and the reading aloud of the testimonials in favour of the moral and religious character of the candidates. The board then proceeded to elect by ballot, and the discrimination (if any was really made) between the candidates, was so slight, that it left every member at liberty, without any glaring violation of decency, to vote for any one of them he pleased. The consequence was, that the elections were not decided by merit (which there were no sufficient means of ascertaining), but by favour and interest. There was a regular canvass on every vacancy, and scarce any man conceived the idea of offering himself, that did not think himself previously sure of what is called the "interest" of some leading members of the Society. Since the establishment of the committee of examination, unfriended strangers have come forward from every part of Ireland, the answering has improved at every succeeding examination, and superiority of merit has irresistibly decided the elections. From this cause, and the great assistance afforded by the Foundling Hospital, in supplying properly qualified ushers, in consequence of the unparalleled advancement of education, under the auspices of the Rev. Mr. Crofton and the Rev. Mr. Murray, as well as by the improvement of some of the charter schools themselves in the important article of religious instruction in particular, this difficulty is rapidly giving way, and will scarcely be felt as an impediment in the course of a few years."

The writer then states, as another difficulty:—

"The constitution of the Society itself, by which the general superintendence and controul of the whole system is vested in a general board of the whole Society, consisting of an indefinite number of persons, the much greater part of whom are unacquainted with the business of the Society, and attend only casually, as matters particularly interesting to them arise.

"The principle of this constitution manifestly is, that this general board shall act as a controuling power, to check and correct the abuses into which smaller subordinate committees may be supposed prone to fall. They are placed over the whole system as its guardians. They alone can elect and dismiss masters, set leases of the property, appoint agents, and furnish a supply of money to answer extraordinary demands (for the powers of the committee of fifteen are in this respect limited); but experience has proved in this, as I believe it will in every similar instance, "that general boards, such as this, will" (and from the nature of things must) be a source of abuse, not a principle of correction." If a master is to be turned out for misconduct, the proofs of his guilt may not be sufficient to satisfy even impartial persons, who pay but a transitory and occasional attention to the business of the Society, and the interference of one friend may by this means prove effectual to support the culprit, and perpetuate the abuses of the school over which he is placed. If he is dismissed, it has too frequently happened, that the compassion of the general board has induced them to give him a pension for life. If any general principle of improvement is to be established, it must pass a general board, consisting of members, many of whom have paid little or no attention to the general subject of education, or to the business of the Society in particular. There is no calculating the extent of the evils which might have resulted from this system, if those persons who have from time to time in the smaller committees had the principal share in transacting the business of the Society, had not devised general rules, and at convenient seasons prevailed on general boards to pass them, by which they are restrained from those hasty and precipitate measures to which assemblies, so constituted, must, from their nature, be liable. In fact, the committee of fifteen has been always the principle of controul in the Society."

"In the year 1795, there were 37 schools under the care of the Society, capable of accommodating 1,665 children; in the years 1801 and 1802, the schools of Castle Island and Inniscarra were suppressed; Ballinrobe became extinct in 1805, in consequence of a disagreement between the Society and the heir of the original donor, as to the terms on which the lease of the adjoining lands, with which it was endowed, should be renewed; the school at Carbery was burned by the rebels in the year 1798, and the new school in Bagot-street was established in its place in the year 1804; in the year 1805, the school at New-market, in the county of Clare, was suppressed. In the mean time, several other schools were enlarged; and at the close of the year 1805, there were in the whole 33 schools under the care of the Society, capable of accommodating 1,790 children, 125 more than could have been accommodated in the year 1795, besides the two Ranelagh schools, the Lintown factory, and the four nurseries at Dublin, Monasterevan, Monivea, and Shannon Grove, which last-mentioned establishments afford accommodation for 520 children at the least, so that the total number of children, for whom accommodation is now provided in the several establishments under the care of the Society, is 2,270."

The writer then states, as a measure necessary for the reformation of the charter schools, "the establishment of an effectual system of visitation by persons deputed by the central committee, and making their reports from local inspection to them."

"The institution of local committees, for the purpose of superintending the schools in their neighbourhood, and reporting on their state and the conduct of the master, to the central committee in Dublin is, in theory, extremely plausible, and, in appearance, presents a system adequate to the good government of the schools, and the prevention and correction of abuses. But it is not the experience of the committee of fifteen alone that may be quoted in proof of its utter inefficacy, the same conclusion has been fully established by the experience of the Society in Scotland for propagating Christian Knowledge. The following is a short extract from the report of that Society, on the funds, expenditure and general management of their affairs, published in 1796:—

"A committee of neighbouring ministers were from the beginning required, by the rules of the Society, to visit and report concerning their schools, and this regulation was for many years faithfully complied with. In process of time, however, the zeal of the clergy relaxed, and the visitation and examination of the Society schools were attended only by the minister of the parish, with perhaps a few of his elders and parishioners. The report prepared beforehand by the schoolmaster, according to a form which had been transmitted to the Society, was, year after year, conceived in the same terms, and subscribed as a matter of course by those who were present. If the schoolmaster was negligent in his duty or reprehensible in his conduct, motives of compassion, and fear of taking upon himself the blame of depriving a man, and perhaps a family, of bread, prevented the minister from accusing him to his constituents. If he was not provided in accommodations, according to the rules of the Society, he was equally averse from reporting the truth upon this head; because the consequence might, and probably would be, a suppression of the school, and he would bring upon himself the resentment of the proprietors, by publishing their criminal inattention to the best interests of their people and that of his parishioners, by depriving them of a public benefit. It is evident, from this representation of what has actually occurred in hundreds of instances, that the directors of the Society must have been often kept totally in the dark, with respect to the situation of many of their schools and schoolmasters, and consequently at a loss how to conduct themselves with respect to them. To remedy this defect, as far as rules could accomplish it, the Society, some few years ago, adopted the following regulation:—

"That two members of this presbytery, at least, should visit their schools and sign the report, which, moreover, in no case should be written by the schoolmaster, but by a clerk to be chosen by the committee of visitors, and to be formed upon their actual observation of facts."

"A stranger minister, it was presumed, could not be under the same inducements to conceal or palliate the truth, as the minister of the parish, and would more readily subject himself to blame from proprietors and parishioners, if any blame should arise, from making known the real state of things. To this regulation the Society are determined to adhere; and, except in cases of real necessity, to which the directors always have, and, it is to be hoped, always will pay attention, when stated to them, they will certainly, in future, refuse payment of salaries to schoolmasters where it is not complied with."

"Any person acquainted with the proceedings of the committee of fifteen in Dublin, and the reports they are in the habits of receiving from their local committees, would conceive, upon hearing the above extract read, that it was a description of their own experience; some expressions are inapplicable to the constitution of the Society in Dublin, but in substance the picture is the same. But there is a circumstance, which has been already touched upon in the constitution of the Incorporated Society in Dublin, which makes a material difference between the two Societies, and renders the evils resulting from the supineness and partiality of local committees much more serious and extensive here than in Scotland. The Incorporated Society embraces within its object not merely the education, but the feeding, the clothing and the health of the children in their schools, and also the repairs and alterations of their buildings; the industry of the boys and girls also educated by the Incorporated Society is wholly at their disposal. There are, therefore, so many more articles in which abuse and mismanagement, speculation and fraud, may take place, and so much the more room for misrepresentation, and partial and incorrect information from the local committees to the central committee in Dublin. It may therefore be considered as a point established by the concurring experience of both Societies, that no system of this nature can be well conducted by a central or superintending committee, assisted assisted by local committees alone; that this is more peculiarly the case in Ireland, where the superintending care of the central committee embraces so great a variety of objects, and that it is impossible to manage a widely diffused establishment in such a manner as to fulfil the purposes of its institution, without the aid of confidential visitors, deputed periodically (and from time to time, as occasion may require) to make surveys of all or a part of the schools, and to report minutely on every department of each of them. Without the institution of this additional check, in aid of other provisions for the due regulation of these schools, there may be here and there a conscientious master or a zealous and active local committee, that may bring a school, for a time, to a state of creditable order and discipline; but the tendencies of human nature will continue the same, and though there may be a fluctuation in the general state of the schools from contingent and accidental causes, the same fruits must for ever flow from the same system. This point is urged with the more earnestness, from the deeply impressed conviction, that unless some measures shall be adopted for supplying this essential defect in the Society, the labours of the committee for the permanent reformation of the schools are perfectly vain."

"The statement of some recent facts, will illustrate and prove this position, to the satisfaction of any person who may read these observations. Within these last five years the schools of Castle Island and Inniscarra were suppressed for gross mismanagement, long persisted in, in spite of remonstrances, after all hopes of producing reformation through the assistance of any person in the neighbourhood had been abandoned, and the masters and their families with just but necessary severity, were turned adrift, without provision. The master of Ardracran, the master and mistress of Dunkerrin, and the mistresses of Castlebar and Newport schools, were dismissed in like manner, and the proceedings in all these cases were sent to the masters and mistresses of all the other schools, with the sentences of dismissal, and the reasons on which they were founded, in the hope that they might operate as a salutary warning, to prevent the repetition of the like abuses. After all these examples, the school of Newmarket, in the county of Clare, was visited in the course of the year 1805, by a member of the Society, and it was found in a state of universal and scandalous neglect, after repeated warnings from the Society, and the master and mistress were dismissed on the report, without any attempt to defend or even palliate their conduct. Ballinrobe school was discontinued from another cause; but on removal of the children from thence to Sligo school, it appeared, from the reports of the local committee of the last mentioned establishment, that their education, manners and clothing, had been so shamefully neglected (though the Society had been in the habit of receiving the most favourable reports from the local committee of Ballinrobe school, on these points), that the master stood self-convicted, and forbore to urge a petition which he had presented for compensation for the loss he had suffered, in being deprived of his provision, by the discontinuance of the school, the prayer of which, must, in justice, have been complied with, had the local committee of Sligo school been less faithful or less vigilant, or been actuated by any partiality to the master of Ballinrobe.

"In the same year, several schools in the South were visited by another member, and the consequence was, that two masters were dismissed, and one anticipated the sentence of the Society by resignation. After all these dismissions it might be expected, and the Society were probably deluded into a persuasion, that they had brought their schools into tolerable order, or at least, that all flagrant and glaring abuses had been suppressed; but in the course of the last spring, they discovered, that two of their schools, of both of which they had good grounds for indulging the most favourable expectations, and from both of which they received the most flattering reports, were in a state of great disorder, and very far indeed from fulfilling the purposes of the institution. The two schools alluded to, are Farra, in the county of Westmeath, and Stradbally, in the Queen's County. In the former, the master was a thoroughly well qualified man; and the points of accusation, though they impressed a general conviction of gross neglect and mismanagement, were not so well supported by proof, as to render it prudent for the committee of fifteen to bring his case before the general board; he was severely reprimanded, and a visitor has been since specially appointed, to go down and to report, accurately, on the state of the school in every particular. In the latter, the master was convicted of the base fraud of substituting pease meal instead of oatmeal, for the food of the children, and of other very gross neglects and irregularities, and was dismissed with disgrace. In these multiplied instances of dismissal, it is a fact to be deplored, that but two, (namely, that of the master and mistress of Dunkerrin School, who were turned out on the report of the clergyman of the parish, and the catechist, who had discovered gross frauds in the clothing and feeding of the children; and that of Ardracran, who was dismissed on the report of the catechist, were founded on report of any member of a local committee. In every other instance, the reports of misconduct proceeded from strangers who visited the schools, either accidentally, or upon some commission from the Society; and the local committees, so far from assisting in these necessary acts for the reformation of the schools, almost universally supported the cause of the master, remonstrated against his sentence, and solicited compensation for his loss, out of the funds of the Society.

"After all these examples, can it be reasonably hoped, that any thorough and general reformation can be effected as the institution now stands: the expectation would be chimerical, and the necessity of the additional provision of confidential visitors from the central committee, seems incontrovertibly established. It is, however, necessary to point out out some cautions that must be observed, to render this plan of visitation by persons deputed by the Society, a source of steady permanent and effectual controul.

“1st.—The greatest care must be exercised in the choice of proper persons for the purpose. They should be men of activity and zeal, integrity and firmness, well acquainted with the economy of a school, and the manner in which such establishments ought to be conducted; they should be qualified to examine and ascertain the progress of the children in Christian knowledge, and the several branches of learning and industry, in which they are instructed. If such qualifications are rare, the greater care should be exerted in making the selection, and perhaps, for a time, it would be necessary to hold out the inducement of a very liberal remuneration, in order to obtain proper persons to fill so important and essential an office.

2d.—Though their visits should be periodical, twice in the year at the least, yet they should not be at stated times; they should always, if possible, be unexpected. The same visitor should not always go the same circuit; he should never allow himself to be limited in time; but if necessary take his abode in the neighbourhood of a school, till he had obtained by daily and even nightly visitation at all hours and moments, a thorough knowledge of all the practices of the school; he should depart apparently without any intention of returning, and come back suddenly when he was least expected; and these visits should be repeated not only periodically, to all the schools, but occasionally to such as seemed to stand most in need of reformation; and where abuse or negligence was suspected, such a system would not only keep the masters on the alert, but would stimulate the local committees. Their silence could no longer screen the master, and they would be forward at times, to have the credit of discovering and reporting abuses before they had attracted the notice of the visitor. They would be even checks upon his conduct, and under this double system of superintendence, it would be hardly possible a school could be long in a state of neglect or disorder, without the knowledge of the central committee.

3d.—These visitors having been selected with the utmost care, their authority should be supported with energy and promptness, they should be warned universally to exercise their own judgments, and to be on their guard against the influence of all local representation; and it is unnecessary to add, that any instance of incorrect information conveyed by them, should be followed by instant dismissal from the service of the Society.”

“But among the causes which have been enumerated as having contributed to prevent the Institution from having attained that degree of perfection of which it is capable, the constitution of the Society itself, by which the general superintendence and controul of the whole system is vested in a general board of the whole Society, which consists of an indefinite number of persons, has been stated as one, and this constitution can only be altered by Parliament. Whether the evils resulting from its present frame are such as to require the interference of the legislature, is a point on which some of the best friends of the institution may be perhaps divided. General boards, at which an indefinite number of persons may be collected together, are certainly attended with much danger to the institution. On the other hand, it may be said, that a small junto, vested with the sole management of the funds and patronage of the Society, without occasional controul, is not less liable to objection. If no other controul could be substituted, in the place of that which the stated meetings of the general board furnish, the objection would have weight. But it would be easy to provide sufficient checks on the conduct of the managing committee, to prevent the necessity of having recourse to any measures that could expose the best interests of the Society occasionally to hazard. The following would probably be sufficient, and in every point of view preferable to the superintendence of the general board:

“1st.—A well digested system of general rules, defining the extent of the powers vested in the managing committee.

“2d.—Regular annual accounts, before the imprest commissioners, &c.*

“3d.—Annual reports to the Lord Lieutenant and Parliament.

“With these precautions against the introduction of abuse, the universal experience of business proves, that the more simple the form of government is, and the less opportunity is afforded for the collision of different powers, the greater probability there is of a steady, vigorous and energetic management.

“The foregoing arrangements may be considered as preliminary to a thorough reformation in the state of these schools; but much will remain to be done by the managing committee, in the way of internal regulation, after all these introductory changes of system have been carried into effect. The present mode of clothing, feeding, employing and apprenticing the children, are all subjects for review, on which serious deliberation, aided by all the helps which modern experience can furnish, should be bestowed. Endeavours should be made to excite the zeal and activity of the local committees. The charter schools may perhaps be made instrumental, to diffuse more widely education and industry among among the lower orders, by attaching a day-school or school of industry, to each of them. Innumerable sources of improvement may result from the one fundamental change, namely, "That of allowing time to the managing committee to view the subject at large, instead of being continually employed in the minutiae of its detail," the necessary and inseparable consequence of the present system, which, if the foregoing view of the subject be right, can never be the instrument of advancing the schools to any high degree of general good order, or extensive utility."

* This check subsists at present.

149
N° 7.
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 8.

Examination of William Disney, Esq. Saturday, 1st January 1825, who was called in; and Examined on Oath, as follows:

YOU were formerly a Commissioner of inquiry into education?—Yes; I was a member of two of the boards at different periods.

Were you a member of the board of commissioners who made fourteen reports to Parliament upon the subject?—Yes; but not at the time of the fourteenth report. I had retired before that time.

Were you also a member of the board of education constituted when that commission terminated?—I was for a short period.

How long did you continue to act at the last board?—To the best of my recollection, I was about two years a member of the last board; it is a good many years ago since I resigned. I was not an original member.

What was the reason of your retiring from the existing board?—I live out of town, and the boards were always held at a very late hour, and I found it extremely inconvenient; in fact, I may say, my reasons were quite of a private nature, of personal convenience; at the same time, I did not feel that I was of any use as a member of the board; as to the first commission, I must say, I did not fully approve the report upon the parish schools. I felt it was an inadequate report, and I did not feel from my constitution and personal strength, I was able to give such attention to the business of the board, as I thought it the duty of a member of such a board to do.

Can you call to mind in what respect it appeared to you, that the report upon the parish schools was insufficient?—To the best of my recollection it suggested no remedy.

Was any remedy discussed, or did appear to you there was any obvious remedy?—To the best of my recollection, I expected there would have been some modification of the Act of 28th Henry 8, relating to parish schools, and the contribution of the clergy to them.

Do you know whether any modification of the parish school Act, was recommended by the commissioners after you quitted the board?—It appears to be so on reference to the fourteenth report of those commissioners.

Being now apprized of the recommendation annexed to the fourteenth report, was any such provision under consideration during the time you were a member of the board?—I do not think any such provision was ever discussed at the board while I was a member.

Had any proposition for a general system of parochial education been under the consideration of the board while you were a member?—To the best of my recollection, there was a report drawn up, proposing a plan; but it was liable to many objections, and I recollect fully concurring in not adopting that plan; I have no recollection of any thing else.

Do you bear in mind that plan recommended in the report you concurred in rejecting?—I do not.

For what length of time did you act as a member of that board of education which still continues in existence?—I think, to the best of my recollection, about three years; but I cannot speak accurately.

Did you attend at the board whenever it assembled?—Yes; I did.

Did that attendance require more time than you were able to bestow upon it?—I live out of town, and the hours were peculiarly inconvenient to me.

How frequently did it make it necessary for you to attend?—The meetings were very rare certainly; I do not think they were once a month, very likely not once in three months.

Do you recollect the longest period you have ever known elapse between one meeting of the board and another?—The board met very rarely.

Have you ever known six months elapse without a meeting at all?—I should not be surprised if I found it was so.

Was the habit of the commissioners to sit upon successive days, and dispose of the business for the year in a short period?—No; I never remember two consecutive sittings.

Was the inconvenience of attending that board that met so seldom, your only reason for retiring from it?—I must speak very plainly; it was so difficult to obtain meetings of the board, from the manner of its constitution, (I believe there could be no act done without some of the ex officio members, the Primate, and Provost, and archbishop of Dublin, and others, and the archbishop of Tuam), and the meetings were so very rare, it did not appear to me that the board could be an instrument of much public utility.

In what way was the business conducted in the intervals that occurred between the sittings of the board; was there any secretary who carried on the business of his own authority?

N° 8.

Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
1 Jan. 1825.

N^o 8.

Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
1 Jan. 1825.

authority?—There was a secretary; and I suppose part of the business was proceedings in the suits; orders were given for the commencement of those suits; there were also estates, the rents of which were to be received; all this was done by the agent, and the solicitor could go on having once received the order of the board, and the agent could receive the monies; when a fresh order was wanted, a board I presume was summoned.

Are you acquainted with the state of the schools of royal foundation, and the diocesan schools, and others, put under that board?—No, I am not, from personal inquiry; I recollect reading reports upon them, but I never made any inquiry personally into the schools of royal foundation, or the diocesan schools.

Did it appear to you, that the evils existing in the management of those schools were likely to be corrected by the board of which you were a member?—I think I have substantially answered that question already; that the board was so constituted, it was so difficult to procure a board, that I did not consider it as an instrument of energy for the purpose.

Have any regulations for an improved system of managing diocesan schools ever been under your consideration?—I do not recollect; the commissioners will recollect it is fourteen years since I discharged my mind of the subject entirely.

Has it ever occurred to you to consider upon what footing the schools of royal foundation ought to be placed?—I never had any plan in my own mind upon the subject.

Are you a member of the incorporated society?—Yes, I am a member of the body, but I am not a member of the efficient body, the committee of fifteen, nor have I been for eleven years.

Did you act for many years on the committee of fifteen?—I did; I acted from February 1801 or 1802 (I am not sure which) to September 1813.

What opinion did you form in that time of the management and operation of the charter schools?—That the management, so far as it depended upon the committee of fifteen, I think was conducted with integrity; but if the question is pointed to the efficiency of the system, I certainly did not resign as a member of the committee of fifteen, till I had ceased to entertain any hope of the charter schools being rendered efficient instruments of public education; I mean to an extent to be compared with the money granted.

Have not the committee of fifteen full power given them to controul and direct all the schools that are maintained by the incorporated society?—All the acts of the committee of fifteen, by the constitution of the society, are liable to be overhauled by the general board; I think a committee of fifteen, that was competent and desirous of improving the system, might meet with great impediments from the constitution of the Society; there are monthly boards, in which they may be checked in any measure they propose to adopt; they are quite a delegated committee.

Are they not the same individuals that form both in practice?—No; the Society consists of a great number of members.

Are they not in point of fact the same?—No; I have known boards of eighteen and twenty, who were competent in point of numbers, and disposed to resist the acts of the committee of fifteen.

Have you ever known any boards in which the acts of the committee of fifteen have been overturned?—I cannot name at this moment any instance of it; but I can say, that the disposition of general boards frequently, if not generally, was, to support masters, and to require such strict proof of misconduct as materially to impede the committee of fifteen, and to uphold improper and unqualified masters; proof was required, such as would legally satisfy a jury, and the master was rather considered as having a freehold than a place at pleasure.

Do you think, in point of fact, the powers of the committee of fifteen, and their disposition to take upon themselves the responsibility of giving the necessary orders for the management of the schools, is materially affected by the knowledge, that their acts may be overhauled and reversed by the general Society?—I think it may sometimes have had a damping effect upon improvements; the greater the activity and zeal of the committee of fifteen the more this influence was felt.

In what other respects do you think the committee of fifteen are unequal to the management of the affairs of the charter schools?—One great difficulty in the way of managing the charter schools consisted in the difficulty of obtaining efficient local committees; every school was under the immediate superintendence of a local committee upon the spot, and in many instances this local committee espoused the cause of the master, and often very improperly; the committee of fifteen were often impeded in their endeavours of reformation by the resistance of the local committee to the dismissal of the master, and by their supporting the master, in fact, against the committee of fifteen.

To what do you attribute that conduct of the local committees to support rather than reject a master deficient in his duty?—It is difficult to account for it; but there was a very general partiality in the local committees to the masters; I could mention facts; I recollect some gentleman visiting the school at Stradbally, I think the present Dean French, and reporting, that bean meal was found in the bin for the feeding of the children; this ought to have been stocked with the best oatmeal; the fact was ascertained beyond controversy, and the master dismissed; and the local committee, amongst whom there were some names of respectability, wrote a remonstrance, and sent in their resignation.

Do you know the ground upon which they remonstrated?—The general good conduct of the master, and future promises; I can mention another fact. A visitor was appointed to go round to the schools; he got the local committee together, I think at Ballycastle; and, to the best of my recollection, the substance of his report was (in which the local committee committee concurred), that the mistress had violated all the rules of the society, but, in consequence of her promise of amendment, they recommended she should be continued; to the best of my recollection, she was not dismissed at the time, but she was dismissed afterwards; and some time after her dismissal an application was made by the local committee to Government, complaining of the misconduct of the Society, in not having granted her a pension for good conduct, and praying that the Lord Lieutenant would interfere; I therefore gave a general answer, that the partiality of the local committee to the masters was an impediment in the way of the committee of fifteen discharging their duty; I could mention other facts of the same nature.

Can you recollect, whether the mistress of Ballycastle school was a Mrs. Naggs?—No, I do not recollect her name; there was a near connexion of hers on the local committee of the name of Hill.

Does the insufficiency of the local committees appear to rest solely upon their partiality to the masters?—In some cases, in consequence of the scanty residence of the gentry, the persons composing the local committee were not such as you would select for the superintendence of a public seminary; there was a great dearth of proper persons in some instances; the situation of the schools was decided by grants from individuals, which were governed by local not public or general considerations.

Do you believe it is very difficult for the members of the local committee to obtain precise and accurate information of the practices of the master in the management of the school?—I think, wherever there was vigilance on the part of the local committee, and impartiality, the schools were well conducted comparatively; but without great vigilance, I think there is difficulty.

What opinion did you form of the efficiency of the catechists?—Very various indeed; some eminently efficient and useful, and others not so.

When they were not useful and efficient, were the committee of fifteen sure to be informed of it, and did they correct the evil?—The reports and communications of the catechists were the chief means of ascertaining their usefulness and efficiency; no person could have answered the purpose of a catechist who did not reside very near the school; they had no great opportunity of selection; an efficient clergyman at a distance could not have answered their purpose; he would not have taken it; it was an office that could only be exercised by a person resident near the spot.

Did you ever hear of the salary of a catechist being withheld, in consequence of his neglect of duty?—I cannot take upon me to say whether that ever occurred, but they have been reprimanded.

Do you think it would not have had a salutary effect upon the catechist to withhold his salary?—I think it would.

Might it not have had a tendency to spur up others to a more zealous discharge of their duty?—I cannot recollect an instance of the salary being withheld.

Would it have been considered a mark of disrespect towards the establishment to have adopted such a measure?—No, by no means; and I do not mean to say it may not have taken place.

Did the committee of fifteen rely principally upon the local committee for the due enforcing the rules put forth for the management of the charter schools?—Some years before I ceased to be a member of the committee of fifteen, there was a visitor employed to go round, and report upon the schools.

Was that visitor Mr. Thackeray?—No, he had nothing to do with it during my time.

Who was that visitor?—His name was Nelson.

Was he a person qualified?—He was very accurate, and very diligent; but he was discovered after some years to be a man of bad character.

What was discovered respecting him?—There was some connexion discovered between him and a chambermaid at one of the schools at the time he was inspecting.

Was that all? did it not extend to any of the girls?—That maid had been educated in some of the schools.

Was it confined to one?—I do not recollect any other instance.

Of what rank in life was Mr. Nelson?—I do not know what profession he had been, or how he was introduced to the Society.

Did it appear to you, before he was sent, that he was a fit person to be entrusted with such an important duty?—He had disclosed abuses and irregularities in several schools with great acumen, fearlessness and sagacity, and had been the instrument of considerable reformation.

Did he make written reports?—He did; and one very valuable one as to the state of apprenticed children, which I presume is in the possession of the Society.

Was not it his particular business to teach psalmody?—That was the way he was first introduced.

Was it in the course of his instructions in psalmody that he became acquainted with the abuses in charter schools, and made reports upon them?—Perhaps his first knowledge arose in that way.

Were his reports acted upon?—In several instances they were.

Do you know any thing of the inspection of the schools by Mr. Thackeray?—No; nothing, except what I have seen of his printed reports and communications to the Society. I had left the board before Mr. Thackeray took any part respecting them.

Did it appear to you, that the expenditure of the money by the masters was properly examined into and checked by the local committees?—The local committees, in general,

N^o 8.

Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
1 Jan. 1825.

were not vigilant in checking and controuling the expenditure of the masters. The feeding and clothing of the children was managed by contract with the masters, according to a certain dietary, and a certain annual allotment of clothes. This was the case in general, during the time I acted as a member of the committee of fifteen. Towards the close of that period, or about the time of my ceasing to be a member of the committee of fifteen, contracts were made by the Society with other persons to clothe the children. The amount of the contracts being a fixed thing, there was no latitude left to the local committees to enlarge the expenditure under these heads; it was their province to see that the articles were duly furnished, and to report accordingly. These reports, the committee of fifteen had reason to believe, were frequently not made with sufficient strictness or attention to the welfare of the institution. Strangers who visited these schools often made unfavourable observations as to the state of feeding and clothing, when the committee of fifteen had previously received reports from the local committees, from which they had reason to conclude that these contracts had been faithfully performed. Another difficulty was experienced by the committee of fifteen; when repairs were to be executed, the estimates furnished from the schools were frequently loose, and sometimes extravagant, nor was the performance of the works always superintended with sufficient care by the masters or the local committees. I conclude this from the frequency of applications for repairs of the same description. I am fully aware, that in some places it was difficult to obtain correct estimates, or well qualified artificers, and that the grievance might have in part arisen from this cause. The experience of the committee of fifteen on this head, led to the appointment of one superintending architect or supervisor of buildings, as the deficiencies in the manner of performing the contracts for clothing by the masters, had led to contracts by public advertisement with other persons. There were frequent applications from the masters for increase of allowances for feeding and clothing, which were in general supported by the local committees, and, to the best of my recollection, but rarely complied with by the committee of fifteen.

If the accounts from the country schools were transmitted without being properly vouched and examined by the local committee, would it have been known to the committee of fifteen?—There were at first quarterly, and some years after I became a member, half-yearly accounts, and there was never an account passed by the committee of fifteen that had not the signature of the members of the local committee, allowing every item in that sum; where that approbation appeared to be lightly given, the item was not allowed; there was a controul in part exercised by the committee of fifteen over the reports of the local committees.

Did the accounts undergo such examination as to enable the committee of fifteen to detect instances in which the accounts had been falsified?—In general they did; several of the members of the committee of fifteen had the report sent to them at their own houses, and read them privately, and noted them; and whenever any thing occurred that required animadversion, they communicated it to the committee of fifteen, and it was examined and discussed, and if the opinion of that individual was correct, and it was deemed to be well founded, it was acted upon.

It appears in the charter by which the incorporated Society was established, that it was the original object of that Society, to carry into effect such a system of education as should reclaim the poor inhabitants of Ireland from the state of ignorance, and also of disloyalty, in which they were at that time said to exist: I would ask you, whether you think it has produced the effect that was hoped from it?—I am afraid not.

Do you think it is very likely to do so?—I think not.

Was not it a part of the original object of the charter, that the Roman Catholic inhabitants of the country should be converted by the system of education to the Protestant religion?—I believe that idea existed in the minds of the founders.

Do you think it has had a tendency to increase in any great degree the number of Protestant inhabitants of the country, and to diminish in a corresponding degree the number of Roman Catholic inhabitants of the country?—As far as I can form a judgment, it has not.

You think it has not seriously changed the relative proportions in the number of Protestant and Roman Catholic inhabitants?—It would be very difficult to make an exact calculation as to the exact amount of influence; but, speaking generally, I should think it had not been considerable; some persons who would otherwise have become Roman Catholics have become Protestants, no doubt. As far as I can judge, it has not produced any sensible or material effect.

If the system of charter school education has not had the effect of producing any great difference in the proportions between the number of Roman Catholics and Protestants in this country, do you think it has afforded largely useful education to the lower orders of society?—So far as the schools have been well conducted, they have turned out a great number of well educated persons for their class and description of life; I have known instances of schools, where the education was so well conducted, that a considerable portion of the boys and girls educated in them wrote well and read well, understood accounts well, and were conversant in the Scriptures. I am not giving a comparative opinion as to whether other modes of education grafted upon the system adopted would have been an improvement, or not.

Considering the sum total of the money expended upon charter schools, do you think the number of children who have been well instructed in them is as great as it might have been under a different arrangement of the expenditure?—I think, that comparing the fruits produced by the charter schools with the sum of money expended upon them since their foundation, foundation, the effect has been very inconsiderable indeed; in feeding, clothing, and the maintenance of the buildings, a vast proportion of the money is absorbed under the best conducted system; and when you add to that, that a great many schools have been miserably conducted, it almost necessarily follows, that the general result must be very unfavourable to the institution.

Do you think well of a system of education which necessarily produces a separation between the children and their parents?—I think the experience of the charter schools is very unfavourable to such a system.

Have you reason to believe that a large proportion of the children educated in the charter schools turn out well in their after conduct in life?—I have known several instances in which they have turned out very well, and several instances in which they have turned out otherwise; I have often thought upon that subject, and cannot say, if you were to take the same number of individuals from the same class of society, and who had received an ordinary education, that the misconduct would not be as great in the one case as in the other.

Does any prejudice exist in the public against the children who have been educated in the charter schools; are they ill treated by other servants, and so on?—That arises chiefly from the unhappy state of the country as to religious differences; the majority of servants in most families must be of the Roman Catholic religion; and that there is an antipathy to the charter schools, and I may say, to all institutions of that nature, is obvious, I think, to any one who sees the country; I have known children insulted that were servants in a house, as having been educated in a charter school, merely as such.

Do you mean, that children educated in charter schools would be more liable to insult than other Protestant children?—I think so; the same observation will apply to the Foundling Hospital.

Does that apply to other charity schools in which the children are boarded?—Not so much, I think, for the reason that has been already alluded to, that the charter schools having been always considered as an institution, the object of which was proselytism, they have been peculiarly the object of aversion among the Roman Catholics.

Were you once a governor of the Foundling Hospital?—Yes.

When did you cease to be so?—In the month of March 1818.

Has not the management of that institution been materially improved of late years, during the time you were governor?—In the year 1797, it was put under a new set of governors; I did not become a governor till 1802, and from 1797 the system was totally altered; it was matter of public notoriety that it was scandalously managed before, and there were improvements certainly.

Have you at any time turned your attention to the formation of a system of general education in this country for the lower orders of people?—I have ceased to think of the subject for several years.

Has it at any time occupied much of your thoughts?—At times it has.

Do you think that such a system can be applied generally to the lower classes of the inhabitants of this country, by day-schools principally, excluding boarding-schools?—The little experience I have had has been almost entirely against the utility of boarding-schools, compared with the large expense and the difficulty of management; it appears to me, as far as I can form a judgment, that whatever is efficient must be accomplished through the instrumentality of day schools.

Does it appear to you, that where the children necessarily remain in the homes of their parents, that an immediate corrective would at once be afforded, by the superintendence of the friends of the children, to any misconduct or abuse to which they were exposed?—I think it is probable; it appears to me, that the objection stated goes to all boarding-schools of a charitable nature, and it is a most fatal objection to them; in other boarding-schools, for the middling and upper classes, there is a competition; if the children are not well educated and taken care of in one, the parents can remove them to another; but the controul arising from that circumstance is wholly taken away in the public schools; I have despaired of public boarding-schools for the poor ever being well managed under almost any system; but that a central committee, like the committee of fifteen, with the aid of local committees, should ever be an efficient instrument for the management of such schools, appears to me in a high degree improbable. If the local committees were inefficient, I have stated the causes of failure, they were sometimes partial, sometimes inefficient; there was a waste of public money in that way, and it was quite impossible for the committee of fifteen effectively to controul it; if there was a good local committee, intent and zealous in the management of the school, the want of confidence arising from the general character of the local committees, the general impression upon the committee of fifteen, arising from this cause, withheld the confidence to which such a local committee was naturally entitled; and where there was an efficient and active local committee, they were sometimes damped and discouraged, without any intention on the part of the committee of fifteen to impede them; this, I think, almost necessarily arises out of the constitution of the Society, and the actual working of the machine; the committee of fifteen, I think, did all they could in general, by weekly meetings and individuals reading the reports. I do not mean to say, that if they had acted as visitors, and gone round and devoted their time to it, that a great deal more might not have been done, but I speak of the ordinary working of a committee of that nature.

Do you think it is necessarily much easier to keep day schools in good order?—Yes, necessarily

N^o 8.
Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
1 Jan. 1825.

necessarily so; the abuses we have had to contend with were as often in bad feeding, and bad clothing, and furniture, and such like, as any thing else.

Have you paid much attention to the difficulties that have arisen in extending a general system of day school education throughout this country, on account of the religious differences?—My attention has been necessarily directed to it, on account of the difficulties experienced by the Kildare Place Society, and that appears to me to be one of the plans most likely to be efficient.

Do you think it has been successfully opposed, or has it been an opposition in words rather than in fact?—I do not think the opposition has been very successful, as far as my observation goes; but I have not been an active member of that society at any time.

Have you the means of judging, whether or no the opposition has been successful to a considerable extent?—In spite of the opposition their schools are continually multiplying.

Do you think the attendance is increasing in as great a degree as the schools are multiplying?—I have no means of judging.

Do you believe that the opposition given to those schools is upon the ground of the religious part of the education solely?—It appears to be so solely; the ground is the Bible being the fundamental book.

Has any mode ever occurred to you, by which the difficulties that occur upon that head might be remedied?—I have heard of selections from the Bible being talked of, and substituted instead of the Bible at large.

Have you ever known of any experiment of the kind tried in any school in your own neighbourhood?—No, I cannot say I have.

Do you think that the character of the individuals who have been educated in the day schools in the country, is materially and permanently affected by the education they receive there?—So far as I have had an opportunity of observing, the character is improved.

Were you satisfied with the manner in which the masters were appointed to the different schools, by the committee of fifteen?—The masters were always appointed by the general board.

Did you attend upon such occasions?—I did often.

Will you describe in what manner the qualifications of the masters were ascertained upon such occasions?—When I first became a member of the incorporated society, there were no means at all, except reading the written characters and recommendations, and the decision appeared to me to be very much a matter of favour. I speak of my early acquaintance with the Society. About the year 1804, a committee was appointed to examine into the qualifications of the candidates, their capacity for reading and writing, and their scriptural knowledge; and this committee made reports to the board, and from the period of that committee having made reports, the elections appeared to be of the persons most competent among those who offered; in fact, the report of that committee, if not decisive, had a great influence in the election; it was so far decisive, that no one not recommended as competent, was ever submitted to the consideration of the general board.

Did you usually serve on such committee?—I think I did; I think the task of examination was left to the clerical members.

Were candidates always submitted to personal examination by the committee?—Yes; from the formation of that committee they were.

Was much attention paid to the character of those persons?—Yes; from the period of the formation of that committee, all the pains that could be taken to get proper persons were exerted. We were sometimes deceived, certainly.

During the period you acted as a member of the committee of fifteen, is it your opinion, that the masters and mistresses of the charter schools, generally speaking, were fit and proper persons to fill such situations?—They were the best that could be got, I think; we often regretted we could not get better; but doubtless, it was as fair a competition as, I think, I ever witnessed. I remember instances of sad disappointments. Before and after the formation of the examining committees, there was always a public advertisement, announcing the vacancy, and inviting candidates.

Were their religious sentiments points that were particularly adverted to in their selection?—There was a great division in the Society upon that point.

Describe the nature of that division?—When the examinations began at first, the persons applying, were frequently members of the Methodist society, and certainly had a great advantage in the examination in Scriptural knowledge.

Do you mean that they answered better, or were more likely to obtain favour?—No, I mean they answered better; I think there would have been a preference to those more strictly members of the established church; all the Irish Wesleyan Methodists then professed themselves to belong actually to the established church, and to be members of it; there was a considerable difference of opinion whether they ought to be elected at all; the effect of excluding them would certainly have been to exclude the persons best qualified; especially at the early part of the operations of that committee, there was a large majority of the board of opinion, in which at least one archbishop fully concurred, that the Wesleyan Methodists, who subscribed the articles, and engaged constantly to go to church with the children, and never to allow any preaching in their houses, or to introduce any book into the school that had not the sanction of the committee of fifteen; that persons of that description ought not to be rejected, because they were members of the Methodist society; but there was always a difference of opinion upon that point.

Did

Did that continue to be the ruling opinion?—I think a contrary opinion began to prevail about the time I left; I think the prevailing opinion was against it when I left it; but I must observe, that, after those examinations had continued some years, the Methodist candidates did not retain the superiority they had obtained at first, for as soon as it became known that an acquaintance with the Scriptures, and a capacity to superintend the religious education of the children were requisite, all those who offered themselves as candidates, whether strictly members of the establishment or not, made themselves acquainted with the Scriptures, and there were some strict members of the church who had no connexion with any sect whatever, who, at the later examinations, during the period of my attendance as a member, were the best answerers, and were so reported.

When was this committee appointed?—I think about 1804.

Prior to that time, was not it generally felt and understood by persons desirous of becoming candidates for such institutions, that a knowledge of the truths of religion, particularly the contents of the Scriptures, was not a necessary qualification?—That is an inference from what I have stated; the fact I have stated was, that there was no examination whatever, except as to written character; there might be a preference to a man who had kept a school; but the persons elected for the first two or three years that I knew the Incorporated Society, had sometimes no experience at all, nor been employed in schools.

Did you ever hear of any charges brought against a clerk in the office of the Incorporated Society of the name of Stuart?—Yes, I think I heard of a charge being made against him, which was of this nature; that, in making up the accounts for the commissioners of imprest accounts, there were some receipts missing; they could not make up the accounts, or pass them, without these receipts; it appeared that the money had been paid duly to the parties, but, either from want of stamps upon the spot, or something else, the vouchers had not been procured; Mr. Stuart, and some one else in the office, substituted fictitious vouchers, in order to pass the accounts; there was no one defrauded, as the money had been paid; no money came into the pocket of Mr. Stuart; it was the want of a correct moral sense that led to it; and I remember a motion was made and seconded for his dismissal, but it was not carried; whether it was withdrawn in consequence of a generally expressed wish of the board, or not, I do not recollect; I think the motion was withdrawn.

Did it ever come to the knowledge of the committee of fifteen, when you were a member of it, that the schoolmasters and ushers were in the habit of making presents, rather in the nature of bribes than presents, to the subordinate officers of the Society, the clerks, and other officers?—It never came in proof before the committee of fifteen; I recollect an instance in which a clerk had written letters to some of the masters, asking them for a douceur for expediting their accounts, and he was instantly dismissed.

YOU said, on your examination on a former day, that when the contracts for clothing were taken away from the schoolmasters, they were given to other individuals?—Yes; I think there were advertisements in the papers to persons in general.

12 Jan. 1825.

Have you ever known any officer of the Society to obtain such contracts, either in their own names, or under the name of any other persons?—Nothing of the kind ever came to my knowledge, nor had I any suspicion of it; but it was just before I retired such a system of clothing began.

Should you consider such a practice correct?—Certainly not.

What would you think of the discovery, if that should turn out to be the fact, that one of the principal officers of the Society was really the contractor for the supply of all the shirts, shoes and stockings, for all the charter schools in Ireland?—I had never the least suspicion of any such thing, and it must excite my surprise now that such a thing has come to my ears.

Have you any hesitation in coming to the same conclusion that we do, that it was a most reprehensible proceeding?—Surely not; I do not think there was any period of time, that I acted as a member of the committee of fifteen, that such conduct would not have been marked by the committee with reproof and indignation.

We do not mean to suggest, that the committee of fifteen were aware of the fact; but if they had been aware of it, we ask, whether they would have endured it?—Certainly not; I never had the smallest suspicion of any thing of the kind.

Did you ever examine the leases made to the Society of the scites of the schools?—There is an abstract at the end of the sermons that were occasionally printed of those leases and grants, and when the suppression of any school was under consideration, it perhaps became necessary to look actually into the deeds, and on those occasions I have looked at them.

Can you inform us, whether the suppression of any particular school would, in all cases, induce the forfeiture of the land upon which it stands?—I believe there is scarcely an instance in which the forfeiture would not follow.

Is it your impression, there are any instances in which, if the schools should be discontinued, the forfeiture of the land would not accrue?—To the best of my recollection not.

[A book, entitled, "Observations on the present State of the Charter Schools in Ireland," printed in 1806, was shown to the witness, and he was asked whether he was not the author of that book, and he stated he was.]

Have you any objection to our considering the statements and opinions contained in that book as being those which you entertained at the time of its being published?—Not the least; but I beg to add, I am not so sanguine now as to the efficacy of the institution, and the prospect of amendment.

N^o 8.

Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
12 Jan. 1825.

Were you a member of the committee when the charter school in Kevin-street was instituted?—No; that was after my time. There is one point upon which I was examined, that the commissioners might wish for fuller information upon; namely, the constitution of the Society and the general boards: from what I was asked the other day, it appeared that one of the commissioners did not feel that the constitution of the Society was, according to my apprehension a vicious one, and if the commissioners should entertain any design of recommending a continuance of the Incorporated Society, it might deserve consideration, whether it would not be expedient to recommend a modification of its constitution.

What modification would you propose?—That the smaller body, the committee of fifteen or twelve, whatever it was, should be the controuling body, without any internal controul over them; but under the controul of a commissioner of education, or such controul as you may recommend. The general board was composed of persons who did not give their minds to the subject; they frequently upheld improper masters; it was exceedingly difficult to dismiss a master without strict legal proof of delinquency; and upon other points, it was extremely difficult to impress the members of the general boards, who did not pay systematic and continued attention to the subject, with the necessity and expediency of those changes and alterations, which it appeared from time to time proper to adopt; it appeared to me strongly, that the institution would be worked much better with a small responsible committee alone.

Do you consider the committee of fifteen a responsible committee?—Would it not be possible to make them so, by making them subject to a board such as this or another board of education, similar to the one now constituted, but so framed as to be more efficient. I do not mean the commissioners of inquiry, but the commissioners of education, under the 53 Geo. III.

Do you think that any committee of that nature, giving their time and trouble without receiving any remuneration, feel any very high sense of responsibility attaching to their situations?—Perhaps too little; there was an example in which things worked better; I mean the Foundling Hospital.

Are we to understand from you, that in your opinion, the general boards of the incorporated Society were extremely averse to dismissing their masters?—Yes; in general.

Did that aversion extend to the dismissal of the ushers?—They were dismissed by the committee of fifteen.

Do you think the committee of fifteen were much more inclined to dismiss the master than the general board?—Yes, no doubt; they saw the constant working of the machine, and where things went wrong; and you may easily conceive, that a board that looks continually from week to week, into the conduct of the school, will see things going wrong, where it would be difficult to enter into proof at the general board.

Had you occasion to observe whether there were particular masters patronized and befriended by particular members of the committee of fifteen?—Yes; I have known instances of that kind, and by members of the general board, that often impeded the dismissal of masters.

Had you any opportunities of observing, whether the officers of the Society were influential in the decisions with respect to particular masters?—Oh, no.

Had you any opportunities of observing that they endeavoured to render themselves so in the way of recommendation or suggestion?—An officer might make a favourable representation of the accounts of a master.

Were you aware of a system of gratuity, to give it the mildest term, proceeding from the masters, pretty generally towards the higher officers of the Society?—I never suspected any thing of that kind. I mentioned on the former day, that on one occasion, a clerk of the name of Harvey, had been detected in sending circulars to the masters, asking money for expediting the accounts; the fact was brought home to him and another, and he was immediately dismissed; Mr. Adamson was perfectly clear of that charge; it was very soon after I became a member.

If it should turn out to be a fact, that such a system of gratuity as that existed, however unknown to the committee, can you suppose the masters gave those sums of money without pretty well understanding they were to receive consideration in some way or other for such sacrifices?—I suppose so, but how, is more than I can conjecture.

Had the officers of the Society opportunity in creating either facility or difficulty to the masters in passing the accounts?—I hardly see how they could; the accounts were always read aloud to the committee of fifteen, and in general were carefully perused and examined by some member, previously.

Had they not an opportunity of intercepting letters of complaint against the masters?—Yes; all letters that were received they had the power of intercepting; but I do not recollect any instance of that occurring, and coming to the knowledge of the committee of fifteen, during the period I belonged to the board.

Were applications for advances of money to the masters made directly to the board, or through an officer?—They were addressed to the secretary, as they might be to your secretary; but they were always considered as addressed to be laid before the board; nothing could be done without the order of the board.

Was the report of the secretary generally taken as to the expediency of advancing money to masters towards subsistence money?—There was a regular routine upon that subject. A certain proportion of the quarter's allowance was advanced at a certain time, and the remainder I believe at the close of the quarter.

Was it usual to take security for the masters?—I believe it was.

Did

Did you ever know any sureties sued?—No, I do not recollect any instance.

Do you not think upon the occasion of the election of a master, that the secretary and registrar of the Society had opportunities of being useful or otherwise to the respective candidates, either by indirect recommendation or studiously putting forward memorials and recommendations of certain individuals, or in some way to create a well founded impression on the part of the candidates, that they could be useful?—I do not recollect any influence of the officers of the Society having acted upon my mind.

Have you known of instances in which near relatives of the officers of the Society have succeeded against other candidates?—Yes; but that was at a very early period, and before the formation of the committee of examination referred to in that work; I mean "Observations on the Charter Schools," printed in 1806.

N° 8.

Examination of William Disney,
Esq.
12 Jan. 1825.

Appendix, N° 9.

Extracts from the General Report of the Rev. Elias Thackeray, on his visiting the CHARTER SCHOOLS in 1817, presented to the Society in February 1818.

Clothing.

"THE Plan now pursued, by which the boys of the various schools are supplied with clothing that has been previously examined before the board in Dublin, has appeared to us replete with advantages; our recollection of the state of the clothing in some schools, which accident had formerly led us to visit, authorises this assertion. Bad materials in the main articles cannot now be imposed on the Society; and the uniformity of dress which is hereby established, is in itself of great value, because a facility is thus afforded to visitors of comparing the arrangement of one school with that of another, and of finding, in this particular, no inconsiderable test of the qualifications and dispositions of the several masters and mistresses to consult the comforts of the children. At the same time it must be observed, that while, by the means now mentioned, it becomes easier to examine, in some respects, necessity might hence arise for a greater frequency of examination, because a master, having on the present plan no profit on the clothing, such as are deficient in principle will be apt to feel indifferent about it, and, of course, take no pains to see that it fits well and comfortably. On the other hand, supposing only honest care on the part of the masters, the children are sure to have all the comforts derivable from good clothing, and to learn neatness and cleanliness in the management of it. The Society will perceive by the reports, that in some schools these points are already by no means neglected, and that though in others more attention is requisite, there are very few instances of striking disregard. The clothing of the female schools is supplied by the mistresses; but Mrs. Thackeray was of opinion that, in some instances, the materials were inferior, and some useful articles of apparel wanting. It was also too often evident, that the clothing had been made up with very little regard to neatness or good fitting. The remedy against bad materials would obviously be, to send approved clothing, as in the case of the male schools from Dublin, only with this difference, that as it would be unwise to deprive female children of the knowledge which making up their own clothing supplies, an approved pattern of the whole suit might be transmitted to each school, directing the mistress to conform strictly to it in all her future proceedings. I also see no reason why the shoes of the girls should not be submitted to the examination of the Society, as well as those of the boys. The rule which directs that the children shall have clean linen twice in each week, has in many schools been disregarded, although it appears to me, that there is hardly any rule which ought to be more attended to; perhaps the best remedy for this evil will be to make superintendents certify to this effect in their quarterly or half-yearly accounts.

"As no express notice at present is taken in the regulation of schools, respecting periods for giving children clean stockings, much neglect has occurred in this instance. In one boys school, the children had never clean stockings, unless they washed them themselves. The stockings, in very few, were changed oftener than once a fortnight, and in many not so often. We found it the custom in most schools not to give out more than two shirts, or two pair of stockings, to each child, keeping in store the third pair until the others were worn out; this course we considered very objectionable. In wet seasons, and in winter, this practice may often be the occasion of children not getting clean linen and stockings, or of getting them damp. There does not appear any reason why the clothing allowed should not at once be all brought alternately into wear; and it is evident that this would be the surest way of securing for the children the full complement of clothing granted to them by the Society."

Personal Appearance of the Children.

"To judge fairly on this head of inquiry, it is necessary to remember, that these institutions are open to poor children of every description; that as there is no admission under six years old, bad nursing, bad feeding, and consequent disease may have made deep inroads before that age upon the constitution; besides, that maladies rooted in the frame, may not appear until after that period. Keeping these facts in view, it must be a matter of some surprise, as well as of great gratification, to notice the healthy state in general of the present inmates of these institutions. In a few schools, ophthalmia and tinea capitis have so prevailed as to bring discredit on the master and mistress. In still more instances, cutaneous eruptions have been blameably neglected; at the same time it is gratifying to notice, that in this season of disease and contagion, every school, except one, has remained exempt from

[G]

N° 9.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

N^o 9.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

the epidemic malady; a fact which, I think, ought to be admitted as a proof of general good conduct in managing these establishments.

"It is indeed but justice to state, that in the far greater number of schools it was impossible not to discover obvious marks of moral improvement, of kind treatment on the part of the superintendents, and of due attention both to the bodily and mental exercise of the children.

"In all the schools there are very fine specimens of children, whom competent instruction cannot fail to qualify for filling their station in life, so as to repay to the public the obligation conferred on them by its early and effectual support.

"The improvement in the manners of the children has generally been in proportion to the attention of visitors and catechists. There are instances, however, where the credit of such improvement must solely be ascribed to the master, mistress and usher. Kindness effects much in this way, and we have rarely seen children, of whose manners we approved, where we did not likewise find evidence of kind conduct in their immediate superintendents."

Education.

"In this respect the schools of the Society differ greatly from each other. In several of the schools the masters have persuaded themselves that they are not concerned in the education of the children, but merely in their domestic and general superintendence.

"Where masters have formed this erroneous opinion, the ushers are, in some instances, but ill qualified to discharge the duties of instruction.

"The difficulty of obtaining teachers is universally acknowledged throughout Ireland; the Society, therefore, have too frequently been compelled to be satisfied with the best they could obtain. I have already expressed my persuasion, that they may have in their own institution the very best remedy for this defect, and that by a proper course they may not only derive from their establishment the means of its own great improvement, but also make it become an extensive national good.

"The demand in Ireland for parish clerks, schoolmasters and mistresses, in her present anxiety for information, appears to me to be such as would employ one-half of the children annually sent out of the Society's schools; and I am inclined to believe, that if institutions such as I have suggested to the board were once formed, applications would soon be made from every quarter. The progress in common education, including under this term reading, writing, spelling and accounts, is in many schools highly respectable; in several schools only moderately good; and in some few, very defective. The circumstances just referred to sufficiently account for this difference."

Religious Instruction.

"This, in about one-third of the schools, is almost entirely confined to the Church Catechism, with Mann's, Crossman's, or Stopford's Explanation. In the repetition of the Church Catechism, and one or two of the above-named explanations, the children in general, according to their age and opportunities, seemed reasonably well instructed. There was cause to complain of culpable deficiency in these points at one or two schools only.

"Valuable, however, as the knowledge acquired through the medium of catechisms certainly is, it appears to me, that the schools would but ill answer their object, if the repetition, even of the best catechisms, were to constitute the entire religious information of the pupils. I therefore feel the sincerest pleasure in stating, that, in about two-thirds of the schools, religious instruction is communicated to an extent that would scarcely be believed by any who are not acquainted with certain laudable efforts pursued in this city, both in schools under the Society, and elsewhere, the happy consequences of which are spreading probably beyond any ideas of the worthy person* with whom those efforts originated."†

Rules and Regulations.

"The existing rules, if duly adverted to and enforced, would ensure every object which could reasonably be expected. There is, however, ground to fear, that, though gross deviation is scarcely in any instance chargeable, the observance of rules at present is much more from habit than from knowledge.

"As a stated reading of the rules does not seem to be conceived any necessary part of the superintendent's duty, a want of strict adherence to them is consequently observable in several instances. Without, therefore, imputing wrong motives to any, I would earnestly recommend, that a knowledge of the rules, by masters and pupils, should be made indispensable; and, that for this purpose, the Society would enjoin such of the rules as relate to general practice, to be regularly read in the schools at stated times, suppose on the first Monday of each month, in the presence of the whole establishment; and that it should be indispensable to certify expressly the regular performance of this injunction, in the periodical reports. By this means, ignorance of duty, on the part of the superintendents, would become impossible, and the children would be informed of the care and pains taken by the Society for promoting their improvement, and ensuring their happiness."

Local

* "Rev. Mr. Murray, chaplain to the Foundling Hospital, Dublin, and catechist of the charter school in Baggot-street."

† "Should the Society set apart institutions to prepare superintendents for their schools, I trust they will avail themselves of the aid of so invaluable an instructor, and place for that purpose their seminaries within reach of his assistance."

Local Committee.

"No system could have been better conceived than that which placed the moral state of these establishments under the guardianship of gentlemen and ladies whose near residence made such a duty practicable, and whose feelings would necessarily interest them in the prosperity of the respective institutions.

"The benefit resulting to every establishment which has been carefully attended to, and duly visited, is evidence of this fact; and it is most desirable, that in all of them similar good should arise from the same cause.

"In our visits to schools where such attention had been defective, on communicating with the persons who formed the local committee, the best dispositions were expressed towards the institution, with ample acknowledgements of its utility. Reasons assigned for non-attendance were frankly owned, at the same time, to have but little weight. One, amongst others (which surprised me a good deal), was, that they considered themselves chiefly useful in settling the accounts, and examining into the state of the buildings at the half yearly meetings.

"It was easy to answer that these duties ought to be done, but that others should not be left undone. I have, however, pleasure in stating, that the result of our communication in every instance, was such as to inspire confident hope of increased aid and exertion generally from the local committees."

Catechists.

"It is but justice to state, that in this important department very few instances occurred of blameable negligence; the performance of the duty in almost all cases was competent, and in some cases exemplary. The first inquiry naturally was, whether religious instruction was duly and carefully communicated, and, as far as mere catechetical teaching was concerned, we seldom found room for complaint; but, in certain instances, we had gratifying proofs of what a catechist may effect, by directing his attention not only to his own particular work, but to all the circumstances which his frequent visits bring necessarily and peculiarly under his view. On this account, there is certainly no individual connected with the charter schools, who has it in his power to be of the same effectual service with the catechist."

Masters and Mistresses.

"This branch of our examination, however gratifying in some instances, left a conviction in our minds, that all other regulations will be fruitless, so long as schools are committed to incompetent superintendents.

"This evil cannot be avoided by mere strictness of previous examination. There may be competent knowledge, without the skill or habits necessary for communicating that knowledge; and there may be the appearance of knowledge, acquired for the occasion, where such subjects had before engaged little, if any, attention. There is, in a word, no security for adequate superintendence but a previous training to that special duty.

"I mean not to say, that there are no competent masters except such as have been educated in that line; it is but candid to allow, that our late inspection has afforded instances to the contrary; but I say, such instances are happy exceptions to a general rule, from which rule, after all, it is most hazardous to depart.

"To such departure it is owing, that certain masters, who perhaps in their examination answered at least plausibly, perhaps to appearance respectably, when fixed in their trust, professedly devolve the whole province of teaching to ushers, and consider themselves charged only with the economical, but by no means with the intellectual or moral care of the institution. It needs no reasoning to prove, that, where this is the case, effective administration is not to be hoped for. I therefore do not hesitate to assert, that in every school the master should be fitted by habits, as well as knowledge, to the work of teaching; and in female schools both master and mistress should be competent to this duty. I must not again trouble the board with intimating the only effectual means of meeting this exigence; but I cannot help expressing the opinion, that the school-masters now employed should be required to take regular part in the tuition of the pupils. If they merely dislike the employment, that dislike should be overcome; if they are conscious of incompetency, honest endeavours, persevered in with diligence, will soon give them a degree of fitness, which, however short of perfection, may be very conducive to utility."

Ushers.

"The Society have many useful and respectable persons filling this office; of these, so many were educated under the Society, as to justify the ascribing of their superior qualifications peculiarly to that circumstance.

"It must, however, be observed, that amongst those not educated on this foundation, there are some very respectable persons, qualified from their knowledge, and entitled by their conduct, to be advanced to masterships.

"At present, in too many schools, the labour and trust of superintending the children fall in a greater proportion on the ushers and usheresses than appears to me proper; in some schools it is altogether devolved to them.

"It was, on the whole, our opinion, that almost every one of the inferior teachers, not excepting even those who at present are of least use to the Society, might have been made efficient in their station, if their superiors had themselves been duly qualified and attentive.

"Commencing for the most part in extreme youth, when there was no superior to regulate and direct them, they were liable to fall into a relaxed habit, and instead of being earnest

N° 9.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

to execute their duty, they were too often satisfied with such performance as was merely sufficient to save appearances. The board will, probably, feel, in what is now stated, an additional motive for enforcing on masters a due participation of the duties of tuition; and that for this purpose, it should be made imperative on masters to be present in the school during a certain portion of each day."

Farm.

"The daily attention of some masters has been so professedly confined to this object, that they have not hesitated to defend the propriety of their absence from the school-room, and their inattention to many points which appeared to us to be strictly within their province, from the necessity of looking after the farm, from which (they said) the children were to receive their support.

"I am of opinion that it will be necessary for the Society to make it be universally felt, that the attendance of a master on his farm shall not excuse him from that ultimate duty, for the sake of which farms and schools and masters are supplied; and that if the moral progress of the children shall appear neglected, nay, if it be not advanced in proportion to what is found in other similar establishments, the master, in spite of all excuses, should be responsible for the deficiency. Another point deserving reconsideration is, whether consent should, in any instance, be given to masters holding extensive farms, together with the lands they have under the Society. Some scale might be fixed for placing all the schools in this respect upon an equal footing. Allowances must, of course, be made for local inconveniences, from distance of markets, &c.; but I am confident that there can be no just reason for masters, in any case, occupying more ground than will suffice to supply his establishment with necessary articles of consumption."

Play Ground.

"This most necessary appendage of a school, I am happy to state, is very rarely wanting, and in most instances it is well circumstanced.

"We ascribe great importance to this accommodation, and to the children having the full indulgence of the hours specified in the rules. We had no reason to think these in any instances abridged; but we thought we could perceive an evident difference in the spirit and manner of children who had no play-ground (unless a dirty farm-yard could be so denominated), from such as had sufficient space for comfortable exercise,

In the particular reports the schools are mentioned where this deficiency exists, and the means pointed out by which the want may be remedied."

Apprentices.

"The reports of the several schools under this head, will, I think, give satisfaction to the Society; and I would fain hope, that every future year will supply additional cause for gratification.

"From the progressive state of moral and religious improvement, and also from the late providential removal of that seducing opportunity which a state of war afforded for restless or enterprising boys, to elope from labour, and seek that advancement in the army for which their education well qualified them, I cannot but derive confidence, that the charter schools will yearly add to the great body of the people such an increasing number of well instructed and well principled youths, as to prove a salutary leaven to the working classes of society; but that this hope may be realized, it will be indispensable that the exactest care should be taken in placing out apprentices. The kind treatment which the children have almost invariably met at school, and the comforts which they have enjoyed there, in food, raiment, and other accommodations, teach them to feel acutely the difference which harshness, neglect, and privation occasion. Youths, whose conduct had been uniformly good, have been driven by these causes to seek an asylum in the army, or again in the school; at all events, to fly from a situation which they were unable to endure. Care in giving apprentices to none but those who appear kind hearted, and are in comfortable circumstances, will remove the principal motive for elopement, and thus save from that misconduct which is so likely to follow.

"Of the children who have been educated of late years in these establishments, I have reason to think, on inquiry, that a proportion, infinitely less has been generally supposed, have gone over to the Roman Catholic church, and from the progress of scriptural instruction, still fewer departures may naturally be expected."

Employment of Children.

"The boys are employed generally in the farm, and in some instances (but not as universally as desirable) in the garden. They also knit stockings, and in some schools (as it would be most desirable they should do in all) repair their own clothes and shoes. The girls are employed in spinning, knitting, needle work, lace work, and straw bonnet making. To these occupations might, I think, be added, both in male and female schools, the use of the loom, with little or no expense to the Society, and with great advantage to the children, as well as to the country around the institutions.

"Several masters have expressed readiness, some even anxiety, to establish weaving in their schools, upon the sole condition of having looms lent them for that purpose. I would call the attention of the board to this point; and I am confident, if an offer were made of the use of a certain number of looms (half a dozen for instance) to every such master as would engage to employ them, numerous applications for them would come both from male and female institutions.

"My

"My opinion on this subject is strengthened, by an actual proposal of the master of the Maynooth school, who was trained in Manchester, and, according to his own statement, is well acquainted with weaving. His wish is, that as many looms, with fly shuttles, may be lent him, as the Board may judge proper; and that such girls as chuse to be taught to weave may be left with him from the age of ten to fourteen, during which time they should only employ at the loom the hours already allowed for labour. On these conditions, he engages, at the termination of the four years, to make them good weavers, able to support themselves by their own industry. Supposing this person to be correct in his calculations, of which the Board will judge, a number of young persons would thus be trained, at little or no expense, to honest independence, and it may be hoped not without benefit to the country at large."

Feeding.

"Upon the question being put to the children, whether justice was done them in this respect, the answer, that they had justice done them (with the exception of two schools only), was given almost with acclamation.

"In one of those two, upon investigation, there appeared reason to suppose, that during the last period of scarcity the children had been abridged of their accustomed allowance. This, however, had been remedied on the return of a more plentiful season, and the children notwithstanding were all in excellent health.

"In the other school, where also health seemed unimpaired, the chief matter of complaint was the limited allowance of milk, which the mistress endeavoured to account for, but not altogether satisfactorily.

"In both cases, the fear of being displaced, should even no better motive operate, will probably insure more fidelity, or greater care in future; should it be otherwise, the persons are marked, and the remedy may at any time be applied.

"It must, however, be mentioned, that at several schools, the rule which assigns to the children new milk at given periods is not sufficiently regarded, and though the milk which is substituted may be sufficiently wholesome, the rule, as long as it remains in the books of the school, ought to be literally observed.

"At present the custom is (or at least ought to be) to weigh or measure out every article of food to be prepared for each meal. At Stradbally, I observed a circumstance which I considered as a useful addition; the whole of the victuals was brought into the hall, and as long as any one was disposed to partake of it, the mistress continued to serve it out; a course which, as ensuring abundance to every appetite, and preventing all possibility of injustice, I strongly recommend to be enforced every where."

Treatment of Children.

"Our general conviction is, that considering the number of the establishments, and of the children which they contain, the treatment on the whole is kind and tender, and that the children enjoy as much happiness as they are capable of at their age, and in their situation."

Conclusion.

"I cannot conclude without expressing my deep conviction, that accurate and conscientious reports, regularly made and transmitted by authorized visitors of the several schools, are indispensable to the welfare of the institution, and to the Society's power of effecting the good which they have so sincerely at heart.

"It is therefore most necessary, that the importance of this duty should be particularly felt by gentlemen who act as catechists, and by those who become members of local committees. Where these near, and only effectual inspectors frequently and impartially state the precise circumstances which a school exhibits on an unlooked for examination, it is hardly possible that there should be any lasting mismanagement, or uncorrected irregularity. On the other hand, what can be conceived more injurious to the institution, or more certain to make the wisest rules, and the most benevolent measures, abortive, than concealment or false colouring of any circumstance in a school, which deserves reprehension, or stands in need of correction.

"It ought to be deeply felt, that where truth is either departed from or suppressed, through personal favour, or excessive tenderness, not only is injustice done to the public, not only is the duty of christian charity violated and trampled on, but a deeper and more certain calamity is prepared for the very objects of this injudicious kindness, whose faults (not likely to be always kept from view) would either never have been committed, or would have been speedily relinquished, had the certainty been felt of a just and accurate representation.

"It is painful to reflect, that instances have actually occurred of such mis-statements as are now adverted to; and that in a case where the master of a school has fallen under the heaviest displeasure of the board, testimonies in the strongest terms of uniform good conduct had been regularly transmitted.

"Had the same pen been employed in pointing out errors as they arose, I should have been saved from a painful duty, and a family, now necessitated to seek new means of support, might have continued to enjoy respectability and comfort.

"I make these final remarks, in the earnest hope that the board will feel their weight, and will unremittingly press on local committees and catechists, that the credit and efficacy of the institution, the present and eternal welfare of the children, and the security and comfort of masters and mistresses themselves, are all vitally involved in the result of every visit being regularly reported with circumstantial exactness, and conscientious truth."

Dublin, February 17th, 1818.

Appendix.

N° 9.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

"It could only be in the prospect of finding competent superintendents, that an institution like that of the charter schools could have been undertaken; and it is not too much to say, that an effectual provision for affording such persons is alone wanting, to more than justify every reasonable calculation.

"It is obvious, that where masters and mistresses are fitted for their trust, by knowledge, experience, and sense of duty, children would derive advantages from not only learning, but living under their care, which attendance on a day-school could not possibly confer. What therefore the charter schools, in skilful and conscientious hands, might accomplish, need not be enlarged upon. Suffice it to state, that two thousand five hundred young persons, of both sexes, would thus be continually acquiring habits, and imbibing principles, tending to make them, above all others of the same class, blessings to the community, patterns to every denomination of their countrymen; above all, ornaments and honours of the church in which they were educated, to the morals, and even the numerical strength of which they might be expected quietly, yet most effectually, to contribute, by the respectability of their conduct, and the impressiveness of their example."

Appendix, N° 10.

Extracts from the particular Reports of the CHARTER SCHOOLS, visited by the Rev. Elias Thackeray in 1817, and referred to in the preceding General Report.

ARDBRACCAN SCHOOL; visited 15th December 1817.

Rules and Regulations.

N° 10.
Ardbraconn School.

"IT did not appear there were any deviations from these, that became observable from any glaring neglects, except that the house was by no means so clean as it ought to be. The mistress in her defence stated, that the fever which had attacked the usher, and afterwards the illness of one of the boys, had made it necessary to confine the whole of the family to a small portion of the house, in order to separate the invalids from the healthy, and this had created confusion and dirt; I was not convinced by her reasoning; but as her qualifications are of a very limited description indeed, I could easily conceive that such an interruption to her usual course, and the alarm that would arise therefrom, would very much puzzle her, and put her out of order, and that the state of the house would suffer proportionably. That part of the house which we found in the cleanest state, however, was the dormitories."

Master and Mistress.

"The qualifications of the latter are evidently very moderate, and I would recommend that the catechist be desired to keep her well up to her duty: those of the master are better."

Apprentices.

"Of the last fifty apprenticed out, it appears that twenty are doing well, and that half that number eloped from their places; of the conduct of the rest nothing is known by the master, they being apprenticed too far from Ardbraconn."

Appendix, N° 11.

CASHEL SCHOOL; visited 2d October 1817.

N° 11.
Cashel School.

"WE found the children who were not in the harvest field playing in the court yard; they had breakfasted earlier than the rules prescribe, in order, as the mistress stated, and which I dare say was the fact, that the boys who were employed in the field might not go there fasting."

General Appearance of the Children.

"We did not think the general appearance of the boys favourable. There was much want of neatness in their dress; the linen is changed only once a week, the stockings seldomer, and sufficient care is not taken to keep the clothes in order, particularly the shoes, very many of which were without thongs to keep them together, and on this account broken down behind. The heads of the children were by no means sufficiently attended to, and their hair not properly cut; there was a want of spirit and manner about them which disappointed us; they were, however, free from itch, and in general good health."

Morals of the Boys.

"There is no reason to think them vicious boys; but their manners are not pleasing. From the statement of the master, which was considered correct by the gentlemen I had the pleasure to communicate with there, the boys in this school are more than usually dogged and untoward. They even suspect them of withholding from an examiner the knowledge and acquirements they have obtained. It is certain we could not succeed in obtaining any thing in a cheerful satisfactory manner from them, though we laboured for hours to do so."

Religious

163

Religious Knowledge.

"They were generally able to repeat Mann's and the church catechism, but of scriptural knowledge they appeared very ignorant, and it was suspected that they could have answered more satisfactorily if they had been disposed. Of the justice of this suspicion I was not able to form any opinion."

N° 11.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Rules and Regulations.

"We found these unattended to with respect to the change of linen twice in each week, the cutting of the boy's hair, and (with the exception of the bed-rooms) cleanliness in general. In other points, we had no reason to think them particularly disregarded."

Catechist.

"The catechist was absent from Cashel, so that I had no opportunity of communicating with him. Notwithstanding the statement I have made, I understand, from an authority I respect, this gentleman's exertions have not been spared to promote the welfare of this establishment, and that his disappointment in his want of success is very great."

Master and Mistress.

"It is painful to observe the want of success of persons (whose general conduct is deserving of approbation) in the department they are engaged to fulfil; and yet, unless the master and mistress adopt a more vigorous course for the general improvement of the children under their care, their usefulness will continue limited to the mere boarding and lodging of the boys, or to little more than this. The manners of the master seem kind and gentle; and I cannot but think, if he were to devote more of his time to the boys, and study their characters well, he would not find them what he now seems to think them, "not to be amended." It will require a due mixture of kindness and discipline on his part, and a becoming vigilance, to effect their improvement; but I am confident it can be effected, and I think the master capable of discharging his part in this undertaking, and that the Society would do well to tell him what they expect from him, and that his situation depends upon his success. It is necessary to inform the mistress, not only that she has her duty to fulfil in this amendment so necessary, but that she must be satisfied to receive the observations of those who visit, and who to do justice must point out neglect and faults where they appear, with a becoming temper and spirit. She will understand to what circumstance she is to attribute any observations that may arise on this subject, and I have little doubt they will eventually prove useful both to herself and the school of which she is the mistress. Towards the improvement of the habits and manners of young boys, the influence of a female superintendent, earnest in the undertaking, must be very great."

Usher.

"I have no hesitation in stating, that an usher possessing an influence and command, and acting on a system to which this young man appears a stranger, is required to improve the condition of this establishment. He is a person of good character, and might, under a master who is a good disciplinarian and attentive to his duties, become a useful usher; but circumstanced as this school is, I should despair of his doing much good in the way of improving it. The progress of the children in writing and accounts, however, entitles him and his scholars too to much credit."

Feeding of Children.

"We entertain no doubt but that justice is done to the children in this important respect."

Appenpix, N° 12.

CASTLEDERMOT SCHOOL; visited October 26th 1817.

Clothing.

"THEIR clothing in general was very good for the period of the year. The boys state, that they get clean linen twice in the week during the summer months, and once during the winter. The stockings are never washed by the mistress's order; but the boys seem more attentive to decency than the mistress, and sometimes wash their stockings themselves. This course is very unjustifiable on the part of the mistress, and dangerous with respect to the boys; for is it likely they will be sufficiently careful not to wear their stockings damp, or if they do their best, can they prevent their being so? We observed, that the stockings now preparing for the boys are by no means as good as they should be, and that they should be strictly examined before they are received by the Society as clothing for the children. I would recommend the board to apply to the local committee to attend the inspection of them, and I am confident they will do so cheerfully."

N° 12.
Castledermot
School.

General Appearance of the Children.

"Of the 59 boys at present in the school, four have scald heads, three are affected with ophthalmia, and a few with itch. The scald heads were occasioned by this disorder breaking out again in a boy who had suffered under it about six months before he left Clontarf. More had been disordered, so that I hope the disease may be considered on the decline

N^o 12.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

decline. These circumstances, particularly the white leather caps on the heads, must, upon an inspection, be unfavourable to a general appearance; and yet, when we came to investigate the whole school minutely, and converse with the boys, we considered them intelligent and promising."

Classes for Education.

"We were not satisfied with the progress of the children in this respect; it might, and I think it ought to be greater, both in reading and spelling. There was a want of spirit in their proceedings, which is of itself evidence that the system may be improved. They excel in writing, but are defective in accounts."

Morals of the Boys.

"The master complains that he has frequent occasion to punish for telling stories; it will appear in the course of this Report, that they can exhibit a firmness of character, that duly improved will raise them above such meanness. There does not appear any other charge to which they are liable, on the representation of the master."

Religious Knowledge.

"Their knowledge of religion was almost confined to what they had acquired from the catechisms. I could not observe that they had been exercised in the Scriptures. I hope the board will request the catechist to consider the necessity there is, that children should be fortified with a knowledge beyond that which repeating catechisms conveys, and that he encourage in them a taste for scriptural information. The necessity for this is well understood, and a proper course of explanation adopted in this respect by many gentlemen who superintend these institutions, and the effect is most satisfactory. I am warranted in saying, that to the children themselves, every explanation, offered in kindness, is received with gladness, and that they enter into every inquiry with the greatest spirit; under such circumstances it is a very easy thing to fix their attention to the subject, and to draw from them observations, which prove the interest they take in this important knowledge; some few of these boys made good attempts at answering, but I ascribe it to their own efforts, rather than to any system that has been established here for their advancement."

Rules and Regulations.

"The observance of these, as will appear in what is to be added in this Report, respecting some main points, is not sufficiently regarded; and the board will no doubt enforce, in future, much stricter attention to them."

Catechist.

"The Society, I think, may very reasonably expect, on the part of this officer, a superintendence which shall prove more beneficial, with regard to the care and comfort of the children, and also greater aid in their religious education. I mean not to ascribe to him any improper motive, but I think an easiness of manner in the discharge of his duties as catechist, has prevented his observing evils which require to be corrected, and that the children themselves are aware of this, preferring their complaints to others, which it was in his power to have observed and to have redressed. I know a hint from the board will be sufficient to call his attention more strictly forth in future."

Master and Mistress.

"The state of the house and offices, generally, would prove their qualifications for this undertaking, as far at least as the care of these establishes their fitness; but it is my painful duty to state, that on my visit to this school, the boys preferred three complaints against the master of a very serious nature, and which were very maturely weighed by the local committee and myself. The evidence, on which we formed our opinion, was that of the usher and the two servants, on oath; we received the defence of the master, and giving all the weight we could to their own representation, as well as to whatever testimony could be drawn in their favour from the statement of the usher and servants, we came to the opinion stated under the charges, which I here insert as brought forward by the boys:—

"1st.—That they did not receive the allowance of food to which they were entitled by the dietary of the Society.

"2d.—That they were punished with unnecessary severity, and not in proportion to the offence they had committed.

"3d.—That they were deprived of the indulgence granted by the Society, with respect to the hours allowed them for play.

"With respect to the first.—We were of opinion, that justice had not been done to the boys; but we were glad to observe, that of late they have been treated with more care in this respect.

"With respect to the second.—We were of opinion, that very extreme instances of severity had been fully established, attended with circumstances that were very unjustifiable, insomuch, that should any instance again occur of similar severity, he ought to be dismissed without any further indulgence whatever.

"With respect to the third.—We thought the charge was not proven further than this, that at particular periods, for field labour, the elder boys had been employed more than the rules of the Society admit, but possibly an excuse might be found for this deviation in the hurry of the season for labour.

"The Society will perceive, in the opinions given by the local committee and myself, a disposition to believe the master will not again offend; I build my hopes in this respect, not not merely upon the contrition expressed by the master on this occasion, but upon the absolute certainty that the conduct of the boys, who showed so becoming a spirit, would deter him from repeating such offences; he must feel that they will not submit patiently to any privation in those comforts which the Society grant, or to any unnecessarily severe treatment, and he has reason to know, that in that committee there are always at hand gentlemen who will protect the boys from every species of injustice.

N^o 12.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

The Usher.

"This person is a very respectable officer of the Society, well conducted, and in his evidence on the occasion above named, though he exhibited a becoming feeling for the master, gave the most unbiassed evidence for the children.

Apprentices.

"Of the last 55 boys apprenticed from this school, 22 are serving their time properly, nine have eloped, and of the others nothing is known. The master states, that to the best of his knowledge none of these boys have left the Protestant church. I have to observe, the master has an apprentice, whom he undertook to teach the trade of shoemaking, calculating at the time that he should supply the school with shoes always; deprived of this employment, he has ever since employed him as a common labourer; his time being now nearly out, the boy complains that he has lost both his time and his trade, and seeks remuneration from the master on this account. There appears so much justice in the appeal of this boy, I trust the committee of fifteen will have this affair investigated, and see that the master pays to the apprentice whatever sum the magistrates, before whom the boy shall bring his case, may award.

Servants Conduct and Religious Profession.

"The servants conduct is reported to be very good. Two of them are apprentices from the Celbridge school. Of the treatment of their master and mistress they speak with no approbation; and it will be necessary, I think, that the board severely reprimand these persons on this account, as well as on those others mentioned in this Report. I consider these persons to possess qualifications which, duly exercised, may answer under the Society; but, I am satisfied, the first offence of a similar nature to these of which I have written, should be the cause of their immediate removal.

Appendix, N^o 13.

CASTLEMARTYR SCHOOL; visited 27th September 1817.

"WE visited this house on Saturday the 27th of September, in the afternoon, for about two hours. The children were in the clothing of the year 1815, a circumstance which was very creditable to the management of the master. We had reason to notice, however, that the shirts had not been changed during the week, as the rules of the house and cleanliness require, and that the stockings had been worn for a much longer period than the shirts.

N^o 13.
Castlemartyr
School.

Morals of the Boys.

"One boy told me a lie respecting the period when his linen was last changed, and stuck to it firmly; the rest declined answering, because they considered the truth would inculcate the master, and they would not tell a lie. The silence of the boys cannot, I think, attach discredit to the school. The catechist is very much pleased with their moral conduct generally, and he is very excellent authority. The moral character upon the whole, I consider very excellent, and there are some boys at the head of it of very great promise.

Religious Knowledge.

"There are two or three boys in this school of no common attainments in scriptural knowledge, and all that are of age for learning, are reasonably advanced in this important respect. In all the catechisms of Mann, Crossman, and the Church, the boys are very perfect in proportion to their age and opportunities; they repeat them, however, with more rapidity than they should, and in this respect require to be a little more attended to.

State of the House and Offices.

"Before the winter, the slating of the house should be made good. There is a sad deficiency of tables and forms; for want of the former, the boys are under the necessity of kneeling upon the floor, in order to write on the latter. Under such impediments, one is surprised at the good writing of the boys of this school.

Apprentices.

"Of the 26 boys last apprenticed, seven appear to have eloped from their masters; one has died; of another there is no account; two have gone to America, one of which fled to avoid being forced to change his religion by his parents; the other, with all the rest, are doing well in their places, and are members of the Established Church.

"The catechist, whom I consider very good authority, seems to think the reason why so many have eloped from their masters is, that they were not bound to efficient persons, and that

[H]

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

that there is a difficulty in finding such. He considers this district of country particularly unpropitious for this object, nay, that even in places of a better description, no consideration is had for these boys more than for others totally uninstructed, and unused to the comforts of decency, which are enjoyed by them in these schools; so that boys are induced to quit their places on account of harsh or neglectful treatment, and return to school as an asylum from unkindness, and in which they may re-obtain their former happiness; in confirmation of this opinion, he adds, that in the number of those who have eloped from their places, some of the best conducted and best instructed are to be reckoned.

"To remedy the evils which result from such a state of things, he is of opinion, that it would be desirable to supply the school with looms, and as the master is acquainted with weaving, the boys might be instructed in a trade that would not only keep them out of the hands of such masters, but materially benefit the country around."

Appendix, N^o 14.

CHARLEVILLE SCHOOL; visited 10th, 11th and 12th August 1817.

General Appearance of the Children.

Charleville School.

"The general appearance of the children, we thought not very favourable; the dusky brown colour of their gowns, without bibs, and black stockings, would occasion this, were there no other circumstance; but the children have very little manners; 20 have the itch, the greater part of them very inveterately, and there are three with ophthalmia.

Classes for Education.

"The manner of reading is good, and freer from vulgarity than often occurs; but their progress generally in reading is very moderate. They spell very well in the higher classes; in the lower, very little advance has been made in any thing. In writing and accounts they are very deficient.

Religious Knowledge.

"Except that they are very perfect in repeating the catechisms of the church (Stopford's and Mann's) as they are taught in their respective classes, very little progress has been made in this school in religious knowledge. One girl, indeed, evinced much ability in answering, and another answered pretty well; but from these exceptions no opinion can be formed, that the system which has heretofore been followed in this respect is a good one. Though the majority of the children are young, more, I think, might have been effected under a good system, and supported by the visits of a local committee.

State of Bed, Bedding and Sheets.

"The whole is in very tolerable order; the bedsteads are in a neglected state, the dust not being swept out of them, and the straw is almost reduced to chaff, from being so long used; some of the bedsteads require repairs.

Rules and Regulations.

"We consider these not to be acted upon on principle here, though, of course, many of them are adhered to from habit; in some cases they have been seriously departed from. The children have not the straw of their beds as often changed as it should be, nor have they the allowed changes of linen weekly, and the stockings being black, are brushed, but not washed. To remedy these abuses, we think, an order from the Board would prove the surest means, though the mistress assured us they should be corrected, and that the stockings in future should not be dyed black.

Catechist.

"The catechist is a very respectable gentleman, and very anxious for the well doing of the school; the gentleness, however, of his disposition, united with a view of this Establishment, which does not take in all the advantages that would follow from a stricter system of discipline in the management of it, has prevented his services being as valuable as they might; hereafter I entertain hopes that he will adopt a system of more vigilance, which the present state of the school certainly requires.

Master and Mistress.

"The master has been confined for some time by the effects of a severe accident. The mistress has naturally had her time much divided between the care due to him and to the school entrusted to her; making every allowance for this misfortune, and for the distraction it may occasion her thoughts, I cannot think she is as attentive to the duties of her situation as she ought to be, and I feel it my duty to suggest to the board the propriety of her receiving from them some observation which shall mark their displeasure, that the establishment under her care is not in better order than I have represented it to be. I have no doubt this will have the desired effect in the points on which I have particularly pressed the notice of the Board, and insure more attention in future.

Apprentices.

Apprentices.

"By the mistress's report of the last 44 children apprenticed from hence, three only have as yet completed their time; of these, two have turned out very well, and one left her mistress before her time was completed; all the rest remain in their apprenticeships, and uncomplained of.

Rev. E. Thackeray
Report on
Charter Schools.

"The local committee here seem to think, that girls of this school continue steady members of the Protestant church, unless they marry Roman Catholics; if the progress of the girls heretofore was as limited in scriptural knowledge as it generally is now, it is not at all unlikely, with so slight a knowledge of the value of their religion, it is not likely it would long stand in the way of any important object they might have in view, or enable them to resist any temptation in the indulgence of which there was no moral turpitude; religious principles so little fixed would give way to the promise of a settlement in life, which was not to be obtained without it.

Feeding.

"It was observed by some of the gentlemen of the local committee present, that after dinner is ended, it never happens any thing is left; they wished, as nothing could be lost thereby, that there was a greater abundance of potatoes placed before the children; there is nothing in the appearance of the children that should make one suppose there was any stint towards them, and yet, as the observation seems to imply doubt in this respect, I would suggest, that the catechist be desired to weigh occasionally the portion of potatoes set apart at dinner time for children by pairs. It would be cruel to charge the mistress with a crime of this nature, which I do not think she commits, but it would be hard upon the children to suffer from any delicacy towards her; happily the thing may be ascertained without any injury to her feelings."

Appendix, N° 15.

CLONMEL SCHOOL; visited on the 4th, 5th, 6th, and 7th October 1817.

[Converted into a Day School.]

Religious Knowledge.

"In the repetition of the catechisms of the Church and Mann, and by the upper class, of Crossman, there was evidence of the boys being duly instructed. The boys, according to their respective ages, repeated these satisfactorily.

Clonmel School.

"With respect to scriptural knowledge, there were two boys (one of whom was Matthew Reily, only nine years old), who, in the general history of the Scriptures, answered most creditably indeed. With the exception of these two boys (whose knowledge was not altogether limited to the historical part of the Bible, it extended to some reasonably good answering in the four Gospels), I cannot but think the classes of this school very ignorant of the scriptures; and unless more pains be taken with them, that they will leave it very ill fortified against the threats or the promises that may be held out to them, to relinquish the religion of which they are at present the professed members.

"Unless a taste for scriptural knowledge be acquired by boys in these institutions, as well as a knowledge of catechisms, before they quit them, I think the object of their formation is very imperfectly attained. I feel it consistent with my duty to mark a defect in this respect wherever I perceive it; not only in my report to the Society, but in my communication with the local committees and catechists, who have hitherto received my observations in the kindest manner; and I propose to persevere in doing so, unless the board shall see occasion to direct otherwise. In few schools it appears to me has less in this respect been acquired than in this. The master and usher were both present at my examination, and of course witnesses of the nature of it, and of the capability of the boys to give any answers.

Rules and Regulations.

"The rule that requires children to have clean linen twice a week, though generally, is not invariably complied with; we feel confident, however, the master does not deviate from rule with a view to his own advantage.

Local Committee.

"Four gentlemen of the local committee, with the catechist, attended the meeting I had requested should be held. I regretted that others had ceased to visit it from some disappointments they considered themselves to have met, in their endeavours to promote the welfare of the establishment; I am confident these would not however operate long to its injury, and that a letter from the board, requesting the continuance of their exertions, would ensure their co-operation. In the number of these gentlemen who did meet, the Society may reckon some very anxious for the welfare of the school. I confess candidly, it is to an efficient local committee I should look for the improvement of this establishment, and unless that can be obtained, I should feel very little disposed to expend money either in repairing this house or in building a new one. It appears to me, that knowledge in religion which consists merely in the repetition of catechisms, ought not to satisfy the Society for so large an expenditure of public money. If local committees will in due form

N^o 15.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

attend half-yearly examinations in scriptural knowledge, much will be effected in this important matter.

Catechist.

"This gentleman has various duties to fulfil, which limits his attention to this school, for whose welfare he expresses much anxiety. Yet I think the Society may expect the influence of his superintendence shall be greater, and that though he may be restricted as to time himself, he may establish a course of religious education, which the master and usher may pursue, and he see enforced successfully. I have to state, however, that he did not allow the justice of my observations with respect to the progress of the boys, and seemed to think my opinion on this point differed from that of others. It might be so; and I reminded him that we were under the same roof with the children I had examined, which enabled him, by a re-examination in the presence of the local committee, to ascertain whether I had been mistaken, and to what extent, in this matter. As nothing was done in this respect, I had no opportunity of altering my opinion, which, as far as relates to the progress of the children in scriptural knowledge, is by no means as satisfactory as in most schools we have visited.

Usher.

"The usher is considered, by all who visited this school, as totally unqualified for his situation. It is painful at all times to state that which is likely to deprive a young man of his support; but this feeling never operated with me less than on the present occasion. In addition to his unfitness, he has frequently been very insolent to the master; and on one occasion took off his coat, challenging him to fight in the presence of the boys. He is considered by many here as having very little intellect; at all events he is very little qualified for the situation which he now fills under the Society.

"Should the Society think fit to remove him, I would recommend that it should not be done till a competent successor be found. This school has long been unfortunate in having ushers who have either not known, or have neglected their duty; and to this cause is to be attributed some of the reluctance that has been shown by members of the local committee, in visiting this school.

Apprentices.

"Of the thirty-four last sent out, the account of sixteen is very satisfactory. Seven eloped from their masters; of the rest, as they do not reside in this neighbourhood, there is no account.

Receiving the Sacrament.

"There are no boys here who ever received the sacrament; though there are two of them, one a returned apprentice, and another of full age, I should suppose from his size at least to be preparing himself for that ordinance; but very much must be done to justify his appearance there."

Appendix, N^o 16.

DUNDALK SCHOOL; November 1817.

General Appearance.

N^o 16.
Dundalk School.

"FOR some years the decency of manners observable in these children has commanded the particular attention of visitors. Their deportment is uniformly cheerful and respectful; they have a great care of themselves, and are healthy, contented, and happy.

Education.

"In respect to correct spelling, reading, and good pronunciation, there is no school we have visited equal to it; neither are the children here inferior to those of any other female establishment as writers and arithmeticians. The whole must be considered very respectable.

Religious Knowledge.

"The school in Bagot-street is decidedly superior to every other in this respect, though there may be individuals in more schools than one whose scriptural knowledge is greater than that of any individual in the above named seminary. Amongst female establishments, Dundalk, I think, holds the second place, though with no great interval between itself and one or two others. In this respect, it is much to be approved of, that there is a religious feeling universally diffused through it, which appears to us to operate strongly on the conduct of the children generally.

Morals of the Children.

"These are most exemplary; and we think it would not be possible to name an assemblage of 60 young persons who could be more universally and uniformly upheld for innocent, modest and upright conduct, than those now under observation. Much care has been for years taken of this establishment, and it has been well repaid in the success which has followed it.

Master and Mistress.

"The master is a very well disposed and well conducted person; but certainly, according to my view, ill qualified for the office of an instructor of youth. The mistress is a very respectable woman, of manners superior to what are usually found in these institutions, and and desirous to do her duty. Her example and good manners, her care of her own children, and the judicious way in which she brings them up, must prove beneficial to young females who reside in the same house with her and them; but, as a mistress, her qualifications are very limited. The respectable state in which this establishment has been for years, must be ascribed in a great degree to the exertions of others; the extracts from the daily report books of this establishment, transmitted to the Society, will probably have convinced the board of this fact. It is pleasant to be able to add, that anxiety for the welfare of this school, and attachment to its interest, are daily increasing, and there can be no fear that it should ever be neglected.

Usheress.

"The Society has not in its institution a more conscientious and respectable person than the usheress of this school. Her qualifications are of a limited nature as an instructress, and she would certainly be more valuable as a mistress than as an usheress. We would gladly have recommended her to the notice of the board for such advancement, but her diffidence made her decline it. The effect of her intercourse with children, who regard her almost as a parent, must always prove most beneficial, and, on this account, make her a more valuable servant to the Society than any person possessing the highest qualifications for instructing who may want those which operate so happily on the moral feelings of children, and which Mrs. Kennedy undoubtedly possesses: she has been in her situation, I believe, more than 20 years.

Apprentices.

"Of the young persons who have of late years left this school (though we have to lament the misconduct of several whose course in the school, and whose knowledge had led us to hope they would have resisted evil temptations after they quitted it), we have to rejoice in the uniform and excellent conduct of several others. No school has supplied better examples than this; and, as the present inmates of it justly consider that the character of the school suffers when any one who has been educated therein has disgraced herself, and that its credit is raised whenever good reports are brought of the conduct of their late associates, it is to be hoped such feelings (which we endeavour to encourage) will operate beneficially, and that the effect of this esprit du corps, if I may so express it, will powerfully contribute to the preserving in after life the good principles inculcated in the children during their continuance in this establishment.

Feeding.

"We consider the children reasonably well fed, which is all that we can say. If the master were a better farmer, the potatoes would be finer, and of a larger description. I have directed him, however, to dispose of his own potatoes in any way he thinks best, but certainly to supply the children with such potatoes as shall be considered of prime quality, and such as the Society have a right to expect for their children. In every other article of food we have had no reason to be dissatisfied, except that he has not always managed so well as he ought in ensuring a proper supply of milk; but I have no doubt we shall train him on to understand his business better. I attribute to this want of knowledge, rather than of intention, his failure in these points. A little more experience may correct whatever is defective; and the Society may be certain, at all events, that the children shall not suffer."

Appendix, N° 17.

DUNKERRIN SCHOOL; visited August 18, 1817.

General Appearance of the Children.

"THE favourable appearance of the children is much interrupted by various diseases prevalent here at present; scrofula, ophthalmia and itch. Much of these disorders were, as we were informed, lately introduced by children newly admitted; but surely those with itch might have been purified before it had so far extended itself. These causes occasioned a great drawback to the general appearance of the children; otherwise, amongst those girls who have remained here a long time, there is the appearance of much propriety and order and good manners.

State of the House.

"The original building, owing to a failure in the lead, and to some days of severe rain, was in a very dirty and damp state; and one room, in which there were some articles of clothing lying, was half an inch deep with water. The mistress, it is true, could not prevent the effects of this deluge of rain, but it is impossible not to consider her very slovenly in the management of the house generally, in all that regards neatness and cleanliness, and particularly that part which has been so lately built. The dormitories were in a very slovenly neglected state, and the whole required much more attention on her part than was bestowed by her.

"The offices are quite new, and the plan well calculated to make them answer the intended purpose; but the builder has in my mind very injudiciously built them below the level of the yard in which they are erected. From this cause, the floor of the dairy was remarkably wet and dirty; and I think, even yet, he should remedy this defect by raising the flooring and resetting it above the level of the circumjacent ground. The shelves of the dairy, the windows and the walls, were all in a neglected state; and if children are employed in this dairy,

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

dairy, they cannot acquire, in my opinion, one single habit that will benefit them when they go out into service or settle in life.

Local Committee.

"Of this body we were fortunate enough to meet three ladies, and as many gentlemen. The slovenly appearance of things, which was the subject of our observation, had not hitherto called forth any remarks from them, as it appeared; but our observations led to such a consideration of the nature of these institutions, their importance in every respect, and the necessity of vigilance on the part of local committees and catechists, as, we trust, will prove useful. Some respectable ladies present assured us of increased attention on their part, so that I trust the causes for complaint which it has been our duty to represent, will very soon be removed.

Apothecary.

"I inclose the report of the apothecary; from that it seems these complaints are all disappearing. I cannot but suggest the propriety of making him report every week, until all disorder has ceased. He receives an annual payment, and it is not easy to understand why, at least in case of itch, it should not have been earlier conquered, or prevented from extending itself so much as it has done."

Appendix, N° 18.

DUNMANWAY SCHOOL; visited September 22d, 1817.

(Converted into a Day School.)

Dunmanway
School.

Classes for Education.

"THE first class read free from any vulgar pronunciation, but with very little attention to correctness in their stops, and I think without any judgment. The same may be said of the second and third classes. The method of instruction in this respect is defective. Nor is their spelling as good as it ought to be; system seems wanting generally. It was pointed out to us, however, that those boys, of whose progress we thought least, had lately been transplanted from Clontarf. In writing, some of the boys were entitled to much credit, and a few for their progress in arithmetic. But generally, we thought less had been effected in these respects than in most of the schools we had visited. The advantage which results from the aid of monitors is not at all understood here.

Morals of the Boys.

"Upon inquiry, we found that adherence to truth was not so universal as it ought to be; and that to eradicate this vice, more exertion is necessary than has hitherto been used. The upper class (particularly the captain of the school, who is a very superior boy), contains some very intelligent and good boys; and when I spoke to them of the vice of lying, and that in the character of the school, it involved the innocent with the guilty, I thought they appeared to exhibit a sense of this truth, if not a hatred of this vice, that would ensure their assistance in conquering it. I am convinced, a school well appointed with monitors, might very soon, by their instrumentality, under an attentive catechist and steady master and usher, become free from the habits of lying and of little knaveries, habits which too many children have acquired before they are admitted into these schools, and which cannot be conquered, or but rarely, by mere chastisement. If the upper boys are convinced of the crime and of the injury they do themselves by uttering falsehood, they may be brought to teach the same to the lower ones; and I am confident the best results would follow from every effort that could be made, to make the monitors parties with the master and usher, in subduing these vices.

Religious Knowledge.

"There are in this school two boys, whose knowledge in the Scriptures, in their class of life and at their age, is unusually great. In examining the whole class together, one is surprized that the progress of the others is so far inferior; the catechist ascribes this inferiority to great inferiority of talents on the part of the rest; and yet, in general, I did not observe in them any mental deficiency. I am disposed to think, a system of instruction and examination might be arranged, which would call forth the talents of others, as well as of those two, whose progress is so very creditable. In the catechism of the church and Mann's, they were in general very perfect. The most defective had but lately come to this school, and amongst these, one boy had arrived in a state of idiotcy.

House and Offices.

"Of the state of this house as to care and cleanliness, it is impossible not to think that more might be done for it. The kitchen is absolutely black with the smoke and neglect of years; and the master seems to think it would not benefit by white-washing, as when that operation is performing in the other parts of the house, this is totally overlooked; and though the other parts of the building are by no means in the state which this is, yet we think they ought to be cleaner than we found them. The house consists of a small centre and two wings. The boys are confined to one wing and the rest is occupied by the master's family, (for he informed me, that the boys food was prepared in a back kitchen,) and by the local committee room. There is in the wing, inhabited by the boys, but one confined room for dinner, and school, and sitting room, when the weather does not permit the boys to to play abroad; another room, therefore, seems requisite for their use. As I have not observed that extensive accommodations for the master are productive of great advantage to the school generally (for they have often been the cause of increasing the family party, by establishing in the house married sons and daughters-in-law), I consider it my duty to observe, that the children should have all the accommodation requisite."

State of the Farm.

"The farm is generally in very good order, and well fenced; the master holds in addition, fifty acres adjoining.

State of Bed and Bedding and Sheets.

"These were, in general, in very good order. The straw, however, appeared to have been in use longer than it should have been. The excuse advanced by the master, and supported by the local committee, was the difficulty of obtaining straw at this season; a difficulty which the master might have known and remedied in November last.

Rules and Regulations.

"There did not appear any great deviation from the rules of the Society; we thought that more salt meat was used in this house than there ought to be. New milk is rarely given to the children, but thick milk, which in this district of the country, I believe is considered as better. I only mention the fact, because it is a departure from rules.

Local Committee.

"The gentleman who chiefly compose this body, reside at two great a distance to attend; but I hear there are some clergymen, lately come to reside in this neighbourhood, whose assistance would be very desirable. The gentlemen who usually attend, are the clergyman of the parish, and a gentleman resident in the town; the former was, till of late, the catechist, an office which is now held by the son. Their visits are, I believe, pretty much limited to quarterly or half-yearly meetings. It cannot be doubted, that a more numerous committee, and one in which were to be found persons whose youth would occasion greater activity and inquiry, would be advantageous to the school. Energy is wanting to make this school as useful as it might be."

Appendix, N° 19.

KILLOTTERAN SCHOOL, near Waterford; visited 11th October 1817.

Clothing of the Children.

"THE clothing of the children was almost worn out; the stockings were in pieces, and there were none in store; the shoes in general were as defective as the stockings; and of the shirts, there was not an entire set to change. We thought the state of the clothing was no where farther reduced than here; the master, however, seems to think, that matters had been well managed, and lamented the reduction in the quantity of clothing granted formerly by the board. The boys told me they had clean linen but once in the week, and did not seem to know when their stockings had been put on clean.

Killoteran School.

General Appearance of the Children.

"Many circumstances concur to give an unfavourable appearance to these children; in addition to the worn-out state of clothing, there is much of ophthalmia and of itch, together with a breaking out in scales on the faces of many of the children, that is very disgusting. The master states, that the disease of the eyes is on the decline, and that he defers rubbing the children for the itch, and there were some cases very bad till the time for changing the sheets is nearly arrived, a delay that must be very unwise indeed, as by that time probably the whole school would have caught it. He says, that the itch and ophthalmia were introduced by boys coming from Clontarf. However this may be, since the arrival of these children there was time to overcome the itch at least, if not the ophthalmia; but it does not appear sufficient care has been taken to do so, as the diseased children have not been separated from these that were free. Notwithstanding all these impediments to a good general appearance, there were many fine interesting boys in this school, and of good promise. There are two boys of an age to quit the school, one of whom was admitted at the age of thirteen; there were a few children of very little promise, and three were confined to bed with sickness.

Classes for Education.

"The first class, which consisted of twelve, read but moderately, spelt better, and were not entitled to much credit for their progress in writing or accounts.

"The second class read and spelt very indifferently, and have made very little progress in writing and accounts.

"The third class have made a progress only in proportion to those above mentioned.

"The rest of the boys are very young.

Religious Knowledge.

"I do not think the boys in this school are as perfect in the catechisms, in which we examined them, as they ought to be. The master assigns, as a cause for it, the influence of ophthalmia, which has for a long period put a stop almost to improvement with respect

N^o 19.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

to scriptural knowledge. Of the four first Gospels, their explanation was very insufficient; in the historical part of the Old Testament, from the abridgment by Sellon, they were better; but yet much more pains will be requisite to make these boys acquainted with the religion in which they are training, and to fortify them against any attempts that may, when they quit this, be made to withdraw them from it.

Farm.

"The state of the farm seems very good, and the master has another large one, which he rents together with this; though I have seen some schools in which I can trace no injury, and perhaps some advantage, from masters holding large additional farms, yet, in general, I have no doubt the custom is a bad one on many accounts, where the farm of the Society is very small, and the distance from a market town great. Some indulgence in this respect may be given for the advantage both of the master and the institution; but where there are large farms, the superintendence of the master is almost altogether withdrawn from the boys, not merely with respect to their education, but their moral habits likewise. I have sometimes thought, too, that the arrangement of the offices has been regulated more by the necessity of accommodating the demands which the master's private farm has occasioned, than those merely which the Society's land would require.

Bed, Bedding and Sheets.

"One of the dormitories was very clean and pure, the other close and offensive; the reason assigned for this was, that a boy was sick in the room, and therefore the windows could not be opened. With such abundant house-room, it was very inconsiderate or neglectful to keep a boy who was ill in a room, the air of which was impure, at the expense too, of the health and comfort of 30 boys, who were at night to sleep in this unventilated apartment. In other respects, every thing connected with the dormitories was proper; and Mrs. Thackeray is of opinion, that, with the addition of a few tickens, the Society need have no demand on them for bed furniture for some time in this establishment.

Rules and Regulations.

"We found here, that the boys got clean shirts only once a week, and clean stockings seldom.

Local Committee.

"The state in which the school has been of late from ophthalmia has discouraged persons from visiting it. As it is reported that this disease is on the decline, the obstacle to the well-doing of the institution will soon cease to exist, for I know no greater obstacle to the well-doing of these schools than that, be it what it may, which induces the local guardians of the place to withhold their active superintendence from it, and leaves both the officers and the children without that stimulus to exertion, good conduct and improvement, which the vigilance and judgment of well-informed superiors cannot fail to excite.

Catechist.

"The catechist has lately been removed to an establishment five miles from the school. The discharge of the duties he has to fulfil there, appears to leave him hardly any other day to visit, but on Sunday after service. Of all the days in the week, Sunday is the most likely to find things in a state of preparation; and he who only visits on that day, may find his reports much at variance with those of one who pays a casual visit on any other day of the week. The bishop of this diocese is aware of this inconvenience, and will, I have no doubt, supply a remedy for it.

Apothecary.

"The apothecary reports, that the children are fast getting well from the severe attack of ophthalmia, which has prevailed here through the whole house; that no relapses have taken place; it is stated to have been brought by a boy from Clontarf, and I think it would be right for the board to ascertain, from the apothecary of that school, under what circumstances the boy so afflicted was sent out. The progress of the children at this school has been much impeded by its consequences, and no visitors would go near the school. One boy, who was suffering very severely indeed with itch, assured me, that he was afflicted before he left Clontarf: I had hoped it might have been caught on the road. Want of attention in such points, not only circulates disease, but deters visitors from attending at these establishments, and gives rise to observations, by which the character of these institutions suffer, though the neglect is probably the neglect of a single individual.

"With respect to the itch, of which there were some inveterate cases, the apothecary had supplied the necessary medicine, though the master had improperly, I think, deferred making use of it; becoming vigilance, on the part of the catechist, would have prevented such an unwise delay.

Master and Mistress.

"I believe the master to be a well-disposed man, and that the mistress has no wish to act wrong; but they have fallen into habits and views of their duty which are not in strict uniformity with the rules of the Society, and require the active superintendence of those who are better informed, and know that the rules of no institution can be deviated from, even in points which appear of hardly any consequence, with impunity, one deviation leading to another almost invariably.

"The master states, that he has some knowledge of weaving, and that if the Society would would give him any encouragement, he would endeavour to establish a trade in the school, which should be useful to the boys after they had left it, a course which, if practicable, would on every account prove most beneficial, particularly in the southern schools; and I do hope a plan might be discovered which would promote this object, without any risque to the Society.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Usher.

"The usher seems a respectable young man; he is nephew to the master, which is, I believe, contrary to rule; his manner is good and commanding with the boys; but he wants to be placed under a master who can give instruction, and a catechist, who will explain the Scriptures, and require from the boys a reasonable account in answer, then he may become a very useful servant to the Society.

Apprentices.

"Of these I saw none; but the master's report of them in general is satisfactory. The masters are desired to report of those only whose situation and conduct fall within their own knowledge. Of the last 47 apprentices, it appears, that 35 are doing well, some of them very well; nine had eloped from their masters; but as many of them are doing well, it is reasonable to presume, that their masters were more in fault than the boys themselves, which I believe to be very often the case. The master does not know of one boy who has, since his leaving the school, quitted the religion of the established church, during the last twelve years, one only excepted, and he was always considered half-witted.

Feeding of the Children.

"We entertain no doubt but that ample justice is done to the children in this respect."

Appendix, N° 20.

LINTOWN FACTORY; visited October 1817.

General Appearance.

"THE boys of this factory in their appearance are very respectable. Their dress is not that of the Society, but the master supplies them. Their clothing is very good, and their pantaloons extending to their shoes, made of thicksets, concealed their want of stockings, which the master states, and from which I think I have observed in the linen counties, boys engaged at the loom are glad to be relieved: as a deviation from rule, I state the circumstance. The boys, or rather young men, expressed themselves very happy and contented in every respect, well taken care of, and kindly treated.

Lintown Factory.

Religious Knowledge.

"In some of the boys here their religious knowledge is remarkable, and in most respectable. This house may, in this point, be placed amongst the foremost of the Society's institutions. There appears to be in them a desire for scriptural instruction that is very gratifying; and circumstanced as this school is in point of situation, may (duly fostered) produce the most beneficial effects.

Rules and Regulations.

"This school being under an arrangement distinct in many respects from other institutions belonging to the Society, the rules do not all apply to this. The only deviation from rule of which there is reason to take notice is, that clean linen is given to the boys only once in each week, in place of twice. The master, in extenuation, says, this was the course pursued before he came to the school: I have no doubt he will change it for a better one from henceforth. However, it may be well that the circumstance be noticed by the board, to ensure more attention in the matter of cleanliness.

Catechist.

"In this gentleman, the Society have a zealous and able officer. The religious knowledge possessed by two or three of these boys, may, and I believe is equalled in some other schools; but the facility with which it is imparted and applied is, I think, greater here than any where I have visited; and though the superior age of these boys may in a degree account for this, much must be attributed, I conceive, to the zealous exertions of this gentleman.

Apprentices.

"Of the last 36 boys who left this school, no less than 11 eloped from their places, and the most of these returned to the church of Rome. Nothing is known of three others. Unfavourable as the statement is, I do not at all consider such a disappointment likely to recur. The state of the minds of the boys in the school is very different now from what it has been. All those that were bad left the place, and the degree of religious knowledge is such as will justify very favourable expectations in future. It is not likely that any new admissions of younger boys can overthrow the habits and principles now operating in this house. There is a spirit of inquiry existing in this factory, on the subject of religion, that will not easily be suppressed; and I consider it quite impossible, that the young men, for such many of them are, that I examined, could be induced to give up their right to study the Scriptures to any authority whatever.

N° 20.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

"I cannot close this report without stating, that I consider this factory particularly worthy of the earliest and most serious attention of the board of fifteen, and that I believe it possible to become an example on which some other southern schools may be formed, whereby the boys may be employed in trade, which will be useful to themselves and the country, in place of being engaged as servants with careless or severe masters, to which circumstance I ascribe the elopement of apprentices generally, and the misconduct which usually follows."

Appendix, N° 21.

MAYNOOTH SCHOOL; visited 12th December 1817; (suppressed in 1819.)

Classes for Education.

N° 21.
Maynooth School.

"The most favourable report we can make in this respect arises from the representation of members of the local committee, which is, that it is improving; still the children read in a dull unpleasant manner. Their spelling is moderate; so is their writing; their knowledge of accounts is very limited indeed; the method of instruction is not good in itself; a better one has been proposed, such as has been found to answer in other establishments, and if followed, we doubt not an immediate improvement will take place in this respect."

State of Bed and Bedding.

"Mrs. Thackeray was of opinion that it would require more care to attend to all the concerns of the bed rooms than seems hitherto to have been bestowed. The rooms are so crowded with bedsteads that there is no opportunity of approaching the beds, except at the foot, and this may in some measure account for deficiency in good management."

Rules and Regulations.

"These are deviated from with respect to the change of linen, which only takes place once in each week, and the stockings being black, are undoubtedly changed much less oftener than they should be."

Catechist.

"There is at present no catechist; I fancy, however, there will be no difficulty in obtaining a proper one from among the neighbouring resident clergy."

Master and Mistress.

"The master has been in office for nearly four years; during a long period his former wife is stated to have been disqualified by ill health from paying much attention to the concerns of the school. The best praise I can give to the master and his present wife is, that all seem to concur in thinking great amendment has taken place in the care of the establishment since her marriage and connection with it; this augurs well, but certainly much remains to be done, to place it, particularly in point of neatness and cleanliness, on an equality with many other schools. These persons must occupy themselves too industriously in advancing scriptural knowledge and general education, or the next visitor will have little reason to be satisfied with their attention, and must report much to their discredit. They seem desirous, I think, to amend what is wrong, and I trust will become useful servants of the Society."

Appendix, N° 22.

MONASTEREVEN SCHOOL; visited October 24th, 1817.

State of House and Offices.

N° 22.
Monastereven
School.

"THESE are in very good order, if I except the kitchen, which is a building now connected with the house, but was formerly I believe a stable, being much lower than the house; it smokes almost at all times, and the family despair of keeping it clean; a dangerous feeling to obtain in any institution; it too often occasions a want of care as to the rest of the house. The kitchen range too is miserably out of order, and requires early attention. With these exceptions, I think this house is in possession of every requisite to make it convenient and comfortable."

State of the Farm.

"There is no land attached to this school, but the master has a large farm adjoining, at which he cultivates for his own benefit and that of the children. He contrives hereby to keep himself pretty well out of the market; though he states his losses last year at nearly two hundred pounds, his spirit will not permit him to complain of it to the Society."

State of the Bed, Bedding and Sheets.

"This is the most unsatisfactory part of the establishment to visit, though without blame to the mistress: I think the bedsteads are clumsy and of cast iron, made many years ago, and for infants (this being originally a nursery and not a school), they are therefore much too short for the majority of the boys. They are too so exceedingly heavy, that in consequence of their being frequently removed, in order that the rooms may be cleansed, the flooring, though not destroyed, is very greatly disfigured."

Of

"Of the beds, the ticken is all good, and will last for a very long time. There is wanted thirty pair of blankets, which we would recommend should be sent down with the surplus of quilts. The mistress may make good the number required, which will then be efficient, and serve a long time. In every other respect we think matters are correct, except that the house, with the aid of so many servants, (more than we think there is occasion for), ought to be in a state throughout of accurate cleanliness, which cannot truly be said of this.

Rules and Regulations.

"We consider these in general to be very properly attended to; the milk allowed in schools, is I believe rarely measured, and it would prevent misconception sometimes, and sometimes misconduct, if measurement of the quantity to be given to the whole number at each meal, was strictly enforced. We thought the quantity given was not as great as the quantity allowed; but when we spoke to the children with respect to the care of them in every point by the master, they declared, with acclamation, that he did them every justice. We firmly believe it to be his intention to do so, though probably without conforming to the regulations.

"The plan of the mistress of Stradbally school is the best, because the most certain of doing justice. The quantity specified in the rules for a given number of children, is duly measured and brought into the hall, and none of it is taken away as long as any of the children feel disposed to call for it.

"It was necessary to introduce this suggestion somewhere; and having but just left Stradbally, it was natural it should occur to us in the first school in which the same course was not pursued.

"It could not be introduced in the report of any school more free from all suspicion of being intended to cast a reflection upon the management of it, than in this; for we never have seen attachment to the master and mistress by the boys, universally greater any where than here.

Apprentices.

"I saw four of these, who expressed themselves very happy, and were doing very well. Of the last thirty-four apprenticed out, eight eloped from their places; of the rest, almost the whole are reported doing well, and it is believed that none have quitted the established church.

"To close this report, I would observe, according to our judgment, this school is a most valuable branch of the establishment belonging to the Incorporated Society."

Appendix, N^o 23.

MONIVEA SCHOOL; visited August 14th, 1817.

Morals of the Children.

"IT will be satisfactory to the Society to learn, that the care and vigilance of the persons to whom the charge of this school is intrusted, is producing all the effects in this respect that might be expected; and that very little remains of that refractory disposition, which neglect on the part of those, who were in charge, and of misconduct in a former usheress, permitted to exist. The removal of these grown girls by the Society, paved the way for the successful efforts made here in this respect; and from every thing we could learn, subordination to rule is restored in every respect, though the influence and example of those who were removed, operated more or less upon those that were left behind, of almost every class. They were disobedient and wilful.

"The offence complained of in this place at present, chiefly, is that detestable one, of disregarding truth; it does not appear, however, that this vice is general; but it is of a nature to call for every exertion on the part of the master to conquer it, and he seems well disposed to undertake the task.

Religious Knowledge.

"In their catechisms they were remarkably well instructed. Forty of the children repeated the whole of Mann's Catechism, without a fault; but they appear to me defective in scriptural knowledge altogether almost, though it was reported to me, that they read the Scriptures daily. The catechist was present when I examined, and seemed much disappointed at their ignorance, at least, at their non-answering. He attributed it in a great degree to their being examined by a stranger; but declined examining himself. A regular system of lecturing on the Scriptures, and which would call for their own explication of them, is, I believe, the only plan by which children will retain any knowledge of them; and I have reason to think this gentleman now entertains a similar opinion.

State of the House and Offices.

"Immediate attention should be paid to the slating of the house, which is much out of repair. The offices have the appearance of dilapidation, by the state in which the windows appear. The frames are without glass, and the apertures are built up with stone, in a very coarse manner. This might be remedied at little expense; otherwise there is not much required to be done here. The infirmary is an excellent room; the only objection to it is that it is a portion of the house itself. The flooring of the hall and the school, which are excellent rooms, is earthen. We considered that there was not due attention to cleanliness in the care of them. It struck us, that this house is particularly well circumstanced in the way of accommodation.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

State of Bed and Bedding.

"The two principal dormitories were in very good order indeed; but when we came to visit the upper dormitory it was impossible to express satisfaction. This room seems assigned to those children of the school who are least capable of keeping themselves clean, or understanding the comforts of being so. To keep these by themselves is to perpetuate their habits of dirt. The bed tickens here were almost all destroyed; and unless this injudicious plan be given up, the children of this room will hardly ever be reformed; to correct the habits of those who are dirty, it is necessary to avail ourselves of those that are clean.

Catechist.

"This gentleman is respected by all around him; his attendance at the school is very great; but I cannot help thinking he has hitherto confined himself to catechetical examination, almost entirely. Should he direct his attention to scriptural explanations, which I have reason to think he may, the school will obtain the most beneficial effects from his exertions."

Appendix, N^o 24.

NEW ROSS SCHOOL; visited, 14th October 1817.

General Appearance of the Children.

New Ross School.

"THE clothing in which we saw the children, was that of the last year, and in very good order, as far as the coat, waistcoat and breeches. The stockings were almost universally worn out, and in an order highly discreditable to the mistress; the shoes too were nearly worn out. I ought to observe, that there were a few boys without stockings, and that there were not stockings for them, or a change for the others. The mistress pleaded that they were originally bad, but it does not appear that she had made any attempt to preserve them by darning. We found it necessary to examine the legs and feet of the whole school, which were generally in a state of filth quite offensive. Notwithstanding, we thought many of these children very pleasing in their appearance, and in very good health generally.

Morals of the Boys.

"We have no where met such mortification in this respect as in this school. Boys whose knowledge in the Scriptures had given us great satisfaction, exhibited upon investigation, such a total contempt for truth, and such a perseverance in falsehood, as drew from the gentlemen who were present, and myself, astonishment and deep regret. In the points too on which they were questioned, the truth would have been more to their purpose and favour than falsehood. We were all satisfied that the conduct of these boys resulted from motives that we could not fathom, and we suspected that they must have been habituated to deception.

Religious Knowledge.

"After the statement above made, there can be little satisfaction in adding, that these boys, not only in the catechisms, but in the four Gospels, exhibited a knowledge very creditable to the exertions of those by whom they had been instructed, unhappily as yet unproductive of any good to themselves. What has impeded the effects of such knowledge in youthful minds is still undiscovered; but I calculate the investigation, which will probably be made by the board, when they receive the report of the local committee, and the documents in their possession, will bring to light this unknown cause, (for it is impossible to suppose such a perseverance in falsehood without some secret cause,) the discovery of which is necessary, for all the benefits of a good religious education seem to be lost at present, through its over-powering influence.

"The dining-hall is now used as a dairy; it requires tables and forms, and is much wanted for the purpose which caused it to be built.

State of the Bed, Bedding and Sheets

"We found them in a neglected state, particularly from straw which had been too long in use, and want of attention in keeping them well sewed together, and in repairing them when they begin to require it. More cleanliness too is requisite in the care of the dormitories generally.

Rules and Regulations.

"It does not appear that strict adherence to these is observed in this establishment.

The Master and Mistress.

"The master is amongst those whose qualifications, duly exercised, must place him amongst the most useful of the servants of the Society. The mistress, whatever may be her qualifications, unhappily exercises them very little in the care of the school entrusted to her, considering herself rather above such undertakings. It occurs to the gentlemen of the local committee, and to myself, that the most certain way of correcting this notion on the part of this person, would be by appointing a housekeeper to discharge her duties, until she discovers it to be her interest to attend steadily to them herself, which the expense attendant on such an assistant might speedily occasion. She has 10 children; one of them a young woman who might assist her in the care of the house. At all events, if she cannot be induced induced for the sake of her family, together with the master, to fulfil the duties which her situation requires, it must be confessed that she will ill-deserve to be continued in the service of the Society. It does not appear, that the master has of late failed in the point, for which he was formerly disapproved; yet his conduct in the care of the school is not considered by the local committee as satisfactory, nor by us. His system is much too lax to be approved of."

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 25.

SHANNON GROVE SCHOOL; visited 28th, 29th and 30th August 1817.

General Appearance.

"I HAD the whole school brought out, and formed a line for inspection; the general appearance was good, and their hair neatly cut; a few boys had a cutaneous complaint, which I considered to be itch; the apothecary however thought otherwise, and many had just recovered from a similar complaint; the opportunity of bathing in the Shannon, near to the house, is a great advantage to the school, and he thought bathing alone would remove this complaint, from which many other boys had but lately recovered; two or three had sore eyes, but the disease was not contagious. One boy had scrofula in the knee, which would probably lame him for life; and the young man of whom I have just been speaking as assisting the usher, has unhappily lost his leg by the same disorder. He continues rated in the books of the school as a scholar, though he is twenty years of age, and well qualified to discharge the duty of an usher.

Shannon Grove
School.

State of the House and Offices.

"This is in this respect a very fine establishment, but justice is not done in the care of it; no part is in the state of neatness in which it should be kept, and some parts of it are filthy; all the offices, and a great portion of the house is new; the state of slovenliness in which I saw the whole seems without any excuse; perhaps if the buildings were less extensive this might not be the case. The offices seems to me more than necessary, even with the extensive farm held by the master; and it must have been this circumstance which has imperceptibly led to the formation of offices, for which any future master occupying only the farm held from the Society (and such a case may easily be imagined), can have no occasion.

The Infirmary.

"The state in which I found this building, as also that of those attached to the schools of Athlone and Roscommon, has made me more than doubt the expediency of setting apart buildings for possible cases of contagious disease.

"The infirmaries of the two last named places are very nearly ruins, and that of this school is so much neglected, that in the event of its being on a sudden required, it is unfit for use; in the mean time, the upper room is used as a store for articles belonging to the Society, and the lower (if I am rightly informed) has been occupied as a granary, though I saw no proof of this, except the many holes made in the flooring by mice be one. There are more than thirty panes of glass wanting in the windows of this building; the master says it was never given up to him in any other way; and it appears to me, that some of the flooring was badly put together, and some of the joists have failed; the curbing of the hearth-stones appears too not to have been completed, and a door should have been put under the stair-case to have inclosed the coal-hole.

State of the Farm.

"The state of the farm is very good; in addition to the 26 acres the master holds from the Society, he rents 105 from other landlords. This great abundance of land ensures plenty to the children; perhaps too it supplies additional knowledge of farming; it cannot injure them, as depriving the school of the masters, and in the way of education, for his qualifications fit him not for that duty; but it appears to me, it has proved injurious to the Society in this respect, that it has occasioned an extent of offices for which there is no absolute necessity, as far as the school establishment is concerned, and which, unless great care is taken of them, will occasion in future much dilapidation.

State of Bed and Bedding.

"I consider this very ill managed indeed; all the sheeting, and many of the shirts, were much mildewed; care is not taken in drying the linen well before it is put in store, and this must prove very destructive to it. I saw in the stores bed ticken and blankets in a most filthy state; and the sheets that had lain by for a long time, as I was informed, to be ready in cases of disease, were so damp that they might almost be wrung. In the management of the whole much less judgment could not be exhibited; and unless more care be taken in future by the mistress, the property of the Society must suffer much injury that might be avoided.

Rules and Regulations.

"In the management of the school, as far as relates to the education of the children, due care is paid, but in the general concerns of the house I do not think that the rules of the institution are sufficiently observed, particularly in what respects cleanliness. I find the

N^o 25.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

mistress has hitherto given the children clean linen but once in the week, and clean stockings less often than that. I am confident it would be very advantageous that the rules of the Society should be read every month in the presence of the whole establishment.

Catechist.

"The catechist accompanied me fortunately in these examinations, and I believe was fully convinced of the necessity of strict attention on his part; circumstances have hitherto, since his appointment, prevented any strict attention to the concerns of this school. These will not probably interfere much longer. The Society may then reasonably expect from him great exertions to place this school, in all its domestic concerns, in the state in which they ought to be.

Mistress.

"The mistress is sister to the master, and exhibits very limited qualifications indeed, at present, for her undertaking. She seems to have very little idea of cleanliness in the management of the house, and of the manner in which the property of the Society entrusted to her care can be best preserved. Unless the local committee at their next quarterly meeting, can satisfy the Society that every thing is very differently attended to by her from what I witnessed, and here report, I must consider her totally unqualified for her situation. She promises greater vigilance in every thing; if it be not shewn in the first month after she has made that promise, I shall despair of her ever doing any good.

Apprentices.

"Of the last 44 children apprenticed, it is known that twenty-five are doing well, some of them very well indeed. Seven eloped from their places, most of whom were tempted by bounty, and a taste for the army. One died, and one is under sentence of transportation. Of the remainder there is no account, they having left that part of the country, but there is no reason to think amiss of them."

Appendix, N^o 26.

STRADBALLY SCHOOL; visited 23d October 1817.

Religious Knowledge.

N^o 26.
Stradbally School.

"THE knowledge which the boys have in this respect seems chiefly derived from the catechisms in use in the school, and the simple reading of the Scriptures, without their being opened to them by explanation, or the boys being exercised in them in any way. I have no doubt in future more attention will be paid to matters of so much importance. The Society may be assured of the best efforts of the master and usher to carry on any system of improvement established by the catechist, or by any other gentleman who will institute so invaluable a course of instruction.

Catechist.

"The catechist does not reside in this place, but seems anxious for the welfare of the children, and will, I have no doubt, direct more attention to the advancement of the children in scriptural knowledge than he has done hitherto; he seems convinced that such increased attention would prove beneficial."

Appendix, N^o 27.

TRIM SCHOOL; visited 14th December 1817.

(Converted into a Day School.)

Clothing.

N^o 27.
Trim School.

"THE clothing was of the last year, except the stockings and shifts, which the mistress stated to Mrs. Thackeray were of this year; if this be so, many of the stockings are already worn out. It is impossible that the clothing could be in a worse state, to be worn by persons who ought always to be, though in a plain, yet in a neat and tidy dress. There are no handkerchiefs or bibs given to the children, a very few of the girls were supplied with them by their parents. The mistress we consider very culpable in this respect.

General Appearance.

"The clothing being in as bad a state as it could be, and the children very dirty and neglected, it is impossible that they should not appear very discredibly, though the children themselves are not generally different from those of other schools. Of the clothing of this year no examination has been had, the mistress reporting that it is not ready; and yet she states she has begun to use it, nay, some of the stockings are nearly worn out! How a correct statement can be made under these circumstances I cannot conjecture. The linen of the children is changed but once a week, and the stockings seldom.

Classes

179
N^o 27.Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on Charter Schools.Classes for Education.

"In education we consider their progress only moderate; and what is very remarkable, we found the progress of the higher classes less creditable than that of the lower. Mrs. Thackeray learned from some of the girls, that this arose from the elder girls being employed more than the younger. This supposes that their hours of education are infringed on by acts of labour. This is the only school in which such a circumstance appears to have taken place, and calls for correction. Their manner of writing was improved by the last usheress, and all that they know of accounts, it is stated, was learned from her; this knowledge, however, is very limited.

Morals of the Children.

"Upon the authority of the master, I state, that there is one girl a notorious liar and pilferer, and one or two other offenders in the former respect; we thought we detected also some girls in whom there was a disregard for truth. To remedy these evils, a stricter discipline than is practised or understood here is absolutely necessary.

Religious Knowledge.

"The children were perfect in the repetition of catechisms generally, but of the Scriptures, in the way of explanation, they are very ignorant. We have rarely met at any school less creditable progress in this important point; the catechist seems to lament it; and I think, unless some united efforts be made on the part of all interested in the state of this establishment in its moral and religious progress, I cannot perceive any benefit will result to the Society from its continuance. The master and mistress themselves appear to possess very limited qualifications to promote this improvement.

The usheress has but lately come here, and it remains to be proved whether she has ability to effect such a reformation; there are some circumstances which would lead us to doubt it, perhaps her extreme youth and uncommanding appearance the greatest. Unless a zeal be evinced by the members of the local committee and catechist, I think it would be wise to remove the girls to some other schools, and suppress this altogether.

House and Offices.

"These are in a neglected state, and at best are badly arranged for a school. The only part that seems decent in its plan is the dormitory, which occupies the whole upper floor, and is, on this account, very airy. The addition of this upper story was built some years back; and as the schoolmaster was a builder, he was employed, and a shameful job he made of it. It would take much to put this house into a decent state, and some of the offices are without slating. There are, I believe, but eight acres in the farm, and as the Society have built a large boys school at Strangford, capable of containing two hundred children, perhaps the suggestion may be deemed worth consideration, which proposes that the boys at Ardraccan should be removed to Strangford as soon as the house can receive them, and that the Ardraccan house should undergo a thorough repair and any necessary enlargement, and the girls at Trim be transferred thither, and the establishment at Trim be suppressed altogether.

Garden.

"The garden seems in a reasonably good state, and pretty well cropped with vegetables; as he feeds the children mostly on salt provisions through the winter, the master is bound to give a greater supply of vegetables. In his defence, for storing so much salt meat, he states, that he cannot feed cattle on his limited farm, and that the market of Trim is too high priced for him to purchase there during the dear season.

State of the Play Ground.

"There is a field in which the girls may play, but it is not separated from the farm-yard and stables, and is therefore a very unfit spot for them. On this ground, and adjoining the stables, only a little thrown back, is the necessary of the children, most injudiciously placed indeed. There is no door; but, situated as it is, perhaps it is better without one, for modesty can find the means of privacy where immodesty cannot find concealment; and it may in the present case be a less evil, that the situation be an exposed one, than that it should answer for concealment. If this institution is to exist, particularly for girls, it is absolutely necessary a new site should be found for this necessary appendage to every school.

State of Bed and Bedding.

"Nothing was satisfactory in this respect in this school, there was a slovenliness in every thing; and the promising more care in future was the answer to all our objections. We were not satisfied with the care of the dormitory more than with the other parts of the establishment.

Rules and Regulations.

"Had these been duly regarded, the observations already made could not have applied. It will be well that these should be read periodically, and reported as having been read before the whole establishment, in the quarterly or half-yearly accounts.

Local Committee.

"Little attention seems to have been paid to this school by the local committee. Two or three gentlemen attended at a meeting I had requested, and something was said of more vigilance in future. But as this is a school for girls, unless female co-operation be obtainable,

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

obtainable, with local guardianship of it (and I know not whether it can be obtained, I despair of much good resulting to the public or satisfaction to the Society by its continuance.

Master and Mistress.

"I remember, when these persons were first appointed, I visited this school, and thought them likely to answer very well. Want of vigilance on the part of others has occasioned neglect in them; and if the Society intend to have these persons really efficient, they must be excited to new efforts in all that can fit them as such, for there cannot be a doubt that the system here is sadly relaxed in every respect, and requiring immediate amendment.

Usheress.

"Whether this person has qualifications for her situation remains to be proved, for she has but lately been appointed to it. She is very young, and certainly, in our opinion, not qualified to advance an establishment, which requires great exertions and ability to restore it to its former rank; or perhaps, which will be more difficult, to bring it upon a par with many other schools belonging to the Society.

Apothecary.

"This person seems not duly qualified for his office; inasmuch, as I understand, it is necessary to apply for further medical aid in cases of sickness which are out of the commonest description. If the school continue to exist, it appears to me some person should be employed qualified to take charge of the health of the children, without exposing the Society to any additional expense on account of medical aid.

Apprentices.

"Of the last thirty-one children apprenticed from hence the master reports twenty-three continue members of the Protestant religion, and doing reasonably well, as far as he knows; of five others he has no knowledge. Two eloped from their places, and one became a member of the Roman Catholic church.

Servants Conduct.

"The dirty state of the house, particularly that for which the servants are responsible, is evidence against their fitness. There was, however, but one female servant in the house, the other was represented to have lately left it.

Catechist.

"This gentleman is aware that this school is by no means in the state in which it ought to be, and would willingly remedy its deficiencies; but his habits seem to be too studious and retired to qualify him, without co-operation from some active and practical member of the local committee, to reform all that is defective here. Whether such individuals will be found I cannot form any idea; but if this school is to continue as a female institution, it is absolutely necessary that female guardianship should be ensured for it; for I think, with the present materials, the most active catechist that ever was would find it difficult to make the school creditable to the Society. I have suggested two plans, in other parts of this Report, for the consideration of the board, respecting the Institution; one or other, in my opinion, should be followed.

Employment of Children.

"Mrs. Thackeray was not satisfied in this respect; more girls were employed making lace than ought to have been; and the mistress purchased some of those articles for the children, which it would have been proper practise for them to have made themselves.

Stores and Feeding.

"We thought the potatoes in use at the time we were there were of a very inferior sort indeed, and we objected to such quantities of salt meat being given; the cause assigned by the master for this latter circumstance has been given before.

"The children, however, looked healthy in general, and expressed themselves satisfied."

Appendix, N° 28.

Extracts from the General Report of the Rev. Elias Thackeray, on his visiting the CHARTER SCHOOLS in 1818, and printed in 1819.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

"IN reviewing the state of the schools this year, under the various heads which were specified in my last year's Report, I think myself fully authorized to state, that no considerable improvement has taken place in those establishments with which, on the former inspection, I thought there was reason to be dissatisfied; and that in those, in which I saw then cause for commendation, the same ground still exists, strengthened in almost every case by increased efforts on the part of the superintendents, to advance the efficiency of the establishments committed to their trust.

"Occasional and temporary drawbacks have, however, in some few instances impeded the progress of improvement. Typhus fever; the loss of valuable teachers; and the difficulty of obtaining competent successors, have had, to a certain extent, a prejudicial operation; yet making due allowance for those impediments, which, in existing circumstances, stances, no management could have prevented, I feel I may conscientiously affirm, that, with very few exceptions indeed, the progress of improvement in the state of the several establishments is both satisfactory and creditable, and that I consider them in general, as most substantially answering the object for which they are at this time supported, that is, as an asylum for the orphan and distressed, in a country in which, from various peculiar circumstances, such an asylum is indispensable, and also (what certainly is no less requisite) as moral nurseries, from whence to send forth influential specimens of sound religion and well-regulated morals."

"With regard to the clothing, it was obvious that material benefit had resulted from the instructions which the committee of fifteen had superadded to their rules in the course of the present year. Although the full effect cannot be ascertained until the delivery of the clothing of the present year, enough appears to justify the expectation, that the advantages which the Society reckoned upon will be substantially accomplished.

"The general appearance of the children did not disappoint our hopes. We found the schools so free from disease as to do great credit to the care of the superintendents; and every thing we saw afforded proof that the children had been faithfully fed, and kindly treated.

"I am happy to add, that expressions of content and cheerfulness were not wanting. The children's manner of meeting us was every where cordial and gratifying; and, with one or two exceptions, they seemed to shew similar feelings towards the master and other superintendents of the establishment.

"Circumstances noticed in the former Report, as unfriendly to the school education of the children, have in a great measure disappeared. Such masters as had considered themselves exempt from sharing in this duty, on account of the supposed necessity of managing their farms, appear to take their part in the business of the school, agreeably to the original rules and those since added. The progress of general education evinces an increased solicitude in the teachers to discharge their duty, and on the part of those who are taught, a desire for improvement, which, taken together, afford a gratifying proof of present efficacy, and a no less pleasing pledge of permanent advantage.

"With respect to religious instruction, I am happy to say, I perceive a progress, on which I cannot but congratulate the Society. In schools in which, at our former visitation, religious knowledge was almost entirely confined to the repetition of catechisms and the mere reading of the Scriptures, questions leading to explanation are answered as competently as could reasonably be expected from persons of their age. In others of the establishments, wherein religious instruction was heretofore duly appreciated, increased efforts seem to have been made to impress the minds of the youth of both sexes with a correct sense of the practical duties inculcated in the Scriptures, as well as to give them a clear and competent apprehension of Christian doctrine."

"It was not only evident to us, but it was confessed by the masters themselves, that the rules of the Society, together with the additional instructions of the present year, leave nothing of the duties of superintendents unexplained; that the code of directions thus furnished, provides for every case to which the circumstances of the schools are likely to give rise.

"Most of the superintendents have shown themselves anxious faithfully to comply with these rules. In some instances the catechists do not seem to have admitted the necessity of being present when these rules were read. This circumstance, as far as it has occurred, has necessarily impeded the intentions of the committee.

"As I am more than ever inclined to attach value to these directions of the parent committee, from the benefits which have arisen wherever they have been duly regarded, I cannot but suggest that the wishes of the board be so repeated, as to remedy the neglects of this nature, which inadvertence may have occasioned.

"In the mean time I have ventured to sanction a practice already adopted in several instances, namely, that the masters themselves should read the rules as directed, monthly, in the presence of the whole establishment. In fact, the more intelligent masters had seen the propriety of attending to this new regulation, and had complied with it, without waiting for the presence of the catechists, when they found the period passing which was assigned for the performance of this duty.

"The visits of the members of local committees have of late, in some instances, been more frequent, and no doubt can be entertained but that much good has ensued; still, in many schools, the attention of local committees is confined to meetings held quarterly, or on some supposed emergency. To the female committees of some establishments the Society is indeed greatly indebted, and nothing could be more desirable, than that similar feelings could be every where excited.

"It is, however, to the catechists that the Society must ever, in a great degree, look for the success of their establishments, as well as for circumstantial correctness in their periodical reports. As it is still to be regretted, that in some schools the weekly reports of catechists go so little into detail as scarcely to supply any evidence of the progress of the schools with which they are connected, I would venture to suggest to the board, that where it is needful, the catechists should be reminded of their duty by a still more forcible statement of the expectations of the board, and of their determination not to dispense with a measure so essential in every point of view to the interests of the institution.

"I have felt it my indispensable duty to make this observation, because, in one or two instances, the visits of the catechists, and the reports of those visits so uninforming, were so rare, as to leave it doubtful whether any advantage could follow, either from such visits

N^o 28.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

visits or from such reports. I have sincere pleasure, however, in adverting to the numerous reports at this time before the board, which serve to shew what valuable services the institution is capable of receiving from the strict and regular attendance of these most important officers of the Society."

"In what relates to the lodging and feeding of the children, it must be expected that shades of difference should appear in such a number of schools; but it may be safely affirmed, that on the whole both health and comfort are duly provided for, and that the general economy of the schools is well suited to the purposes for which they are supported.

"It has been argued by some that the circumstances of the children are too comfortable, and yet what excess of comfort could be pointed out, beyond the accommodation which health requires, and the common decencies to which lower life should be taught to aspire, not only because they constitute a growing stimulus of honest industry, but because, next to religion, they are the surest preservative from the vices most destructive to the working classes.

"I have no new remark to make respecting the occupations of the children, except to declare, that I feel more strongly than ever the expediency of introducing the loom. The opinions of those, on whom I could best rely, were so much in favour of the measure, that I think it my duty again to call the attention of the committee to that part of my former report in which this subject is noticed.

"Our inquiry respecting those who had been apprenticed last year was generally satisfactory. Some few instances had occurred of apprentices not continuing where they had been placed. But neither reason nor experience warrants the ascribing such separations in all, or even perhaps in the greater number of instances, to misconduct in the pupil. It should ever be remembered, that the master may as often be blameable as the apprentice. I must once more suggest, that the introduction of the loom in schools might serve to remedy this evil, by making apprentices, who had thus been trained, more valuable to a very suitable class of masters, who, on this account, would be more solicitous to take them and more disposed to treat them properly; and even where the separation was altogether chargeable on the apprentice, it would be some consolation to think, that what might be a single act of folly or rashness were not necessarily to prove his ruin, but that though he had erred, he had still a trade, by means of which desperate circumstances might be averted, and room be still found for salutary reflection and amendment of conduct.

"Various circumstances make it difficult for even the most attentive and zealous schoolmasters to keep their pupils generally, or for any length of time, in view, after the completion of their apprenticeship. The praiseworthy solicitude, however, of a master has so successfully surmounted these difficulties, and his watchful eye has so perseveringly followed those who were apprenticed from under his roof, that I cannot but record the fact, both to do credit to the individual and for the sake of example.

"The charter school of Celbridge furnishes the instance to which I refer. Since the founding of this establishment, in 1810, forty-one girls have been apprenticed; of these, one only left her place (where there is reason to think she had by no means been well treated), and sought an asylum in the school; one has died; from some cause no account can be obtained of two others; three have returned to their families, and the remaining thirty-four are known to be conducting themselves, all competently, and many remarkably well."

"In concluding the last report I shall ever make on this interesting subject, I would, once for all, entreat the attention of the Society to the suggestion which was offered in the Appendix to my former Report, respecting the capability of their institutions to supply Ireland with efficient parish clerks and teachers of both sexes. During my late visitation, I have made it my business to ascertain the extent in which Ireland at this moment stands in need of such a provision, and I have every reason to think, that no want is more sensibly felt than that of well-trained and well-instructed teachers, and duly qualified parish clerks.

"Being, therefore, deeply persuaded that no expedient could more certainly or more effectually supply this want, than that engrafture upon the charter school establishment to which I now refer, in my visits of this year, I have taken a list of those who appeared to me best fitted by their talents, industry and moral conduct, for being subjects of such an institution. I feel confident, that if this course were adopted, in a few years the supply of efficient teachers and of suitable parish clerks, would much more than compensate the necessary expense and trouble."

Appendix, N^o 29.

EXTRACTS from the particular Reports of the CHARTER SCHOOLS, visited by the Rev. Elias Thackeray in 1818, and referred to in the preceding General Report for that year.

ARDBRACCAN SCHOOL; visited 17th December 1818.

Bed and Bedding.

N^o 29.
Ardbaccan School. neglected.

"This is the only school in which Mrs. Thackeray thought this part of the house really

Master

183

Master and Mistress.

"The dirty state in which we found the whole house reflects discredit upon these officers, and I would recommend that they be cautioned by the board on this account; from all I heard there they were considered respectable in their conduct, but certainly they were defective in the two points which I have noticed in the management of the establishment.

N° 29.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Food and Treatment.

"I entertain no doubt the children are correctly fed and kindly treated.

"The great objection I have to this school is, that in its construction and in its care there is, in my judgment, great defect."

Appendix, N° 30.

ATHLONE SCHOOL; visited 2d and 3d September, 1818.

Clothing.

"Upon examining the state of the clothing, we had much to object to; but on inquiry, we found we had no cause for considering the present master as liable to any blame.

N° 30.
Athlone School.

"It appears, that of the shoes left with the present master, there are twenty-nine pairs too small for the boys. I know but of two ways to account for this; either the late superintendent did not send up proper measures to the Society, or in quitting this, the shoes that were the smallest in the stores of the school, were left behind; and the only way this could happen, would be to suppose that all the shoes of the preceding year had not been given to the children, and therefore were retained by the late superintendents as their own perquisites. This, I know, has often occurred; and it will be well to put an end to any such appropriation on the part of the masters, in future. If this should be the true way to account for such a quantity of small shoes being left with the present master, the evil, at least one of the evils, which arise from permitting masters to consider the clothing not used by the children, as their own, is very apparent; eleven of the boys, at present, are so far without shoes, that they cannot go out to church; and I have ventured to direct the master to have that quantity made up for them. The master will account for those he has at present in store, and for which he can have no use.

"The children have had only two pair of stockings: the blame of this lies with the late superintendent. They can manage in this respect till the clothing of next year is given out.

Education.

"Some progress has been made in education by the greater part of the school. The children date their improvement from the arrival of the present master. Their method of reading, however, was very dull; and I recommended to the master a more spirited method of instruction. Their answering was so slow and dull, it was fatiguing. They are improved in writing, and also in arithmetic and spelling. There are some boys here, and some large ones too, who know nothing, and never will.

Religious Education.

"In this too, they are much improved, as far as the lecture class, and very few are defective in the knowledge of the catechisms. As all these improvements are stated to have taken place since the arrival of the new master, the visitor of next year will, I have little doubt, have good reason to be satisfied with the state of this establishment.

House and Offices.

"Except that the infirmary has been put in order for patients, should it be required for that purpose, nothing has been done to the buildings, I believe. On the spot I wrote a note to the secretary, to state that something was required to be done to the roof, before the winter. To this observation, I have to add, that unless the kitchen chimney be raised, so that the house be free from the dreadful smoke with which it is, and has been for years poisoned, all attempt at keeping it clean, is vain. I never met any thing so offensive; and as long as it thus continues, it will always be represented by persons who visit that school, as being dirtily kept.

"The bed-rooms are kept reasonably clean, every other part but moderately so; and I have no doubt, one cause is, the despair of doing any good, and of contending successfully against the kitchen chimney.

The Farm.

"The master, I believe, is doing his best to make his farm profitable. When the funds will permit, the fences should be permanently repaired; at present it is trespassed upon in every direction, by persons the most dangerous for the morality of such an establishment. The grounds of the schools are placed, unhappily, between the barracks, and the fields between them are the retreat of all the vicious women of Athlone. At an expense which it is well worth encountering, the fences can be made to resist these trespasses; at present, their intrusion is not to be prevented. In the mean time, I would recommend that the mason work around the door by which the school is approached from the side of the Shannon, be made good, and the door kept always locked. This would give a great check to trespassers, as it would close the shortest intercourse from barrack to barrack, which those people are wont to take. The magistrates of the place, who, I believe, are chiefly members of the local committee, and the field officers, would support the establishment were violence attempted.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Local Committee.

"At my request, upon my former and my present visit, the members of the local committee were good enough to meet us. They entered fully into the business of the day, and into the circumstances of the establishment generally. If this place were once put into the order which would become it, I feel it would not want local guardians to visit it. It cannot be denied, the smoky state of the house, the few children that inhabit it, with some other circumstances, discourage any steady attendance. I know not whether it can be remedied; but if the board have power to correct these evils, it would be very desirable. Athlone is the great pass of the Shannon; and the state of a large charity, to which local circumstances give a peculiar interest, is often the subject of conversation, as it appears just now always the subject of regret, often of complaint. The board will understand the cause of my hinting at these things, and I am confident, as soon as they can find a remedy for them, will do so.

"Before I conclude this article, I ought to state, that I find no where a committee more disposed to meet, and fairly communicate with the visitor from the Society, than in Athlone.

Catechist.

"I am not acquainted exactly, whether there be a catechist, or not, attached to this school; I mean receiving a salary as such. I cannot but lament, that any thing should have occurred to prevent an arrangement which would have made this school a valuable portion of the establishments almost instantly, and have secured its well-doing beyond any other arrangement that can be suggested.

Master and Mistress.

"I consider these persons, as endeavouring upon principle, to discharge their duty; the situation of the school seems to be admitted on all hands, to have been improved under their care.

"Unaccustomed to that minute attention which is required to be given to such establishments, they will be improved by the observations of any persons who will point out to them strictly what is defective in their management, particularly as they are very desirous to do whatever is right. I regret, therefore, that they have not the benefit of a very active and investigating catechist, in the management of all their domestic concerns. I must notice, that the servant they have brought from Dublin is little more than a child, and that even if there were no particular cause that occasioned the dirt of this house, the servants (as this is one of them) are not qualified to keep the house clean. The master has promised me he will find out a more efficient person; but, notwithstanding my entire belief that he will do so, I would wish that the board should notice this improper appointment, that he may learn to avoid in future any management which may accommodate himself at the expense and to the injury of the institution. I entertain no doubt, but that these persons will become very useful servants of the Society.

Usher.

"The success of this young man's efforts to instruct, are made very apparent, though he is sensible, I believe, and not without information; his method seems bad; his conduct is irreprehensible. As an usher here, I think, considering the number at present, and likely to be for some time in the school, his services, or those of any other person, are not much required. The master should be able to undertake the whole management of education and support of twenty-seven children.

"If a method could be discovered, which would not by his removal bring disgrace upon him, or make him think himself hardly treated, I should hold it very fortunate. I do not think him likely ever to be a valuable officer under the Society; and possibly half a year's salary given him in advance, and his discharge, because his services are not wanted in a school whose numbers are so reduced, would induce him to retire without any feelings of disappointment, and, I should think, without any just cause of complaint. He is an officer under the Society who does not deserve to be treated with any harshness, but whose retirement from it cannot occasion any regret, because his manner of instructing is not successful.

Servants.

"There is one servant who remained in the school after the late family left it; the other girl is almost a child. Of her I have taken notice in a former part of this report, as totally unfit to act in such an establishment.

"The other servant, who was here, and an apprentice from Baggot-street, is in the last state of pregnancy, by the son of a civil officer in the adjoining barrack; if she could be believed, she is also to be pitied. Steps are taken to support her until she is delivered, and I believe will be to place her out of the reach of future profligacy; which, if she be sincere in her statement, she will gladly avail herself of.

Stores and Feeding.

"All is right in this respect; the children state that they are well fed and kindly treated."

Appendix, N° 31.

BALLYCASTLE SCHOOL; visited 5th and 6th August 1818.

Clothing.

"THOUGH there is room for still further improvement in this respect, yet, comparing the state of the children's clothing this year with the past, it is very satisfactory to observe the beneficial change which has taken place. The shoemaker was employed in the house making shoes for the ensuing year. I considered them much too coarse for any children, and directed that he should proceed no further in making such clumsy work. I hope the board will give directions that the nature of the shoes given shall minutely be inspected by the catechist, and such ladies of the local committee as will attend, and that they be requested to report particularly on this point. The yard in which the children play is certainly very rough, but the allowance granted, namely, three pair of shoes, is quite sufficient for the use of the children, when made neatly and reasonably thick.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Ballycastle School.

"The school is in want of both bonnets and cloaks.

General Appearance of the Children.

"The improvement of the children in this respect is very gratifying. By referring to the report last year, it will appear nothing could be less civilized than they were. I mentioned as an instance of this, that when I released the children from their examination last year, and gave them leave to play, they reluctantly were put in motion, and waddled out to the warmest corner of the yard, one bright day, and huddled together in the most barbarous manner. Curiosity led me to try the effect of the same liberty this year; they had not left the line of inspection in which they were under restriction five minutes, when the whole party had formed themselves into circles for play, and exhibited by their dancing and singing a most pleasing scene, and a perfect contrast to that which gave us some pain upon the former occasion. I calculated from this change, that, when I came to examine their progress generally, I should find much improvement; I was not disappointed.

"There are some girls grown up, nay, women, which have since Christmas been sent here from Dublin; it is quite impossible they should either benefit themselves or their companions by their continuance. By their own account, they have relations that are capable of supporting them, and some of them who are willing to do so. I would call the attention of the board to this fact, and, if they could get rid of any portion of these women, they would remove so much of the discredit that is thrown upon the institution for having girls on the establishment so ill taught, and so ill qualified, that not even the offer of a bounty will tempt the commonest farmer to receive them. From what I learnt at the school, it appears to me, that out of the ten girls lately sent down (and of whom no expectation can be formed of their doing credit to the Society), seven might be given up to parents. Their conduct is better now; but it occasioned, on their first arrival, great disgust in the ladies who form the committee, and who are particularly attentive to the interests of the establishment.

Education.

"The progress of the children in general education during the last year is very creditable to their instructors. In reading, spelling, writing and arithmetic, evident pains have been taken, and I understand that similar care has been taken with respect to work.

Religious Instruction.

"But in religious knowledge their progress has been particularly creditable. Last year they knew nothing; this year, though there are few above twelve years old (for, in speaking of this school, I mean those who have been regular members of it, not those aged girls lately sent to it), many can give a pretty general account of the Old Testament, and such an explanation generally of the four Gospels, as would satisfy the most sanguine expectation of any examiner who is at all acquainted with what may reasonably be expected from children under the age of fifteen.

Morals of the Children.

"In my former report I stated, that lying was a vice almost universally prevalent in this school; now it is rarely found to exist; and I am happy to learn, that the monitress of each class is wont to report to the usheress any instance of untruth she detects in the class under her; so strongly impressed are the seniors of these young girls with the enormity of that detestable vice. It does not appear that any other immorality is found amongst them at present.

"In congratulating the children upon the many improvements I found amongst them, one of them answered, that they felt themselves much happier, for they were better instructed, and better managed.

State of the House and Offices.

"Having, in my former report, entered fully into this subject, it only remains for me to say, that nothing particular has been done to it since; that the same reasons exist now as then for recommending what was recommended at that time.

"With respect to the care of the house and offices, I owe it to the family to observe, that those things which we considered neglected on our former visit, appear to me now to be well taken care of, that I found no occasion to complain in any respect of want of attention; and that, with respect to the bed-rooms, their condition seemed to be particularly creditable in every thing that falls within the management of the family.

N° 31.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Beds and Bedding.

"No blame can be attached this year, as we thought there did last, to the mistress, on account of the state of any articles connected with the bedding, which then were not kept in proper repair. It is necessary, however, to state, that no supply of blankets and quilts has been furnished this year to this school, though they have long been in want of it. It is necessary for the health of the children it should be no longer deferred. The children are absolutely in want of bed clothing. The quantity has been specified by the local committee at their quarterly meetings.

State of Play Ground.

"I believe the sum of five pounds would establish the play-ground for the children in the place where it should be. A farm-yard must prove an improper situation for females to play in; and by this alteration, the approach to the public necessary of the children would become invisible to the labourers about the place. I would recommend, as soon as it can be done conveniently, that this change should take place. The yard, in the mean time, is kept in very good order; that is, very clean.

Master and Mistress.

"After the report I have made of the present state of the school, it will be expected that I ascribe to these persons their due share of credit. To the aid of the local committee and catechist, certainly, much is due; yet I attribute more to the strict adherence to the rules of the Society, which the master and mistress have, I have every reason to believe, conscientiously regarded throughout the last year. Upon a former occasion I thought these persons deserving to be censured strongly by the board; upon the present they appear to me to merit their approbation; and I entertain little doubt, that hereafter they will be found amongst the officers of the Society, who will be considered valuable.

Usheress.

"I can give the most unqualified credit to this young person for her conduct during the last year; she has obtained the greatest praise from the ladies of whom I have had occasion to speak in this report, and their praise is very valuable. In education, both moral and religious, there is every evidence of her care, and of the good which has resulted from it. I am happy to think she was brought up from her infancy under the Society, and has now become one of its most useful instruments, in furthering those benevolent objects by which she has so greatly benefitted.

"She was educated in Dundalk school, afterwards in Bagot-street, and had the benefit of Mr. Murray's lectures.

Apprentices.

"Every information I could obtain respecting apprentices, was satisfactory for the last year, both with respect to their morals and their adherence to the established church. Four have been sent out during the last year, and there are applications for four more. Of those girls who were last sent from Dublin, it is not likely that more than three could obtain places in the North, not only because they seem very undesirable generally, but because they know nothing of spinning, the only knowledge that could make them acceptable with the farmers of this district.

Employment of the Children.

"The master thinks it would be very desirable to introduce weaving with the fly shuttle, and states, that he has some knowledge of the business, and would gladly undertake it."

Appendix, N° 32.

CASHEL SCHOOL; visited October 10th, 1818.

Clothing.

"THE clothing was in a very good state, but there was the same course pursued here in the management of it as in many other schools, which I shall not think it necessary to enlarge upon in any future Reports, but be satisfied with noticing. It happened here that some boys who had received only two pair of shoes, had very wet feet, which must be the case as long as the weather remains bad.

General Appearance.

"They were also totally free from disease (one boy excepted, who was confined with fever, and another who had met with an accident, and was in bed). I do not include in this number, however, one boy with sore eyes from Clontarf, and two with the falling sickness from Clonmel, who have just now been sent here.

"It seems very desirable that more care should be taken in the selection of children transmitted from one school to another; and that the ages also, or the object for which they are transmitted, should be noticed.

"The boys sent from Clonmel to Cashel appear as old as the boys who are to be transplanted from Cashel to Innishannon. If the motive for sending them to this latter place be the prospect of getting them earlier apprenticed, they might as well have at once been transplanted from Clonmel, whereby an expense attendant upon a journey to Cashel and back a great

N° 32.

Cashel School.

a great part of the way, might have been saved. I observe too, that much larger boys remain at Clonmel than those who have been just sent from thence to Cashel; at all events, it is not I suppose the intention of the board for masters to send diseased boys from their schools; a boy with very sore eyes has been sent from Clontarf, and two boys, I think, with falling sickness from Clonmel.

"Would it not be desirable to forbid a master sending a diseased child from his school, unless by the special orders of the board itself."

187
N° 32.
Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 33.

CASTLEDERMOT SCHOOL; visited November 1818.

Education.

"IN their own view the boys have made much progress during the last year, and I think they have also in mine. There is however a greater inequality in their progress than is usually found. The lecture class answered well in St. Matthew's gospel, and very well in Sellon's Abridgment. In catechisms they were more deficient than I expected.

N° 33.
Castledermot
School.

Morals.

"There are a few refractory boys, but the improved understanding that exists between the master and the boys generally, is evidence I think of a moral improvement in both. The boys feel, as they assured us, much happier this year than last, and they think they have acquired a better sense of propriety. Those who have exhibited any thing of a refractory spirit, did so towards the usher only, who in point of age and strength and size, is hardly their superior. If I recollect right, these boys are a late admission from the school of Clontarf.

Master and Mistress.

"It will be recollected by the board, that upon the occasion of our last visit, these persons appeared to us to deserve marked censure, which at that time they received from the committee of fifteen. It is a pleasing duty I have to perform in stating, that it appears to me to have had its proper effect. Though my estimate of their qualifications may not be very high for the situation they occupy, I feel certain they have taken considerable pains to discharge their duty to the Society; and I was happy to observe, that those causes of irritation which existed, not without reason on the part of the boys, were altogether removed; and that the good understanding which ought to exist between master and scholars was in no way interrupted by harshness, or want of due care and feeling on the part of the former."

Appendix, N° 34.

CASTLEMARTYR SCHOOL; visited 29th October 1818.

Education.

"THE boys consider themselves to have made great progress during the last year in general education, in the knowledge of the Scriptures, and in a sense of their duty towards others, themselves, and their Maker. Comparing their acquaintance with the Scriptures with that of some other schools, I was a little disappointed, but upon the whole, the knowledge they exhibited, and the cheerfulness of their replies, was gratifying. The catechist has taken pains to teach them the value of our church liturgy, and one boy particularly evinced that he had benefited much by this gentleman's instruction. In the various catechisms used in the school they were very perfect. Bibles are used by the boys when testaments alone are wanted; this seems a very unnecessary expense, and I would recommend that the master be directed to correct this inattention.

N° 34.
Castlemartyr
School.

Rules and Regulations.

"The suggestion requesting that these should be read before the whole establishment, has not been adverted to by the catechist; I have, however, directed the master to take care that this be followed by him in future. I think it likely this will be duly regarded hereafter by the catechist.

Local Committee.

"I saw the Rev. Mr. Smith, who is rector of the parish, and catechist of the school; to his superintendence the board will look principally, as a member of that body. It does not appear that he receives much co-operation at present; the Society, however, may feel quite at ease as long as this gentleman continues to reside at Castlemartyr, whether the other members of this local committee are within reach of the school or otherwise.

Employment.

"The loom, or as the master suggests, the hosiery business, might be carried on successfully here, and would preserve the boys from the severity of unfeeling or neglectful masters. There is, upon recollection, one objection to the hosiery business; I have been told, on good authority, I believe, that this trade produces more ruptures than any other, where boys are either very young, or have any tendency to weakness."

Appendix, N^o 35.

CHARLEVILLE SCHOOL; visited October 4th, 1818.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Charleville School.

Clothing.

" THE clothing in general was in good order, but the girls are not given bibs or handkerchiefs for common use, as in almost every other school, which gives to them a very mean and pauper-like appearance, differing much from that of other places. The effect of this too is much increased by the colour of the clothing, which is a dull olive, without any relief from any other colour. We cannot see any reason why the mistress should not supply the same quantity of handkerchiefs as are given in other schools, which Mrs. Thackeray has ascertained the clothing allowance can afford, or why the colour of the clothing here should differ from that of other establishments. Mrs. Thackeray thinks that the stuff she is preparing for the clothing of the children for the ensuing year, though superior to the past, is inferior to that used elsewhere. It would probably prove a remedy for such attempts at paltry savings to state, that whenever the clothing was found in any respect defective, a supply should for the future be sent from the Society, or from some other establishment. The custom here, as in some other schools, is to give out only such a portion of clothing as the mistress thinks there is occasion for. There is reason to fear, that in consequence of this course, children are often the sufferers. Here the children seem to have a more restricted allowance of clothing than in most schools we have visited; two pair of shoes, as many shifts and stockings, is all that have been given out to the girls this year, and some girls state, they have had only one pair of the former. The period for giving out the new clothing is at hand, so that the mistress will have the benefit of one-third of these articles during the last year, a perquisite that is attended with much evil, and which ought to be disallowed in future. I have no intention to charge the masters or mistresses with corrupt conduct in this respect; it was a privilege that they have hitherto enjoyed, to manage the clothing in their own way, but it must of necessity happen, that they would manage it with a view to their own profit, and it must as naturally follow almost, that they should do it to the disadvantage of the children; it is an evil that requires to be corrected, without however inflicting any penalty upon the masters, where it has hitherto existed. If no other evil followed from this system, it would be sufficient to notice, that it has caused disaffection in the children, and that they complained of it as a grievance. The catechist assures me, he will in future enforce the additional rules that have been made respecting clothing; and that have just been received.

General Appearance.

There is much room for improvement in this respect. The want of bibs or handkerchiefs, and the colour of the clothing, will explain this, without noticing the dissatisfied manner of some of the girls, who were determined to make the complaint above stated. There are, however, some very improving girls at the head of the school, and from its generally ameliorated condition, which has been observed by the local committee and the catechist, and which the girls themselves state that they feel, I trust that hereafter there will be no cause of complaint amongst the children, and any future visitor may derive satisfaction from inspecting this establishment. The children's hair, which is not well cut, contributed in part to make their appearance less favourable.

Education.

" They are much improved in reading, though still they read too quick. They are free from any vulgar accent. Some of the girls spell well; others only moderately; they are still inferior to most other schools in writing and accounts,, though much better than they were last year.

Religious Knowledge.

" One girl, Mary Lachford, was by far the best answerer in the Scriptures; the rest answered only tolerably well. The first class were perfect in the repetition of Mann's and Stopford's Catechisms; the second in Mann's only; all were able to repeat well the church catechism.

Morals of the Children.

" The mistress represents them as having very much improved of late in this respect; that they adhere more strictly to truth. To have made any progress in this point is most satisfactory, as the first steps towards this virtue are the only hard ones to be attained, if moderate pains be taken. The mistress complains that the girls often speak tauntingly; it is probable, when the only grievance of which they feel any cause to complain is removed (and it will be, I am confident, from henceforth), the complaints on the part of the mistress of the pertness of the girls will cease also.

House and Offices.

" The points, which in my last visit I had reason to bring to the notice of the committee of fifteen, having been considered, and the builder having made good, as far as he could, the defects in his original work, and the whole matter having been adjusted, it is not necessary I should say any thing more on that subject with respect to what has passed; I feel it my duty, however, to the Society to refer to it, as supplying important suggestions in regard to future management. The repair of and additions to this old house has, if I am rightly informed, cost not much less than the new school of Dundalk, and something yet remains to be done, to prevent the dining-room from being the worst and most inconvenient hall belonging

Rev. E. Thackeray.
Report on
Charter Schools.

belonging to the Society, nor can it ever be made a proper room. I mention this circumstance, that the board may, in any future buildings, consider whether it will be prudent to undertake to repair and to add to old houses, rather than to erect new ones altogether, when they shall have occasion to do the one or the other. The imperfect manner in which this building was completed, arose, I believe, from the contractor having sub-contractors under him, and from no power of superintendence being given to the local committee, who, as they stated to me, did not feel themselves authorized to interfere in the progress of the work. I mention these circumstances, that the board, in any future undertakings, may, if they think right, prevent sub-contracts of every kind, and avail themselves of the superintendence of local committees, in every one of which, it cannot be doubted, some one or more members are competent judges, and would be willingly occasional supervisors of the work carrying on. I think Mr. Farrel told me, he had resolved in future to insert a clause in every agreement with the undertakers of buildings for the Society, that there should be no sub-contracts. It may be prudent to inquire from him whether this is his determination.

Play Ground.

"There is abundance of room in the front of the house, in which the children may play, but it is an open space, terminating on two sides with roads. A wall seems absolutely necessary, to surround this ground. Should any young female be seduced from the school and virtue, it could not but be considered that due precaution had not been taken to prevent such a misfortune.

Medical Officer.

"I think, for I am not quite certain, there is no regular officer of health appointed to this school. The children, however, generally are in very good health, and the diseases of which we had in the report of 1817 to take notice, have all disappeared. There is one child here a sad nuisance, and must, I suppose, always remain a burthen on the establishment, unless inquiry be made after her parents, and they be tempted, by some pecuniary remuneration, to take charge of her. It is quite impossible she can derive any advantage from the education or the decencies to be procured here, and it would be very well if she were with her own family.

Master and Mistress.

"We have never, either on the present or the past occasion, had an opportunity of seeing the master; he was confined to his room with illness last year; and this he has been called to a distant part of the country, to attend at a trial upon some matter with which personally he had no concern. He is spoken of in this part of the country very respectably. The mistress is now rather aged, and perhaps never was very well calculated to perform the various duties that belong to her office; it is but justice to her, however, to say, that her management is much more creditable in many respects this year than last, particularly with regard to the cleanliness of the house and the dormitories. I doubt not she will take further pains to correct whatever we noticed to her as defective. Strict conformity to rule in every thing is probably the only way by which she can exhibit increased usefulness, and I would recommend, that the board should impress upon her the necessity of her attending to this duty, as the only means by which she can preserve her situation.

Usheress.

"It is agreed on all hands, by the local committee, catechist, by the mistress, and by the children themselves, that since the arrival of this young woman, much improvement has taken place in those matters which are connected with her department. By the usheress's account, when she first came to the school, she almost despaired of ever effecting any thing; now she finds her situation grown comfortable, and her duties becoming easier and pleasanter to perform; she had the good fortune to have been trained at Bagot-street, and instructed in the Scriptures under the Rev. Mr. Murray; her conduct has always been remarkably correct and steady, and we think her as likely as any usheress under the Society to train these children, and to qualify them, by the aid of good instruction and better habits, for becoming respectable in the stations they are hereafter to fill. By reference to the daily reports of the school, it will appear these sentiments which we have given, are in unison with those persons who have lately visited this establishment.

Servants.

"The servants of this house are two apprentices; one has served two years and a half, the other only a few months. They were both brought before us, as sulky and disobedient. I know not whether our advice will avail anything, but they would not open their mouths, except in a sulky manner, to promise to behave better in future, a promise on which we had not much reason to rely, as we heard them muttering and grumbling the instant they left the room in which we were sitting. The girl, who had but lately been apprenticed, was selected by the mistress out of her own school, for her cheerful obedient manner; the other, who seems to have corrupted her, was brought from Kevin-street; her countenance bespeaks her of an untoward disposition."

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 36.

CLONMEL SCHOOL; visited 12th October 1818.

[Converted into a Day School.]

Rules and Regulations.

Clonmel School.

" SOME of the boys stated, that the time granted by the Society to them for exercise was not duly attended to by the master. Upon investigation, which was in the presence of the master and usher and of the whole school, I think the boys established the fact; yet the non-compliance on the part of the master to this rule seemed more the effect of inattention than any improper desire to convert their labour during these hours to his own advantage; and I have to add, that the spirit in which the boys made their complaint was not at all in hostility to the master. The complaint was made, I am disposed to think, upon the suggestion of a boy who had come from a school where this rule was more strictly adhered to, who had felt the sweets of this liberty, and was desirous to continue to enjoy them.

" The master seemed quite astonished that the boys should have any complaint to prefer in which the pleasures of the children were involved; and upon his assurance that hereafter the most particular attention should be paid in giving them those hours of liberty which the Society directs for the boys, they expressed themselves quite satisfied on this point; and though complaint was made, I am satisfied ill will existed on neither side, and that every thing that passed afterwards between the master and the boys passed in perfect harmony.

" Now if the rule on this subject had (as is directed) been read on the receipt of the order and every quarter day, this cause of complaint would have been remedied probably as soon as they felt it. For the boys would have pointed out to the catechist this deviation from rule as they did to myself, and the same remedy would be found for any other grievance by the same means, particularly with regard to that I have so often had occasion to notice the non-distribution of the allowance of clothing.

Apprentices.

" The account of last year, in this respect, is by no means favourable. Two boys returned from their apprenticeships to the school, and were dismissed from thence for improper conduct; another boy has had his indentures transferred from a hatter to a gentleman, so he becomes a servant instead of a respectable tradesman; another boy is living with his mother, having lost his master, a tailor, by death, and can at present get no one to employ him; and of another boy, his master, a bootmaker, is perpetually making complaints.

" Two boys in the course of last year were added from this school to the list of apprentices; of their conduct there is no report.

Servants.

" There are three; but of these, I think, one must be under the age of twelve or thirteen, and therefore quite unfit to be considered as such.

Stores and Feeding.

" The rule that requires the weighing out of the provision has not been regarded; the master's reason is, that he does not like to stint them. I have directed him, however, to act by rule, and to be liberal afterwards, if he see occasion."

— N° 37. —

CLONTARF SCHOOL; visited 23d November 1818.

Rules and Regulations.

Clontarf School.

" AS far as I can learn from the boys, there is no reason to think these had been disregarded in matters which concerned them, only so far as I have before stated, yet I have to complain that they have not been read before the establishment, as enjoined; and I think the catechist should be directed not to pass over this, which is an important duty for him to perform.

Catechist.

" The plan he has commenced upon for instructing the boys in Scripture knowledge is very satisfactory, but I cannot conceal from the board that he should be excited to more active superintendence.

Master and Mistress.

" Many circumstances make the charge of this establishment a very heavy one. I am much disposed to respect these persons for the character they bear, yet I think the master requires to be excited a little, and the mistress to be told, as long as she does her duty, she has nothing to apprehend.

Apprentices.

" The report of these, for the most part, is satisfactory, though the conduct of some of them has been very exceptionable."

Appendix, N° 38.

DUNKERRIN SCHOOL; visited 11th September 1818.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Dunkerrin School.

Clothing.

" IT has been the opinion of many masters, that whatever clothing the children did not require throughout the year became their own property; thus it has sometimes happened, that children have received only two pair of shoes, and the same quantity of stockings. In this school, two pair of shoes have been all that were given, and it is probable that the master, who was brought up to the trade of making shoes, could take care to have them so made and mended as that they should answer better than in most cases.

" The rule, however, requires that the children have three pairs; and the wisdom of that rule becomes evident in this respect, that, if complied with, children will not be deprived of the full opportunity allowed for their play and exercise by the masters, with a view to save the shoes.

" Without ascribing to the masters this motive for their conduct, or considering that they acted unjustly in retaining (as has hitherto, I believe, been the custom) whatever articles of the annual clothing there was no occasion for, I think, for their sakes and the children's, it would be better the board should decide peremptorily upon this matter.

" The children here complained that they have not been permitted to enjoy the hours allotted for their play which the Society grant them; they made their complaint formally, and we thought they established the fact.

" If the rule which regulates this point be duly read in the presence of the establishment, I feel confident this will not happen again.

General Appearance.

" There is something in the manners of many girls in this school that does not give you a favourable opinion of them. Upon inquiry, we find there is a great deal of misunderstanding existing. We were employed a length of time in discovering the cause of it, and endeavouring to correct the irritation that prevails.

" In addition to the complaint made, that they did not get the liberty for exercise which the Society allows, the girls complained that they were unnecessarily severely treated by the new usheress, Mrs. Nellighan.

" I think the most they could prove in this latter respect was, that a more gentle manner would produce the effect which Mrs. Nellighan endeavoured to obtain by chastisement, though not too severely administered.

Religious Education.

" Though I doubt not the new usheress attends regularly to this branch of the children's education, it is quite certain they have much less of scriptural knowledge, and are less able to explain what they have read now than at our last visit. The late usheress was a very superior instructress, and her resignation of the office she held under the Society I consider much to be regretted. She had been educated under the Rev. Mr. Murray, and had proved the excellence of his system by the success which attended her following it here. With this method of teaching Mrs. Nellighan is unacquainted, and I recommended (to which she cheerfully acceded) that the junior usheress, who was too educated in Bagot-street, should for one hour in each day teach the children in the Four Gospels. I hope thereby that the knowledge which they once had in this respect may be regained.

Play Ground.

" No alteration has taken place in this, as recommended in last year's report. When money can be spared for minor objects, this is one on which it may very usefully be expended.

Rules and Regulations.

" These are not sufficiently attended to; if they had been, much possibly of the irritation that now exists might have been avoided. It is very probably, that when children felt themselves deprived of the full liberty they were entitled to for play and amusement, they went in ill humour to their books or work. The family are now sensible that obedience to rule is as much their interest as duty, and I have little doubt hereafter they will take care to comply with it.

Catechist.

" The catechist was prevented meeting me by an engagement which he could not avoid; I was induced, therefore, to write to him fully the opinion I had formed of the present state of the establishment, the methods by which it appeared it might be speedily improved, and the great necessity there was for all his exertion and vigilant superintendence.

" It may be possible he does not at present see the necessity for all this; but if he be induced to follow the suggestions I have taken the liberty to offer, he will, I have no doubt, see the propriety of them in the daily improvement of the establishment of which he is so important a local guardian by his office.

Master and Mistress.

" It seems to have been the great misfortune of these persons, that they had not the superintendence of watchful guardians to this place, who would have enforced obedience to the rules which should regulate it.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

" I do not mean that they have departed from rule with any improper intention; but it is certain that inattention to it has been the chief cause why this school is in a state that is not creditable to their care of it.

Apprentices.

" The account of apprentices from this school during the last year is not satisfactory; two of them have eloped, and of these one of them most probably has relapsed to Popery, as her brother, who is of that persuasion, has taken her off with him to America. In the course of the year, eight more girls were apprenticed, two were given back to their parents, and one girl has died.

" When we were at the house, some children were in confinement disgraced; their appearance was very unlike that of children trained in an established school.

Stores and Feeding.

" The master has not received the additional rules, which require that the whole of the allowance of food shall be weighed daily, and brought into the hall. When this rule is acted upon, evil disposed girls will not be likely to misrepresent, as I am confident they have done in this instance."

CHARTER SCHOOL OF DUNKERRIN; visited 26th February 1819.

" IN compliance with the desire of the committee of fifteen, that I should again visit the school in Dunkerrin, in order to ascertain the precise state of that establishment, which the contradictory statements respecting it seemed to leave to the board no other method of knowing, I proceeded on Thursday last to Dunkerrin, and employed the whole of Friday and a great part of Saturday in the investigation.

" It appears that some girls did go to Dean Hawkins to make complaint of ill treatment about five weeks back, and that an investigation of the matter took place before the local committee.

" If the local committee, either by a special report to the board, or in the daily report book, had taken notice of this matter, my visit to the school would have been altogether unnecessary. The reason for their not doing so however was, because they considered the complaints made totally unworthy of notice. The complaints were as follow:—

" Two girls complained of severe treatment from the usheress;

" One of being unjustly beaten by the mistress;

" And two that they were confined by night to sleep in the barn in place of the dormitories.

" I investigated these matters, and nothing could be more unjustifiable and causeless than the complaints against the mistress and the usheress. The first twelve girls in the school decided against the complainants in the presence of the whole establishment, and the complainants themselves came forward and confessed they had acted wrong, and were very sorry for their misconduct. These girls had merited punishment, and received it with very great lenity. It is satisfactory to add, that there is reason to think they have seen their error, for their conduct of late has been much improving.

" I cannot but think the girls who slept in the barn, though they had behaved very ill in having twice attempted to elope, had full cause to wish some one should interfere in their favour.

" It is about half a year since the last offence took place, and it was thought right that these two girls should be kept altogether separate from the rest, not only for example sake, but to prevent their inducing others to elope with them. Application was made at the time to the committee of fifteen, that these girls might be removed to Dublin, and they have been made to sleep out of the house in the barn or washhouse locked up ever since, in the expectation that the board would remove them to another school. Thus half a year has run on, and they have been punished by nightly separation from their companions, and by deprivation of the comforts of a good dormitory. The punishment seems to have been continued much too long, and to have been also injudicious. I took the liberty of directing them to be restored to their proper situation in the house; and as I hear from the master that their conduct of late has been much improving, I have little fear of their attempting to elope again.

" I am to observe, that the master states, that the local committee were aware of the circumstances under which these two girls were placed, and thought it best these should not be changed till information was obtained from the committee of fifteen.

" Upon this application to Dean Hawkins for redress of grievances rests the whole of the representations made respecting this school, that the children were in a state of rebellion from harsh treatment and floggings with horsewhips, as also I suppose the dean's determination, expressed to me (and which he stated he should express to the committee of fifteen), that he should decline all future superintendence of the establishment.

" I am happy in being able to bear testimony to the great and progressive improvement which is taking place in this school generally. The children uniformly express themselves as contented and happy, as receiving justice in every particular, and as treated with kindness, and strictly in conformity with the rules of the Society, with which they are now well acquainted, and to which they ascribe, together with the solicitude of the Society in sending a visitor annually to see them enforced, the improvement they find in their situation.

" I have

"I have satisfaction in stating, that Mrs. Nellighan, the usheress against whom the attack seems chiefly to have been made, has succeeded in acquiring the attachment of the children, to whom they must chiefly look (and altogether should the under usheress be at any time removed) for mental improvement. In my former report, I had occasion to notice that her manner with the children was not successful. Mrs. Thackeray gave her much advice upon this subject; she has, she tells me, followed it, and the result has proved very satisfactory.

"I cannot regret having been called on to make this visit to Dunkerrin at this time, because it leaves me no room to doubt that this school, which was amongst those few of whose moral state we could not approve, has very much improved; that the representations made against it were totally unfounded (except as far as the confinement of the two girls to sleep in an outhouse may be a part of them); that the rules of the Society are calculated to meet every object connected with the welfare of the school, and because that I have every reason to confide in the declarations of the children themselves, that they feel happy from the protection of the Society, and that they are improving in those points which best qualify them to fulfil the duties of their station."

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 39.

DUNMANWAY CHARTER SCHOOL; visited 22d October, 1818.

[Converted into a Day School.]

Clothing.

"IT happens that 60 pair of shoes are too small for the children now in the school; the boys must have grown surprizingly. With this exception all seems right. In the distribution of clothing now about to be made, reference to this circumstance should be had; that these shoes be brought to the use of the public in some other school.

Dunmanway
Charter School.

The Master and Mistress.

"The attachment to those who superintend them on the part of the boys, is evidence of their care and kindness. The mistress is disqualified from giving assistance by long ill health; but the attention of her daughter, a person of proper age and respectability, prevents any evil resulting to the establishment from this circumstance; the master in the general management of the house, exhibits sufficient competency; and I know not any school in which there is the appearance of more paternal superintendence. The boys exhibit an affection for him, which is very gratifying. It is easy to conceive masters, who as instructors, will far surpass him, that may prove much less valuable officers of the Society, inasmuch as his kind treatment and care of the boys seems to have a great moral influence on their conduct and habits."

Appendix, N° 40.

INNISHANNON SCHOOL; visited October 23d, 1818.

Education.

"IT will be recollected that this school was much neglected, insomuch, that the conductors of it were all removed during the last year. The present persons did not enter on their duties till February, and I entertain little doubt but that they have made every exertion to bring on the children in every department of their education. I have recommended a more lively system to be pursued, which I think will encourage the children better than that just now followed, and I have no doubt, it will be cheerfully adopted, both by master and usher. The former of these has not been in the habit of giving instruction, and the latter is much more diffident than he need be of his powers. The experience of a few more months will give to him courage, and to the master knowledge, which will make them useful servants to the Society. The children are generally very young. The progress of the lower classes has been more creditable to the exertions of the teachers and the industry of the boys, than of the first class; perhaps this may be accounted for in the total neglect of the preceding superintendents.

"The pains which have been taken to make them acquainted with the catechisms in use in the schools of the Society, recollecting their ignorance of them last year, I consider very creditable to the teachers, and they have advanced quite as far as I could expect under all circumstances, in explanation of the Scriptures. In the connection that exists between the Liturgy of our church and the Scriptures, they have received no instruction.

Innishannon
School.

State of Morals.

"With the exception of one boy, who is totally regardless of truth and integrity, and of another, who is abominably filthy (both of them should be returned to their parents), the account of the school is, in respect to morals, satisfactory. They are represented as fast improving, and I believe there is no room to doubt the truth of this representation.

"I avail myself of this opportunity of again suggesting to the board, the propriety of ascertaining

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

ascertaining from each school the names of those who from any cause are incorrigible, and have friends who can receive them, and of returning these children to them. The character of the institution suffers from the misconduct or disqualification of these children, and, I think the object for which it is supported, is lost sight of, whenever children are retained in it, who are decidedly incorrigible, and have parents that can provide for them. It appears to me too, it would have also a very beneficial effect on the inmates of these schools, if they saw that their continuance therein depended in a great measure upon efforts made by themselves. It is the idle and profligate that have been bred in these schools, not the intelligent and industrious, whose conduct is brought before the public, whenever this institution is brought into the view of it; and it would not be difficult to name persons, who might have been expected to regulate the conduct of these children, and to instil into them good principles before they left school, that have represented the whole establishment as bad, because they have seen badly educated children become bad men and women.

Rules and Regulations.

"The order book, which directs, that the rules of the Society should be read before the establishment, has not been attended to; but I believe the master has fulfilled his duty respecting them, in all that most materially concerns the Society, and the children committed to his trust.

Master and Mistress.

"These appointments have taken place since our former visit. It is but justice to them, to state, that they seem to be making every exertion on their part to do their duty, and to qualify themselves for an undertaking which is quite new to them. It is not possible, in considering the present state of the house, not to bear in recollection, what it was under the late people, and in so doing, not to be gratified by the improvement which has taken place in every thing that regards the health, the decency and the comforts of its inmates.

Usher.

"The usher is also a new appointment, and will, I have no doubt, prove a useful officer. I have suggested to him a more cheerful and lively manner with the children, in which respect alone, I consider him defective. He was trained up under one of the best ushers belonging to the Society, and possesses information, and an anxious desire faithfully to discharge his duty.

Play Ground.

"The late master most unjustifiably converted this spot to his own benefit, ploughing it up, so that the boys were restricted to a very limited space indeed. I was sorry to find the present master had pursued a similar course. He has promised to lay it down in grass this spring, and I think the board should direct that he must.

"The boys requested of me, in the presence of the master, that they might have their play-ground restored to them, as they enjoyed it formerly."

Appendix, N° 41.

KEVIN STREET SCHOOL; visited 10th December 1817.

Mistress.

"I DO not consider this person as possessing qualifications that are of much use in the school. I fancy whatever attention she gives is absorbed in the duties of the house, in management generally.

Usheresses.

"The senior of these has well preserved the system established last year, which has occasioned the very great improvement perceptible in this school; the junior, who is very young, seems desirous to discharge her duty faithfully. That the mistress does not treat these persons with the respect and kindness she ought, has been often declared. We had no opportunity of proving this, for they did not complain; yet it is quite in the power of the mistress, without exposing herself to any regular charge for misconduct, so to act, as to make the usheresses very uncomfortable. It would be very desirable, that visits should frequently be made by members of the committee of fifteen to this establishment, and that inquiry should be made with respect to the treatment these persons receive; for the labour of the establishment being in the greater degree theirs, it is but fair they should be taken care of. I fear the mistress considers herself their superiors, to an extent that no one else would be disposed to think her.

Apothecary.

"I would recommend, as I have before recommended, that a strict investigation take place, and that it be ascertained what boys and girls there are in the various schools who cannot answer the object of their being placed there. Whether they have parents or friends to receive them, and that every effort be made to disburthen the Society of these persons, whether disqualified by age, incapacity or infirmity. I am confident many of them would then be removed, to the great relief of the funds of the Society, and of its character, as many persons can see nothing in this institution but defects, and never speak of its inmates but to point out diseases and incapacity. I should suppose there might be altogether from 20 to 30 children thus disqualified.

Apprentices.

Kevin Street
School.

Apprentices.

Thirty-nine girls were bound out last year, and though there are some exceptions, the report is generally favourable of their conduct, as far as is known at the school.

Appendix, N° 42.

KILLOTERAN SCHOOL, near Waterford; visited 31st October 1818.

Clothing.

" THE state of the clothing was less creditable to the master and mistress than that of any other school we had visited, by many degrees. There was scarce a button left upon the knees of any of the breeches, and the stockings were in rags and filthy. From this latter cause, I was induced to make the whole school strip off their shoes and stockings, and the state of the legs and feet of a great many of them was evidence that very little attention was paid to cleanliness by the superintendents. It was Saturday, which the master pleaded in explanation of this state of things. Last year the children of this school were much afflicted with disease of various kinds. I have the pleasure to state, that this year the school is totally free, with the exception of one boy, who has sore eyes, the effect of scrofula. Killoteran School.

House and Offices.

" These were spoken of in my former Report. I think the master has acted improperly in taking possession of the large bed-room lately added to the school-house, for his own accommodation; last year he had it occupied by a lodger or visitor. It is capable of becoming a useful infirmary, if such should be wanted, and it should be set apart for this purpose; and the more particularly, because the original infirmary has been converted by him into a room for drying grain, for which object, it being over the oven, it is much better calculated. I would recommend, that the master be directed to return with his family to the room he formerly occupied, and on no account to convert this large apartment, lately built, to his own use and purposes.

" I consider this house as very slovenly kept, more so than any house belonging to the Society which this year I have visited.

Play Ground.

" The same slovenliness is exhibited in the management of this ground as I think I noticed in my last Report. In addition, a large heap of dirt has been for a long time collected in that part where the boys are most wont to play; it is hardly possible they should not on this account be perpetually dirty. This circumstance of itself should be sufficient to induce the master to remove it, if he were duly attentive to the appearance of the boys under his care.

" Upon the whole, I would recommend, that though approbation be expressed for the progress of the children in moral and religious improvement, the master and mistress should be made acquainted with the displeasure of the board, for the absolute slovenliness which is so generally apparent about the children and the place, and for the exceeding impropriety on their parts in possessing themselves of the late built room, of which a lodger of theirs had so lately been dispossessed, and which was built for very different purposes.

" Externally the beds and bedding appears not to be neglected, though it is impossible that feet so filthy as those which I ordered to be stript, must not, in two or three nights, make the sheets exceedingly dirty, and that from this circumstance the boys must remain untrained to cleanliness.

Rules and Regulations.

" These have not been read, as recommended by the Society, before the whole establishment; and I would recommend, that an order for their being so, be transmitted to all schools, and duly enforced.

Master and Mistress.

" Throughout this Report, I have had occasion so often to refer to these persons, that it will not be necessary to introduce them again here, further than to state, that in my opinion they should be warned that their slovenly habits have made a due impression on the Society; and that if any cause of complaint be brought and established against them hereafter, they will be considered not qualified for the offices which they at present occupy.

Employment.

" The boys are generally employed in the farm and garden, and in those matters about the house in which they can be useful. The master considers, that the introduction of the loom for the weaving of coarse linen, would be attended with great advantage to the children, and to the country.

Appendix, N° 43.

LINTOWN FACTORY; visited November 1818.

Clothing.

" WHEN the last master left this the boys were nearly in rags. The Society therefore undertook to give to each boy a new suit, that the new master might not sink under difficulties

Lintown Factory.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

culties caused by the mismanagement or misconduct of his predecessor. By this means the school is in a becoming state in this respect. I find, however, that the rules which govern charter schools have hitherto never been made to apply here; I strongly recommend that they should in future, in all the ways they can. The boys of this school have never had more than one clean shirt in the week, and one clean pair of stockings; the latter may be sufficient, the former never can, if decent habits are to be formed. The master has promised in future, that they shall have clean linen twice every week, and I am quite certain he will perform what he promises.

General Appearance.

"In this factory there are some fine intelligent pupils, but there are one or two much the reverse, and totally ignorant. The present numbers are very few, in order to enable the master to carry on the work of the factory (and it is very important he should be able to do so) it seems requisite that these should be augmented. I would suggest to the committee of fifteen, that they express to the local committee and catechist, their wish that none be recommended for admission but such as are likely to advance the object of the founder by a fair prospect of sufficient qualification, and to do credit to the institution; since the factory was last inspected by a visitor from the society ten boys have gone out of it, some of whom I know are much respected.

Education.

"In this school there are one or two boys who are considered incapable of improvement, and there are some others whose progress is not creditable. By the course of this establishment, only two hours are allotted in the day for instruction; on this account, I think every effort of the masters, as well as of the ushers, should be directed to the making this short period for education as profitable as possible. I am not certain, but I suspect the former master of the factory took no part in the duties of this period. The present master is amongst the best qualified of the instructors under the Society. He has promised to take his full share in the education of the boys, yet, confident as I am of his readiness to discharge any duty he undertakes, I cannot but wish that he should receive it as a positive order from the board, that he take an active part, and never be absent from the school-room during the hours of education.

"The usher has carried the scholars very far into arithmetic; but it appears to me, the slovenliness with which their books are kept would discourage any merchant from taking any boy into his office as a clerk, however highly he might applaud his knowledge of accounts.

"Some boys are well acquainted with the Scriptures, and can give a good account of their reasons for being Christians, and of the Protestant church.

Morals.

"The master considers the boys under his care as regularly proceeding in moral improvement; and particularly that in those vices, too prevalent in their class in life, deviations from strict truth and strict honesty, he has no cause to think them offending.

Master and Mistress.

"These are new appointments since my last visit, and I entertain no doubt the committee of fifteen will find them efficient and faithful. They appear to me persons possessing the qualifications one would wish to find in those who superintend such institutions.

Usher.

"This is also a new appointment. His qualifications as a teacher are by no means equal to those of the master who till of late filled the same office, but I have no doubt, benefiting by his system and example, as he will have an opportunity of seeing it daily in the school, he will become a very efficient usher. He has the proper dispositions, and talent sufficient."

Appendix, N° 44.

LONGFORD SCHOOL; visited on the 31st of August and the 1st of September 1818

General Appearance.

Longford School.

"BY referring to the report of this school for 1817,* it will appear, that in this respect the school was very unfavourably reported of; at present I can with pleasure state, that we formed a very opposite opinion in regard to it. All those causes for objection have been removed; and the children appear in every respect creditable, and comfortable and happy. The diseases of tinea capitis and ophthalmia, which were so prevalent, and of itch, which was almost universal, have (with the exception of two cases of the latter disorder), altogether disappeared.

"The board may recollect, that it was doubted whether masters and mistresses, and other local officers, could, with justice be made responsible for long continued prevalence of

* We could not obtain a copy of this Report, as it was not to be found in the office of the Society.

of disease in their schools ; the question seems to have been decided now. No school could have suffered more from protracted disorders, than this ; and it was considered almost without a remedy. The order which has made them responsible, has produced the effect expected ; for, in place of being disgusted by the dirty, or pained by the unsound appearance of children, visitors are gratified by the healthy and cleanly state of these boys. They find them capable of pursuing their improvement steadily, and without interruption from disease ; or partaking in the hours devoted to play, of the most chearful and healthy recreations.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Religious Instruction.

" The improvement of the boys in this important respect is quite gratifying ; such as could not have taken place if both the teacher and the pupil had not been very attentive. Of religious knowledge, last year, they were altogether ignorant ; they did not even know the catechisms correctly. This year all are perfect in these ; and with respect to scriptural information, those boys who may be expected to possess it, do so to an extent that must satisfy every reasonable expectation.

Morals of the Boys.

" The boys are represented to have conducted themselves extremely well during the last year. It will appear from my former report of this school, that at that time truth was not duly regarded by them.

Rules and Regulations.

" I have every reason to think, that those rules which have particular reference to the comforts and rights of the boys, are properly observed ; but the rule which requires that they should be read before the whole establishment, is neglected. I would recommend that the attention of the catechist be called to this neglect. Speaking generally, catechists themselves would thereby become more perfectly acquainted with the excellent laws by which these schools are governed ; and see what aid and authority they have for furthering the objects, with the promotion of which they are so mainly entrusted. As long as these rules are quarterly read, before all the parties who are to be regulated by them, and who are interested in them, they will not fail to be obeyed, at least to an extent that will not admit of much injury or injustice ; particularly when it is remembered that the suffering party has an annual opportunity of stating to an officer from the Society, whatever ground he has for complaint. There can be no fear that either this knowledge or this privilege will engender disputes or vexatious slanders against the master ; he has the catechist as the witness of his general conduct, and his defender against calumny, if boys could be supposed unjustly to league against him ; in truth, the boys know that they will willingly be heard by the visitor ; they feel that they most injure themselves, unless they can make out a good case ; the proof of this is apparent from hence, that I never recollect a complaint being advanced by the most malicious boy, which he could not establish ; and I never found him strongly supported by his companions, unless the case was an aggravated one. For the most part, the feeling that exists between master and scholar, is such as it should be ; and, I believe, in many cases the boys consider them as the nearest friend they have to fly to in any difficulty.

State of Bed and Bedding.

" A supply of sheeting is very much required ; the quantity has been reported by the local committee, and should be immediately attended to. Mrs. Thackeray thought, that a mistress of better judgment in these matters might have managed them better, in the way of repair.

Local Committee.

" I was disappointed in my hope of meeting some of the gentlemen who form this body ; I should have been particularly glad to have seen them, as the state of the school had undergone so satisfactory a change since I last met some portion of them.

" I consider this school as well calculated to supply a very useful lesson. The officers in charge of it are the same ; the children are the same ; and yet the difference in every department of the establishment is materially great. With this change in the circumstances of the school (as affecting the improvement and health of the boys), is closely connected the ease of mind and satisfaction of the master, his wife, and usher. The master assured me of this ; and after my business was done, the usher put into my hand a note, acknowledging his former neglect, and expressing his joy at finding that his labours of the last year had proved beneficial. The boys, in the presence of the master and usher, when I inquired of them whether they felt any change in their situation this year differently from that of last, manfully stated that they did, a great one ; that they felt much happier, because they had been better instructed, better fed, and more comfortable in their clothing.

" May I be permitted to add also, that it supplies an example for the justification of the course usually pursued by the board ; that an institution may be reformed without the destruction of the individuals who were placed over it. In most instances, if care be taken, these persons can be reformed with the school itself ; and of this gratifying truth we have already had more instances than that now immediately before us."

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 45.

MONASTEREVEN SCHOOL; visited 15th November 1818.

Monastereven
School.

Beds, Bedding and Sheets.

" WE were not satisfied, on account of a little imposition which took place in respect to the dormitories. It was not the period for changing the sheets; but, in consequence of our visit being notified to the mistress, she changed them, to give to the place an appearance, which, in the middle of the month, did not belong to it. We noticed this to the master and mistress, and thought no more of the subject; but, happening to visit the house earlier than I was expected the following morning, I found a large bundle of sheets in the dormitories packed up to be carried away. Upon examination, I found that the sheets which were put on clean for our visit, were taken off before night, and those which had been in use were replaced on the beds; in the morning these were again removed, and the clean sheets again put on them. Though I respect the master of the establishment, and think his conduct in every other respect good, I feel it a duty to notice this management, that masters and mistresses (indeed I believe upon this occasion the blame attaches almost solely to the mistress), may know that the least appearance of management which implies trick, can on no account be pursued without the marked disapprobation of the board, and without danger to themselves.

" The bedsteads in this house were made when it was considered as a nursery, are therefore very short, and must be most uncomfortable for the larger boys."

Appendix, N° 46.

MONIVEA SCHOOL; visited September 7th, 1818.

Monivea School.

General Appearance.

" THE school has undergone a very satisfactory change, since our last visit, in regard to general appearance. There is only one case of disorder at present, which is scrofula; last year there was much disease of various kinds. There is one girl, however, Anne Kerfoot, who ought to be sent to her parents, being likely to corrupt her companions, and there being, as it is reported to us, no prospect of her doing good here. Amongst the offences of which she is guilty, is that of scoffing at religion, and bringing it into ridicule in every way she can. Perhaps her relations may correct that which appears incorrigible here. At all events, her companions require protection from the effects of an intercourse with this little reprobate; and the example of her dismissal would have a salutary effect, as correcting the notion that the Society are anxious for their continuance, whether they are benefiting or not, by their stay in the school.

Education.

" In the upper classes much improvement has taken place during the last year; in the lower classes there was a degree of ignorance that we thought ought not to have existed. It was accounted for by stating, that punishment was very rarely or ever inflicted here; and the reason why it was not, seems to have been a very improper one, because the children threaten to complain to the Society. I felt no hesitation in desiring the usheress to punish whenever she saw children would not act right without the infliction of punishment; and, as this was directed in presence of the whole school, it is probable that it will have some effect. There can be no fear that the officers of this school will use a greater degree of severity than is necessary.

" It is not long since a very refractory set of girls were in this school; the effect of bad associates is fast wearing away, however.

State of the House and Offices.

" In respect to order, these are kept very creditably; but, of the new addition to the building, (four or five years back), something in justice must be said.

" Two rooms were added, an upper and lower one, for the accommodation of the master's family. The lower one, which was intended for his sitting room, has, I believe, never been occupied as such; the upper one is used as a store very injudiciously. Both are exceedingly damp; and, until they are made dry, whatever money these buildings cost has been thrown away. I wrote to the builder, to say, that I should feel it my duty to state my opinion to the board, and recommending him to come over to the school, and correct what he, I conceive, is bound to correct, bad work executed by his people. He is a man whose character stands high, and who will, I doubt not, for the sake of it, make good these defects. However, I would suggest to the board to have the approbation of the local committee and catechist upon the completion of this work.

" Preparations were making, just when we visited, to make the roof of the house staunch for the winter. This building seems to require little more at the Society's hands than to be well slated, and it would become a most creditable establishment. The wings attached to it have a very dilapidated look, in consequence of the frames of windows remaining without glass, and the apertures being filled up, in the most bungled way, by coarse stones with mortar; a very few shillings, I should suppose, would correct this unfavourable appearance, and give to the whole a very respectable front.

" I am

"I am glad to find that the pump of this school is about to be finished. I observed, that some member of the local committee, in the Report book, has drawn the attention of the board to it; and indeed, both at this school and Roscommon, the affair of the pumps has excited much observation respecting their expense, management and failure; I trust the arrangements now making will prove efficient.*

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Beds and Bedding.

"The dormitories, generally, were in very good order; and the mistress states that the advice given to her by Mrs. Thackeray, last year, to make the elder and younger girls sleep together, has proved useful, and that the bed and bedding, which suffered so much by the dirty habits of the younger children, are very rarely abused, and the children themselves are become more cleanly, and of course more healthy."

Appendix, N° 47.

NEW ROSS SCHOOL; visited 8th and 9th November 1818.

Education.

"THE present master has had no aid in school from any usher since his appointment, from one cause or another; I could not, therefore, be dissatisfied with the state in which I found the boys in this respect; though, with sufficient assistance, I have no doubt the progress would have been much greater.

New Ross School.

"I was generally pleased with the answering of the lecture class, and in the catechisms; the whole, with the exception of the youngest boys, were perfect. The boys may be improved much in reading; their style is not pleasing, neither is their manner as steady as it should be.

Morals of the Boys.

"I have no doubt that in this respect this school has been much improved. The boys express themselves very happy on this account; a reference to my former Report will explain this. There is now no cause for disguise on the part of the superintendents, and the boys are not induced by hopes or fears to practise deception.

House and Offices.

"The room built for a dining hall being below the level of the ground on the outside, is very damp, and will never answer till it is raised.

Rules and Regulations.

"These have not been read as recommended; otherwise I should think there is general observance of the wishes of the Society, in the management of this place."

Appendix, N° 48.

RAY SCHOOL; visited 18th August 1818.

(Converted into a Day School.)

Clothing.

"THE children were in their old clothing (1816), which was in as good a state as could reasonably be expected. The trowsers appeared very dirty; a satisfactory cause was assigned for it, the boys had been occupied in pulling flax and spreading it. The usual change of stockings had not taken place. Upon inquiry, I found that it could not take place; for in taking charge of the school, six months back, only two pair of stockings for each child were handed over to the present mistress, of which nineteen pair were too small to fit any of the children. The same may be said of the shoes likewise. The boys this year have not had the quantity allowed them by the Society, and the present master has been forced to purchase some shoes for some boys, to prevent their going bare-footed, those left in store being too small. The late master has to explain how these things have happened.

Ray School.

Education.

"For six months out of the last twelve there has been little or no instruction given to the boys here. A fire destroyed so much of the school-room (which is the only public room in the house) as to render it uninhabitable for a long time. After this there was a total want of books, for the whole collection belonging to the school was consumed in the fire. Since the books have been received from Dublin, which were a long time coming (it is a great pity a few were not purchased at the neighbouring town), I am assured every due exertion has been made; of this I have no means of forming any opinion myself. It is quite certain the boys have lost much ground since I last examined them, and that as I felt much satisfaction at the state in which I found them last year, I felt very much disappointed at their failure this.

"With respect to arithmetic, it is now eight months since they were duly instructed, for want of the paper, implements, gough and slatse. We were assured, that every exertion will be paid henceforth to recover the ground which has been lost. In writing they appear to have fallen off less than in reading.

Religious

* The pump at this school cost £.705. 6s. 9½d.; that at Roscommon, £.762. 17s. 2½d.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Religious Education.

"The children appear to me to have fallen off in this respect also; and if that be the case, the same cause is assigned for it. In catechisms, however, they were perfect.

General Appearance.

"I consider the general appearance of the children satisfactory. They expressed themselves contented and happy, and considered themselves improved since the last visitation, though I could not agree with them in respect to education. Probably they were comparing their state now with what it was after they had been idle for six months.

Rules and Regulations.

"The rules, I have reason to believe, have been steadily adhered to, except that which requires they should be read before the children. I attribute their not having been read as directed to the inadvertence or inattention of the catechist, not to any neglect on the part of the master. Hereafter, I have no doubt, the master will read them according to order, whether the catechist be present or not; but I would suggest, that the catechist be called to attend to this point, and report the periods of their being read.

Catechist.

"This gentleman has long been employed in the education of youth. I believe he did not think I made due allowance for the loss of time occasioned by the fire, as it affected the progress of education. I find it so natural for local guardians to palliate every neglect and account for every deficiency, that if I were to yield to their representations, I should, in many instances, become not only a useless but an injurious visitor. In the present case, I could see no good reason why, with the opportunity of procuring a few books in the neighbourhood, education should be altogether stopped till some arrived from Dublin. The master could not take it upon himself, but there were those who might venture to purchase such books as were immediately required to carry on the education of the boys.

"I have no doubt, from what passed, the catechist will exert himself, that the boys may recover whatever ground they have lost, and that the visitor of this school in the following year will have reason to be satisfied on the only point of which I have reason to complain (if I except those things which do not in the slightest degree attach blame to any at present connected with the school), the want of progress in the children.

Master and Mistress.

"Except for those reasons which make persons trained to instruct and superintend children, more desirable superintendents of schools, it is probable few more efficient or more respectable persons than those will be found candidates for charter schools.

Usher.

"The late master was so well qualified to instruct himself, and took so great a share in this department, I had little opportunity of forming a correct opinion of the qualifications of the usher, who, however, had, at the time of my former visit, but just arrived at the school. Without deciding upon his fitness at present, I think I shall not do him an injury; and I am satisfied I shall benefit the school, if I strongly recommend to the committee of fifteen, to call upon him for increased exertion in every respect. The style of reading is far from good; I think the manner is slovenly; and of those things in which they are instructed, they have not so clear a view (in my opinion) this year as they had the last."

Appendix, N° 49.

ROSCOMMON SCHOOL; visited September 4th, 1818.

Roscommon
School.

Religious Education.

"I EXAMINED the lecture class, twenty in number, for some hours, in their scriptural knowledge. There were two or three girls who shewed much judgment in their answers; the rest were not capable of giving any answers at all. I requested the master to examine them. By the aid of a book which is in use at the military asylum, (it was a Catechism of the Four Gospels,) he put to them a great number of questions, which the girls who had before appeared defective, answered very well. If a class, junior to those which were before us, had made these replies, I should have been very well satisfied, and thought the system a very good one; but I consider more may fairly be expected from those we were examining.

"This is evidence, however, of the master's using his best efforts to instruct the children intrusted to him, which I have no doubt he is anxious to use; but is it not evidence at the same time, that mere catechetical instruction will not give them a knowledge of their religion? They must be exercised in it to make it beneficial, and to establish them in it. A proof of this is just now supplied in the desertion of a young girl*, who has lately left this, and residing in the town, has been converted to Popery by the people with whom she has gone to to live. If she had been taught to reflect upon what she had read, one might expect that she should be able to resist the influence of persons whose religious education has probably not been so good as her own.

* In 1815 she eloped from her place.

" If the board see this matter in the point of view that I do, would it not be desirable to urge the catechist to some exertion, that the benefits of a sound religious education may not be lost to these children, for want of his aid to make them comprehend it?

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Catechist.

" It would be desirable that the catechist in his visits to this school, should be requested particularly to direct his attention to the education of the children in that part which is connected with religion; to examine how far they comprehend what they read, to aid them by his explanation, and to call forth their own reflection. In the instance which I have just mentioned of a convert to Popery, I cannot help thinking, if the girl had possessed that degree of knowledge which is known in most charter schools now, she would not have been persuaded to have left her church upon such temptation as the family in which she lives as a servant could offer. This case becomes the stronger, because this school being endowed for Protestants, she must have been on one if not on both sides descended from parents of that religion. I have little doubt that she was well able to repeat her catechism before she left the school. But catechetical knowledge is not sufficient to fortify children against the seductions employed to make converts to Popery, and to confirm them in the tenets of our church."

Appendix, N° 50.

SHANNON GROVE SCHOOL; visited 15th September, 1818.

Clothing.

" EVERY thing appears correct in this respect, except that as in some other schools, two pair of shoes have been made to answer in place of three. The reasons I have to object to this have been before stated.

Shannon Grove
School.

Rules and Regulations.

" These were never strictly observed previous to the intimation to the family that they were to leave the school; it could hardly be expected more attention should be paid to them afterwards. Indeed the catechist in his communication with me, states, that he did not press upon these persons his observations on their neglect in this respect; but that he looked to their removal as the period for enforcing whatever orders the board have promulgated.

Apothecary.

" Both upon this and the last visit, we did not agree in the nature of a cutaneous disorder prevalent, and in some instances, very virulent amongst the boys; I considered it as a long neglected itch; he as an eruption very natural and of no consequence; I think the boys agreed with me. I would recommend, that it should be notified to him, that if this complaint still continued, he would be thought to neglect his duty; and I have no doubt he would soon find a remedy for it. He is a brother to the late master, which induced me to use more delicacy in any communication with him.

" There are three or four other boys full of disease; scrofula chiefly, I believe, which may be hard to cure."

Appendix, N° 51.

SLIGO SCHOOL; visited 28th August, 1818.

" WE visited this place on the 28th and 29th of August; we found the house and every thing else in excellent order. The only departure from rule was, that the boys were without stockings. Upon entering the kitchen, we found them hanging up to dry for Sunday. Thus it happens, very often at the latter end of the clothing year, for two days in the week, the children are bare-legged; a course more injudicious than if they were in that state throughout the year.

Sligo School.

Clothing.

" The clothing throughout is very excellent; the master of this school supplies it himself. The only objection that I can make to his management is, that he gives to the boys only two pair of stockings, and the same number of shoes annually.

" We have just seen the effect of this arrangement with respect to the stockings; it is impossible to be certain that evil effects do not follow also from the boys possessing a more limited number of shoes than the Society supplies to other schools. At all events, it is the order that they shall have three pair of shoes and stockings; and I am confident that the master will for the future invariably give them, as he has assured me he will. If the rule that requires quarterly inspection of the clothing, and which directs that the annual allowance of clothing shall be in the hands, at the feet, or on the persons of the children, be duly enforced, and reported as having been acted up to by the catechist and such members of the local committee as can be induced to attend. Neither here, or in any other school, will there be any deviation from it in future.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

" The master, having the contract for clothing (which I trust he will retain, for nothing can be better), did not conceive himself tied down to any precise rule, but supplied as there seemed occasion, and thus two sets answered, of well made articles, in place of three; but the effect has been, that the children often go without stockings. I have never found any deviation from the rules laid down by the board beneficial to the children, and therefore recommend that no neglect of them be permitted on any point in which rule can be observed.

General Appearance.

" The appearance of these boys is very good. There are a few boys who look sickly, yet without any complaint; the rest are healthy and cheerful. One boy ought to be excepted, who is sadly affected with sore eyes; another has lately recovered from typhus fever.

Education.

" In this respect the state of the senior boys is pretty much the same as it appeared to me last year, and then I thought it very creditable indeed.* In the two lower classes we thought there was a greater falling off, both in reading and spelling, than we expected; but the middle classes retained their rank and position very well. In writing and accounts, the whole school, that is, all who are instructed in these points, seem entitled to commendation.

Religious Knowledge.

" In catechisms the school is very perfect; and the lecture class, which is always formed of the two first, is well acquainted with the prophecies of the Old Testament, and seem to have a good notion of the value and importance of prayer. Their explanation of the four Gospels a little disappointed me, recollecting how much I thought of them in this respect last year; possibly I should have felt better satisfied with the same answers from some other of the schools, though I expected more from this.

Morals of the Boys.

" In general they are represented very good indeed. One boy has endeavoured to elope lately; and, in a complaint he had to make, I think he evinced a disposition that was far from pleasing, though he established his point. What that was, I shall state when I come to the head, 'Regulations.' The conduct of the boys upon this occasion proved their attachment to the master, I thought, and their kinder disposition, though they were sufferers, equally with him, in the privation complained of. We rejoice that the boy, whatever was his motive, made the complaint; it will prove to the master, that no deviation from the rule, can take place with impunity, or, that though he be all correct in every other respect, yet, if he fail in one point, he is at the mercy of any evil disposed boy who chooses to report his neglect.

House and Offices.

" All that was defective in this respect last year, has, I think, been remedied. It might perhaps be useful to arrange one of the out-offices so as to answer for an hospital, in case of infectious disorders. To this extent I agree with the inspector of hospitals, who has lately visited here, and who has reported on this head; but nothing could induce me to think separate establishments, such as are to be found in several schools, are desirable. To me they appear a useless expenditure of public money, and, to use a vulgar phrase, a 'remedy worse than the disease.'

Farm.

" The farm here is very well managed. Delicacy, on the part of the master, has prevented him lowering many of the hedges, which have become a nuisance; he considers it right he should have the authority of the board to correct this evil, and I hope the board will grant it. These hedges, too, are double, so that much ground is lost on the farm, and occupied by numberless birds, who destroy his grain in the most provoking manner.

Garden.

" The garden is kept in capital order; it is valuable to those boys who are employed in it, from the knowledge they may obtain, and to the whole school on account of the abundance and variety of good vegetables it supplies.

Play Ground.

" The play-ground, though small, is in a very good state; when the weather and season permit, the boys have liberty to amuse themselves in the field at the rear of the offices.

Bed and Bedding.

" No school can surpass this in care and comfort in these respects.

Rules and Regulations.

" The course generally pursued in this school has been so good, that little inquiry seems to have been made how far it was managed in conformity with strict rule. The boys being well instructed, well clothed, taught a good trade, appearing in good health, and expressing themselves contented and happy, no further questions seemed necessary to be asked. Thus it has happened, that, contrary to rule, two pair of stockings and two pair of shoes have been been all that the boys receive here; the bad effect of this, with respect to the stockings, has been pointed out, and I am confident will hereafter be remedied.

* The former report of this School was not produced to us; it could not be found in the office of the Society.

"Another deviation from rule I have to notice, which occasioned the complaint of one of the boys, supported by a few others, and, I think, certainly established by them, that the hours allotted to them for play were not duly regarded; and, though they did not consider the time granted for improvement was infringed on for the purpose of increasing the time devoted to labour, yet they did think that their own leisure was. The boy appeared to Mr. Armstrong, the catechist, and to Mrs. Thackeray (who accompanied me in the inquiry), to make out his case; and the master has assured me, that in future the rule respecting the hours of play shall never be departed from. I never saw a man more distressed by complaint being preferred against him. He considered his conduct towards the children so kind, that such a thing could not have happened. He has been taught a useful, though painful lesson; and I am quite confident it will never be repeated. The complaint was made evidently against the will of the school generally, who would not support it, though they were desired to declare all they felt. I consider this as evidence that they had not much suffered; and that complaint would not have been made but by a boy who had offended, and of untoward disposition. I am very glad, however, that the point was brought forward. No cause of complaint will, I am confident, again occur; and, as I have reason to think a line of communication is kept up throughout the schools generally, the effect of complaint made here, and the instant attention paid to it, will operate wherever it can be feared or felt.

"The book of rules, as directed to be read in schools, has not been observed.

Local Committee.

"It does not appear that any active part is taken by the local committee in the superintendence of this institution, beyond the consideration of those points which are usually brought before meetings on the quarter day. I do not observe that any examination of the boys acquirements take place. The local committee feel confident, no doubt, in the general care and kindness of the master, and that he would not intentionally do any thing that could injure them; hence it probably arises that they are not more minute in their investigations. I was not fortunate enough to meet any of these gentlemen, as they were absent, at the time of our visit, from the country.

Catechist.

"The Society have a very respectable officer in this gentleman; and I am confident his care will in future be particularly directed to those points to which I have felt it my duty to direct the attention of the board. Since my visit I have received a letter from Mr. Armstrong to this effect.

Master and Mistress.

"There are not officers under the Society for whom I feel more respect than these. I am confident their desire is to do justice, and to treat with great kindness the children committed to their trust; yet the rule I laid down for myself would not permit my passing unnoticed such things as could in any way be injurious to the children, or such complaint as any boy could establish against their master, however trifling in its nature. The good that I expect from this proceeding is, that it will keep every master on their guard, and prove to them, that nothing can make them feel comfortable in their situations but strict adherence to rule; that every departure from it makes them liable to annoyance, whenever any scholar, from malice, or any other cause, shall prefer and establish his complaint. I consider the rules of the Society as well calculated for the happiness and security of the master as the boy, and it is only to act up to them to ensure the well doing both of the one and the other. Those schools to which we have paid our second visit, and found strict conformity to rule, where, previous to our first, it had been disregarded, acknowledge the truth of this assertion, and are grateful that it has been enforced.

"In every other respect but those I have stated, it is impossible that more correctness could be exhibited, or, I might say, more paternal care shown to the children in any school. From these considerations, I trust the board, in noticing the deviations I have named, will remark upon them mildly, requiring, for the future, attention to the orders of the board as fully in his as in every other establishment, and I am confident it will have all the effect required; for I never saw a man more pained than he was at the idea that he could be charged with any act that could be injurious to the boys under his care.

Usher.

"It will appear, by the report, that, though we do not complain of the degree of knowledge acquired by the children here, their progress last year was such as to make us expect a greater proficiency than we found this.

It might be useful, if the board noticed this disappointment. If the usher has in any way relaxed, it would excite more vigilance, and greater efforts in him; if he has not, the only evil would be, that he considered me harder to be pleased than I ought. He is a respectable young man, and deserving, for his own sake only, to be kept on the alert.

Apprentices.

"As far as the master's knowledge extends, no material alteration has taken place in this respect; during the last year, five more boys have been apprenticed out. It is to be regretted, that boys so well instructed in weaving, and so capable of earning so much in that way, cannot find masters in that trade; I perceive many of these go out as servants.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Employment.

"The loom occupies about 40 boys; as many are occasionally employed on the farm. Some, but not many, work in the garden. The little boys knit, and repair the clothes.

Stores and Feeding.

"The stores are abundant, and the most ample justice is done to the boys in their feeding."

Appendix, N° 52.

STRANGFORD SCHOOL; visited 29th December 1818.

Rules and Regulations.

Strangford School. "THE master states these to have been frequently read before the school, and in the presence of the catechist and others. The use of this order has been better understood by the boys than by the catechist and master, as will presently appear.

Local Committee.

"The attendance of the members of this committee is pretty numerous; their usefulness, however, would be greater, if they took less for granted than they do, and if they exercised a more rigid controul than they do over the master.

Catechist.

"These observations apply very forcibly to this officer.

*Master and Mistress.

"I consider the qualifications of the master sufficient, provided he be kept strictly in his place, and be taught to recollect himself.

"The boys complained to me that they had not justice done to them in the article of food; that besides being stinted in milk at supper, they often got potatoes and broth, when the dietary assigned them bread and milk. They certainly established these facts. In his defence, the master states, that he limits them with respect to milk, that they may not wet the beds. The few boys against whom he could in justice bring this charge, I consider no defence whatever; nor was his explanation as to the cause for giving them potatoes and broth, when, by the Society, they were allowed bread and milk, at all more satisfactory, namely; that it was difficult at all times to obtain milk. He has a capital farm, and no master can be more certain of a good supply of this article, than he, if he will take the common measures necessary to obtain it. The real reason for the deviation from rule must be, that it is more convenient and more advantageous to himself, to feed them in the one way than in the other; and, though I think both himself and his wife capable of being very good officers under the establishment, I would strongly recommend that they should feel the effects of their neglect of duty, by the marked displeasure of the committee of fifteen; and hereafter, I will venture to predict, there will be neither on the part of visitors nor boys, cause of complaint. I think the kindness of the local committee have misled the master, and that he wants only to be brought to his recollection, to prove efficient and correct in his conduct.

"I would not be misunderstood, though the boys complained of their not receiving the description of food specified in the dietary, they did not mean to charge him with a deficiency in quantity; they are, I doubt not, amply fed, for the children look very healthy, but they had a just right to complain, when they saw the benevolent intentions of the Society towards them frustrated, at the caprice or on account of the selfish parsimony of the master.

"The catechist has, it appears to me, to explain why he permitted this infringement of order, so offensive to the boys, for he was fully aware of it.

Appendix, N° 53.

DUNDALK SCHOOL; visited 15th and 16th January 1819.

Dundalk School.

"THE master, mistress and ushers, though much to be respected for their moral conduct, possess the most limited qualifications for their respective offices. I would particularly request, that they be directed to make themselves perfectly acquainted with the rules of the Society; and that they on no occasion be found to depart from them. The least that the Society can expect from superintendents of such limited qualifications is, their strict conformity to rule in every thing; and the local committee and catechist, whose exertions have been the chief cause of the respectable state of this institution, ought to be spared the necessity of complaining that the rules are not duly regarded.

"The Society need not apprehend that this school will, at any period, lose the effectual assistance of a good local committee; but if vacancies occur by the death or resignation of

* The master of this school was removed to Newport day-school in October 1819, for the reasons given in Mr. Thackeray's evidence.

of any of the superintendents, they calculate upon efficient persons being sent to supply them. Indeed, when the number is increased from sixty to one hundred (as it probable soon may), it would be well that the master and mistress should be sent to a smaller establishment, and that an active and intelligent usheress be employed, in conjunction with the person who is now the usheress, and who has been in her office, for I believe, more than twenty years, respected by all for her propriety of conduct, but possessing in a very limited degree, the qualifications of an instructress.

Rev. E. Thackeray's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 54.

Examination of the Reverend Elias Thackeray, Friday, 31st December 1824, who was called in; and Examined on Oath, as follows:

YOU are vicar of Dundalk?—I am.

Were you ever appointed by the members of the Incorporated Society to inspect the charter schools?—I was.

Did you at the same time receive authority from any other society to inspect any other schools?—No, none other.

Did you receive any remuneration for your trouble?—No; remuneration was more than once offered, but I declined accepting it; I only required that the expenses of my journey should be defrayed; for I associated Mrs. Thackeray with myself in the undertaking, on account of the many female establishments there were to visit.

Did you inspect all the charter schools?—I believe every one, with the exception of a small place for sick persons at Arklow; I believe every other.

Was it the object of your examination to ascertain whether the existing rules were complied with, or did you feel yourself at liberty to examine into the schools, with a view to see whether any alterations in the rules might be desirable?—My first object was to see whether the superintendents of the various schools did act up to the rules, and I had reason to think some of them did not, and to see what I could suggest as an improvement in them; several alterations did take place; among others, the establishment of two teachers institutions; one at Santry, and the other at Kevin-street; I made two visitations in two following years.

In what years did your inspection take place?—In the years 1817 and 1818.

What length of time did it take you to examine into the state of each school?—It took me, upon the average, about three days to each school; I think we were out from home a long time altogether; we came here to communicate with the board, to assist in correcting any thing they were induced to alter at my suggestion, or at that of Mrs. Thackeray, who accompanied me.

Did you find, in the course of your inspection, that the local committees acted in such a manner as to produce an efficient check upon the masters and mistresses, in the management of the school?—Certainly not, in all cases.

Do you think, in the majority of instances, they were remiss in their examination and attendance?—I do not know whether I can answer that exactly; there were 24 or 25 schools at that time; there was a great deal more attention after the first visitation than before it, as appeared at our second; we had pointed out to them, how essential it was they should take a part in the general concerns and management of the schools.

Did you examine twice?—Yes, I went out twice; I stated to the committee of fifteen (when requested by them to visit their schools) the terms upon which I was disposed to go, namely, to examine the establishments, and to suggest such improvements as might occur to me; that I considered my inquiry was to correct what might be irregular in the officers of the establishments, not to deprive them of their offices, except extreme cases should appear; and in my visits, I told these officers, that they would be inspected the next year by some person with my report in his hand, and if they were found not to have attended to the rules of the Society, and to the suggestions supplied, they would be dismissed; we found a very great improvement on our second tour, and that many, who might have been dismissed with propriety on the first visit, had greatly corrected their conduct.

What individuals do you mean might have been dismissed with propriety?—The masters, and other inmates superintending the establishment.

Did you find any schools with no local committee to superintend them?—Not any one, I believe.

Is it expected by the committee of fifteen, that the local committee should attend regularly at any stated period?—The custom of the local committees had been pretty generally to attend only quarterly, at the making up of the report, to see what was defective, and settle the master's accounts. At my suggestion, they were requested to attend oftener, and not to consider they were merely a committee to settle the accounts, and to examine the state of the dilapidation of the buildings, but to act as local guardians more than they had been in the habit of doing.

Did you ascertain, whether the catechists were regular in the performance of their duties?—There were some of them very exemplary indeed, and there were some who were satisfied with a very short report, so that I could not collect readily what was their general opinion from their reports, and I suggested to the board to call upon them to make their reports more full; those which followed showed the benefit of the suggestion.

Is the situation of the schools such as to make it easy in all cases to obtain the attendance

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

of the local committees?—No, it is not; and I believe I suggested the suppression of certain schools, principally from the impossibility of getting regular local committees.

Can you recollect what schools they were?—I think Monivea was one, and Trim was reduced; the impression upon my mind is, that Monivea was recommended to be suppressed; Trim was reduced, I know; I cannot recollect any other at present.

Of what number do you think the local committee should consist?—It cannot consist of too many; if you can get the neighbouring gentlemen to take a part, it is impossible to increase the number too much, though it is probable, if there be a few found who will zealously do the duty of the establishments, that the many will come only upon express occasions.

How often did you recommend the local committee should attend?—As a local committee, they are called upon to visit quarterly, and I suggested they should consider themselves the local guardians of the schools, which would naturally suggest to them the propriety of more frequent inspection, and more extended duties.

Is their attendance gratuitous?—Yes, certainly.

Is it necessarily attended with a great deal of trouble to the individual?—Not if there is a taste for the thing, otherwise it cannot be a very pleasing duty. To consult the various dispositions of such a body, the committee of fifteen, at my suggestion, struck off a sort of manual to be presented to every individual visiting a school, exhibiting the various points deserving consideration, in the hope that he would be particularly attracted by some one or other of them, and induced thereby to attend to it. Some might have a taste for work, others for education, and others for seeing the place clean, and so on.

Is the situation of a local committee man attended with any advantage, in the way of patronage; do the committee recommend the children for admission into the school?—It must very often occur, that they will recommend oftener than any other individual; but they are often disappointed, by the preference of such as appear to have stronger claims on the board, on account of the distress of the applicants.

Are their recommendations attended to in the appointment of the master and usher?—I should think not very often, except perhaps where there are large towns, and a great number of persons out of whom you can select; in many parts of the country there are no candidates from whom you could make good selections, I believe; at all events, now it is out of their power; the vacant situations are, if they can be, filled up from their own officers; the appointments are with the Society.

Under these circumstances, do you think it likely a sufficient number of persons would be found to attend diligently as local committee men?—Yes, in many parts, if they were in earnest.

Do you think there are many parts where it would not be so?—No doubt it is so likewise.

Would it be likely you would find persons continue so long in earnest as to encounter a great deal of trouble, without any reward?—I do not view the thing as a matter of great trouble; the clergyman in the neighbourhood ought not to feel it a trouble.

Is he the catechist generally?—Yes, with very few exceptions indeed.

Is he not disqualified for a member of the local committee?—He is a sort of secretary to them, and the distinction between them is rarely, if ever, made.

Have the local committee a complete authority over the master in the school?—No; I consider I could suspend a master, if I saw occasion, as a member of a local committee, and the catechist would feel himself authorized to do so, but either so acting would write to the board immediately; I think the greatest defect in the establishment, is the want of a sufficient attention on the part of the local committees; some local committee men have been found not very good judges, occasionally perhaps too good natured; I have seen some reports very much at variance with what I have considered to be the correct view of the case, arising from one or both of those causes.

Did you find that the reports were, upon the whole, more favourable than the situation of the school deserved?—Yes; in the cases I reported upon I observed, "that I should never fear they were harsh towards the masters and mistresses."

Do you think the local committees had a feeling, that if the school was in a bad state, it reflected upon them and their own care?—No; I do not think that operates generally.

Have you any reason to think the local committee were at all severe in their opinion of the boys, or in their conduct to them?—If they had occasion to think the boys had been ill treated, they would support them. I have seen instances of this; there is no fear they would do justice to the children, except in a very rare case indeed.

If the master does not comply with the rules of the school, are the boys in the habit of making complaints to the members of the local committee?—I remember an instance in which the boys did apply, and it was visited very quickly by the person to whom the application was made; that person came down, and there was a close investigation.

Where did that occur?—At Castledermot.

Of what did the boy complain?—That he was ill treated; the boy complained, and Mr. Green, a magistrate I believe in the neighbourhood, came very anxiously forward in his support.

Do you recollect whether it was a complaint of general ill treatment, or upon any particular occasion?—I do not recollect what it was; I believe he had been harshly beaten.

Did he complain to you individually?—No, when I came there I found this complaint.

What was the name of the master at that time; was it Lucius Harvey?—Yes, I believe it was.

What

What do you recollect of the circumstances of the case?—There was a charge against the master for not giving sufficient food; that the boys had not received the allowance of food they were entitled to by the dietary; and the opinion was, that “justice had not been done to the boys, but latterly the master had corrected his misconduct in that respect.”

Do you remember whether that complaint had been preferred against the master long before your visit?—No, I do not.

Was it made in consequence of your visit?—No, it was before.

Did the local committee take up the complaint and examine into it generally, or was it only by a single individual?—The committee must all have taken it up at the meeting. The next charge was with respect to the severity of the punishment; the third was not proved, that was with respect to the play-hours and labour. It might happen, that at the time of labour the master might keep a boy out in the field in catching weather. I do not suppose I should have visited a master harshly under such a circumstance.

What was the result of the charge of ill treatment?—That the charges were fully proved, and that he ought to be dismissed if he so conducted himself again.

Do you know whether a similar charge has been made against the same master?—Yes, I have heard of it within this last month.

Do you think that the boys at the charter schools can venture to complain to the local committee of the conduct of the master, if he treats them severely?—I can entertain no doubt upon that point; the statement just made is an evidence of it.

Did you find any instance in which the boys were afraid of stating, either to yourself or the local committee, the conduct of the master?—I am not aware of any; there might have been a case; the principle I laid down when I made my reports, was to give to the Society every information I acquired; and if there was such a circumstance, it is certainly recorded, I have no doubt, in some report which I have made.

Were you in the habit of examining the boys apart out of the presence of the masters?—Yes, always I think.

Were the boys in all cases apprised of your being authorized by the committee of fifteen to inspect the schools?—Yes, invariably, I suppose.

Did you always make it generally known in the schools?—It was notified to them by an official paper; I am perfectly certain they must have known it.

Did any instance come to your knowledge of a boy being punished for having made a complaint against the master?—I really cannot recollect; it is a long while since I was the visitor; there is something, however, floating in my mind as if there had been; but my reports will testify on this as well as on every other subject.

Have many instances come to your knowledge of boys being punished with undue severity for trifling faults?—I do not recollect any thing so strong as this case referred to.

Does it appear to you that is one of the prevailing evils of charter schools?—No, certainly not.

Does the friendless condition of the children, and the circumstance of their never going home to their friends and parents, induce the master or mistress to treat them with greater severity than children are treated in other schools?—I think not.

Do you think they are treated as kindly as in other schools?—Yes, I should say so, speaking generally.

If the quantity of clothing allowed to the children by the Incorporated Society is not delivered to them, have the masters or mistresses any advantages from withholding it?—I believe the Society now send out the clothing to them, except to the female schools.

Supposing the children not to have the clothing, what becomes of it?—They are to bring it, at the end of the year, before the committee of fifteen, according to the rule added at my suggestion.

In what way would the local committee know the fact, if the master did not bring it before them?—They would know it in every way, by the children themselves.

Would the children dare to tell?—I cannot doubt it, looking to the local committee as their friends; the course we pursue in Dundalk is this; when the new clothes are produced the old ones are exhibited.

Referring to your Report upon Sligo school, visited in 1818, it appears, that you have stated that the “only objection you made to the management of the master is, that he gives the boys only two pair of stockings and two pair of shoes annually;” you having previously stated in the same Report, that “for two days in the week the children are bare legged, at the time their stockings are washing?”—The reason of the boys for that was, that the heat of the work whilst at the weaving was such, that they threw off their stockings.*

Is it likely that heat should occur on two days in the week and not on the other days?—No, certainly not; but the report there is previous to the new order I speak of; the masters I believe thought they were allowed a given sum to clothe the children, giving them as much clothing as was necessary, and considered all surplus their own; to correct imposition, I recommended to the Society to insist upon the whole of the old clothing being brought out and examined by the local committee, when the new clothing was to be inspected and approved of.

Did

* In reading over this evidence, Mr. Thackeray desired to add, “This answer must have been the effect of inconsideration. I remember this reason being given to me personally at the Lintown Factory, and I suppose I have improperly applied it here. It is hard to recollect conversations of so distant a date, and on subjects connected with many establishments.”

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

Did you examine particularly into the school at Sligo?—I did.

Is there any thing that distinguishes that school from the other charter schools?—The linen business is established there, which appeared to me so important, that I recommended in both my Reports, it should be introduced into the other schools.

Was the conduct and management of that school satisfactory to you?—I thought it remarkably so.

Did the local committee attend regularly at the school?—I think the local committee at that school were remarkably respectable; Mr. Wynne was one of them; upon reference to my Report, it appears, "they did not take an active part." I visited Mr. Wynne in the grand jury room; it was during the assizes, and I asked him his opinion upon it.

You say that you recommended the establishment for weaving to be extended to other schools?—Yes.

Do you recollect any complaint ever having been made of the boys being over worked?—I recollect there were some complaints of their being kept from their play hours, or at their work longer than they ought to have been; there was a complaint by one boy, supported by a few others, and certainly established by them; the complaint was, that the hours allotted to play were not duly regarded; but school improvement was not interfered with; and it ought to be added, the whole of the school were dissatisfied with the boy for what he had done, which seemed to me to shew there was not a system of harshness.

In what way did they manifest their dissatisfaction to the boy?—I find it stated in my Report at the time "the complaint was made, evidently against the will of the school generally, who would not support it, although they were desired to declare all they felt."

How did they shew that?—By my desiring them to declare it, and their manner, which at that time justified me so to report it.

Was that desire expressed in the presence of the master?—I should think certainly not.

Was it expressed in the presence of all the boys?—Yes, certainly; I believe we always went to the whole of the boys, and asked them if they had any cause of complaint.

Did they manifest their hostility to the boy who complained otherwise than by being silent?—It does not appear in my Report, but I was at the time certainly convinced of that which I stated.

Might not their silence arise from terror?—I cannot say that they were silent; I have not stated that; but it appeared to me, the boys were averse to his conduct on the occasion.

Was the master reprimanded in the presence of the school?—He was reprimanded; I cannot recollect whether it was in the presence of the boys; my Report does not state.

Were not the boys assured they should have in future the hours of play?—I dare say they were; we should have insisted on this.

Did the boys express any satisfaction at being so informed;—Most likely they did, but I cannot recollect.

Why did a fact brought forward by one boy, and supported by others, and admitted by the master to be correct, create dissatisfaction among the rest?—The boy might have been a disagreeable boy to his companions generally.

Is it your impression that the master generally was kind to the boys?—Yes, certainly; I have made inquiry from various sources; I think he is a quick tempered man, but that he is a man who would not treat a child in the school worse than his own; he is quick to his daughters for the period, but I think he would feel as much after an act of severity as any man.

Did you hear of the practice of his seizing the boys by the throat?—No, I should have recollected it if he did I am pretty confident.

And pressing them in such a manner as to throw them into convulsions?—No, most certainly not.

And that to the extent of hundreds of times?—No, certainly not; such an act once committed must have been impressed upon my mind I think.

Could that practice have existed without coming to your knowledge?—I think not; the boys would have told me of it; I think it could not have occurred before either of my visits.

If it should appear from the most undoubted evidence, that such had been his very constant practice, and that you are now certain, as you must have been, that such was not stated to you, should you not then infer, there must have been some very strong impression of terror upon the part of the children, that could account for their not bringing it under your observation?—Certainly, I must have been the most deceived man that could be. Mrs. Thackeray was with me at Sligo, and females are generally very much alive to such things.

The question is this, whether, if it should now be demonstrated beyond all doubt, that such had been in point of fact his constant practice, and your recollection being positive that such a practice, if it existed, was not brought under your observation, would you not infer that you must have been particularly deceived, and deceived from a strong impression of terror operating upon the minds of the boys?—I know not to what cause to assign this; the character of the master at the time, in that country, was certainly opposed to the supposition you suggest, and the facility of communicating their grievances, real or imaginary, was not unknown to the boys in these institutions, by anonymous letters.

Is it easy for a boy to write anonymous letters without being detected by the master or usher?—A boy could do it at times when these were not present.

Did any instances come to your knowledge of a boy being severely punished for not having having done so much at the loom as he ought to have done, according to the opinion of the master?—That was the case in question, I suppose.

You have said that you think the system of weaving in charter schools is a good one; do you think it desirable for the benefit of the master, or the benefit of the boys?—For the benefit of the Society, I now think.

In what way; is it likely to produce a large sum of money; does it produce a large sum of money?—Yes, it would, I believe; a boy can earn four shillings a week when he is perfect in his business, I hear.

Do you think it desirable that the Incorporated Society should be converted into a large manufactory of cloth?—My own opinion is, it would be a most advantageous thing, on every account for Ireland, if a trade was part of education.

In what way would it tend to increase the happiness of Ireland?—It would give you an industrious population.

Would they remain in the charter schools?—No; they would go into the North, probably. The neighbourhood of Drumcliffe abounds with such, I have heard.

In the school at Sligo, for whose advantage was the weaving conducted?—It was the master's; but then all the expense and risk were his, I believe.

What expenses did he incur?—First of all, there were the looms, which then were very expensive; you may now get them for 42 s.; and then all that was spoiled by teaching them their business.

Are you quite certain he defrayed the expense of the looms?—I believe so; I am not positive of it; I believe the whole expence was his.

Had you any means of ascertaining what profit the master made from the work of the boys?—No.

Did you examine his books?—No.

Did you ascertain the quantity of cloth he sold?—No; I saw the cloth he sold, which I thought very valuable for that part of the country. I did not think that inquiry a part of my business.

Did it appear to you that the value of the cloth, and the advantage the master could make of it, induced him to compel the boys to pass more of their time in weaving than could be beneficial to them, considering they were to be instructed in reading and writing, and other useful knowledge?—It appears by my Report (and the boys admitted it), there was no interference in their school improvement.

Could the boys be sufficient judges of that?—Yes, as to time; because the hours are marked, and this might make me have a favourable opinion of the master, that he had not interfered with the hours intended for their moral and religious improvement.

Did you ascertain the fact of the boys being in the school and under instruction for the length of time appointed by the Incorporated Society?—Yes, I generally did so; for it must have been an object of inquiry, and I think their state of education was very good, in this respect. I find in my Report, "that the instruction of the school appeared to me much the same as last year," when it was very respectable.

Did any instance appear to you of the boys being kept from church to acquire on the Sunday a part of that instruction which they ought to have done on the week day?—No.

Did any instance appear to you in which the boys were compelled to rise before the regular hours to work for the master?—No; I do not find any reported here.

Did you inspect into it?—It would not have occurred to me to make such inquiry, unless it had been suggested to me, and it is not recorded here. Nothing whatever surprised me so much as what I have heard lately about the master of Sligo school.

Were the boys continued in the school for a longer period than appeared to you desirable?—I have no recollection of it.

Did it appear there were a number of overgrown boys in the school?—I think I asked some master, why he could not get his boys apprenticed out? I might have asked this question of him; and if so, the reply was, he was not able to get them situations; but I am not certain on this head.

Did you examine his annual record of the ages of the boys?—No; I do not suppose I did, in any of the schools. I do not think I had occasion, for these are sent quarterly to the committee of fifteen.

Do you know to whom the boys were usually bound apprentice upon leaving the school?—I suppose, to weavers.

If a boy was bound apprentice to a weaver, would he not necessarily learn to weave from his master during the years of his apprenticeship?—Yes; but he would be a much more valuable person to his master in consequence of his knowing how to weave; he would get a shorter period and better treatment in consequence of his power to profit his master.

Would not his indentures be similar to those of any other apprentice?—These vary from three to five years.

Would not the conditions be the same, would the master be bound to feed or clothe him better?—No; but it would be an encouragement to do it, as the boy was more valuable. I have more than once seen a boy dismissed by his master when a bad season came on. I saw some during one visit that were sent back to the schools, because the expense of feeding them was so high. Now if a boy were able, by his industry, to increase the funds of a family, they would treat him better than they would do if he were a dead weight upon them.

Is not there an apparent absurdity in apprenticing a boy to a man to learn a trade, which trade he knows as well as the master?—At that early age it may be necessary to keep a lad under some restriction, but the Society have the power of apprenticing him from three to

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

five years; and if they have been in the school three or four years learning to weave, two or three years more would be sufficient for such restriction.

Did you find any instances, in which the boys expressed any unwillingness to be bound apprentice to learn a trade which they already knew?—Yes; I think it is in my recollection that they did complain. Yet there is an advantage which appears to me to arise from it, and a very important one; if a boy has learnt a trade and happens to be seduced into bad company, the principles he acquired in the school and the knowledge of this trade will easier bring him back, and instead of continuing vicious, his return to industrious habits is greatly facilitated.

Did you find it was more easy to provide apprenticeships for the boys instructed as weavers, than those who were not?—That I did not look into.

In your Report you stated, “it is to be regretted that boys so well instructed in weaving, and capable of earning so much in that way, cannot find masters in that trade; I perceive many of those go out as servants;” that fact being brought to your recollection, does that accord with the favourable opinions you expressed of the practice of teaching weaving in charter schools?—There are parts of the country where it would be more difficult in obtaining masters than others; in the north of Ireland there would be no difficulty.

Do you think it would be difficult in Sligo, from its local position?—From what I have heard from Drumcliffe, where there are a great number of weavers who have gone out from that school, it ought not to be so.

In consequence of your recommendations, has the practice of weaving been established in many of the schools?—No, none; it has often been mentioned by me to the board, not within the last few years; I thought it was often entertained with a good deal of consideration.

In that case, should you consider them as schools or workhouses?—Schools for very good education. The objection I have to workhouses is, that the people have a great aversion to the names, and you put a stamp upon the child for ever.

Are the children respected when they go out of the charter schools?—They are now. I have brought up a report of the charter school at Dundalk, to shew the way in which the children are disposed of there.

Putting aside the consideration of Dundalk, do you think there are many parts of Ireland, where it is a matter of opprobrium to have been educated in charter schools?—Yes; I dare say it is in the south, or wherever they have not been attended to as they ought to have been, and the best correction of such evils is the visitation of them by the country gentry.

Do you think that happens in the majority of instances?—I hope so; though I can only speak from a few instances, for some years back, within my reach.

Do you think so?—I do; I think the moral improvement of the charter schools has been productive of a great deal of good in that respect.

Do you consider that an occasional and temporary improvement in the administration of any particular charter school can get rid of that opprobrium that has been the growth of half a century?—No, it must be gradual; but when I see those young persons go out and conduct themselves well in life, and find the gentry patronising them, I think the lower class of persons learn to think well of them and to respect them.

Do you find, for the most part, they are respected and kindly treated in gentlemen's families, when admitted into them as servants?—I am afraid I cannot absolutely say that; it depends upon the conduct of the master and mistress; if a girl or boy go out of a charter school into a family, and the master and mistress take no care to uphold them in the principles in which they have been instructed, and to treat them with becoming care, the other servants will treat them with contempt; in Lord Roden's, in my own and in many other families, I can state, that females, educated in charter schools, have, by their exemplary conduct, won the regard of all their fellow-servants, as well as the good opinion of their masters and mistresses.

Supposing the master and mistress to pay the same attention to those children as others, do you think they are likely to be treated with respect and kindness by the other servants?—I think when they first go into a house, unless the master and mistress do shew them some little care and attention, they are very little likely to be treated well, and I have always found, that when children have lost their situations, it has been in establishments where there has been a want of consideration for their particular circumstances and feelings.

In what way do their feelings differ from those of others educated in similar circumstances?—A young girl coming out of those schools is liable to hear herself termed a charter school brat, and if she have not some one to support her may be greatly depressed and injured by insult. One girl, the other day, was called a charter school brat, she said to the cook, “You call me a brat; I have received a very good education, you have received none, and I hold myself above you; and I am obliged to the Society that gave it me.” But a girl has not always courage to do that.

Do you think it possible to provide situations in gentlemen's families where persons are likely to have their feelings consulted, and their weaknesses upheld, for any considerable proportion of the charter school children?—No, certainly not; and I do not consider gentlemen's families the very best situations for them. I think the class below them is better.

Is it easy to find such situations for them in that class?—I think it will be. We have had had very few girls who did not get out. Some of them, it must be admitted, however, to very bad places, to people who care very little about them.

Do you think upon the whole, the children educated in the charter schools, turn out well?—I think there has been very great improvement of late in the institutions.

The question is a general one; do they in general turn out well?—I should suppose now they do, speaking generally of the great mass, as well as in any other establishment; but I beg to remind you, my knowledge of charter schools has been, for five years, limited to very few.

The question does not refer to any comparison with another establishment, but the general fact, aye or no, do the children turn out well or ill?—I have no means of knowing any thing more than the establishments near or under myself; I can answer for those very satisfactorily; I have brought a return of every individual sent out for a long period, from the school of Dundalk, and to me it appears very satisfactory.

During the time you were inspector, was not your attention very much directed to the fact, one way or another, whether the children turned out well or ill?—Certainly, I think there must have been some document on my part upon that subject; I cannot at this moment bring it to my recollection.

From your previous knowledge and experience, have you now any general opinion upon the subject, whether the children turn out well or ill?—I should say well. I can only speak comparing them with other establishments.

What establishments do you allude to?—Any establishment in England or Ireland.

The information we seek is not of a comparative nature as to the Foundling Hospital or parish schools, but the fact of turning out well or ill?—I should say they turn out well; I certainly think much better than they have credit for; but I could wish not to speak on points of which my knowledge must be very imperfect. My object is to give an accurate statement, on every point on which I may chance to have any thing like accurate knowledge.

Do you think them well instructed?—Yes.

In what does their instruction consist?—In religion, in reading, and writing and accounts.

Is their religious instruction such as to make a deep impression upon their minds and feelings, or do you think it to be principally verbal instruction received from catechisms?—I do not think it a verbal instruction; I think it operates upon their conduct.

Is their instruction chiefly confined to catechisms?—No; no such thing.

How many catechisms do they learn?—I believe there are several; the church catechism, Crossman's and Mann's, Stopford's, and church catechism broke into short questions.

Is it an object to instruct the children in the schools in controversial points?—No, I do not think it is; there are points upon which there are differences, and it is the practice sometimes to state why we do not do so and so, but not to make them controversialists.

Have you been acquainted long with the books supplied to the schools?—Yes.

At what time was Bishop Porteus's Confutation of the Errors of Popery introduced, bound up with Secker's Lectures?—Until you told me, I did not know it was there. The course I pursue is, in the school under me, to have the Scriptures read, and to ascertain the views the children have of the portion read.

Do you not read Secker's Lectures?—Yes, before the sacraments; but the course of instruction I pursue is scriptural; I take the lecture class, and these read the Scriptures to me,

That work of Bishop Porteus's is bound up with Secker's Lectures?—I think not, or I should have seen it; it is certainly not in those which I have held.

If there was any large charter school, in which it appeared upon examination, there were but two children in the whole school that had ever heard of Saint Paul, should you say justice had been done in the article of religious instruction to those children?—I should say if I had not heard such a thing, that the thing was impossible.

Assuming that such a fact has been established to the satisfaction of the commissioners in two large charter schools, that in each of those schools there were only two children who had ever heard of Saint Paul, could you reconcile such a state of things with the supposition that the catechist had performed his duty?—I should suppose it was hardly possible they did not know of Saint Paul; but there are many schools where the epistles have not been read, because the great object is to keep away any thing like controversy, and to teach them parts of the Old Testament, and the Gospels, yet I must suppose the Acts of the Apostles are every where read.

In the schools referred to, the questions put, were as to who Saint Paul was, and the answer given by one was, that he was a king, by others, that he was a wise man, by others one of the prophets, and by others a disciple, although every hint was given to the children of a strong light, and the journey to Damascus, that must have called him to their minds, if they had ever heard of him; and in such instances, in one school, there were but three, and in the other but two, who with those assistances could at all recall to their memories, if they had ever known of the existence of Saint Paul?—I think there could be but one opinion upon that subject, that they had not had justice done them.

Neither by the catechist, the master, nor the usher?—I could not have expected it; that is all.

What species of knowledge, besides religious knowledge, do you conceive the children may reasonably be expected to be possessed of on leaving a charter school?—They are excellent readers; the bible is their chief book, and the catechisms.

In point of fact, are there any other books supplied to them but religious books?—No; in

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

some schools there are given a few works on history, and geography and grammar, I believe, and in our's Murray's Reader, which Mrs. Thackeray obtained for the children.

As a principle, would you allow the use of books calculated to supply information, such as may be of use to them in rural life, and in such states as they are likely to be called into, and which would be useful to them?—No doubt of it; I think we have some from Kildare-street, now I recollect, purchased at the master's own expense, and from other places.

In the return from the clergyman in whose parish the charter school of Castlemartyr is situated, we find him thus expressing himself: "The charter school in this parish has long laboured under the most formidable and discouraging circumstances; young persons have been completely educated from time to time, but from want of adequate situations or employment, they have been found on their removal from the school wandering about as broken hearted beggars; the incompetence of those to whom they have been bound has led to this evil, an evil resulting from the depressed state of the country, and the circumstances of the times, and by no means owing to any want of circumspection in the guardians of the institution; some few have been perverted to the Popish religion, but more I suspect from temporary necessity than from principle;" have you any reason to doubt that is a true representation of the state of things in the parish of Castlemartyr?—I do not know how I could give an opinion upon that; I have not been there for so long a time; I went to the school, and staid in the little room there two days, and having finished my business came away; I could not know the state of the country.

You have said that the religious instruction of the children in the charter schools, was such as to be satisfactory to you; was the general instruction they received satisfactory also?—Much more so upon the second visit than the first.

Without speaking comparatively, was it such as to appear to you sufficient?—Yes, I should think so, pretty generally.

Both upon the first and second visit?—There was a great difference in the different establishments, particularly at our first examination; some were a great deal better than others; but there must have been very few that were such as to give great dissatisfaction.

Have they usually a competent knowledge of arithmetic?—Yes, they have; but there is a great defect, and I do not know how it is to be remedied; you see a child do a sum from the rule book very well, but if you give him a bill he does not know how to settle it.

Is not that a necessary consequence of being taught to do things mechanically without knowing why?—It is the same in every school I suppose.

Can you account for the effect being different upon children in those schools from what it is in others?—It may happen with other children, they are often called upon to do such things at home, to settle such little accounts as may bring it into practice.

Is not instruction in arithmetic very much sought after by the lower classes in this country?—Very much so.

Do you not think it a great defect of the charter school education, that the children do not receive a more efficient education in arithmetic?—As far as doing sums in arithmetic they are not inferior to any body else, but they want that which teaches them the value of it.

Do you think that the same reasoning holds with regard to their other instruction; do you think that they are less able to judge of the practical results of moral instruction, and the benefit that they are likely to receive from it in the conduct they are likely to pursue, than if such instruction was given them when more mixed up in the general affairs of common life?—There is no doubt of it, that the intercourse of common life would enable them to bring it into practice; and the want of knowledge of the world in their class of life exposes them to more danger than others; they are more simple, and more liable to be taken in than others, until they get more conversant with the world.

Do you think they are able to judge of the meaning and application of the rules of conduct put into their head in the charter school?—Yes, but they are very liable to be imposed upon; they will think they are always addressing people as innocent as themselves, which is not the case.

Have you ever known of any instance of a child who has gone through a regular charter school education, who at eighteen years old was unable to write?—I do not recollect that I have seen such instances; some children are extremely heavy and dull, and mistresses may have employed such a child altogether in the work of the house.

Would that be consistent with the rules?—No.

Would you believe an instance had happened of a girl twenty years old, who had been examined by two of the commissioners, and upon being called upon to sign her testimony when written down, had put her mark to it, as she could not write her name?—I could not have believed it, supposing she had any talent at all.

Are the children in the school instructed in the commonest points of geography?—No; I do not know that that point is attended to, except in the two institutions of the teachers.

Would you believe, that in a school not very far removed from Dublin, twelve boys, of the first class, were asked successively what a lake was, that ten could give no answer whatever, and two agreed in saying it was a running stream?—There is nothing in the mode of teaching in these schools that can teach them what a lake is, except the common spelling book, with explanations, and the instructions of the examiner.

Is not the word one that constantly occurs in the New Testament?—Certainly; I should have thought it very unlikely.

Would it surprise you to hear, that in another charter school, not far from Dublin, consisting

213

N° 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

consisting of eighty boys, there were but two or three in the school that knew the meaning of the word "Europe?"—I should have thought they would have known it; but there is nothing in the nature of the education of the school that gives it them; I mean, no book of explanation, but that which I have just named.

The question is, whether the education is such as the public ought to rest satisfied with, when, upon such common points of information which they could hardly escape knowing in any other school, they are omitted to be instructed?—I think the public have a right to expect, that in these establishments the education should be such as to enable the children to give a reply to such things as ought to be known at their age in any school, for children of similar rank in society.

Did you find, it was the general practice of the masters to intrust the instruction of the boys almost entirely to the ushers, and to occupy themselves in the farms, and taking care to provide the school with food, and the children with clothing?—In my first tour, I found it to be the case, and I strongly suggested to the board to have it corrected, and it was corrected; how the thing is going on now, I do not know.

Did you express any opinions to the masters themselves upon the subject?—I have no doubt I did; but whether I did or not, my Report was sent down to all the schools, that they might know my opinion upon it.

Do you recollect the case of Sligo, with reference to that point?—No, I do not; I dare say it is implied in the general observation I made, that it was too much the practice of the masters who had farms; they must superintend their farms indeed, but not give up so much time to them, as if they had no obligation to attend at the school; and I made it a subject of complaint to the board, and that the masters should be compelled to give up a sufficient portion of their time to school business, and I found it generally attended to on my second visit.

Did you find the master of Sligo school, when you visited the second year, giving any considerable attention, or as much attention as he ought, to the education of the children?—Upon my Report, I have made no observation upon this, except that the master and mistress had attended to the rules I had seen previously disregarded; unless it is included in that, I could not give an answer.

Did you find it a prevailing practice for the master to trust the tuition of the children to the usher?—Yes, in many of the schools; and I believe one master was dismissed, a good deal, in consequence of that.

Do you think that defect has been corrected?—Yes, in a great measure I found it so.

Do you not think such neglect of tuition, in a great measure arises from their attention to their farms?—Yes, certainly.

Do you think their having farms is prejudicial to the performance of their other duties?—The children must be taken care of in their food; it must be supplied to them in abundance; the farms we think essential to the object; if the master would take a due share in the schooling, we think there would be time enough for him to attend to both; and there are schools where that is done.

You think, although the master may make attending on his farm a pretext for not attending to his school, it is not substantially a reason for it?—No, certainly not; he ought to attend to his school, in point of education, as in any other respect; if we found a school doing its duty very well, we might not inquire very much as to how the master devoted his time.

Were you satisfied with the cleanliness of the charter schools?—Upon the second visit certainly; upon the first, we were not; and upon one occasion, they told us the thing was not to be remedied; we went into a school at Longford, that was in a very dirty state from various causes, so much so, that the master, we thought, must be dismissed; the children, some of them, had the itch, sore eyes, and scald heads; the next year, when we came back, after the business of inspecting the school was over, the master told us, "Your visit last year, and the alarm you gave us, has produced an alteration, which we hope has given you satisfaction, for we have endeavoured to do our duty; we did not know our duty very well before; we have been taught it now;" and the children stated, that they had had justice done them in every respect; that they were well taught, well clothed, and well fed; and the usher put into our hands a letter, to state, that he had neglected his duties up to my first visit; that he did not know what they were; but now he did, and had attended to them.

Can you recollect, whether the master of Longford school appeared to be a person fit for his situation?—I do not think he was the first year, but I am certain he was the second, from the improved state in which we found the whole of the establishment.

Were the children supplied regularly with clean linen as frequently as the rules of the Society required?—Not in all cases on the first visit; I believe the rule was adhered to afterwards.

Is there not a regulation, that the rules of the schools shall be read periodically in the school before all the boys?—Yes; that was a suggestion of our's to the board.

Have you any reason to believe that that practice is adopted and followed?—I have not had any opportunity of judging generally of late years.

Did you find upon your second visit, that the rules were publicly read at stated periods?—I believe so; but I cannot say positively whether it was upon the first or second visit I recommended it. I think the first, however.

Were you in the habit of examining the ushers?—I suppose I did, but I do not recollect precisely.

N° 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

Do you believe that the ushers thought it any part of their duty, to see that the rules of the school were complied with generally?—I should think whether they did or not, if they knew the rules were not complied with, they were liable to suspension for not reporting it, if the breach of rule was very material.

If the children were directed to have clean linen twice a week, and the usher knew they had it only once; and if the children were to have clean stockings twice a week, and had them only once, and the usher knew it, and did not make any complaint, would he be liable to reprehension?—I should think he ought to have spoken to the master upon the subject; it is desirable not to bring them in conflict together.

Did you ever hear of an usher making a representation of misconduct on the part of a master to a local committee or a catechist?—I cannot recollect any case.

Did you find any instances in which the dormitories were not clean?—Yes, certainly; on my first visit.

Did you find many instances in which the children were more crowded than two in a bed?—I think it a possible case, that additional children might have been sent down, and for a short period more than two children might be put into the same bed.

Did you find the children without a sheet on each bed?—No, I do not recollect that I did; yet it might be so.

Do you remember a case in which a child being very much affected with the itch, and the master having received some ointment from the apothecary to dress it, and not having done so, being asked the reason, he stated he waited till clean linen was put on the beds?—I have some floating recollection that that was at Longford.

Do you happen to know whether the children are allowed soap to wash their own persons?—No, indeed, I do not.

Do you think they can be clean without it?—Yes, I think so; I know a man who never uses soap except to shave himself, and he is a very clean man, but I suppose the children do use soap.

Are you aware that the common practice of the children is to wash themselves in the tubs they make use of in their bed-rooms at night?—I do not know; such a thing may exist, but it cannot be in many instances I think.

Is it your impression, that the improvements that had taken place between your first and second visit, continued to operate in the year following?—I have no means of judging; I never visited a school from that time to this, except Kevin-street, and Santry, I believe, and Dundalk.

Is there any thing in the existing apparatus, for the management and superintendence of the charter schools, now that the inspectors are discontinued, which can insure a due execution of the regulations you recommended?—They must have recourse to the local committee and the catechist.

Is that sufficient in order to obtain a due execution of those regulations; would you yourself trust to them for that purpose?—No, I would not; and I have more than once suggested to the board the propriety of appointing a visitor to go round to the schools. I am perfectly certain of the advantages which result from such a course.

Were you satisfied with the moral conduct of the children in the schools?—Yes, I think I was.

Did not the masters generally complain of the children as being much addicted to saying what was untrue?—Yes, I recollect, on our first visit, there was a great deal of complaint made in that respect, but I think afterwards we found it had been very much corrected; and I remember a particular circumstance of that kind, with respect to the school at Ballycastle, where they were notorious, so that there was no getting at the truth at all; the next year it was a great object to ascertain the result of the pains that had been taken, and we found it had been corrected to a very great extent, so much so that the monitresses felt it their duty to report any girl that told an untruth.

Did it appear to you, that the reason for the children not answering, was that they were afraid?—No, I had no reason for that, for we had the children to ourselves, and Mrs. Thackeray would have the girls by themselves afterwards, and they would talk more freely, and speak of things that they wanted for their own comfort, with perfect confidence in her anxiety for their welfare.

If a boy made a complaint against a master, did not the master immediately represent that boy to be a liar?—I do not know that I had any reason to say that; I think it was not the fact.

Do you ever recollect a "complaint being made by any, the most malicious boy, that he could not establish, and did you ever find him strongly supported by the other boys, unless it was an aggravated one?"—That is my impression, and I have so stated in my Longford Report of 1818. I go on to state in the same report, "that for the most part, the feeling that exists between the master and scholar is such as it should be, and the boys in most cases consider them the nearest friends they have to fly to."

Can you account for the number of children who are instructed in religious principles and with peculiar care, but who are, nevertheless, in a peculiar measure addicted to falsehood, in any other manner than by their being under the influence of terror?—Probably those children were in schools where this religious knowledge was not so particularly inculcated; because in our school at Dundalk, and many others, the vice of lying is, I will not say extinct, but we have very little of it indeed.

You consider lying as symptomatic of a bad school?—I do.

Reflecting as much upon the teacher and managers as the children?—I think that care and and attention would correct it; I think the master is very deficient in his duty if he does not correct it.

Did you find it a general complaint against the children?—Yes, upon the first occasion, I recollect reporting upon the subject as to two or three or more schools; and I remember to have reported in the next a correction of that vice.

Can you speak of the moral character of the children after they have quitted the schools, and are apprenticed?—The general report was favourable, upon the whole, certainly; but I can only speak now of the school that is under my own immediate view.

Do you recollect the person who was master of Strangford school when you visited in 1818?—Yes, I do.

What description of person was he?—I thought him very insufficient for so large an establishment, and was the cause of his being removed.

Do you consider him competent to teach?—Yes; I believe he was, but he was not in the habit of it; I thought him a giddy man, and not fit for a situation of such responsibility; it is the largest house under the Society.

Do you think him a man perfectly sane in his understanding?—He was a light sort of man; and viewing him as one insufficient for such a charge, I recommended him to Newport, which was to be a day school, and must be a very small establishment. The reason that day school was commenced by the Society was to preserve its income, the lease of a house and twelve acres of land, and to try the experiment of a day school, since which I think the master told me he had 75 scholars; but I have not been there myself. It was a very fair plan to endeavour to have a good school for the people generally, whose circumstances rendered it desirable to abolish boarding schools; I thought him insufficient for the charge of a weightier school, and having a respectable wife and large family, I recommended his being sent there; he was sent there; and I think he wrote afterwards to me, supposing me the bitterest enemy he had, and that he has again written to me, saying, he had a very good school.

Were you the first inspector who was sent round?—I believe I was the first visitor; there was a person sent round, Mr. Nelson, to see after the apprentices, and to inspect minor matters.

In what way did Mr. Nelson conduct himself?—He was an uneducated man, and talked absurdly when at Dundalk, as it appeared to me; I told him, I did not want his observations upon the school; he talked about the progress of the scholars; I told him, I thought he was very inadequate, and that he had better confine himself to those duties for which he was sent down to the schools.

What was that?—To see that the apprentices were taken care of, and to see to any minor points.

Is it a regulation of the Society, that the servants employed in the school should all of them be of the Protestant religion?—It is a regulation.

Is it always complied with?—No, it is not; and there is a very sufficient reason; you cannot always get them.

Would there be any difficulty in getting them, if sufficient wages were paid by the masters?—The wages are the allowance of the Society;—I believe they allow 5*l*.

Would there be any difficulty in obtaining a sufficient number, if a sufficient sum was offered?—I do not think it would be a very easy thing to get them in many parts of the country.

Are many persons retained as servants who have been educated in the establishment?—Sometimes.

Do you think that a desirable practice?—I have seen it in my own school, and I have no objection to it; but generally they get better situations.

Is it a desirable thing there should be a standing rule that cannot be complied with, and which it is known is not complied with?—I believe it is generally complied with.

Did that appear to you upon your visitation?—Yes; I believe it is generally so.

Did it appear to be the case at Sligo school?—I cannot recollect.

Does it frequently happen that boys are educated in charter schools and afterwards become ushers in the establishment?—By the principle suggested by me, and agreed to be acted upon, I believe it is so now; as long as there is a candidate teacher, duly qualified, the board will not select any other.

Have you ever been informed by a master or usher, that if a boy educated in a charter school afterwards becomes an usher, it is a great object to conceal from the other boys that he has been so educated?—I should think that could hardly be the case, because the rule that regulates the appointment of ushers to the schools, is not of above five or six years standing, and I think it must be known to the boys, of necessity.

Do you think they have a wish to conceal it, if they could?—I believe some have a little of that false pride about them.

Do you think if it was known that the boys would have less respect for them, and the ushers less controul over the boys?—I can only speak of the places that I know; there are in Kevin-street and Dundalk, in each two, who have been brought up in charter schools; and young women more respected by the children under them, cannot be any where found, or more valuable for necessary attainment, and above all for influential example.

Would you give the same answer as to the male ushers?—I have not had an opportunity beyond the case of the usher of Castledermot, whom I consider second to few, if to any.

Have you any opinion upon the subject?—No; I do not know that I have. I should not think the boys would treat them with disrespect if they conducted themselves well; if they

N^o 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

were treated by the master and mistress as their equal, the boys would treat them with respect.

Do you recollect having had occasion to dismiss one of the usheresses from the school at Dundalk, or did you find a young girl in one of the schools you visited, who had been in the situation of usheress at your school, and was acting in another school at Monivea?—I do not recollect it; I think it is impossible she could have been in our school.

Having stated that the children educated within the walls of the charter schools are deficient in the general knowledge of the world, and in the practical application of the principles and instruction that they receive in the schools, do you think it desirable that the ushers of charter schools should be chosen from amongst the boys and girls educated in them?—I must only speak from what I know, and I would not change the usheresses to whom I have alluded, for any usheresses, let them be brought up wherever they may; I think they are most particularly correct in their example and conduct, and we can hold them forth to the children themselves as specimens, and as a stimulus to them in the management of themselves.

In recommending the establishment at Santry, for the education of candidate teachers, and of parish clerks, from amongst boys selected from the charter schools, did you do it with a view of providing the means of furnishing a creditable livelihood to the children themselves, or to benefit the other children in the establishments who were to be instructed by them?—Certainly, for public purposes; I did consider, and do now consider, that the great want in this country is in teachers and parish clerks. As far as I can see at present, as to the effects of that system followed by my recommendation, I am warranted in saying it has proved beneficial.

Was it with a view that those persons should become teachers generally, as well in the charter schools as in other schools?—Yes; parish clerks and masters generally; and I have five around me at this moment, all doing well, and of exemplary conduct.

Are you aware of the whole extent to which it has gone?—No.

What provision did you recommend to be made for the instruction of those boys when sent to Santry?—History, geography, grammar, and, I believe, the higher branches of arithmetic.

Whose duty did you suppose it would be to instruct them?—The master and his assistant; the master has a farm there, which is essential to carrying on the establishment, and which of course must occupy much of his time; but no time of his that should render him unfit to see that justice is done to the candidate teachers.

Are you aware, that the master never has, in point of fact, instructed those candidate teachers; that they have remained without an instructor, to pick up what information they could for themselves, since April last, 'till the other day?—I know there was a great deal of difficulty in this establishment, in consequence of the late usher.

Was it recommended that any person should, from time to time, examine those boys in the progress they had made in their instruction?—I believe it was a suggestion of mine, that there should be an annual visitation of the school.

Do you happen to know whether such annual visitation has taken place?—I do not know whether it has been done annually; I think the school has been visited by individuals of the board; but I do not know whether lately, or not.

Was the visitation accidental?—I think I have heard, that the Bishop of Ferns has visited that school, not accidentally; that he went to see how it was going on; this is just what I have heard, and suppose to be the case; there is too a local committee there.

Are you aware there has been no usher in the school since April last?—I was not aware of it; I was aware of the neglect of the usher, against whom repeated complaints were made, because of his absenting himself without leave; and the board wanted to supply that situation efficiently; whether they have done so or not, I do not know.

Was that usher Mr. M'Gee?—Yes; when he was recommended to that place, he seemed peculiarly qualified from his attainments; but he got married, and marriage drew him off from his duty.

When was this establishment first set on foot?—In 1819, I believe.

Do you know what number of boys have been admitted into it?—No.

Informing you that the total number admitted since its first institution, that is within the period of six years, has been ninety-five, and that of those, nineteen have eloped, three have been expelled, that two only have been sent out as parish clerks, that ten have been retained as ushers in the service of the Incorporated Society, and that twelve only have been sent out as masters to other institutions, and that forty remain in the institution, do you think that a satisfactory result?—[A paper was handed to the witness.] See Post.—Of those twelve sent out as masters, five are doing extremely well; certainly part of this report, which surprises me a good deal, and distresses me (as I looked at it as being productive of the greatest good), is the elopements. As the boys went to Santry, to become candidate teachers, it was necessary they should be there two or three years before they were qualified as clerks or schoolmasters, therefore one would not expect this scheme to come into operation, till within the last three years; the elopements are scandalous; but you could hardly expect many more to have been sent out, for the reason I have stated. Forty is the number always in the establishment.

Seeing that out of fifty-five children who have been dismissed from the establishment, twenty-two have either been expelled or eloped, should you, under those circumstances, say it has answered the expectations you formed of it?—I can only say I had expected a better result, result, though I did not expect many more during the first four or five years would have obtained situations; but the elopements alarm me.

Do you not think that any state of things that would have induced the elopement or expulsion of twenty-two could not have tended to the amelioration of those who remained.—I can speak of the five around me who are highly qualified; in the free school at Dundalk, I had a Protestant and Roman Catholic master, and it contained 400 children, it was a disappointment to me for years. I could not reform it as I wanted with those two masters, and I have now got a master from this establishment, who is proving just what I required, and my school promises to flourish under his management, with the approbation of both parents and scholars.

Seeing what the result of that experiment has been after five years trial, what course do you think it would be desirable to pursue with it; would you abandon the experiment or still pursue it?—My opinion is, that it should not be abandoned, but that all the officers of the establishment should be made to do their duty.

What is the name of the person employed by you as schoolmaster at Dundalk?—Brown.

Have you established any other individual from this institution as a schoolmaster?—Yes; I recommended one as a clerk and master at Ballymascanlan, another to Castle Bellingham, another to Inniskeen, very lately, of whom the clergyman of the parish speaks as a very valuable acquisition, not only on account of the general school, but of his own family of children.

Who is the other?—Halcrow at Ardee. I went not long since to his school, I suppose unexpectedly, and if his school had been prepared for these five commissioners, it could not have been in a better condition. The children were as clean as if they were living in a town, and taken care of; and although there is an excellent school in the town under the board of Erasmus Smith, I find many children attend from the town, which is about two English miles distant.

You observe, that out of twelve masters supplied out of this institution to all Ireland, five of them owe their appointment to your individual exertion; do you not think it is fairly to be inferred, from all the rest of Ireland having called for but seven, it is not very likely in time to come there will be much application made to this institution for masters?—It is coming into notice; it was owing probably in some degree to the arrival of one good master that applications were made for others; the great defect in this institution appears to me to be this, that sufficient steps have not been taken to secure a good and permanent teacher of psalmody as a science. I have more than once suggested to the board to select one of their best candidate teachers, and have him taught (as a matter of science) psalmody, and probably the use of the piano-forte, and that he should go down and reside in the school as an usher, and in the evening to teach the school, at least, such as are capable of being taught psalmody, which I am of opinion, would be considered by them as much a matter of pleasure as of duty; the establishment will never answer all its objects till that is completed, in my judgment. The board was in treaty with Mr. Smith, for this object, but he asked 50*l.* which was thought too much to give him.

Have you ever endeavoured to ascertain, as a matter of curiosity, what proportion of the number of young men in that class could learn to sing?—No; they are generally at that period of life when their voice is breaking; but you have 100 children in the school besides, and out of these, the master teaching singing, could select the best, and the board could inquire after those who had the best voices in other schools, and bring them there.

Was the establishment at Kevin-street for the education of usheresses or mistresses, an establishment of your recommendation?—Yes, it was.

Has it turned out to your satisfaction?—Yes, it has; I think the school at Dundalk deserves a better character than Mr. Lee gave of it. I do not mean to say, that Mr. Lee did not intend to state what was right, but he had not time to ascertain the facts I think, or the children must have been provokingly stupid on the occasion.

Have you seen any young women educated in Kevin-street in the situation of mistresses?—Yes, I have, several as mistresses and usheresses.

Have they conducted themselves to your satisfaction?—Yes, the head usheress in Kevin-street was sent to us, and conducted herself remarkably well.

Is the person employed in the school at Dundalk, the only one sent out as a school-mistress?—We have two in Dundalk; there are a great number under the Society, and elsewhere.

Of fifty-six received into the establishment, one has become a school-mistress, and five usheresses?—[See statement Post.]—I do not know the number.

Has it ever occurred to you to form any comparison, how many members have been sent into society from the charter school system for the last million of money it has cost?—No, indeed it has not; in England you have poor houses and poor schools, and many children have been kept by people having families of their own, in the hope of having them put into charter schools when they were of an age to go out; a neighbour will keep one of the children for a year or two, in the hope they will get into the charter school at the end of that period.

Do you consider a charter school as a substitute for a poor house, or a place for education?—As both; I consider it a very valuable place for poor orphans.

If the sum of money expended upon the charter school at Dundalk were put into your hands, and you were directed to apply it in the way you thought most beneficial for the education of the lower orders in the town of Dundalk and its vicinity, would you expend it

N^o 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

in the form in which it is now applied; that is to say, to the charter school; or would you adopt any other system of education?—Considering there is no retreat whatever for orphans in this country, I most assuredly would have an establishment where children were altogether supported; I could see no remedy for it. I conceive that almost all the children who do well are saved by it.

Was the Society originally incorporated with a view to provide for orphan children, or with the view of providing a general system of education throughout Ireland?—It was to produce reformation, that which we call reformation, and to bring children into the established church; they are called Protestant charter schools.

Do you speak with certainty, when you say the original object was to provide education for Roman Catholics only?—For them, or with them, in consequence of their having no friends or parents, the children of Protestants who might otherwise be neglected.

Can you state why it has been found necessary to abandon that attempt?—It was a very unpopular thing, and much pains have been taken I think to make it so; much misrepresentation has taken place respecting these institutions.

Do you think that the object is abandoned when it is applied to orphans?—No, I do not; and repeated applications are made by Roman Catholics to get their children admitted; I had a woman with me yesterday, a Roman Catholic, to ask when there would be a vacancy,

By orphan children, do you mean the children of Roman Catholic parents?—I mean by orphan, the loss of both parents, or at least the want of one, that can or will take care of the child.

Do you conceive that the charter school system is applied advantageously to the education of such children who are not orphans?—They certainly could not receive the same education any where else that I know of in this country, if I except the Orphan House and Foundling Hospital.

Do you consider that the same money could provide an education better suited to children who had living parents?—Not a better education, but an equally good one, without the expense of board and clothes.

Do you think the same money would educate more children, if applied in that way?—Yes.

Do you think upon the whole such children would turn out better?—Yes, I should suppose so.

From your general information and observation, do you conceive that children educated at charter schools, turn out good members of society, or otherwise?—I should suppose they do turn out good members of society; I know much exaggeration takes place respecting the children of these schools if one does turn out ill; I know the character of the whole establishment is affected by it.

Did you observe the general appearance of the children, so far as countenance can mark the state of the mind, whether cheerful or the reverse, when visiting the charter schools?—Indeed, I should think they were happy.

Do you think they generally wore cheerful countenances?—I think they did.

Do you think they were on the whole as healthy, as a similar number of children selected out of the vicinity?—The liberty of running about is very beneficial to children; restriction is not very pleasing to youth. The children of charter schools are generally the children of poor persons, and who have had little care taken of them, and that will operate to their injury.

In health and strength, do you conceive them upon a par with children of the same age in the neighbourhood?—Yes, with this exception, that children who run from cottage to cottage, and laugh and joke with their neighbours, acquire a liveliness that does not belong to those under greater restriction.

The question alluded to health and strength?—I do not see any objection to it.

Are they as large grown as other children in the same class of life?—Certainly, I think so.

Do you not conceive, that the children who feel that the attention they receive is partly the result of kindness towards them, rather than a dry sense of duty, are more likely to grow up cheerful and happier than children educated in the way in which children educated in charter schools are?—I never had reason to think the children were not cheerful; there may be cases to the contrary. There were, indeed, all those children at Longford which presented a sight I shall not easily forget, from neglect and disease; but the contrast was as great in this case with other schools I visited, as with the general mass of the children of the country.

If a boy continues ten years in a charter school, what would be the total expense he would occasion to the Society?—About 100*l*.

Would 100*l*. pay it?—No, 110*l*. The schoolmaster at Dundalk told me it was 11*l*. and a fraction the cost to the Society of each child; he included every thing. Our building is new, and there are no extra expenses on that account.

If children lived in the neighbourhood of such a school as you have lately established at Dundalk, and continued with their parents, and if to their parents was allowed 3*l*. a head per annum for the maintenance of each child for ten years, and the children were forced to attend regularly at the school I have named, do you not think the children of such parents would be better than those who were educated within the walls of a charter school?—If I was to judge by the school I know most of, I should say, No.

Have you not had such an opportunity of seeing all the charter schools as to enable you to form a more general opinion, and give a more general answer?—As I saw the schools upon the last occasion, I should say that the schools were doing a great deal of good; what what the state of these establishments is now, I do not know; I am speaking of five years ago.

Do you suppose that your own school is at present a fair specimen of the charter school system, such as it actually exists?—I dare say, it is amongst the very best.

Did you, upon your inspection, find any other school so well managed as your own now is, or was then?—I think there were two or three schools, at all events, that were quite as good as our's. I think there is a more valuable establishment than our's in the town in which we now are; I mean Kevin-street.

Have you any doubt that the school in Kevin-street, and the school in Dundalk, and the school at Celbridge, are marked exceptions to the state of the charter schools, generally, at this moment?—I should suppose they are better than any other; but I believe there are others very good.

You have stated, that it was the original object of those schools to educate the children in the Protestant religion; do you believe it has had the effect of diminishing the number of Roman Catholics in this island, or increasing the number of Protestants?—The Protestants must be increased by it, because every person that remains with us must cause such increase; the numbers who have become Roman Catholics again are very few. I believe of late the representations upon that subject have been very erroneous, I have reason for thinking.

Has it done this to such an extent as to be a matter of importance either way; are the Roman Catholic or Protestant population sensibly affected by the education given in the charter schools?—Certainly not to the extent that had been calculated upon, I believe; till latterly there was not that sort of instruction given to them that there is now, as far as I have been able to hear.

Is not the system upon which charter schools were originally carried on so essentially changed as to prevent its being likely to produce converts to any extent?—No; I should think the persons who come into those places, for the most part, continue members of the established church.

Are not very few persons admitted who are children of living Roman Catholics?—I should suppose about half and half; but I speak without knowledge; the returns can tell.

Is it not a fact well known to persons acquainted with the system of the charter schools, that the children of Protestants are preferred?—I cannot say that is the case.

Do you conceive, that as many parents would be better pleased, and the children as well educated out of, as they are at present in the charter schools?—I do not see why an education out of a charter school might not be as good as one in; but I know many parents who think it to be a great comfort to have them in that school, and for the sake of the morals inculcated.

Would not they think it a greater comfort to have the assistance I have specified, and the children remaining in their family?—Yes, certainly, if parents were paid for keeping their children at home.

Have you never witnessed very painful scenes at the separation for life, between parents and children, at their admission into charter schools?—I never saw any thing of that sort. Parents, when they part with their children, must feel, as we know they do, on sending their children to Eton, or other schools; but I never saw depression, on the part of the parents alluded to, under a feeling that justice would not be done to the child.

Do you not think, that the destruction of filial and fraternal affection must operate injuriously upon the other moral qualities of the child?—I think that may be answered thus; if you could superadd to the education they get in the charter school, the care and presence of parents of good moral character, it certainly would be a very great additional advantage to the child.

Do you conceive, in a thoroughly well regulated day school, the education that is supplied to children, even in the humblest classes of life, who have the benefit of a paternal home to return to each day, is not more likely to produce good effects, both moral and religious, upon the character of the children, than that actually supplied in the charter schools, taking them as you found them five years ago?—I should think the moral state of the children in the charter schools, the last time I saw them, was probably better; the religious certainly better than children of the neighbouring towns.

Do you not think that children educated in the charter schools, and sent forth into the world, say at the age of fourteen or fifteen years, after having necessarily lost the filial and fraternal feelings above referred to, and feeling of course less responsible to others for their personal character, than children who have continued in those relations, are less likely to set a value upon the continuance of good character than if they had not been so educated?—Children well instructed in their religion, and acting upon that instruction, have the best of all ties; the other circumstance of having a parent to look to is a very great one. I do not regard very much the moral character of the people; I do not look upon it very highly; I cannot from the experience I have had.

Do you not conceive a good moral and religious education may, by possibility, be communicated to children without abstracting them from their paternal homes?—Certainly, every body must admit that an education, such as is given in charter schools to children, must prove more beneficial when aided by the approbation of moral parents.

Do you not think many children are admitted into charter schools whose parents certainly would, if there were no such resources, provide for their instruction?—No doubt.

Have you not known of many instances of children of servants admitted into charter schools at the application of their masters and mistresses, who were recommended more

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

from the desire of the masters and mistresses to serve them than from any circumstances that rendered the children fit objects for the institution?—No doubt many are so admitted, but the character of such parents should be considered.

Do you not think it probable, that those children have been in the result injured rather than benefited by the proceeding?—The connexion between parents and children does not necessarily cease upon the admission of the child into a charter school; parents are allowed to visit their children at stated times, and letters frequently pass between them where the distance forbids interview, where parents exhibit affection.

Are you aware in the course of one year, during parts of 1821 and 1822, there were sixteen girls came into your own school at Dundalk from one quarter, recommended by the same person?—I am; and I objected to it, because I did not think it right. I saw the lady not long since, and said, “there are a great number of persons sent into our school from your neighbourhood, and I disapprove of it.” I did not mention it to the Society; but in the district from which they came there is a great number of poor, and somebody must send them to school. The individual in question is very active, and sends to school all the children she can, either to day or to charter schools.

Did it appear to you, that those children were deserving objects?—Some of them were such wretched objects that we sent one of them back, our school not being an asylum for objects of that description.

Are you aware, that she sent in nineteen children in the same period of time to another charter school from the same parish?—I am not aware of that.

You have said, some of the children sent by this lady to Dundalk were unfit, from infirmity, to come into the school; were there any unfit, as being rather above the station, who ought not to have been recommended?—I can speak upon that point; I have no reason to think she has sent persons above the station which usually supplies schools, her whole time is devoted to visiting schools and visiting the poor; she is indefatigable.

In the course of your inspection, did you furnish a detailed report of the state in which you found each charter school?—I did.

Did you also furnish a general report to the board of your observations upon the whole?—I did; it was required of me.

Do you know what course Mr. Lee pursued in that respect?—I believe he pursued the same course.

Do you know whether he made a general report?—I have heard he did.

Have you ever seen it?—No, I have not that I recollect; I think certainly not.

Have you a distinct recollection of what you heard?—I have heard, within these three months, that he had made a report, and that it was unfavourable; that the children were “stunted in mind, body and soul,” or something of that sort; this, I believe, brought it to my recollection, that he had reported to me, that he had sent in a report, and he was surprised it was not published.

Was that a communication to you, that he had sent it in or intended to do it?—I cannot recollect; it was immediately after his inspection. I remember dining with him one day at a gentleman’s house, and in the course of conversation he told me about it, I think, and that he had made an unfavourable report of Dundalk, and that he was very delicate about it because it was my school; I told him he must make such report as he thought correct.

Did he shew you a draft of that general report?—No, I believe not; but I cannot be certain.

Did he communicate to you, that his report was in general unfavourable?—I think he did; but I do not think he shewed me the report.

Can you recollect at all what your general conversation was; what passed upon the subject?—I cannot recollect any thing more upon the subject than that he said his report was not favourable, and having spoken unfavourably of Dundalk; if he spoke of any other report afterwards, I might not be induced to pay much attention to it, for I thought very well of the school of Dundalk.

Do you recollect whether he stated he had determined to present his general report?—I thought he said he had presented it.

Did he consult you upon the propriety of presenting any general report?—If he did, I told him probably I was called upon to make a general report, and therefore I did it; I should not have done it if I had not been called upon.

Did you recommend him to make a general report?—No, I should think not; I had made a report of each school; the board then called upon me for a general report; they intended first to publish my reports, and one or two of them were struck off; but my reports were very hurriedly written, and I did not like them to appear in print; I added, if they wished I would give them an outline in a general report.

Then do I understand you to say this; that if that had not taken place, you would not have made a general report?—No, I am quite sure of that; when I was at Dundalk they sent me one of the first impressions of one of the returns; I objected to it, it would have required such prodigious labour in putting all in better language and better arrangement; I said I would make a general report if they desired it.

Did you advise Mr. Lee, therefore, that as he was not called upon on similar grounds to make a similar report, that he had better abstain?—If I gave him any advice, I did, certainly.

Do you recollect whether any thing passed upon the subject?—He spoke to me, but I cannot recollect the conversation; but I have no doubt I acted from what had been my own course.

Did it occur to you to dissuade him from publishing the report because you thought it was

221

was an unfavourable one?—That would have been a reason, certainly, for not publishing it without the authority of the body and their approbation; he was sent out as their officer; a publication unwarranted by the Society who employed me and confided in me, I should consider a breach of trust.

Did you dissuade him from presenting it?—I have no recollection of it; but if he had asked me the question, I should have said, you cannot send in a general report; it was in consequence of their being about to publish these reports that I prepared a general one for them.

Did it occur to you, when he told you it was unfavourable, that it was objectionable on that point?—I cannot recollect what occurred upon that; I should think it a very likely thing I should advise a man not to do or to say gratuitously any thing offensive to those who employed him.

If his report had been favourable, should you have been of the same opinion?—Yes, because it was not part of his business unless he was called upon; I should think it was extra work, if he asked me any thing upon the subject (and there must have been some conversation), I think I should have dissuaded him from sending in a general report unless he was called upon, because it looked very much like wishing to push himself unbecomingly forward, as well as for the reason I have before stated.

Can you remember distinctly or no, whether you did dissuade Mr. Lee from communicating his report to the board?—No, I do not; but if the question was put to me now, I should dissuade him.

We collect, upon the whole, that you think it probable you did dissuade him?—Yes, if he spoke to me upon the subject, I should have said, you have no right to intrude a paper not called for upon the Society.

Did you ever write to Mr. Lee upon the subject of that report?—I did; I heard, when the commissioners were coming over, he had prepared a report, in which that expression, “stunted,” was uttered; and I wrote to him, and certainly dissuaded him from it, and told him, I thought he had better wait till he was called upon to make a report by the Society by whom he had been soliciting to be employed again, as I understood; I did not think it fair to prejudice the commissioners against an institution they were coming personally to examine.

Do you think if a gentleman who had been employed by the Society had made a report unfavourable to that establishment, though according to his conviction, that they would have refused to employ him again?—He was sent out, and paid for his visitation, and I think he had no right to give them any thing beyond what he was called to give; but they could not object to an unfavourable opinion of his, if it came within the line of his duty.

Your opinion is, that he was to report the facts?—Yes, and his opinions upon these facts; I did the same, and many of my opinions were not very favourable.

Your objection applied to the general report, and not the particular reports?—Yes, certainly, it could apply to no other.

In the general report you have drawn up, you have stated, instances had occurred where, in the case of “a master of a school having fallen under the heaviest displeasure of the board, testimonies in the strongest terms of uniform good conduct had been regularly transmitted;” do you remember that circumstance?—Yes, I do.

And that it occurred in more cases than one?—Yes, probably in more cases than one.

Did you find, in the course of your visitation, any cases where the children had not their full allowance of feeding?—In the first visit there were two instances.

In the course of your visitation, was it any part of your office to ascertain the actual value of the land occupied by the master, compared with the rent he paid?—No, I believe not; I did not understand such matters.

Did you visit, among other schools, the school at Athlone?—I did.

Did you find the clothing in that case to be in a bad condition, or well supplied?—We had much to object to, but the then master was not to blame.

Did you find any number of boys altogether without shoes?—Eleven boys were so far without shoes, they could not go out to church; there were twenty-seven pair of shoes in the school, but too small for them to wear.

In what situation did you find the fences upon the farm attached to this school?—I think they were very bad,

YOU had occasion to make an observation at the time of visiting the school at Athlone, upon the state of the farm and the state of the fences?—Yes; they were in a very bad state; the premises were at the back of some barracks, and the fences were in so bad a state, that any body that chose might go through them. I think I heard some of the soldiers used to bring improper women into the fields adjoining the school, which induced me to notice the defective state of the fences.

Did you find there were not such fences as to debar access to the people attending the barracks, and any disorderly people attending there?—Yes, certainly, it was open to that danger.

Can you recall to your recollection the circumstances connected with the servants of the house; had you any occasion to make any observation upon them?—One of the servants was merely a child, and totally unfit for her situation; the other was in a state of pregnancy, as it was represented, by a civil officer in the adjoining barracks.

How did you find the school in respect to education?—It was improved; and the children owed their improvement to the arrival of the then master.

[P]

Had

N^o 54.Examination of
The Rev.Elias Thackeray,
31 Dec. 1824.

3 Jan. 1825.

N° 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825.

Had you occasion to make any observation with respect to the older or larger boys in the school being less instructed than the younger boys?—Yes; some of the larger boys knew nothing; and I stated in my report that they never would.

Can you call to mind the circumstances that occurred to you to induce you to think that no improvement would take place?—I do not mention in the report that they were defective in ability; it must have been from the neglect in which they had been kept in early life.

Had you occasion, in other cases, as well as in this, to observe that the elder boys in the charter schools sometimes showed less proficiency than the smaller or younger ones?—No; I could not state that. I remember one circumstance, at Sligo, where the lower children were those most advanced in knowledge.

You mean with respect to that particular school at Sligo?—Yes.

Did you think it your duty, under the circumstances in which you found the school at Athlone, to make any representation to the Society with respect to the necessity of removing the master?—The mistress was removed before my second visit; I suppose I gave such a report of her, that she was removed. It was a boys school, and required a master as well as a mistress.

You state in your second report, that improvements had been made, which you attributed to the mistress?—Yes.

That was in 1818?—Yes.

When was your previous visit?—In 1817.

Was your previous report* given in to the Society with the other reports?—Yes, certainly; I think it is possible to account for some of my reports not being forthcoming now, by this fact, that they were taken home by different members of the committee, and not returned.

Did you find, that at this school of Athlone, there was a regular attendance of the catechist, for the instruction of the children?—No, I think not; I induced the catechist, the former year, to resign, in consequence of his being indolent, and not possessing the qualities which would make him a good catechist, as it appeared to me. Afterwards a jealousy was excited, of some kind or other, and he retained his office; he was a remarkably clever man, but a very singular man.

Did you find another catechist at the time when you visited the school in 1818?—The catechist the first year, was inefficient; he was a very able man, but so indolent he would not work, and I prevailed upon him to resign.

What took place with respect to the appointment of a successor?—There was some point or other in dispute, I believe between the committee of fifteen and the proposed new catechist; I cannot give an answer as to what it was, but it was some point which made the Reverend Mr. Steen, the proposed catechist, hold off, and he would not accept the office till that point was settled.

In your second visit, you found the change had not taken place?—Yes; which I lamented deeply.

Did you visit the school at Roscommon?—I did.

In what year?—In both those years I visited that school.

In both those years did you make a report to the Incorporated Society?—Certainly.

Referring to your report of 1818, be so good as to state in what manner you found the duties of the catechist performed at that school?—I recommended to the committee of fifteen, to suggest to the catechist, that he would pay particular attention to the religious education of the children.

We are to infer from that, that according to your opinion, that duty had not been satisfactorily performed before?—Certainly.

Did you find that any means had been taken for the purpose of converting the children from one religion to another?—This was a place set apart for Protestants exclusively, I think; and a girl, of Protestant parents, had been converted to the Roman Catholic religion.

In what state did you find the fences that separated the school and play-ground from the road, on your visit?—I recommended that walls should separate the play-ground from the road.

Did you recommend that upon the former occasion?—Yes? I recommended that a wall should be built, separating the school from the public road; the probability is, that the house must have been sixty or eighty yards from the road, but still there was no sufficient defence, where it was a female establishment.

Did you find that that recommendation had been attended to on your second visit?—No, it was not; I repeated the subject on my second visit.

Will you be so good as to refer to the note or memorandum, at the close of that report, under the word "pump," what does that refer to?—I think it refers to this, that the pump was always out of order; there was that school and another at Monivea, I think, where the pumps seemed always to be out of order.

It does not appear that there is any explanation given of that in your report; how did you intend it should be understood?—In all probability these reports not being likely to be read for some months, I wrote to them upon the subject, stating it required immediate attention.

Referring to your report of the school at Stradbally in 1817, in which you state that the catechist did not reside, is it to be inferred from that, that he was not within reach of the school?

* This report was not produced to us.

school?—He lived about three miles from it; but the observation would not have been made if I had been otherwise satisfied, I dare say.

Did you find he was in the habit of attending to the duties of his situation, notwithstanding the distance at which he resided from the school?—I remember finding it necessary to suggest to him, that he ought to pay more attention to the children in the attainment of scriptural knowledge.

Did you visit that school subsequently?—I did.

What year?—In the year following.

Did you find upon the whole, that the school was one that merited your approbation?—Yes, my impression of it was very favourable indeed, so much so that I wanted to send that master to Santry; but if I recollect right, he declined so arduous an undertaking.

Do you recollect any complaint being made by the boys upon the second visit, either to you or otherwise, particularly with respect to the treatment they received from the master?—It occurred at my second visitation, that a complaint was made by two boys of the treatment they had met with from the master the year before.

Did any investigation take place into the circumstances?—Yes, certainly; by referring to my report, I considered they had been very justly punished.

Was the complaint made to you, or to the local committee?—The report does not state that fact.

Was evidence taken upon the case in your presence?—I am sure we must have examined into it; two gentlemen of respectability were present, and we came to the conclusion, that they had no just cause of complaint.

Did the boys make out any part of their complaint to your satisfaction, or that of the committee?—One boy we made out on the examination, was an idle boy, and richly deserved the chastisement, upon the examination of twelve of his own school-fellows.

How do you account for the circumstance of that complaint not having been made at the time of your first visit, the circumstance appearing to have occurred before that time?—The irritation of the moment had subsided, and something had occurred to call it forth again.

Did you visit the school of Castledermot?—I did.

What observation had you occasion to make in 1817, with respect to the clothing of the boys, particularly as to their stockings?—It appeared that the mistress never washed the boys stockings, that they washed them themselves.

Did you find that the stockings preparing for the children were of a proper quality?—I had reason to complain of the stockings that were at that time preparing.

Did you find the progress of the children in religious education satisfactory to you?—No, it was defective and confined to catechetical knowledge.

What observation did you make as to the morality of the children?—The master brought charges against them for a disregard of truth, that he had frequent occasion to punish them for that offence.

Had you occasion to find that the boys were in the habit of making complaints to other persons than the catechist?—Yes; they applied to Mr. Green.

Do you ascribe this to the circumstance of the catechist not paying attention to the school?—I thought so little of his attention, that I was not surprised at complaints being made to other persons.

How many boys did you find had eloped from their apprenticeships in this school?—Nine had eloped, after having been in their apprenticeship, and of course after having left the school.

On examining the house, and some repairs that had been executed upon it, had you occasion to make any remark upon the way in which the work had been done?—I complained of the flagging as being done very coarsely.

Did you recommend to the Society, not to pay the builder till the work was better finished?—Yes,

Did you visit the same school in the following year?—I did.

Did you find that the recommendation, as to the flagging of the house had been attended to, or that it remained in the same state?—It was in the same state.

You stated in that report, that the censure of the committee of fifteen had produced its proper effect upon the master; to what particular circumstance does this allude in the master's conduct?—To his want of tenderness towards the children.

Did you visit the school, called the Lintown Factory, in 1817?—I did.

In what state did you find the clothes given to the children, particularly the stockings?—Their clothing was very good, but in the place of stockings they wore long trowsers down to their shoes; and I should state, that I have observed in the linen countries the boys are more fond of that dress than of stockings.

Did you find that clean linen was supplied according to the rules of the Society?—They had linen only once a week instead of twice.

Did you find the religious instruction of the children at this school particularly well attended to?—Yes, I did; their religious knowledge was remarkable and most respectable.

To what circumstance do you ascribe that?—To the care of a very attentive and conscientious catechist.

What observation had you to make with respect to elopements from their apprenticeships?—Eleven had eloped out of thirty-six.

Had many or most of those returned to the Roman Catholic church?—Yes, they had most

N^o 54.Examination of
The Rev.Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825.

most of them; but I conclude these boys had left the factory before it had fallen to the care of the then catechist.

Had you occasion to visit the Buncranna factory for girls in 1817?—I volunteered to visit it; some girls were apprenticed there, and I wrote to the Society, saying I would visit if they wished it, and they wrote to me, desiring me to do so.

What observation had you occasion to make as to the nature of the employment of the girls?—That it was not a scheme that seemed to advance them at all, except in the case of hackling. They are employed in the spinning jennies principally, and that did not lead to any permanent provision for them, except such as were hackling.

Was any trade taught to the girls?—None that suited them.

In what situation did they usually go out?—I think after they left that place they went out as servants.

Did you consider them well qualified for that?—No; although I recollect there were some instances of very good girls; but the employment there did not lead them to that, except as far as they were occupied in the duties of the house, which was well kept.

Did you visit the school at Ballycastle?—I did, both in the year 1817 and 1818.

Did you make a report to the Society of your visit in 1817?—I did.

In your visit in 1818, what observation had you occasion to make with regard to the dress or clothing of the children?—That it still required further improvement.

Were their shoes in particular of a bad quality?—They were much too coarse, but the farm yard where they usually played was a very rough coarse place, which I suppose was intended as an explanation.

Was there a want of cloaks and bonnets?—There were none, none had been allowed. These were not a necessary part of the girls clothing; the church is close by the house, and perhaps the committee of fifteen did not think it worth while to go to such expense.

Did you find any instances of women or grown girls in the school?—Yes, there were some women there very much grown up.

Where had they been sent from?—From Dublin.

What observation did you make as to their conduct on arriving at the school?—I did not think it very beneficial to themselves or their companions that they should be sent there.

Did you find that the farmers in the neighbourhood were willing and ready to receive servants from the school or otherwise, that they had an objection to do so?—No; there was no disposition amongst the commonest farmers to take them.

How do you account for that circumstance?—They were so ill taught and so ill qualified; but I ought to observe, that the committee of fifteen sent the refuse of all the schools to that remote part, in the hopes that the commonest farmers there would take them.

Referring to your report, in which you state, that the morals of the school were improved this year, what immoralities or misconduct had you occasion to notice on your preceding visit?—The vice of lying.

Did you find that prevail to a great extent?—Yes; it was a very prevalent offence indeed. I found it corrected on my second visit, as appeared by my report.

What observation did you make as to the situation of the house and buildings on this second visit?—I found the house a very old one, and I suggested its being improved in my first report, and repeated it in the second.

You found, on your second visit, that the improvements had not taken place that you suggested?—No; the scheme of the Society was to reduce some of the distant schools, and increase the buildings of the others, so as by lessening the staff generally, to lessen the general expense of the institution.

What observation did you make upon the state of the bedding at the school?—There was a deficiency in the quantity of the bedding.

Had you recommended a supply on your former visit?—I suppose not, because I say the quantity has been specified by the local committee at their quarterly meeting.

Did you state that the health of the children would suffer in consequence of the absolute want of bed clothes?—Yes; I thought it should not be longer deferred, for the health of the children might be impaired.

What observation did you make as to the ground used as the play-ground?—I recommended that a piece of ground should be reserved for the play-ground, which I thought might have been done at an expense of 5*l.* in the place of the farm yard, where they used to play.

Did you find that the farm yard, that was frequented by the labourers and others, was the only play-ground at that time?—Yes; I conceive so from this statement; it was in other respects the only fit play-ground, because it was walled in; the other was open.

Referring to an observation in your report, where you state, that the master and mistress had been deserving of sharp censure in the year before, to what circumstance does that allude?—I found general neglect; I was very much displeased with the school indeed.

Did it appear to you, that with respect to those grown girls or women that had been sent from Dublin, there was a probability that they would get situations as apprentices, or otherwise be disposed of?—I have already stated, that the commonest farmers would not take them.

Did you visit the school at Ballykelly in both 1817 and 1818?—I did.

Did you make a report in 1817?—I did.

Upon your second visit, did you find an improvement had taken place of the state of the school?—Yes.

Can you state in what situation you found it on the first visit?—I found it a school where
the

the master fed the children remarkably well, and was kind to them, but there was not a good system at that time in the school; there were no habits about it that were valuable; there was an education of the common sort, such as you would get in any country school.

But not such as you thought a charter school ought to afford?—Certainly not.

What observation did you make with respect to the state of the house upon your second visit?—It is a wretched house; it was not built for a school originally, I suppose.

Does it appear you had recommended on your former visit, that certain repairs should be made upon it, particularly the roof?—Yes, I recommended the roof should be repaired.

Did you find that any of those repairs had been executed the year afterwards, when you visited it?—Nothing was done to it; and the reason why nothing was done, I suppose to have been that they intended to reduce it, and it has been reduced since.

What observation did you make as to the state of the bedding?—There was great occasion for new blankets and sheets.

Had an application been made for those articles?—Yes, by the local committee, the quantity wanted had been specified.

Did you find that the catechist or local committee, or either of them, were in the practice of examining into the state of the clothes?—The local committee were not in the habit of attending, except for the purpose of the common business of the quarterly meetings; the catechist's visits appear to have been very numerous, and the ladies of his family visited. It appears, that I recommended that the catechist should be called upon to pay more attention to the value of our church liturgy.

Did you also recommend that more particular attention should be paid by him to the religious instruction of the children generally?—Yes, particularly with respect to the liturgy of the church.

Did you find that the catechist was in the practice of having the rules of the Society read in the School in his presence?—No.

Did you find that the members of the local committee ever visited the school on any occasion, except when they met to pass the accounts?—It does not appear that they did.

Were the members of the committee in the habit of meeting for the purpose of examining the school, and the progress of the children in instruction?—It does not appear that they were.

Did you find the boys, or any considerable number of them, affected with cutaneous eruptions, which had continued for a considerable time?—The boys had a cutaneous disease they called the itch; the remedy applied was bathing.

How long had it prevailed?—A month.

How did you find them, as to general cleanliness?—Their heads were dirty, and I thought it right to have several of them washed.

Were the servants in the school all of the established church?—No, they were not.

Does it appear how many were not?—They were all dissenters.

Did you visit the school of Dunkervin?—I did.

On your visit in 1817, what observation did you make as to the state of health and general cleanliness?—That it was interrupted by various diseases prevalent there, scrofula, ophthalmia and itch, lately introduced by children who had arrived.

Did the mistress appear to be attentive to the general cleanliness of the children, or qualified for so doing by her own appearance?—The mistress was, from some disorder or another not in good health, and not able to take a part.

Was she slovenly in her own appearance, or did the neglect arise entirely from the state of her health?—Neither from health nor habit did she seem competent to discharge the duty.

In what state did you find the dormitories?—They were in a slovenly and neglected state.

Was it a new house?—Yes; the wings were quite new, and the offices I think all of them.

Did you make any observation, or discover any defect in the situation or plan of the building?—The outhouses, I think, were built below the level of the yard.

What was the consequence of that?—The floor of the dairy was remarkably wet and dirty.

Did you find the dairy otherwise in a bad condition, as well as being wet?—The shelves, windows and walls, were in a generally neglected state.

In what situation did you find the play-ground?—It was exposed to the public road, and required a wall to protect it.

Was the dining hall made use of for the children, or was it appropriated to any other purpose?—The hall, intended for the children, was occupied by the master and his family, the necessary alteration not having been made in the old house.

Did you state those things to the local committee?—I did.

Did you find they were fully aware of the circumstances, or did information, upon some of those points, appear to be new to them?—The state of things had called forth no remark from them previously.

Did you find the children, or some of them, affected with the itch?—Yes.

And that it had prevailed for a considerable time among them?—No, it was lately introduced by children newly admitted.

Was it your opinion, that due means had been taken to cure it?—I thought due care would have prevented its extending so far.

Did you find, that the master and mistress were in the practice of attending in the school

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825.

for the purpose of instructing the children?—The master attended to teach in arithmetic, and the mistress in needle work, and other branches of labour.

By whom were the other branches of instruction in the school conducted?—By an usheress.

Referring to an observation in that report, in which it is stated, that one of the girls educated there had suffered the severest persecution from her parents, be so good as to state in what circumstance this refers?—I cannot recollect the circumstance accurately now; but the impression on my mind is, that she was required by her parents to change the religion in which she had been educated, and would not do it.

Did the master of this school occupy a farm?—Yes, he did.

Did you find that a considerable part of his attention was given to the management of that farm?—It was, as he only devoted the time necessary for arithmetic to the school.

Referring to an observation in the report, in which you state, that some girls were employed on the farm, of what nature was that employment?—I do not know; but I suppose harvest was the only thing, or picking up potatoes in the potatoe season.

You visited this school also in the following year, 1818?—I did.

Did you find that the master was in possession of the rules issued by the Society for the government of the school?—He was not in possession of the new rules that were sent out after the first visit.

To what circumstance do you ascribe that?—It appears that the delay was in the post-office; the secretary so reported.

Did you find, that complaints were made by the children of not having their play hours properly observed?—Yes.

Had the same complaint been made on former occasions?—Yes.

And that it had been established?—Yes, we thought the fact was established.

After those repeated violations of the rules, did the Society and you entertain an expectation that the master would alter his conduct in this respect?—It appears, I think, that I did.

Did you find, that the proper allowance of shoes had been given out by the master, or that any had been retained?—Only two pair of shoes appeared to have been given to the children.

Did you, from your observation on this and other occasions, form any opinion in your mind, that the articles of clothing that were not delivered out to the children would or not become, in the opinion of the master, his own perquisites?—I believe it was the opinion of the master, that what the children did not wear out would be his own.

What observation did you make with respect to the conduct of the girls, as to their manner and temper particularly; were they in a proper state of subordination, or otherwise?—There was a degree of irritation in the school among the children.

Were any complaints made to you, and of what nature?—They complained they were not allowed the hours allotted for their play.

Did they complain of harsh treatment from the mistress?—The girls complained, that they were unnecessarily and severely treated by the new usheress.

What opinion did you form at the time of the truth of this statement?—That a more gentle mode of treatment would attain the object she had in view better than even chastisement, though not perhaps too severely administered to the girls; I believe the system I complained of was a discipline that never relaxed.

Did you find the state of education improved since your preceding visit?—No, it was less satisfactory.

Had any alteration taken place in the play-ground, so as to make it more fit for its purpose?—No, there had not.

Did you find, that some improvement had taken place, subsequent to your first visit, in the state of the house, particularly as to its cleanliness?—It had been improved in those parts of which there was reason to complain.

Notwithstanding this latter remark, did you not still find, that the rules in general were not sufficiently attended to?—Yes.

Did you find, that the master had, in consequence of what he represented to you to be the rebellious or the refractory disposition of the girls, called in the aid of the catechist, or the local committee, for the purpose of rectifying it?—No; I regretted that he had not.

Upon the whole of the circumstances in which you found the school, did you think it your duty to recommend to the committee of fifteen the dismissal of the master or mistress, or either of them?—I did recommend, if an improvement did not take place, that another set of officers should be appointed to that establishment.

Did you visit the same school on a subsequent occasion?—Yes, in the month of February 1819.

In what situation did you find the school at that time?—The result of my investigation was, that progressive improvement was taking place in that school, and that the children expressed themselves contented and happy.

Are you aware whether any measures were taken by the Incorporated Society in consequence of your recommendation that led to the producing this beneficial effect, or to what do you ascribe it?—It appears that I ascribed it to an altered conduct in the usheress, and to an adherence to the rules of the Society, which I consider so well calculated to meet every object connected with the welfare of the establishment; doubtless the committee of fifteen had made these changes necessary.

You state in your report of your second visit to this school, you thought it your duty to write write to the catechist, recommending greater attention to his peculiar duties; and that you found, upon your visit in 1819, that those duties were better performed than you conceived them to have been on your first visit?—It does not appear that I have made any reference to his conduct in the report now before me; but if it be any where so reported, it certainly occurred.

Do you recollect the circumstance of a complaint made by two girls of severe treatment, and being compelled to sleep in the barn?—It appears some persons did go to complain to Dean Hawkins of ill treatment.

What was the object of it?—The being unjustly beaten by the master, and two were confined by night to sleep in the barn in place of the dormitory; it ought to be added, that, as a place of security, no objection could be made to it.

Was this complaint established as far as you knew?—The punishment was given to those girls for twice attempting to elope, but we thought there was good reason for some one to interfere in their favour.

So that their complaint in substance was confirmed by the evidence?—Yes, that they slept in this place.

For what length of time had they been compelled so to sleep?—They slept in the barn for half a year, expecting an order for their removal, I suppose, from the establishment.

From whom was the order expected?—The committee of fifteen.

Had the circumstance been made known to that committee?—Yes, of the elopements; but I conclude not of their precise mode of treatment.

You have also stated, that the complaint was made out by evidence taken; was there any circumstance of palliation stated on the part of the master?—The defence on the part of the master was, the necessary punishment for elopement, and a security from the repetition of the offence, and all attempt to seduce other girls to similar misconduct.

Did it not appear to you to be a very harsh and unjustifiable measure to confine them in that outhouse for so long a period of time, merely for the purpose of securing them?—I thought their punishment too long, and in itself injudicious, and I released them.

They were released by your direction?—Yes.

Was it your impression, that the circumstances of this case were known to the local committee before you visited this school?—They were.

It appears from your report of your third visit, that Dean Hawkins had expressed by letter his resolution not to continue in the further superintendence of the school; what were the grounds of this resolution?—He said the children were in a state of rebellion from harsh treatment and flogging; the conviction of my mind is, that the dean had not taken much care of that establishment; he lived close by, and his care might, in my judgment, easily have remedied all evils.

Did the other members of the local committee of that school pay particular attention, so far as was known to you, to their duty as visitors?—I think not.

You have referred in your third report to certain contradictory accounts respecting this school; can you state what the nature of those conflicting accounts was?—I cannot recollect what I referred to in that remark, but the question seems to have been set at rest by its being referred to the twelve senior girls, who cleared the parties, whosoever they might be, and that which was involved in the contradiction.

Have you visited, among others, the school at Monivea?—Yes, I have, twice.

On your first visit to that school in 1817, in what situation did you find it with respect to the disposition and behaviour of the children?—It appears, that there had been a refractory disposition at the time I was there.

How do you account for that particularly?—Arising from the neglect of those who had the charge of them, and the misconduct in the former usheress.

By the neglect of those who had the charge of them, do you mean the master and mistress of the school at that time?—Yes, I must have included them.

Did it refer to the then present or the former master?—I suppose it must have referred to the former master and mistress, because I give I see a good character to the present.

Did you find the vice of lying prevail?—Yes, certainly; it did not appear that the vice was general however.

Did you find that the religious instruction of the children had been successfully attended to?—Remarkably well instructed in catechism, but defective in scriptural knowledge.

Did you examine them as to their proficiency in religious knowledge?—Certainly, I must have done it.

Was the catechist present?—He was, he appeared much disappointed at their ignorance.

To what circumstance did he ascribe it?—To the examination by a stranger.

Did it occur to you to suggest to him to examine them himself?—I did, and he declined it.

In what situation did you find the house?—It required immediate attention.

Were the windows without glass?—Yes, some of the lower windows were, and the openings were built up with stone.

Was the house clean or dirty?—There was not due attention to cleanliness.

In what situation did you find the dormitories?—The two principal dormitories were in very good order; the upper dormitory did not give satisfaction.

Did you find any arrangement as to the children kept in that upper dormitory that you disapproved of?—Yes; I disapproved of the mode of separating the dirty children, and placing them in a room by themselves.

Can you state the extent of the farm that was possessed by the master of the school?—

N° 54.

Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825.

It is a very large farm, at a distance; he has hired 50 acres of grazing ground, which was quite necessary in that country; he could have no milk without it; the farm is very bad land, I believe.

Was this one of the schools where there was a deficiency of water, from the state of the pump?—It was.

Was there a person sent from Dublin while you were there to repair it?—Yes, there was; but he returned to Dublin, not having brought the necessary materials with him.

Had you occasion to report favourably on the conduct and qualifications of the master or mistress, or the reverse?—The master was an intelligent and a sensible man, and the mistress most anxious to fulfil the duties of her station.

Did you find, on your second visit to this school, that some improvement had taken place in the general character of the school?—Yes; all disease had disappeared.

Do you recollect the circumstance of one girl being still in the school whose character and conduct you had occasion to be extremely displeased with before?—Yes; Ann Curfoot.

Did you not consider her residence in the school as improper?—I did.

What observations did you make upon the second visit with respect to the alterations in the house, or the additions that had been made to it?—Five years before the addition was made to the house.

Did you conceive those alterations had been judiciously effected?—I found them extremely damp.

Had the builder done justice to the work?—I wrote to the builder to say I thought he was bound to correct the bad work executed by his people.

Did you find that the additional rules had been sent down to the school antecedent to your second visit?—No, they had not.

Did you visit the school at Monasterevan?—I did.

What opinion did you form of the school on your first visit?—It was generally satisfactory.

Had the master of this school a farm independent of the school land?—There was no farm connected with the establishment, I believe.

Did the master rent a farm for his own use?—Yes, and for the use of the children.

Did you make any observations on the bedsteads and the dormitories?—The bedsteads of this house were made when it was a nursery, and they were too short for the children.

How many elopements did you notice had taken place in 1817 among the apprentices?—Eight elopements out of 34 of the apprentices, after they had left the school.

On your second visit to this school, did you find that the defect of the bedsteads had been corrected?—No, it had not; I believe it was to be again converted into a female establishment.

Was any complaint made upon the occasion of either of those visits by any of the boys, on account of the severity of the master or usher?—Of the usher there was.

Was it proved to your satisfaction?—No, certainly not.

Did you find that the scholars were well instructed at Clonmel?—With regard to scriptural knowledge, with the exception of two boys, they appeared very ignorant.

Did the catechist attend you in your visit in 1817?—He did.

Did you propose to him the examination of the children in your presence, in order to prevent their embarrassment at being examined by a stranger?—I did.

Did he decline doing so?—He did.

Did you find the usher in the school to be well qualified for his duty?—Totally unqualified for his duty.

How many elopements did you find had taken place from their masters?—Seven had eloped out of thirty.

Did you recommend in your report to the Society, that this school should be suppressed, or did you give any recommendation upon the subject?—It must appear in my report if I did.

Did you think it your duty to recommend the dismissal of the master or mistress?—No, I believe not.

Did you recommend the dismissal of the usher?—Certainly.

Does that appear on your report, or was it a separate communication?—I recommended his removal in my report.

You visited the school again in 1818?—I did.

Had an usher been then appointed more qualified for his situation?—Yes.

Did you find the master and mistress attentive to their duties in the school as teachers?—Their qualifications are not of the first rate; he was not particularly qualified to discharge the duties of a master in the school.

Did you form your opinion upon both visits?—Yes; he was a very good man, and did justice to the children in feeding, and so on, but was not a good teacher.

Did you make any particular animadversion upon the school after your second visit, which led to its suppression?—No; we were pleased with the conduct of the individuals, as far as their knowledge extended, and the usher had discharged his duty faithfully, yet I think I might have recommended the suppression of the school as a boarding school; from the defective state of the buildings, the Society must have gone to the expense of building a new one else.

Did you find that the situation in which the house was placed was very objectionable?—I think it was; it was very near a large garrison town, and it was just lying upon the road.

You stated, in one of the reports you made of this school, that the local committee had withdrawn from their superintendence; do you recollect the ground on which this took place?

place?—It appeared that some of the gentlemen had ceased to attend at this school, in consequence of thinking they had not been duly supported.

Do you mean not properly supported by the Society?—They had met with some disappointment in their endeavour to promote the welfare of the establishment, as they conceived.

Did you visit the school at Trim?—I did.

Did you visit it in both years?—No, it was suppressed after my first report.

Will you state in what situation you found the clothing in this school?—Very bad; it could not be in a worse state.

Did you conceive this to be in part, or wholly the fault of the mistress?—The blame was chargeable to the mistress, certainly.

Had the clothes been examined by the members of the local committee, and other persons whose duty it was to superintend the school?—I do not think it appears by my report that the local committee did their duty.

Did you find the children to be dirty and neglected?—Very much so.

Did you find that some of the older children in this school, or those in the higher classes, showed a less proficiency in their education than the lower, or made a worse appearance in their examination at least?—Yes; it appeared that the higher classes were much less creditably educated than the lower.

How do you account for this?—From being more employed in work beyond their hours.

What observation did you make as to their morals?—We found the vice of lying prevail to a great extent.

Did you find thieving?—There was one a pilferer.

Did you examine the children with respect to their progress in religious knowledge?—Yes; they were very ignorant in scriptural knowledge, although perfect in the catechism.

Was your impression formed upon this visit, that the school was not likely to be of any advantage, unless a considerable alteration took place?—Yes, and without a committee of individuals could be found to superintend it.

Did you recommend it to be suppressed?—I did.

What were the reasons for your so recommending?—A despair of its being restored to good order with the materials they had to work upon.

Upon what account did you conceive it was not to be expected that it should be rendered available, if a proper master was appointed?—It was with the present materials I speak of. The catechist was a very zealous and pious man, yet I thought not qualified for this office, and there was no probability of getting a female local committee.

An addition had been made to this building, had it not, recently before your visit?—The addition was built some years back.

What observation did you make on that transaction?—That the schoolmaster was "a builder, and was employed, and a shameful job he made of it."

What observation did you make on the state of the play-ground for the girls?—It was very unfit for that purpose, being not separate from the farm-yard and stable; the necessary was in a very improper situation, being close to the stables, and without a door.

Did you find the bed and bedding in a slovenly state?—I did.

Have you any observation to make upon the apothecary in the school?—Yes, he did not appear sufficient.

Did you find that he had actually attended the school when his services were required?—He must have done so; because, when any thing was wanted, they were obliged to apply to him for medical aid. I drew my conclusion of his being insufficient, because, in even common cases, the physician was called in.

Are you aware whether he received a salary as an officer to the Institution?—I conclude he did; it is not mentioned here.

Do you happen to know whether the school was actually suppressed?—It was.

Did you visit the school at Shannon Grove?—I did.

What state did you find the bed and bedding in?—It was very ill managed, from neglect, the linen being mildewed.

Did you consider the mistress of the school fit for her situation?—She had very limited qualifications indeed.

How many elopements had taken place from the masters?—Seven apprentices from this school had eloped out of 44, most of whom were tempted by bounties to go to the army; one died under sentence of transportation.

On your second visit to this school, in 1818, what observation did you make as to the shoes?—The master gave two pair of shoes, when the Society allowed three.

Did you find that a long neglected itch was prevalent in the school?—Yes.

Did you find other children labouring under other diseases in the school?—Yes; scrofula, chiefly, and three or four others.

Did you necessarily form an opinion, that due attention had not been paid by the apothecary?—Yes; he had neglected his duty, as it appeared to me.

It appears, from your report, that the apothecary was brother to the master?—Yes.

Has the master the power of selecting the apothecary?—No, certainly not; but there was probably no person nearer than him, or so near to the establishment.

Did you visit the school at Charleville in 1817?—I did.

On that visit, what opinion did you form of the situation of the school?—We were not pleased with the general appearance of the children.

Did you find in this school also, that the itch was very prevalent?—Twenty had the itch, and in some it was very inveterate.

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825.

Did you consider that the education was well conducted?—Their progress in reading was moderate, but their manner good.

Did you find they were well instructed in the catechism?—They were perfect in their various catechisms, but had made very little progress in scriptural knowledge generally.

Did you find that the play-ground was uninclosed in this school also?—Yes.

Was this objectionable from the neighbourhood of any public road?—It adjoins the public road from Limerick to Cork.

What observation did you make on the state of the stockings and the linen?—My report will tell, but I cannot immediately find the place; I think it was not favourable.

On your second visit to the school at Charleville, did you make any particular observation as to the clothing of the children?—We found they had not bibs or handkerchiefs for common use.

Did you find that the stuff of which their dresses were made was of an inferior kind?—Mrs. Thackeray did not think the material of which the clothing was made, though superior to the year before, was so good as it ought to be, or as it was elsewhere.

Did you form an opinion, that the mistress had derived an advantage from the circumstance of not giving out a sufficient supply of clothing, or giving it of an inferior kind?—It certainly must have been, whether intended or not, to their profit.

Did you make any calculation of what amount of profit she derived from the perquisites of the preceding year, of clothes not delivered?—I believe not.

Did you consider this as a lawful and proper perquisite on the part of the master or mistress of the school, or as taking improper advantage of the contract for the clothing?—I should consider such a course as taking an improper advantage of the Society, since the additional rules which were formed in consequence of my first visit.

Does this observation apply to the school of Charleville particularly, or to all schools?—To all schools.

Were not there, previous to your first visit, rules of the Society, according to which the clothes were dealt out?—The committee gave the masters money to provide clothing; the quantity was specified as at present for the children, but if the children did not wear all that was allowed them as requisite, the masters considered that which was over was their own. Our scheme was, that the surplus should be brought to the account of the Society.

Do you conceive, that the rules of the Society previously did not mean to prescribe the amount that was actually to be given out, or that they should have a discretion as to what they would give out?—They were allowed 1*l.* 19*s.* for each child, but there was no account taken at the end of the year as to what they had given.

Was not the allowance thus made calculated to give a particular description and number of articles pointed out by the Society?—No doubt it was; but there would probably be some difference after all in the articles; they whose residence was near Dublin or any great town could purchase articles at less expense, and probably better than others whose distance from market was greater or more inconvenient; but the quality might vary, the quantity must not.

Do you not conceive it was the object of the Society, that all the articles specified in their rule should be actually furnished and put to use in the school, that the three pair of shoes should be actually furnished, and so on in other respects?—Yes, that they should have them certainly; but some children might wear three pair, and some of them only two pair, and then the third pair would be saved.

Do you not conceive the latitude given by such an interpretation might be exceedingly dangerous?—Yes, certainly; and I recommended the change.

Did the additional rules make any new provision upon the subject of, or enforce the old ones?—They made this alteration, that all the allowance should be shewn at the first examination, and at the end of the year the old articles should be brought forward again, and be handed over to the Society as their property, not the master's.

Did you find that the play-ground at this school was in a proper situation, or was there any objection to it?—It was still unprotected at my second visit.

Was it open between two roads without inclosure?—There was a lane and a public road.

It appears, from your report of the school at Newport, in 1817, that there was an intention entertained of suppressing that school; was this intended by the Society?—Yes.

Do you know upon what ground?—I believe it was considered by the board, that the expense would have been very great in putting it in order, 500*l.* or 600*l.* and after all only make so small an establishment as it seemed their desire to suppress.

You cannot speak of your own knowledge, with respect to the circumstances?—No; I cannot, beyond what I have stated.

Upon your second visit to the same school, did you find that any regulations had been sent down?—No.

In what state did you find the school at Cashel; how did you find the instruction to be carried on?—The general appearance was unfavourable; we thought the system was not a good one.

Was the discipline bad in general?—It was reported to us there were many vicious boys.

What remark did you make in your report as to the servants of the house?—We thought their habits were not cleanly.

On your second visit to the same school, what observation did you make as to the delivery of of shoes to the children?—That there were boys who had only had two pair of shoes, whose feet were very wet.

Did you find any boys in the school who were afflicted with epilepsy?—Yes, two of them.

Did you find on your visit to the schools on these occasions, that the number of children considered fit to be received at the sacrament, was as great as you would have expected, in consequence of the attention that had been paid?—Not on my first visit, but I think on my second.

Well as you are acquainted with the tastes, habits, pursuits, and modes of life of the country gentlemen of Ireland, do you think we can permanently reckon on obtaining the assistance of such local committees for the management of charter schools, as shall be sufficient to attain in practice the objects which the theory of the institution holds out?—If care were taken to select such schools as are well situated, I think it might be effected.

Would that lead to the discontinuance of many of the existing schools?—It would.

Would it lead to the establishment of any new ones?—Yes, if we had a choice of masters, we might change many of them.

Would you enumerate a few places, in which you would not despair of obtaining really zealous local committees, persons upon whom you could reckon for a sincere desire to correct the master when deficient in his duty, as well as to protect him in the discharge of it?—I should name Dublin; it is much to be regretted, that the institution at Santry had not been in this town, the local committee have not paid any attention to it; I believe I should be very likely to name Dundalk; I would name Celbridge, also Baggot-street; Cashel ought to be a very good situation for such an establishment.

Do you consider that Cashel ever, or at what time, has had the benefit of a good local committee?—It appeared to me, whatever good there was in the establishment was owing to the care of some members of the committee and the catechist.

Did that amount of good appear to you to be considerable?—It was very great under such materials as that mistress, for she was a drunken woman, I believe.

Can you reckon confidently upon the continuance of that care on the part of the local committee of Cashel?—It is impossible I can give an answer to that; it is more than six years since I was there.

Do you consider there are many spots in Ireland more favourably circumstanced for the obtaining of local superintendence, than the town and vicinity of Longford?—I was disappointed there; but it ought to have been very good.

The question is, whether, from the aspect of the country, the size of the town, and the number of resident gentry in its environs, we might not calculate upon seeing as good a local committee there as any other spot?—Yes, you might.

Are you aware in what manner, in point of fact, for the last ten, fifteen or twenty years, that committee has discharged its trust?—I regretted, in my reports, there was not more attention on their parts.

Are you aware, that Mr. Lee was afterwards under the necessity of expressing a similar regret?—I think I have heard those gentlemen were very jealous of a visitor being appointed.

Are you aware, that for the last year they have, at the same time that they professed to visit the school, allowed the committee of fifteen to remain in official ignorance of the fact of the master being first a madman, and finally an idiot?—No, I was not.

Do you consider, that there are any or many places in Ireland more favourably circumstanced for having a good local committee than Sligo?—No.

If it should turn out, that neither the local committee of Sligo or Longford had executed their trust in a manner that could be deemed satisfactory, should you entertain a very sanguine hope you could obtain local committees, in other places, upon whose exertions you could reckon with confidence?—I believe the places named supply as many resident gentry as any other portion of the country I am acquainted with; but sometimes people are found to have more zeal in some districts than others; two individuals may do as well as two thousand; and it very often happens, where some are found to exert themselves efficiently, others abstain from taking a part, not from disinclination, but the conviction that their services are not needed.

Is it not mainly upon the attention of the local committees, that the committee of fifteen are obliged to rest their hope of success?—Yes, the local committees, and the catechists; the board can have nothing else but these to depend upon generally for their guidance; it is not justice to the very best masters and mistresses, that they should be deprived of such superintendence.

Is it a matter very much of course, that the curate should be the catechist?—Yes, certainly, unless there is some exception to him.

Is it your own impression, that the catechists very generally perform their duties not merely with correctness, but zeal?—I think there was a defect in zeal in many of them; I wish to distinguish between zeal and common care and attention.

Can you form any opinion at all (we are aware it must be a very general and imperfect one) of the proportion of instances, out of the number of boarding schools belonging to the Incorporated Society, where the catechists neglect their duty altogether, or perform it in such a manner as must be considered in all fairness merely a nominal performance of it?—The gentlemen whose names are here [looking at the list of catechists], are most of them new to me; I can form no notion on this point.

If a school should be so situated, as to have a master of only average qualifications, and that the local committee should, in point of fact, neglect their duties, and the catechist

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
3 Jan. 1825

should give only nominal attention to his, do you think it at all probable that the school would continue in good order?—The chances are against it; but I have known a good usher preserve a very good school, even without the advantage of a good master.

Do you not think, that in a large majority of instances the masters actually do neglect the duties of instruction?—At the period of my first examination I thought that was the case.

Do you not believe, that in the majority of instances the local committees also, in point of fact, do neglect their duties?—A great many, it must be admitted, did appear to me to have done so during my period of visiting, particularly on the occasion of my first visit.

4 Jan. 1825.

DID you visit the school at Longford?—Yes.

In what state did you find it?—In a very bad state, in almost every respect, disease, neglect, filth and dirt, as appears by my report of 1817.

And want of improvement in the progress of the children?—Yes, certainly.

On your second visit, did you find it improved in those respects?—I found it in every respect very remarkably improved, beyond what, I think, I could have expected.

From that, you entertained a hope, probably, that a similar inspection yearly would have worked a reform?—Yes; it was one of those instances that assured me of the good that might be done by an active local committee, and catechist, and by a visitor.

Do you recollect, on your last visit to the Lintown factory, whether you found the proper allowance of clean linen supplied to the children?—No, this institution was viewed, I believe, as a distinct establishment from others under the Society, it had not therefore been in all respects regulated by the rules of the Society, but I recommended that it should be.

Do you remember, on your visit to Ray school, in August 1818, whether the stockings that were sent by the committee of fifteen fitted or not?—It appears that nineteen pair were too small for any of the children, and some of the shoes also.

What was the state of education in that school?—It was not so good as the year before; the reason was, that house had been burnt, and many of the books with it, and the books had not been resupplied.

Your report states, that, for the last six months out of twelve, there had been little or no education given to the children; was that the fact?—It was so, as it appeared to me.

The reason given is, that the books being destroyed, there was nothing to teach the boys out of?—Yes.

Do you not consider that a very unsatisfactory reason?—Yes; ordinary attention on the part of any person would have supplied a remedy, I conceive.

Was any satisfactory reason given why the books had not been supplied?—The books were not received from Dublin.

In the same report it states, that for eight months they had not been instructed duly, owing to the want of paper and slates, and implements and Gough?—Yes, so I have reported.

Do you not consider that very blameable on the part of the superintendent of the school?—Yes, I thought so.

Do you recollect, as to religious education, whether they appeared to have fallen off in that respect also, for the same cause?—Yes; in the catechism they were perfect, however.

In that report you also stated, that the children expressed themselves happy and contented, and considered themselves improved since the last visitation?—Yes, but I could not agree with them upon the point of education; the master was exceedingly well qualified, and the mistress had been a governess in a good family; this happiness of the pupils, under such circumstances, is the highest testimony of the value of a kind and steady system.

Did you find in that case the rules had been read?—No, they had not; they had been adhered to by the master, but had not been read.

Do you impute that to the inadvertence or the inattention of the catechist?—Either to the one or the other, and not to any neglect on the part of the master.

I observe in your observations upon the catechist, you state he did not think you made that allowance for the loss of time the boys had sustained by the loss of the books by the fire; do you not think he might have remedied all that mischief by a little activity?—I saw no good reason to excuse it.

I find an observation in that part of your report, which states, "I found it so natural for the local guardians to palliate any neglect, and account for any deficiency, that if I was to yield to their representations, I should in many cases become not only a useless but an injurious visitor;" do you mean now to rest upon the truth of that position?—Yes, there appeared a great deal of truth in it; for I found it apply in many instances.

You go on to say, "as I could see no reason why books might not have been bought, and the education proceeded in without such an injurious stoppage?"—Yes, I think I should have bought books in my case, though it is contrary to the rules of the Society.

How did you find the usher qualified for his situation?—I thought he was defective in exertion, and recommended his being called upon to exert himself more strenuously.

Did you think the style of the boys reading good?—No, slovenly.

Did you think they had as clear a view this year as last, upon the subjects in which they had been instructed?—No, they had not; much of which might be explained by the change of the master, and the injury sustained by the fire.

Did you inspect the Kevin-street school?—I did.

Do you recollect whether the mistress of that school was, at your visit in 1817, qualified for the duties of her office?—Whatever might be her qualifications, we thought her removal from that school, about to undergo a complete change of system, desirable, and her removal was the consequence.

Do you remember in what manner she treated the usheresses in that school?—Not with the respect she ought, as it appeared to us.

Did the usheresses make any complaint to you during your visit to the school, of her conduct towards them?—No, they did not complain, as appears by my report.

Did you attribute their not complaining to any other reason than the fear of increased ill treatment on account of such complaints?—No, I should not have assigned it to that; the usheresses could have no fear of that sort, because I dare say they knew my opinion of the mistress; it was to kind disposition on the part of the usheresses that I should attribute their silence.

After your inspection, you found that the usheresses did make complaints of the conduct of the mistress?—Yes, they did.

Do you remember your first visit to New Ross, in October 1817?—Yes.

How did you find the state of the clothing, particularly with respect to the stockings?—The stockings were almost universally worn out, and discreditable to the mistress, and the shoes nearly worn out.

Were there any boys without stockings?—Yes, a few.

Were there any stockings for them?—No, nor a change for the others.

Did the mistress offer any excuse for it?—She pleaded they were bad.

Did it appear she had taken any pains to mend them?—No.

Did you examine the feet and legs of the boys?—Yes.

In what state did you find them?—Very filthy; quite offensive.

Did you find the morals of the boys in this school good?—We were mortified in finding in those boys, although they were well acquainted with the Scriptures, a total disregard of truth, and such perseverance in falsehood as drew from the gentlemen present and myself expressions of astonishment and deep regret.

Do you remember what purpose the dining room intended for the boys was used for?—It was used as a dairy.

Do you recollect the state of the beds and the bedding?—In a neglected state.

In what condition was the straw?—It had been too long in use, and wanted changing, and more cleanliness in the dormitories generally.

Did you find the rules of the Society observed in that school?—Not generally.

Do you remember the character of the master and mistress?—The master's character was good.

Was the mistress a fit woman?—Whatever her qualifications were, she did not appear to us to exercise them for the good of the school; she considered herself rather above her undertaking.

Did you propose any mode for correcting that?—To appoint a housekeeper to discharge her duties, until she discovered it to be her interest to do so herself.

At whose expense was that person to be appointed?—At her own expense, doubtless; we meant to punish her absurd pride.

Did you suggest one of her daughters might be appointed to that office?—No; but as she had a family of ten children, it was suggested by me that one of them might assist her.

If she did not better fulfil her duties, did you think she deserved to be continued in the service of the Society?—Certainly not.

It appears that the master had failed materially in some point of management; do you recollect what it was?—I do not know what it was at present, and my report does not specify, I believe.

Was his conduct on the present occasion such as to be approved of by yourself or the local committee?—His system was too lax.

On your next visit to the school at New Ross, in November 1818, did you find the school in a better condition?—Certainly, on account of the care and attention paid to the boys, and the kindness with which they were treated.

Did you find any usher in the school?—No; the usher had been appointed, but had not arrived; the master had had no assistance from an usher since his own appointment.

Do you remember whether the room built for the dining-room was still used as such, or was appropriated to any other purpose? It was damp, and built below the level of the ground; I do not recollect now how it was used.

Do you think it was used as a dining-room?—I am not quite sure whether it was so used or not.

Do you remember whether the rules and regulations had been read since your last visit, as you recommended?—No, they had not.

Do you remember visiting Clontarf school in November 1817?—I do.

Do you recollect whether the rules were read in that school?—They had not been read before the children, as enjoined.

Do you recollect, whether as to apprenticing the boys any thing had occurred?—An apprentice, who had been sent out on trial, returned into the school, bringing with him some money, with which he made two or three of the boys drunk; and it appears by my report, I considered it reflected discredit on the master and other superintendents, that they should not have detected this; I could not see why the detection should not have been as well effected by the catechist as by a visitor.

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
4 Jan. 1825.

Did you observe any other circumstances requiring investigation or censure during that visit?—I observed that the master required to be excited a little, and the mistress to be told, as long as she did her duty she had nothing to apprehend.

Do you recollect the name of the master and mistress?—It was Magrath.

They were dismissed the following year?—They were; he was, I have heard, a good classical scholar.

Do you remember, on your visit to Ardraccan in 1817, of the number of the last fifty apprentices from that school, how many were doing well, and how many had eloped?—Twenty were doing well; ten had eloped from their places; but of the conduct of the rest nothing was known, or of their masters, as they were apprenticed far from the school.

Did you consider the mistress of that school as qualified for her situation?—Not well; for I recommended the catechist should be desired to keep her to her duty.

In your subsequent visit in 1818 in what condition did you find the premises?—The house and outhouses appeared to us very bad.

Did you recommend any thing to be done in consequence?—To refer the consideration of their state to their architect.

With respect to the filth on the premises, did you recommend any censure upon the officers of the household in consequence?—Yes, we thought it reflected disgrace upon the officers.

With respect to the bed and bedding, in what condition did you find it?—Very bad indeed, totally neglected.

Did you visit Dunmanway in September 1817?—I did.

In what condition did you find the house?—Old, and requiring a great deal of repair.

Do you remember how much of the school the children possessed for their accommodation?—But one wing; the rest was occupied by the master and the family, as appears by my report.

Do you consider that a fair proportion for the boys to possess?—Certainly not.

Do you think that the boys had a fair share of accommodation?—I do not.

In what condition was the kitchen?—It was very dirty.

Did you examine the works that had been lately executed, the hall-door, particularly?—I considered it the work of a hedge carpenter, and unfit for a respectable building.

Do you recollect a gate being made of an old door?—It appears, in my report, that I noticed it as being unworkmanlike, and what the master should not have permitted.

Do you recollect what the house consisted of?—A centre and two wings, I think.

In what room was the boys food prepared?—In the back kitchen, the whole of the centre and one wing being occupied by the master's family and by the local committee room.

Was there in the boys' wing any more than one room for dinner, school, and sitting room?—There was not; I thought another room was requisite for their use. I have not observed extensive accommodations for the master productive of great advantage to the Society, for these are sometimes the cause of increasing the family party, by establishing in the house married sons and daughters.

Did you examine the condition of the infirmary there?—I did; the upper story of one of the outhouses was intended for an infirmary, but we found it in a very neglected state, as is usually the case with such buildings in healthy establishments.

Do you remember whether the master held any land besides that attached to the house?—He had fifty acres, which he rented, I think.

Do you recollect the condition of the play ground?—It was very small; but a part of it was defiled, on account of not having a place to retire to for those purposes which nature so often demands.

Did you find any active local committee there?—The gentlemen who composed this body resided at too great a distance to attend; the clergyman of the parish and gentlemen resident in the town were the most usual attendants, but their visits were limited, I understood, to quarterly or half-yearly meetings.

In what condition did you find the master and the mistress of the house?—The mistress was totally incapable of giving any aid in the family; the superintendence, therefore, in the house devolved upon a married daughter, who was respectable and intelligent.

On your second visit to Dunmanway school, did you find the appearance of things improved?—With respect to the house, it appears by my report still to have remained without change.

Did you find any thing particular as to the shoes?—I found 60 pair too small for any children then in the school.

Do you know how the schools were furnished at that time; whether by contract from Dublin?—I believe so, but I cannot be certain.

Do you know whether the Society were the immediate persons contracting, or whether there was any other person that did it?—I fancy the committee of fifteen made the contract.

In your first visit to Killoteran school, in what condition did you find the clothing of the children?—The clothing was almost worn out, and the stockings were all in pieces, and there were none in store; the shoes were almost as bad; of the shirts, there were none to change, and we thought the state of the clothing was no where further reduced than in this school.

Did the master complain that the reduction in the quantity of clothing had been too great?—He did, and he laid it to that cause; the children had only clean linen once a week, and did not seem to know when their stockings had been put on clean.

What was the general appearance of the children?—Unfavourable.

Were

Were they afflicted with ophthalmia, itch, scald-heads and scabs on the face of many of the children?—Yes.

Do you consider those appearances might have been prevented by care and attention on the part of the master?—Certainly, I have no hesitation in stating that.

Did the master state any reason why he deferred rubbing the children for the itch?—He stated, he deferred rubbing them till the time had nearly arrived for changing the sheets; which I thought a very bad reason, as by that time the whole school might have got the disease; he stated, that the itch and ophthalmia had been introduced by boys from Clontarf.

In what state was the education in that school?—The first class, consisting of twelve, read moderately, spelt better, but were not entitled to much credit for their progress in writing; the second class spelt and read very indifferently; the third class in proportion.

Do you know whether the boys were perfect in their catechetical knowledge?—Not so perfect as they ought to have been, for which imperfection the master assigned the prevalence of ophthalmia.

In what condition were the dormitories?—One was very clean, but the other close and offensive; the reason assigned for which was, that a boy was sick in that room, and that therefore the windows could not be opened. I thought this was a bad excuse; as there was abundance of room to place the boy elsewhere, it was a very improper thing that the health of the other boys, who were to sleep there at night, should suffer from such want of attention.

Do you remember whether the local committee had been attentive in their visits to that school?—The state in which that school had been lately, from ophthalmia, had discouraged persons from visiting it, as was reported to me, which had left the officers and children without that stimulus to exertion which the vigilance and judgment of their superiors would have supplied.

How far did you consider the master and mistress well qualified for their station?—I believe the master was a well disposed man, and the mistress had no wish to act wrong; but they had fallen into habits and views of their duty not in strict conformity with the rules of the Society; they required active superintendence very much indeed.

Of the apprentices of that school was the report satisfactory?—Yes; it appeared, that out of forty-seven apprentices, thirty-five were doing well; that nine had eloped from their masters, but they were doing well though they had eloped, which has often occurred where boys have been driven from their places by the tyranny of their masters.

Do you recollect, whether on your second visit to Killoteran, in October 1818, the clothing was improved?—The state of the clothing was less creditable to the master and mistress than in any other school we visited, by many degrees; there was scarcely a button left on the knees of any of the breeches, and the stockings were in rags, and filthy; as in the former case, I was induced to make the whole school strip off their shoes and stockings, and the state of their legs and feet was very filthy; the master pleaded Saturday as the excuse. I am happy to say, that the disease that last year afflicted the school was subdued.

Did you find a large room, that was intended for an infirmary, taken possession of by the master?—I did.

Did you conceive he had properly taken that into his own use?—No; it had been previously occupied by a young person, an officer in the army, who I was assured had been brought up in the school.

Did you consider the house was kept neat?—Indeed I did not, it was in a worse state than any house we visited I think in 1818.

Do you recollect to what purpose the original infirmary had been turned?—To a room for drying corn.

Do you recollect the condition of the play-ground?—It was very filthy, the same slovenliness continued, and a great heap of dirt in the place where the boys were most wont to play.

Were the regulations of the Society observed?—No, they were not.

Do you recollect whether you recommended that the master and mistress should be censured for the absolute slovenliness of the children about the place?—I did, and also for the impropriety of possessing themselves of a large room, of which a lodger of their's had been dispossessed; I further suggested, they should be told, that if any further complaints were brought against them, they would be considered altogether unqualified for the offices they held.

Did you visit Innishannon in October 1818?—I did.

Do you recollect whether the system of education pursued there was satisfactory to you?—I recommended a more lively system should be pursued, which would encourage the children better than that then followed; I hoped the experience of a few months would give the usher more courage and the master more knowledge, to make them useful servants of the Society; I considered the pains taken to make the children acquainted with the catechism very creditable; this was under the new master.

Were the rules and regulations read before the establishment?—They were not.

Do you recollect whether the master had taken his brother into the house as an assistant for his farm?—He had; and I mentioned it, as an infringement of the rules of the Society, not as apprehending that any mischief could arise from it.

Do you recollect whether the play-ground was used for the purpose for which it was intended?—The late master had, most unjustifiably, converted it to his own profit, by ploughing

N^o 54.Examination of
The Rev.Elias Thackeray,
4 Jan. 1825.

ploughing it up, and the present master had pursued the same course; the boys requested they might have their play-ground restored, in the presence of the master, and the master promised they should.

Did you visit Castlemartyr in September 1817?—Yes, I did.

In what condition were the clothes?—We found the shirts had not been changed during the week, and the stockings were worn for a much longer period than the shirts.

Do you remember whether any reason was given why certain apprentices, lately sent out from that school, had eloped?—The catechist seemed to think, that so many had eloped from their masters because they had not been bound to efficient persons, and that there was great difficulty in finding such, particularly in that part of the country.

On your second visit to Castlemartyr, in October 1818, do you recollect any thing particularly being observed?—I found the rules and regulations were not read any more than they had been in the former year, although noticed at the time.

You visited Dundalk school upon the 15th January 1819?—Yes.

Do you remember the condition of the master and mistress of that school?—I thought them possessing very limited qualifications for their offices, though much to be respected for their moral conduct, particularly the mistress; they were subsequently changed. I got the master and mistress a situation of less responsibility; I got the usheress a day school in the country, where she is doing very well; the school is well supplied with scholars,—a free school.

Do you remember on visiting Strangford, in December 1818, whether any complaint was made on the part of the boys?—Yes; I think there was; that they were stinted in their allowance of milk at supper; they often got potatoes and broth, when they were entitled to bread and milk; such a complaint was made and was established; and the reason the master assigned was, that he limited the boys with respect to milk, that they might not wet their beds at night; nor was he more satisfactory in the explanation he gave for furnishing potatoes and broth instead of bread and milk. I believe the real reason of his deviation from the rule was, that it was convenient or advantageous to himself to supply one instead of the other.

Do you not think, that the catechist and local visitors ought to have remedied those irregularities in Strangford school?—I think the want of interference on their part misled the master, and that he only required to be brought to his senses. He seemed to think my visit a very unnecessary one, and that he had very sufficient judges around him.

Did the catechist interfere to remedy this evil?—He did not, nor does it appear in my report that he offered any reason why he did not.

Upon the occasion of either your first or second visit, did the masters of the charter schools appear to you to be generally and sufficiently impressed with the importance of religion?—I should conclude, where they did not take sufficient care of the children, they were not; that is the only mode in which I can answer the question.

Did you inquire, upon those occasions, as to what number of children had received the sacrament in the year preceding?—Yes; during my first visit, I had reason to complain that so many had not received the sacrament as might have been expected; upon my second I thought there had been a great improvement in this respect.

Will you be so good as to explain to the commissioners, what you conceive may be about the fair proportion in a school, consisting of eighty or a hundred boys, that ought to receive the sacrament in a year?—We have 100 girls in Dundalk, and about twenty or twenty-two receive the sacrament at the great festivals.

It appears to the commissioners, that in nine of the charter schools, Athlone, Ballycastle, Longford, New Ross, Killoteran, Castlemartyr, Innishannon, Strangford and Newport, not a single child had received the sacrament for the year preceding; is that statement correct?—I have no doubt it is, if I have reported such neglect; most of these schools are those which appeared in my first report to be most defective, and they had not been since sufficiently instructed I must suppose.

Do you conceive that the masters of any of those nine schools discharged their duty with respect to the religious instruction of the children, during the year that elapsed between your first visit and second visit, seeing it is a fact, that in none of those schools, there was a single child that received the sacrament?—I should certainly think not; a year was a long period to make up deficiencies with at least some of the scholars.

Do you think that the committee of fifteen took sufficient care in the appointment of those masters, with regard to inquiring as to their religious dispositions?—I think, speaking generally, the country did not supply that choice of masters such as you would desire, to insure at all times and in all respects a good appointment.

Did you ever act as a member of the committee of fifteen?—Never; I was asked by some of the members whether I would like to become one of their members, but I lived too far from Dublin to think of being proposed as such.

In looking at your last general report, you state, I see, “that officers of the highest rank in the navy, and some amongst the most distinguished for talent and advancement at the bar,” had received their education at charter schools; will you mention to whom you allude in that?—John Philpot Curran began his life in a charter school; there is John Philpot Curran in the returns of the Society; they had a school in York-street, and he appears to have been in that school.

Does it appear how long he was there?—No.

Or when he left it?—No.

Have you any reason to believe that a considerable portion of attainments that Mr. Curran was known to possess, could by any possibility be acquired in a charter school?—No, I have no idea of that, nor had I of ascribing the success of these individuals to the attainments acquired in a charter school, yet it was a circumstance unknown to the Society, I believe, and one that might encourage the present inmates of these schools, to learn that persons had obtained rank and eminence whose early education had been in the so much despised institutions in which they were training. In England establishments, not of an unlike nature, cherish and record the names of such as have done honour to them; I wish the day may arrive when it may be the pride of the lowest classes in Ireland to do the same.

Have you ever seen an instance in which a boy received such an education in a charter school as could qualify him for any high station in life?—No knowledge of a superior nature is imparted, except scriptural, yet in many schools, but particularly in Santry, I conceived, when I last inspected there as visitor, a foundation was laying that would qualify the intelligent and industrious pupil for availing himself of such opportunities as are found to occur in cities, whereby humble men arrive at eminence for wealth and respectability, and it is probable I indulged in this hope from the belief in this fact, that at various periods many eminent citizens of London have received their education in schools not unlike those of the chartered institutions in Ireland, either with respect to their object, or the mode or extent of instruction therein given.

Do they ever acquire any extent of useful or general knowledge?—In some schools, to the extent I have alluded to in my last reply.

Have you been in the habit of giving part of your attention at Dundalk, to the day-school there?—Yes, the free school.

Is it a parish school to which the rector contributes?—Yes, I contribute to it as vicar.

Has that school been in connexion with any society?—The board of Erasmus Smith, who contributed one-half of the sum which built it, gave a salary to the master and mistress.

Have you not had lately occasion to dismiss the master?—I was glad of the opportunity of removing, not offensively, both the masters, under whom the school did not answer our expectation.

What rule was followed in the school, with regard to reading the Scriptures before the masters were changed?—About six years ago the Scriptures were read by all the school; but Dr. M'Ardale, the priest of that day, took the boys Testaments from them, (these were never restored), and forbade the use of them; the school fell from about 400 to 50 at that period; from his discouragement, I believe.

Were those 50 all Protestants?—No, they were not.

Are the lower classes in the town of Dundalk principally Roman Catholics?—Yes, when there were above 400 in the school, there were only 13 Protestants; the Protestants generally prefer paying I think.

Was your school free?—Yes, in every respect.

Did the number afterwards increase?—Yes.

Although the Testament continued to be read?—No, the Testament was not read—the children went away. In a great measure I left the school to its fate, till a better time should arrive. I was forced to submit to the restriction on the part of Doctor M'Ardale.

You did not enforce the reading of the Scriptures?—No, I went over to Doctor O'Reilly, the titular primate, upon the occasion, and his reply to me was, that he felt obliged to the Protestants of Dundalk for their liberal care of the poor, who were almost altogether his people, but that he could not allow the Scriptures to be read there; that he was not displeased with Doctor M'Ardale, for having withdrawn the Testament from them, but that he should have permitted it to have continued so long. At the death of Doctor M'Ardale, the Rev. Dr. M'Gann was appointed, whom I found well disposed to concur with me in any thing that seemed to serve the parish, and I found an arrangement of the Scriptures, called Dr. Troy's Selection.

Did you take that book into use in the school?—Yes, immediately that it was published.

Does it continue in use in the school now?—No; if I had forced the use of this selection of the Scriptures, some hundreds of children in schools with which I am closely connected must have been turned to the streets uneducated.

Was it removed by the desire of Dr. M'Gann?—At the desire of his superior, Dr. Curtis.

What practice do you follow now in the school as to the Scriptures?—The Protestant children read the Scriptures, and the others read the books from the Kildare Place Society, and the Sunday school books, which have not been objected to.

Is there any book containing extracts from the Scriptures that you have put into the hands of the children?—No, except what the Sunday school reading books contain.

Have you the Kildare Place Society's book that contains the Psalms and Proverbs?—I cannot bring to my recollection.

Is your school fully attended by Roman Catholic children?—The list is above 200 altogether; I am speaking of the present number. I have a new master, and, for the present limit the numbers, for I wish him to bring the school into an improved system of discipline; this system is simply the making the most intelligent scholars aid the master, in place of ushers. The reward to these scholars is a superior education for themselves, at extra hours, in grammar, history or geography, so as to qualify them to become country schoolmasters hereafter, or good clerks in merchants offices perhaps; and to let the parents feel, that the new system of education may be made valuable to their children though

N^o 54.
Examination of
The Rev.
Elias Thackeray,
4 Jan. 1825.

defective in the most important point, in my judgment, the use of the Scriptures—this they are beginning to find out.

Do you believe no objection has been made by the Roman Catholic priest to the attendance of the children at your school under the present system of instruction?—No, certainly not; the master told me that the priest and his curate came to examine them, and they declared as long as the school goes on in this way it shall have their support.

Do the Protestant children read the Testament aloud?—Yes.

In the hearing of the other children?—It is a very large room, they might read without being heard.

Is any catechism taught in the school?—No; the mode that I pursued to preserve peace, was to have, twice a week, religious instruction for all the children of the poor in my church, and I have been repaid by the attendance of the children of every rank.

Is it often in the school-room?—Never, always in the church.

Do you think it better than in the school-room?—Yes, it is more seriously considered there, and the church is close by.

If the church was not so near, should you see any objection to clearing the school for that purpose?—None whatever, in that case it must have occurred.

Do you know what religious instruction the Roman Catholic children receive?—No, I do not, except that which is conveyed in the church catechism.

Do any of the Presbyterians attend the school?—Yes, with as much readiness as children of the established church.

Do you know what religious instruction they receive?—No.

Do you wish to make any correction in the evidence you gave on a former day?—I do. I wish to correct an opinion I expressed upon the point of the boarding school system of education, which I decidedly prefer to any other at present for this country; and I am come to this conclusion, from reflecting upon the general state of the morals amongst the lowest class of the people where I reside: there appears generally so little regard for the Sabbath, for truth, and for honesty and sobriety, amongst the lowest classes of the people, that I cannot but think it would be fortunate if there were a system that could for a period separate the children from their parents. I think a portion of the children of families living together in the same district, well educated, well trained, and sent amongst them, would do a wonderful deal of good.

If my own opinion on this subject were indulged, I should see in every county in Ireland two boarding schools for the poor, one male, the other female; to which every child of every poor man should be eligible. The election into these establishments should be from every school in the county, and a choice should be made in the face of the county, that is, in the presence of all who take an interest in the welfare of the district. Truth and honesty, respect for God's name, and for Sunday, should be the principal objects of inquiry with the individuals appointed to make the annual selection. The prospect of a residence in such an institution for two or three years, where the pupils were well instructed, well clothed, well disciplined, and, at the time of leaving the establishment, rewarded with a fee for an apprenticeship, or for some other permanent advantage, would be a great stimulus to parents to have their children prepared for such advantages, and might induce them to abstain, at least in the presence of their children, from such offences, as if these suffered by their example, might prove them unworthy of such benefits. The country schoolmasters generally would be excited to greater care and diligence in the moral concerns of the children entrusted to them, by this annual exhibition of the state of the various schools of the country, and this excitement might be improved by a premium to such as shewed themselves most successful in their endeavours to advance the morals of their scholars. The scholars themselves could not be indifferent to the advantages offered to them, and to the character they were establishing. To the respective clergy would, as at present, be confided the care of religion; yet I should not despair of an amicable arrangement after a little in this respect, so far as the admission of such portions of the Scriptures as all concur in, into the classes of children of various religious communities; the present state of things in this respect seems quite unnatural. Till within these few years, the Testament was universally read, I believe, and when the present excitement has abated, I do hope and believe, that at least the undisputed portions of the Scriptures will again be open to all, and read as heretofore in classes including every communion. I can see no mode so likely to correct the immorality which so generally prevails as this, or which can operate so quickly or at so little expense. I beg pardon for intruding my opinion so far, but it must be by obtaining the opinions, however defective these may prove, of those who reside in the country, that some plan may be discovered, whereby the misfortunes of this island may be removed, and the evils corrected.

Appendix, N^o 55.

Extracts from the General Report of the Reverend William Lee, on visiting the CHARTER SCHOOLS, in 1819 and 1820.

State of Houses and Offices.

"Many of these buildings are considerably decayed, and appeared to me scarcely deserving of repair. On others, a very large expenditure has taken place; and I regret to observe, that in some instances the contracts were most inadequately and scandalously performed.
In

N^o 55.
Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

In my detailed Reports of the several schools, I have noticed the specific instances in which, according to my judgment, the funds of the Society have been thus improperly expended. Such abuses, it is manifest, the board in Dublin cannot always effectually prevent. They must, principally, if not altogether, rely upon the reports of local committees in these matters; and without imputing to any particular committee, any thing like intentional misrepresentation of facts, it is by no means difficult to account for their being led into error.

"In some instances, a false tenderness, or too great facility of disposition, in others, want of judgment or experience may have operated injuriously to the public interest; and in one case which came within my own observation, a defective sight prevented the discovery of mismanagement, which could not otherwise have been overlooked. The consequences however have often been lamentable. At Charleville, for example, the contract for repairs and alterations, amounted, as I was informed, to no less a sum than £.2,800.; yet this establishment appeared to me one of the least commodious among the schools of the Society, and I have no hesitation in saying, that, by a more faithful, or a more judicious expenditure, a far better house and offices might have been erected de novo. Under this head, it is but just to add, that the two new buildings, at Dundalk and at Strangford, appear to have been constructed upon the most eligible plan, and in the best manner.

Clothing.

"I look upon the clothing of the children to be well suited to their condition, and, generally speaking, very carefully attended to by the masters and mistresses. One improvement I would venture to suggest, the adoption of dark, or as it is called olive thickset trowsers, instead of either cloth or canvas; thickset is the costume of the boys in Wilson's hospital, and it affords a striking contrast to that of the Charter Schools. And here may I be permitted to observe, that this noble foundation might supply many useful and important hints of improvement in the general management of the charter schools. In discipline, economy and prudential superintendence, through all its departments, this institution stands eminently distinguished; and it is strange, that so munificent an establishment should be so little known in a country of which it is a special ornament. It is with great unwillingness and unaffected diffidence, that I feel myself obliged to dissent from Mr. Thackeray, with regard to the plan of having the clothing of the boys manufactured in Dublin. I am aware, indeed, that I have seen the charter schools in other circumstances, and under a far different course of regulation from the circumstances and course of regulation which presented themselves to Mr. Thackeray; and all who have had opportunities of observing, and are best capable of judging, must admit, that by his judicious inspection, whatever mal-practices might have existed, in this or any other branch of the domestic economy of those schools, were effectually discovered and corrected. How far those mal-practices may have formerly prevailed in the clothing department, I cannot presume to judge; but I beg permission to say, that the alteration here adverted to, seems to have failed. And this I state, not as a matter of opinion, but as matter of fact. To this point I have already alluded in my reports of the clothing of different schools which had been manufactured in Dublin, and which, in some articles, particularly the stockings, were as bad as could possibly be made up any where. Thus, the case appears to me to stand (it remains for the Society to judge whether it must not continue thus to stand, so long as the clothing is prepared in Dublin). A contractor in the metropolis cannot be supposed to feel much interest (for he can derive little or no credit for it) in the comfort or appearance of those for whom the clothes he sends are intended. If the articles are bad he may hope to escape detection, or if detected, he is beyond the reach of any other punishment or controul than the loss of future contracts, while, probably, he may have confined his views to the profit on the contract which is past and gone. And supposing the city contractor to be strictly honest, one serious inconvenience attending this mode of supply can scarcely be avoided. The articles cannot be made to fit the children who are to use them, with that accuracy which is notoriously so essential to the comfort as well as durability of clothing. This inconvenience I witnessed in many of the schools thus supplied from Dublin. In some instances, I found the shoes quite worn out, while a large number of new pairs lay in useless store; on the other hand, when the master supplies the clothing, he will count the cost of neglect or mismanagement. His credit and his character are at stake; he is at hand to be questioned; and if necessary, reprov'd for any deficiency or neglect. If he should be proved guilty of any thing like positive fraud, he must be liable to lose his situation, and eventually perhaps, all means of future livelihood. The catechist, a gentleman, a clergyman, and, from a variety of laudable motives, deeply interested in the appearance and comfort of the children, may surely be relied upon for an active and efficient vigilance in these matters. And after all, the opportunities of malversation in the masters and mistresses respecting the clothing of the children, are by no means so numerous or so difficult of detection as in the contract for supplying them with food, a department invariably and indeed inevitably entrusted to the care of those persons. Two other particulars on this head I shall briefly suggest;—a general complaint of want of employment prevails in those schools; this evil is obviously aggravated by removing from the schools to the metropolis, a considerable source of that sort of employment for the children which would be most useful to them in after life; shoes, stockings, and other articles of clothing, might, in the whole or in part, be supplied by the labour of the children. It further appears to me, that the practice of supplying the clothes from Dublin, while it diminishes the circulation of money in the vicinity of these institutions, tends to diminish their local popularity, which it is obviously a very desirable object to promote as much as possible. These considerations I have thought it my duty to submit; how far they may be deserving of attention, the Society will determine.

Education and Religious Instruction.

" I am much concerned that I am not able to report more favourably upon this most important head of observation, for it did not appear to me that, with the exception of a very few schools, the progress of the children was in any degree commensurate with the ample provision made by the Society, especially for their religious instruction; their proficiency rarely exceeded an accurate repetition of the church catechism, and the expositions used in the schools, while their answers were obviously acts of the memory rather than of the understanding. I know that I was often looked upon, in one instance, indeed, I was charged with expecting too much from those children, and some instructors complained of a stupidity in their pupils which no exertions could enlighten. But there are some honourable exceptions which, while they demonstrate that both those pleas are inadmissible, also prove that more is practicable than has been attained, expected, or even perhaps attempted in the great majority of charter schools. It certainly is the duty, both of masters and superintendents, to adopt a better system of instruction, and to use greater personal exertions in communicating right principles of religion, and bringing them home to the capacities of the children. It is thus only that the charter schools can be brought to answer their intended and most important purpose, by infusing into the lower classes of our population a wholesome leaven of moral and religious improvement. In all the schools the spelling, reading and writing is highly creditable, but I thought that a general deficiency prevailed in useful arithmetic.

Apprentices.

" That some instances should occur, in which the hopes of the Society, as to the future conduct and character of their children, should be lamentably disappointed, cannot surprise any reflecting person. These instances, however, I am persuaded have been malignantly exaggerated, and if the cases of failure could be investigated, I have no doubt but that they would be found to arise as frequently from the misconduct of the master as that of the apprentice. These children are removed from the school at an age the most fraught with danger, and placed for the most part in the families of farmers or tradesmen of an inferior order, in whose houses I fear there is rarely to be found that attention to the comfort of the apprentices to which they had been accustomed in the school, and still less, that moral discipline or that religious example which are so necessary to encourage and to keep young persons in the right way. In the case of young females the period of apprenticeship is necessarily beset with greater danger, and I have often reflected, with painful anxiety, upon their forlorn condition, when the expiration of that period sends them forth upon the world without a home or a friend. I shall be excused, I hope, for suggesting to the Society, the expediency of establishing a house of refuge for the reception of their discharged female apprentices, until they can be provided with situations of an eligible kind.

Local Committees.

" From the personal experience of many years in a more narrowed sphere, as visitor catechist of the school at Newport, confirmed by the result of much inquiry in the course of my late inspection, I am not disposed to hope quite so much from the services of this body as Mr. Thackeray appears to do. Country gentlemen have in general so many and such various claims upon their time and attention, that, however desirous to promote the welfare of the schools placed under their local guardianship, they cannot devote sufficient time to that frequency of attendance, nor exercise that minuteness of inquiry and inspection, which alone can render the services of a visitor really useful; many members of local committees frankly avowed themselves thus circumstanced, when I endeavoured to engage them heartily in the cause. It is too common, even among those who have greater leisure, to rest satisfied and conclude that all is well, if they see the children neatly dressed and making a respectable appearance at church. The quarterly audit of accounts is indeed generally well attended. But it should be impressed upon local committees, that such attendance constitutes but a small part of their duties. On those stated days, whatever might be the general mismanagement of a school, every thing would of course be so prepared as to pass muster; and as to the settlement of accounts, these in the nature of things cannot be materially incorrect, liable as they are to a most careful scrutiny before the board above. It is to be feared, that in too many instances (some, in truth, came within my own immediate observation) the members of this body are apt, from mistaken good-nature or neighbourly partiality, to overlook or to extenuate those errors or that negligence which they ought rather to visit with animadversion, and to correct with firmness. Some very creditable exceptions to this statement I had the good fortune to meet, and I feel great pleasure in reporting, that in places where there are many resident clergy, their exertions, as members of local committees, have been very zealous, and their usefulness eminently conspicuous.

Catechist.

" Under this head as well as under those of MASTERS, MISTRESSES, USHERS, MEDICAL ATTENDANTS, and SERVANTS, the judicious observations of Mr. Thackeray leave me nothing to report or to suggest. I can only state my full conviction, that his visitation has produced the most salutary effects, in quickening all those classes of persons, each each in their respective spheres, to a more active performance of their appropriate duties.

General Observations.

" In the preceding pages of this Report, I have strictly confined myself to matters of fact, and to such remarks and occasional suggestions as naturally arose from those matters.

" From the line thus far pursued, I am not here disposed to deviate. It may be and it has been a question with some, whether the charter school system be well adapted to the exigencies of this country. On this important question I am unwilling to hazard an opinion. Thus much only, I entreat permission to observe, that even though the system were conceived to be very far from faultless, the present does not appear to me a fit season for the suppression of old establishments; and that, if hereafter it should, on any account, be deemed at once safe and expedient to relinquish or materially to modify the establishment of chartered schools, that relinquishment or modification could not well be undertaken with too much caution, or carried into effect too gradually. Some facts which may be conceived in some measure to bear upon this general question, I think it my duty not to withhold; whether they are entitled to any consideration, or whether the evil growing out of them, may not, by prudent management, be obviated and corrected, it remains for those to decide, who are familiar with this subject, and who carry with them a large portion, both of wisdom and experience. In the first place then, I have found it generally the case, that among the lower classes, a rooted and inveterate prejudice exists against the charter schools; that nothing but entire destitution will induce them to seek in them an asylum for their children; and that the fact of having been educated in one of those seminaries, is very commonly brought forward and received as the bitterest reproach that can be offered. There can be but one opinion as to the unreasonableness and injustice of this prejudice; the causes of it I do not mean to investigate; I simply state what appears to me to be the fact, and I think it demands the attention of the Society, were it only in order that the best means may be devised and employed for meeting and counteracting this unpleasant feeling. In the next place (and it may be considered a branch of the foregoing remark), I have observed, that in charter schools, such ushers or usheresses as were known to have been educated in those seminaries, were treated by the children with disrespect, and that their authority was either lost or greatly diminished, as soon as this discovery was made. In the charter school, placed for many years under my catechetical superintendence, at Newport, I had frequent opportunities of witnessing and lamenting this propensity. The master and mistress when they had an assistant so educated, found it necessary to use every means in their power to conceal the fact from the children. This circumstance, I own, compels me to feel some doubt respecting Mr. Thackeray's plan, for engrafting upon the charter school system, institutions for training and supplying parish schoolmasters and parish clerks for Ireland. The desirableness of such a plan, abstractedly considered, I most deeply feel; but I cannot shut out from my view the difficulty just suggested, which ought perhaps to be maturely weighed, and if it be found to have any solid weight, a great service would be done, by devising means for effecting its diminution or removal. I am, thirdly, led to observe, that Roman Catholic parents or relatives of children, placed in those schools, seldom give up the hope of recalling them to the communion of the church of Rome; and that in those interviews with their children, which the rules of the Society permit (interviews which it would be cruel to prohibit), every means are made use of, and often, I believe, effectually, to guard them against the religious principles of the church of England, as taught and communicated in our charter schools. And experience teaches us to fear, that in very few instances can the written consent of Roman Catholic parents or relatives to the education of their children in church of England principles be relied upon. It is a consent wrung from them by poverty, and which poverty alone could induce them to give. Made therefore in hypocrisy, there is little scruple felt in practically departing from it as soon as the child is taken from under the controul of the Society. And lastly, I was led, in the course of my official visitations, to compare the charter schools with those on the foundation of Erasmus Smith, and of the association for discountenancing vice, and promoting the knowledge and practice of the Christian religion, both of which came under my authorized inspection. The two latter it is well known, consist, exclusively, of daily and parochial schools; the children attending them are, for the most part, clothed in rags, and fed upon the scanty and homely fare afforded in the cabin of an Irish peasant. In the charter schools, on the contrary, the children are comfortably lodged, well clad and abundantly fed; no pains are spared to preserve their health. On the first appearance of disease, medical aid is procured, and their teachers are, in all cases, equal, and generally far superior to those employed in the daily and parochial schools; yet, I was invariably struck with the vast superiority in health, in appearance, in vivacity and in intelligence of the half-naked, and one would almost suppose half-starved children, who live in their parents' cabins, over those so well maintained, and so carefully instructed in the charter schools. The reasons of this striking fact, it might not be difficult to assign. In the charter schools all social and family affections are dried up; children once received into them, are, as it were, the children, the brothers, the sisters, the relations of nobody: they have no vacation, they know not the feeling of home; and hence it is primarily, whatever concomitant causes there may be, that they are so frequently stunted in body, mind and heart. That the facts are so, they who have had most experience in charter schools, will be the most ready, as they are the most competent to testify; and I humbly conceive, that such facts may not be undeserving the serious consideration of the Incorporated Society.

N^o 55.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Appendix, N° 56.

Extracts from the particular Reports of the CHARTER SCHOOLS visited by the Rev. William Lee, in 1819 and 1820, referred to in the preceding General Report.

ATHLONE SCHOOL; visited October 1819.

General Appearance.

N° 56.
Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.
—
Athlone School.

" I REGRET to report under this head, that I saw much ground for unqualified reprehension; the appearance of the boys was exceedingly squalid and dirty, the clothes on them are those of 1817 (the measures for the new clothing, by accident or mistake, not having been sent to Dublin in due time), and could not be expected to look decent; making due allowance for this, I still conceived the appearance of the boys bespoke manifest disregard of cleanliness, while that of the house in general was equally unsatisfactory. One part of the concern was most disgusting, and consistently with that line of proceeding which I laid down for myself when I undertook my office as a visitor of these establishments, I cannot but report it; three of the boys had been put to lie in the infirmary, in consequence of a habit (represented to me as incorrigible) of wetting their beds. I visited the room they lay in, and cannot express the disgust and abhorrence its filthy condition gave rise to. In the next room, not divided by a door, the master put his sheep to lie in, and the room thus occupied was by far the cleaner of the two. If any circumstances can mitigate that censure which so gross a disregard of the comforts and cleanliness of the boys under his care deserves, it is, not only that this is a very busy season, when he is chiefly employed digging out his potatoes, but also, that he has no usher, and is therefore obliged to devote more of his time than other masters to the school-room duty, which, as will appear in the sequel of this report, is carefully and successfully attended to. I have said so much to him upon this subject, and he appears so conscious of his great neglect (to use no harsher word), that I make no doubt his establishment will in future be conducted with a greater regard to cleanliness and decency. The boys seem to be very lively and healthy; there is no symptom of scrofula or itch among them.

House and Offices.

" Nothing having been done to these since Mr. Thackeray visited, except a slight repair in the roof of the house, I beg leave to refer the board to his report, which I transmit herewith, as I propose doing with respect to all the schools I visit, in order that the board may compare the present state of the schools with that in which he found them.

Education, Religious Instruction and Morals.

" Very considerable improvement appears to have taken place in this school since it was last officially visited; the boys in general read very well; their writing is, I think, the best I have seen in any of the schools, while their proficiency in scriptural knowledge and the general principles of religion is very creditable to the master, who, as already stated, has no usher to assist him.

Local Committee.

" Four gentlemen belonging to this body were so good as to attend a summons I took the liberty of sending to them; they seemed much distressed at the representation I gave them of the condition in which I found the infirmary, and averred, that they never observed such marks of neglect before, while they spoke very favourably indeed of the general conduct and character of the master.

Catechist.

" This gentleman, whose attendance I conceived I had a right to expect, though twice sent for, did not seem to think himself under any obligation to meet me at the school; which I am the more disposed to regret, as good might possibly have arisen to the school from my personally directing his attention to those points in which it appeared to me to demand increased vigilance on his part, as the most responsible, and I presume salaried officer of the establishment.

Master and Mistress.

" After what has been said of the master, I shall only add, that I trust his future conduct will prove that my remonstrances have not been lost upon him. The appearance of the mistress (his wife) did not allow me to give her much credit for those habits of neatness and cleanliness which should be the conspicuous ornaments of her sex."

Appendix, N° 57.

BALLYCASTLE SCHOOL, May 1820.

Appearance of the Girls.

N° 57.
Ballycastle School.

" This was not at all favourable; although my first visit was on the Sabbath day, I found them in their old gowns, which they had worn at church. This appeared to me to evince a want of due regard to decency on the part of the mistress; it is but fair to add, that she seemed to want it in no other respect: the rooms and beds, as well as every other part of the house, being perfectly clean, and as regular as the decayed state of the building would permit.

permit. Many of the girls have had the itch, but it is nearly cured. One poor child lay in the infirmary 'in articulo mortis,' her disease consumption. The rest are healthy, strong girls; five of them are rather young women.

House and Offices.

"This is a very old building, so incommodious in every respect, that I would consider any expense incurred in repairing it, altogether thrown away. The roof is water-proof, and the offices are in rather better state than the dwelling-house. One of the dormitories shakes so much under the feet as to threaten its fall.

Clothing.

"I saw each girl with her respective portion of clothing, except some shifts that were in the wash. One set of shoes is quite new, and is kept in store; the rest are in general in a bad state, but are kept well repaired as they require it. One set of gowns is quite good, and another seems to be kept in good repair. The girls here have no bonnets, and go to church bareheaded. The expense of providing these is so trifling, that I am surprised the want has not been supplied before. Their appearance at church cannot but have been very discreditable to day, with old gowns, and nothing to cover their heads. The clothing of this school appeared to me altogether to be very well kept by the mistress.

Education and Religious Instruction.

"I considered the girls in this school rather better educated, and their progress in religious knowledge more creditable than in the generality of the schools. The two higher classes evinced a very satisfactory acquaintance with the principles of religion, and the history of the Bible. I found among them a degree of animation, and a quickness of intellect, which was very gratifying. The inferior classes I did not consider proportionably well informed, their answering being rather confined to a bare repetition of their catechism, and the exposition used in the school. The larger girls are the most backward; one of them is deaf, another deficient in sight, and all apparently so in understanding.

Master and Mistress.

"The master seems a quiet easy man, who I believe would scarcely be able to get through the labour and duties of his station, had he not the aid of a shrewd, active, busy wife, who seems peculiarly well suited to the station she now fills. Their appointment to this school, is a recent one, and I understand it has improved since they were placed over it.

Apprentices.

"There is a very good demand here for apprentices; and one cannot but wonder, why five girls should be so long left in a school where such a demand exists, as to have grown up to be young women. The present superintendents are not long enough here to be able to ascertain the present condition of those sent out from hence, but as far as they have heard, the report is very favourable.

Servants.

"There are two servants employed here, who are Protestants, and well conducted; but why are servants employed in a female school? There are five strong young women here, who are more than sufficient for any drudgery in the school, and it appears to me an injudicious thing to employ any other hands.

Beds and Bedding.

"With the exception of nine pair, the blankets in this school are as bad as possible; the sheets too are in general very indifferent. There was an ample supply of straw in the beds, and I found them as clean and in as good a state as due care on the part of the mistress could make them. The mistress complains, that the return made to her of these articles was very incorrect, both in respect to the quantity and condition of them, and that she fears unmerited blame may attach to her, on account of such misrepresentation."

Appendix, N° 58.

CASTLEDERMOT SCHOOL, September 1819.

House and Offices.

"THIS is a very fine establishment, newly and completely fitted up; but I feel regret in reporting, that a very considerable depression has taken place in the roof, which it appears the catechist and local committee never perceived until I pointed it out; it is between the chimney shaft and gable end.

"It must be owing to a paltry attempt of the contractor to save a little timber, by reducing the scantling of the rafter. I think, if possible, he should be compelled to make good this very culpable deficiency in the performance of a contract, for which, if I am informed right, he received 2,500*l*. If something be not done, I think the roof on that part will fall in; perhaps it would be expedient to refer this matter to the consideration and more full report of the local committee."

[R 4]

N° 57.
Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

N° 58.
Castledermot
School.

Appendix, N° 59.

CASTLEMARTYR SCHOOL, March 1820.

Clothing.

N° 59.
Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

" THE boys had the clothing of 1818 in wear, and its good condition proves the care and attention of the master and mistress; the shoes and stockings belonged to the new clothing lately sent down from Dublin. The materials of the coats, waistcoats and trowsers, and shirts is excellent; but the coats are all too small, and in few instances can be buttoned across the waist. The master complains that the shoes are very bad, and that many pairs are already worn out. As to the stockings, they are of the same description as those I met at Dunmanway.

Religious Knowledge.

" If I could be satisfied with correct repetition of the answers to the questions in the church catechism, and the various expositions thereof used in the school, I would here have found ample grounds of satisfaction; but I have used myself to expect something more than this in schools where such ample means of communicating religious instruction are provided by the salutary regulations and the liberal allowances of the Society. In this, as well as so many other schools, I consider the boys far below the standard which I think might fairly be formed in these schools. Some boys here are very quick, but I think they are in general more stupid than I have met any where; two or three seem altogether deficient in intellect.

Local Committee.

" This body has been reduced much by death, and other causes; and there appears I thought, a disinclination on the part of the survivors to supply their place. Lord Shannon, who is at present in England, is, I am told, a zealous friend, and frequent visitor at the school. I had not the pleasure of meeting any of the members at the school. One gentleman lives in Cloyne, with whom I had a free communication on the subject of the school. I would, perhaps, venture to mention the names of some individuals whose appointment to this body might be useful, but I am unwilling to do so, for the reason hinted at above; and besides, to say the truth, I do not see that much good results, generally speaking, from the labours of gentlemen composing local committees. I have no doubt but that the several persons composing the local committees of these institutions feel a laudable anxiety for their welfare; but the report books of the different schools, when minutely referred to, will certainly bear me out in my assertion, that little or nothing is DONE by them to promote their efficiency by active personal superintendence.

Catechist.

" I had the pleasure of meeting this gentleman at the school; his long experience, and an understanding highly cultivated, rendered his communications on the subject of the school to the last degree pleasing and edifying to me. He is sincerely anxious to render the institution placed under his official controul as productive of public benefit as possible, but very frankly stated the disappointment of hopes he entertained of some very promising boys he had sent out of his school, who, from various causes, had not turned out as well as he expected. Upon referring to Mr. Thackeray's first report of this school, I find a similar conversation took place between them upon this interesting subject; I entirely concur with this gentleman in the favourable opinion expressed as to the respectable catechist of this school.

Apprentices.

" The account of these, generally, is far from being satisfactory. Within the two last years, three have eloped from their services, and are now living with Roman Catholic parents; and the inference with regard to their religion at present is but too obvious. Mr. Smith mentioned many cases to me of boys, who, in consequence of the distress of their masters, were forced into a wandering, unsettled, and, as he fears, dissolute mode of living. He seems to think a greater difficulty of providing good places exists in this than perhaps any other part of Ireland, and suggested the expediency of removing the more advanced boys to schools where good services may be more easily procured."

Appendix, 60.

CHARLEVILLE SCHOOL, July 1819.

[44 girls.]

N° 60.
Charleville School.

" THE degree of order and regularity observable in a school upon the unexpected arrival of a visitor, is perhaps the best criterion of the habitual economy and care of that school. Tried by this test, the school of Charleville is lamentably deficient. Upon my arrival, the utmost disorder and confusion prevailed in the school-room; the mistress and usheress it is true were not present to control them, but upon their coming into the room, I did not perceive any thing like restored order or silence, which I at length succeeded in obtaining by a stern assertion of my own authority. The mistress made many excuses, and (as I am told in every case where I have fault to find) assured me that if I had come at any other time time, I would not have found it so. That this disorder sprung from neglect, rather than want of power or of judgment on the part of the mistress and usheress, was obvious, from the appearance of the school-room on my expected visit the next day, when I saw the greatest regularity and decorum. So little regard seems to be paid by them to appearances, that when I ordered one of the children who was literally in filthy rags, to go and put on other clothes, the child actually stripped herself before us all; and no remark was made upon it, by either mistress or usheress.

"This circumstance convinced me what little regard has been paid to the manners and habits of the children, and I confess made a very unfavourable impression as to the whole establishment, which I cannot say that subsequent observation removed. I have warned the master, mistress and usheress, most strongly of the necessity of a radical improvement in almost every branch of their establishment, and of my intention to ascertain in person, how far their promises of amendment have been carried into effect.

General appearance of the Children.

"The dress of the children upon my arrival, was in general very bad; I put the worst clad amongst them by themselves, and shewed them to the mistress, who seemed duly ashamed of their appearance; gowns scarcely hanging together, shoes and stockings in the worst conceivable state, and this though there was the due quantity of good clothing in the school, as I observed upon causing each child to have with her her own share of clothing.

"The mistress and usheress both complained of a sulky dogged manner among the children, but I cannot bring myself to think this is incorrigible; I doubt if much of it be not owing to a bad manner of superintendence in the usheress. It appeared to me too much to want that mixture of blandness with authority, which scarcely ever fails to win a young mind. I have endeavoured to impress this upon the mistress and usheress, and both have promised to try it.

Education and Religious Knowledge.

"I cannot find much to commend under this head: the children almost all read, but with a tone and manner singularly disagreeable; the spelling is in general pretty good, and their writing is good; in accounts very indifferent, and as to religious knowledge, they are very defective indeed, their progress appearing to me not to exceed a mere repetition of the church catechism, with its explanations. When a question was put, in the slightest degree varied from its form in their books, they were not at home; and if an answer was attempted, it only proved an utter ignorance of its signification. The catechist, as well as two members of the local committee, (who frequently examine the children, and take a most laudable interest in the welfare of this school), assure me this is not common with them, and expressed great surprize and regret to hear some of the larger girls shew themselves thus deficient before me; but so it is, they really did not answer well. In the upper class there was one exception.

State of House and Offices.

"The rooms were all very clean, the dormitories particularly so, and well ventilated. The house wants to be whitewashed, and the master will get it done immediately. He states, that from some defect in the building of the new part of the house, the water comes in near the wall plate, and descends to the ground floor through the wall. It is thus he accounts for a general damp observable on the walls. Whether this be the cause, or not, it was stated to me by every member of the local committee whom I saw, that there never was a sum of money so badly expended as that laid out here. There is no doubt that it is still a very defective establishment, in point of convenience; the dining-room is very inconvenient and small, having been the old kitchen, the fire-place of which is still open and unplastered; and the local committee appears unwilling to call for further expenditure, after all that has been done. The offices are in perfect order, and the roof, both of them and the house, perfect.

"The privy is choked up to such a degree as to become quite offensive. Mr. Roberts, a most respectable member of the committee, assured me that he had himself pointed out to the contractor, where a sewer should run from it in a direction which afforded a sufficient fall, and that he engaged in his contract to complete the same; but nothing has been done to remove the evil. The master expects, but I think very unreasonably, that he will be allowed for cleaning it. I have directed him at all events to get it cleaned out forthwith. Mr. Thackeray's reports have already pointed out the necessity of inclosing the play ground; there can be but one opinion as to the necessity of such inclosure round the play ground of a female school.

Catechist.

"I entirely concur in opinion with Mr. Thackeray, that the gentleness of this much respected gentleman's disposition and manners, renders less effectual perhaps than he perceives, his faithful and honest zeal to discharge his official duties.

Stores and Feeding.

"I saw but a scanty portion of meal in store; the mistress says it was owing to want of bins to hold meal. There was a large heap of potatoes, but they were very bad. Bread would now be cheaper as potatoes are now very dear in all parts of the country. The master has contracted with a baker in Charleville, for supplying him with bread, which he says he cannot bake, the oven being quite useless, and a vast deal too small.

"The children told me, they had no cause to complain of their food in any respect. I observed, however, a very small share of milk indeed."

Appendix, N° 61.

CLONTARF SCHOOL; September, 1819.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.
Clontarf School.

" HAVING received, through the post office, at Newport, a letter from two boys of this school, preferring various charges of misdemeanor and ill-treatment against the master and mistress of the school; I have on each of these days, very maturely investigated the said charges. On the last of them I was attended by the catechist and three members of the local committee. These highly respectable gentlemen, who appeared deeply distressed at the present condition of the establishment, then for the first time made known to them, will, I doubt not, present to your committee a faithful and accurate report of our joint proceedings, and their opinion upon the subject. While I endeavour, as concisely as the nature of the subject will admit, to detail the charges, the degree of credit due to them in my view of the case, and my opinion upon the whole subject under consideration :—

1st Charge.

" Inattention of the master to the education of the boys, and leaving it wholly to the usher.

" This charge appears to me to have been fully proved.

2d Charge.

" Intoxication of the master and excessive severity to the boys.

" Though there does not appear evidence to convict the master of habitual drunkenness, yet sufficient proof appears to have been adduced that, occasionally, changes in his manner occurred after dinner, which could have resulted only from drink, a very small portion of which appears to produce serious effects upon a frame debilitated by disease; these instances were not frequent. In one case it appears, that the master, while in this state, did inflict undue and excessive corporal punishment on one of the boys.

3d Charge.

" Denying to the infirmary its due allowance of coals.

" This charge seems to be well founded.

4th Charge.

" Defrauding the boys of their due allowance of good and wholesome food.

" I must unequivocally and altogether acquit the master and mistress of this the most severe accusation. Some trifling deviations may have taken place from the rules of the dietary; and the milk I believe, has in a few instances been very bad. This, in my opinion, might have occurred without any intention to wrong the children; and from their appearance, which is obviously that of well-fed boys, and the total failure of evidence in support of this severe accusation, I am quite satisfied, that in the article of feeding, the master and mistress have acted fairly and equitably towards their employers, and the children committed to their care.

5th Charge.

" Want of straw as allowed by the rules.

" It was proved that fresh straw was not put into the beds according to rule, and that something like unworthy trick had been practised in this respect.

6th Charge.

" Keeping a dairy in town unknown to the board.

" This charge is admitted, and to this may be traced, in my mind, the present state of disorder, and insubordination in which the school is placed.

7th Charge.

" Sending the school blankets to this dairy, and bartering the sheets of the school for delf.

" The first part of this charge is admitted; as to the second, I believe it was nothing better than useless rags, which the mistress thus disposed of.

8th Charge.

" The mistress giving bad characters of the boys to persons looking for apprentices.

" It does appear, that the mistress, from whatever motive, has more than once prevented respectable persons from taking apprentices, by unjustly giving them a bad character.

9th Charge.

" The master withholding from the monitors, money which had been allowed them.

" The master admits not giving this money as ordered; but denies it was from any fraudulent motive, as his accounts will shew this money placed to the credit of the Society.

10th and last Charge.

" The servants of the school often staying out till very unseasonable hours, sometimes the whole night, and one of them being a Roman Catholic.

" The mistress has certainly been culpable in not observing a more strict discipline over her servants, who have transgressed, as stated in this charge: and it also appears that there is a Roman Catholic on the establishment.

" While I cannot but absolve the master from moral guilt or meditated fraud in the conduct of his school, there is too much ground of censure to be found in his general superintendence of it.

" Unfortunately

" Unfortunately for his vindication those persons whom he brought before us to refute these charges, only fixed them with a more oppressive weight.

" The first of these, a young woman, who is the housekeeper of the school, I openly convicted of deliberate and audacious falsehood.

" The second: Joseph A. Dyas, came before us with an affectation of sanctity, love of justice, &c. but we soon saw through this mask: it appears he had long been an ASSISTANT USHER AT THIS SCHOOL; and so eager is he to calumniate the present usher (who, I believe, was a successful rival when he aspired to the office), that he laid before us an affidavit, from which it appears, he himself was guilty, while in the school, of the malpractices of which he accuses the usher; and charges the boys under his care, with gambling at cards for money they had received for singing in church. The concurring evidence of all parties refutes this latter gross calumny; and I scruple not to call this man a profligate perjurer. I mention him particularly, as he was once under the employment of the Society, and had been brought up in one of their schools, lest he should ever dare again to offer himself to their service.

" As to the present usher, against whom heavy charges were brought, they appear to amount simply to this: he has occasionally taken a tumbler of punch in his room after the fatigues of the day; but there is not a shadow of proof, that in this indulgence he ever exceeded the bounds of strict temperance. He admits having played at cards in his room, with the master's sons, and won money from them, and from the infamous Dyas. He acknowledges his error, and expresses deep contrition for it.

" In this detail, which I have purposely condensed into as narrow a compass as possible, I have omitted many incidental charges and much extraneous matter which came before us, because I feel that sufficient matter has now been brought under your cognizance to convince you of the deplorable state of disorder into which an establishment, that is so prominent an object in the public view, has fallen;—enough to convince you of the necessity of adopting the most prompt and decisive measures for restoring it to a more creditable condition.

" I do not presume to obtrude any opinion, or recommend any measure, feeling as I do, the fullest confidence in your wisdom and your impartiality.

" I shall only add, that under existing circumstances, I have thought it advisable to defer my detailed examination of the school, till it is placed upon a different footing."

Appendix, N° 62.

DUNDALK SCHOOL; April 1820.

Religious Instruction.

" I REGRET that in this particular this school appears to me very deficient. Excepting three or four girls, the progress of the children in religious knowledge, and acquaintance with the history and principles of our holy faith, cannot be estimated higher than the mere formal repetition of the church catechism. They have all been carefully brought through the different expositions of it that are used in these schools, but their answering is an act of memory, and not of the understanding. I am convinced, that very uncommon pains are devoted in this school, to the religious instruction of the children, both by their immediate preceptors and the catechist; but certainly the system of instruction must be faulty, when great exertions are found to produce so little fruit. The catechist told me, he has often had to lament the dulness with which they received his instructions, and the slowness with which their understandings seem to expand. I examined the two higher classes myself, and we jointly examined the rest. I am sorry to add, that I think in this respect this school wants much of that pre-eminence which it possesses over other establishments in other respects.

Dundalk School.

Farm.

" I cannot withhold my opinion, that in all the schools the business of managing their farms cannot but detach the masters from that attention to their schools, which I think should be their only occupation. The business of the farm, or that of education, must in some degree be neglected.

" It is well known that a farmer who does not almost live among his labourers, cannot profit by his farm. In the present instance, I am sure, the master must neglect either his farm or his school. I am, however, fully disposed to believe he would neglect the former sooner than the latter. The play ground here is ample, and neatly kept. The space intended for a garden, is now under potatoe tillage, which is the best mode of preparation for a garden.

Apprentices.

" The records of this school supply a very unpleasant view of those who have been sent from it. From these documents it appears that the number of those who have eloped, and of those who by marriage with Papists, gave more than presumptive evidence of their being now Papists, is, in proportion to the number of those who continue members of the Established church, as one to three; that is, supposing those of whom there is no account, are to be considered as belonging to the latter class. But I fear it would be incorrect to suppose this. This is the view which an attentive search of the school registry during the last twenty-five years, induced Mr. Horner and me to take of the subject. He has since undertaken personally to visit all who are within his reach.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Stores and Food.

"Although I am inclined to believe that justice is done to the children in this as well as every other respect generally, I yet cannot but report, that upon my visiting very early in the morning, I found several porringers of milk remaining from the supper of the night before, which I tasted, and found to be of the worst kind, and such as could not be used, it was perfectly disgusting; some of the same was served at breakfast. The master (who returned to the school just as I was leaving it) assured me this was accidental; that sweet butter-milk had been bespoken, but on that day could not be supplied; that his own cows had not yet calved, &c. &c. I am fully disposed to believe his statement, but it is my duty and business to report matters as I find them. I saw an ample supply of good oatmeal in the house."

Appendix, N° 63.

DUNKERRIN SCHOOL; July 1819.

Religious Knowledge and Morals.

Dunkerrin School.

"THE religious knowledge of these girls can scarcely be rated higher than a very accurate repetition of the church catechism and its explanation by Mann and Crossman; with very few exceptions, their efforts at explanation were but indifferent."

Local Committee.

"I met two of this body at the school; their visits are not so frequent as to lead me to expect much good from them. Those whom I met seemed anxious for the welfare of the school, and sorry they had not visited it more frequently. The chin cough having appeared in the school, prevented my conferring with them and the catechist as long or as reely as I wished; this gentleman being afraid of conveying the contagion to his family, and not being certain of escaping it himself."

Appendix, N° 64.

DUNMANWAY SCHOOL; February 1820.

State of House and Offices.

Dunmanway
School.

"THE house is a very old one, and seems to possess very small means of accommodation. The room in which the clothes are kept, is as little calculated for such a purpose as can well be imagined. There is no eating room, and the children are obliged to dine in the school-room, which is partly flagged and partly boarded. The roof is sound and staunch; the sashes are in general very good; two of them are quite decayed; the offices are in good repair; in one of these is a room which is used as an infirmary; I did not think it was kept in that state of order and cleanliness which an establishment of the kind requires; I noticed this to the master, and he attempted to account for this confusion, by alleging, that it was also used as a laundry room below stairs; I did not consider this excuse at all satisfactory."

Appearance of the Boys.

"Three boys have long had scald heads; one, I think, so long as four years, which I cannot but look upon as evidence of neglect, or want of skill in the medical attendant, who seemed to think highly both of his attention and judgment, and appears to think his services in the school not sufficiently compensated; two others have what I thought a confirmed itch; and one boy is an idiot. The rest are strong and healthy boys."

Clothing.

"The new clothing which was made up in Dublin, is generally speaking very good, but the stockings are really the worst that can be imagined; they seem to be made of badly spun tow, and I readily passed my finger through them. The mistress assured me, and I fully believed her, that they are full of holes after once being worn. They are even worse than those which I felt it my duty to complain of at Ardraccan school. I would suggest, that the clothing, when made up in Dublin, should be submitted to some inspection before it is forwarded to the school. In this instance, an article of dress is sent 150 miles, which really is not worth the cost of the carriage. One of the boys is far too big for any suit of clothing, though the master states his measure was accurately sent up."

Education.

"The boys read and spell well; their writing, I think, very creditable; in arithmetic, but indifferent. Want of books is much complained of here."

Religious Instruction.

"I had little cause to be satisfied with the progress of the boys of this school, in this respect. Four or five of them answered tolerably well in the history of the Bible, and the principles of religion; but I thought the rest very deficient indeed. I expressed this opinion freely and fully to the local committee and catechist. This gentleman seemed much distressed that I should feel such cause of complaint, and assured me he would exert himself to leave no room for similar reproach in future."

Local

Local Committee.

"Here as elsewhere, while much zeal is professed, little exertion is made to promote the welfare of the institution. I met five gentlemen of this body, all highly respectable for private worth; but some of them very frankly admitted, that domestic cares left them little leisure for attending to what they admitted to be an important public duty.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Catechist.

"After what has been said of this school generally, it is easy to anticipate my observations respecting that officer, to whom alone, in my opinion, the Society should look for a faithful administration of their respective schools. It is a very painful duty thus to impute blame in a quarter where every consideration would render commendation a much more grateful task; but I cannot help thinking, that if this gentleman adopted a different system of superintendence, as well as a more enlivening plan of religious instruction, the school under his control would exhibit in the gross, as well as in the detail, a far more gratifying aspect than it presented to me. I am far from insinuating, that the school does not partake of that attentive care which I hear he pays to his other parochial engagements; but whatever be the cause, little good seems as yet to have resulted to the boys from his official superintendence.

Apprentices.

"Within the last three years, it appears that five boys have eloped from their masters, and two were stolen by their parents. There is nothing known of these. The rest are said to be doing very well. I had no opportunity of seeing any of them."

Appendix, N° 65.

INNISHANNON SCHOOL; February 1820.

Education.

"THE boys read in a very disagreeable manner. It is but too manifest that they seldom, if ever, read to any but their master and usher, and to this I must impute the torpid, vulgar manner in which they read and answer a visitor.

Innishannon
School.

Religious Instruction.

"In this most essential point, I consider the boys here very deficient: their instructors appear to have been hitherto satisfied when the boys got their catechism, with its many expositions, by heart, and not to have seen how insufficient such instruction must prove in fortifying their minds against the dangers they will have to encounter when they shall have left the school. There are some boys here who appear capable to me, of something much better than I here complain of, had they the benefit of a better system of instruction; I have taken the liberty of expressing my opinion fully to the very respectable catechist of the school, who, I trust, will in future lend himself more earnestly to the important charge he has undertaken.

Local Committee.

"This body had been summoned to meet, on the first day of my visit, in order to audit the annual report; two of them then attended, and I had the pleasure of conferring with them upon the subject of the school. I am very sorry to observe, that this school is very rarely visited by the gentlemen who have undertaken its local guardianship. The manners of the boys evidently prove them to be strangers to that intercourse with their superiors from which much good might be expected. The report book of the school supplies no evidence of any interest felt in its welfare by the neighbouring gentry.

Catechist.

"From the remarks I have felt it my duty to make under the head of Religious Instruction, it will appear that this gentleman has not, in my opinion, pursued that course of catechetical instruction, which alone I conceive is likely to prove permanently useful to the boys. I have ventured to call his attention to this subject; and, from the high character he possesses in the neighbourhood, I am confident that a decided improvement will soon take place in this particular, to which all other matters must be considered subordinate."

Appendix, N° 66.

KILLOTERAN School; August 1819.

"I AM happy to be able to observe, that Mr. Thackeray's visit appears to me to have operated very considerable improvement in the state of the school, which I found extremely regular, decent and orderly.

Killoteran School.

Clothing.

"The clothing in wear was that of 1817, and is in very bad order, particularly the breeches and stockings, which latter, from constant repair, had been so shortened as not to reach the knees, leaving a great part of the leg bare, and giving the boys an exceedingly shabby appearance. I cannot bring myself to blame the master for this: the stockings sent from Dublin to this and other schools I visited, are of the worst description; the local committees and catechists every where complain of them, and I conceive no care in repairing could make them look decent at this time of the year. The master shewed me

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

a number of pairs of shoes, which were all of one size, and equally useless to the larger and smaller boys.

Local Committee.

"Three gentlemen of this body attended, and expressed themselves most anxious for the welfare, as well as pleased with the condition of the establishment. I have to observe, that one of this committee is also the medical attendant, which is an obvious incongruity. I ventured, as delicately as I could, to point this out to him, and recommended him to resign a situation which occasionally led him to certify his own faithful discharge of the other office he held in the establishment; I failed to convince him of the total incompatibility of the two offices, though his brother commissioners fully agreed with me, as I am certain the board will.

Master and Mistress.

"I have no doubt upon my mind but that Mr. Thackeray's visits have produced a most beneficial change and improvement in these persons, who are very highly recommended for good conduct and attention by the local committee and catechist, who are, I think, entitled to praise for the regularity and good order in which the school is kept."

Appendix, N° 67.

LONGFORD SCHOOL; October 1819.

Education.

Longford School.

"THE boys write in general very well, in the lower branches of arithmetic I found them tolerably smart; but upon setting them a sum of practical arithmetic such as a farmer, to whom one of them might be bound, would be likely to require of him, I found them utterly deficient. I am afraid, indeed, that useful arithmetic is not sufficiently applied to in any of the schools, useful I mean as connected with the common business of life. These boys read in a manner peculiarly disagreeable. I have endeavoured to impress upon their teachers the necessity of making strong efforts to correct what must surely bring discredit upon them, however well the boys may be instructed in other respects.

Local Committee.

"It is painful to observe what little attention is paid to these establishments by the surrounding gentry, who enrol themselves as their local guardians; they all, it is true, express great anxiety, &c. &c. but the report book is the strong evidence that they are not in earnest: to this general observation, Longford school furnishes no exception. These gentlemen, two of them clergymen, did me the favour to attend me at the school. I spoke to them freely as to their past inattention; they were candid enough to admit the justice of my complaint, and entered a solemn pledge on the book to attend more regularly in future.

"After what has been said, it may seem useless, yet I beg to recommend that the Reverend Mr. Sinclair may be added to this body.

Usher.

"This seems a very uninformed, vulgar young man, but has been represented to me as exemplary in his conduct, and diligent in his station.

Apprentices.

"I am sorry to report, that one apprentice bound from this school, Thomas Lowther, has forsaken his religion; he was bound in 1816. The other apprentices are doing very well."

Appendix, N° 68.

MONIVEA SCHOOL; June 1820.

State of the House and Offices.

Monivea School.

"THE roof of the dwelling-house, though it is represented as water-proof, in consequence of a very clumsy repair lately executed, yet is very bad; the slates appear to be quite decayed, and not worth the expense of a general pointing; the ridge course of the two wings are much worn, and in parts quite gone; and the windows of those buildings facing the street, are in the same clumsy state as reported by Mr. Thackeray. The lincay, lately built, exhibits the strongest marks of its very bad construction; it seems likely to be altogether detached from the building to which it was annexed, the roof is sinking inwards, owing to the timber being too fresh, or of insufficient scantling. There is a general damp all through it, and in short, it is all through a shameful job. The pump yields now an abundant supply of good water; I observed as it was worked, that the shaft shook. I pointed out this to the master. I should hope there will be no further demand upon the Society about it, as I understand it has already cost 1,000 l. The sewer which has been made from the kitchen door, has been done so badly, that a sink of water yet remains there, a sufficient fall not having been given to the water. I have directed the master not to pay the person who did the work, until he performs it to the satisfaction of the catechist.

Beds and Bedding.

"The rooms are perfectly clean and well ventilated.

Education

257

Education and Religious Instruction.

"It is right to premise, that the two first classes have been lately transplanted from the school, which naturally causes a serious blank when a visitor examines it. The girls generally read very correctly, but all too fast; the writing is very good, and in arithmetic a few of the girls are tolerably smart. With regard to religious instruction, except very few of the present first class, who answered tolerably well in the history of the Bible, I cannot say I was much pleased with the answering of the children; their progress cannot be said to amount to any thing better than a mere repetition of the church catechism, with Mann's exposition. Indeed, I think it impossible they could have any thing better from the system I found in use here. A monitor asks a question at one end of the room, which is answered with one voice, by eighty-five girls. The monitor cannot, in this plan, distinguish who is right or who wrong; nor is it necessary that the children should exert either memory or understanding, as the blunder or mistake of the individual is drowned in the clamour of the whole. This plan is pursued by all their instructors. I have pointed out the evil of it, and believe I succeeded in convincing the catechist, (who is very willing to receive any suggestion which he thinks useful to the children) that no permanent or useful instruction could possibly result from such a system. He has promised that it shall be discontinued in future.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Local Committee.

"The only persons belonging to this body, whom I had an opportunity of seeing, were Mrs. French and her daughters, who appear to feel a warm interest in the welfare of the establishment. The visits of Mrs. French are frequent, and she appears to exercise a vigilant and salutary control over the school in all its departments.

Catechist.

"I have already stated what in my opinion renders the unwearied exertions of this gentleman in the religious instruction of the children, so unproductive; he visits the school, and catechizes them almost every day, and I doubt not but the change he proposes to make in his plan of examinations, will lead to results more suitable to the laudable exertions he makes to furnish them with a competent knowledge of our holy faith."

Appendix, N° 69.

NEW ROSS CHARTER SCHOOL; August 1819.

Religious Instruction and Morals.

"I THOUGHT a great majority of the boys were very torpid and dull; their progress in religious instruction appearing a mere lifeless, but accurate, repetition of the answers in their catechisms and expositions.

New Ross Charter
School.

House and Offices.

"The room designed for a dining hall is very damp, even now in this very hot weather; and after so long a drought, it showed its damp; and in winter, it is particularly wet. I hear this can only be obviated by running a sewer all round it, as it is at present lower than the circumjacent ground. There are besides no tables, nor furniture of any kind in it; it is at present used as a dairy, and when it is converted to its proper use, there will be no place to keep milk.

Local Committee.

"I was concerned to hear, that an impression rested with this body, that their representations to the board were slighted, and their communications neglected, and that many had in consequence wholly neglected to attend."

Appendix, N° 70.

SANTRY CHARTER SCHOOL; May 1820.

Farm, Garden and Play Ground.

"THIS farm is in a very bad and unimproved state; in its present condition it is of so little use to the master, that he is obliged to take grass, at an enormous rate, for nine cows in the neighbourhood.

Santry Charter
School.

"In my report of another school, I ventured to give my opinion, that the business of farming cannot but detach the masters in a great degree from their proper business.

"If this observation deserves any notice where a provincial school is concerned, how much more is an establishment like this likely to produce the most beneficial results to the kingdom at large, if it be rightly and duly administered. Whatever time has been hitherto expended upon this farm has been lost, for it is not easy to conceive a spot of ground in a more unproductive state than it is. I believe the present master got possession of it in a bad condition, and, like all new tenants, had no manure to restore it. I had the honour of conferring for some time with the Bishop of Kildare upon this subject. His lordship seemed to think this land, properly managed, would produce 14*l.* an acre. I don't think it worth one in its present state.

Appearance of the Boys.

"They are all very healthy and strong boys; two of them are idiots. I trust some more strict regulation may in future take place to exclude these poor blighted creatures from those establishments in future.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Education.

"The teachers and the boys generally read in a very superior manner. I was equally surprized, and delighted to find them perfectly free from that vulgar method so commonly, and in truth so naturally, found in other schools. The good reading here is to be attributed, I understand, to the unremitted exertions of Colonel Gore, who devotes much of his time to the instruction of these young men and boys. I had the pleasure of seeing and congratulating him upon the result of his pious labours. The writing, and progress in arithmetic, among the teachers, is also very creditable.

Religious Instruction.

"The answering of the teachers, 36 in number, cannot fail to satisfy the most sanguine expectations of the committee. In a course of examination, comprizing the history of the Old and New Testament, and the general principles of our holy faith, I find it impossible to express the full measure of my gratification at the correct and intelligent answering of the whole class. It was, indeed, most satisfactory; and I think this institution can scarcely fail to answer the important ends for which it has been set apart, that of supplying the kingdom with "well trained and well instructed teachers, and duly qualified parish clerks."

"The boys of the school, I did not consider instructed as well in proportion as the teachers; their answering was in general a mere verbal repetition of the church catechism, and of the expositions thereof, used in the school.

Morals.

"While the school is said to be free from vice, the master complains, that there is not among the boys that degree of subordination which is so indispensable to the good management of so large an establishment, particularly one containing many grown men. This subject appears to me to deserve the peculiar consideration of the board. In vain can the Society hope that their liberality to this institution will produce adequate advantage to the public, if a want of discipline and control is suffered to exist there. The catechist was not aware of any foundation for this complaint of the master, but he persisted in making it; and I am sure there must have been some ground for such complaint. I adverted to the subject strongly and freely to the catechist, and to Mr. Fox, who alone of the committee attended on the day when I requested the attendance of that body. These two respectable gentlemen admitted the necessity of vigilance on the part of the local guardians in maintaining a strict discipline in the school, and engaged to attend to it in future with particular care."

Appendix, N° 71.

SHANNON GROVE SCHOOL; July 1819.

Shannon Grove
School.

General Appearance of the Boys.

"THEY appeared very healthy in general; there are four scrofulous boys, and one afflicted with ophthalmia, and 12 in a bad state with piles, which, as surgeon Franklin stated to me, had, from previous neglect of the medical officer, become a very serious disorder; but he expects the treatment now pursued, and the kind care of the master and mistress, will readily cure them.

State of Beds and Bedding.

"The bedsteads are all very bad; quite worm-eaten, and badly patched to keep them together; some that had been in use in the nursery are quite too short for a school.

Rules and Regulations.

"The catechist has not caused the order which requires them to be monthly read in the school, to be complied with, but has signified to me his resolution to do so in future.

Local Committee.

"The attendance of these gentlemen is not such as can effect much good to the establishment. Mr. Wybrants often calls in, but does not appear to have reported his observations; two other gentlemen attended on the day I had the committee summoned."

Appendix, N° 72.

STRANGFORD SCHOOL; May 1820.

Strangford School.

Appearance of the Boys.

"THE boys were almost clad in their old clothes, with short stockings (which were barely to be seen over their shoes) and breeches. Such a dress, as must be supposed, gave them a very unfavourable appearance. It would be better that they wore no stockings with their breeches than such socks as these.

Clothing.

"Upon minutely inspecting the clothes which each of the boys bore about him, I had full reason to be satisfied with every article but the stockings, which are of the same description with with those I had to complain of in other schools. The clothing appears to be very carefully attended to, and repaired where repair was necessary.

Rev. Wm. Lee's
Report on
Charter Schools.

Apprentices.

"In the school books, no record exists relative to them for the last 10 years; during the 10 preceding years the number of elopements exceeds the number reported as doing well."

Appendix, N° 73.

LINTOWN FACTORY, 5th and 6th April 1820.

Appearance of the Boys.

"ONE of the boys is just recovering from a very severe illness, and looks very unhealthy. Another boy, or rather grown up youth, exhibits to my view the decided appearance of confirmed consumption; and I think if he persists in his 'sickly trade,' he will not live three months. It does not appear from the medical reports, that the medical officer has at all noticed this case, though it appears to me to be one of peculiar exigency. The rest of the boys are healthy and strong."

Lintown Factory.

Clothing.

"The new clothes, that is the clothing of last year, is nearly worn out. The master appears to have done all in his power to keep the boys well clad. He allows a certain proportion of what they earn, to the weavers, which they have laid out in different articles of dress. The business of weaving is said to tend more than any other to wear out the clothes rapidly; and he states the want of a second suit, to be the cause of the very bad condition of this. It is nearly quite ragged and worn, except the shoes and shirts. The buttons are all torn off, and the sleeves mostly bare, and elbows out."

Education and Religious Instruction.

"It would not be fair to weigh these boys in the same balance with those in other establishments under the Society, so little time being allotted for instruction: two hours only every morning."

"I found, accordingly, a very striking inferiority here in every respect, in reading, writing and acquaintance with the history of the Bible, and the general principles of religion."

"Upon referring to Mr. Thackeray's Report of this institution in 1817, I find his account of their education at that period most flattering indeed. He therein states, that 'this house may, in this point, be placed amongst the foremost of the Society's institutions.' It is very painful to me, to observe, how much it has since degenerated; for really it bears, at present, no mark of this pre-eminence in religious knowledge or education generally; two young men excepted, they appear to me singularly and lamentably deficient. The master assured me, those boys who were absent, were much better instructed, and could have answered to my entire satisfaction."

Morals of the Boys.

"The master complains and laments, that there is not that conscientious regard to truth which he seems to think his vigilant care of the boys entitles him to expect; but he will persevere in his endeavours to inculcate this virtue upon them; this excepted, their general conduct is good."

Local Committee.

"The state of the house is so bad, that I understood from the master, that the gentlemen composing this body, are unwilling to incur that risque of cold which an attendance here brings with it; I did not, therefore, take the liberty of requesting their attendance. Their visits appear to have been chiefly confined to the quarterly meetings."

Catechist.

"Of this most respectable gentleman, I shall only report, that his attention to the duties of this office is most exemplary; and that this establishment enjoys the benefit of that zeal and activity with which all his professional functions are performed."

Appendix, N° 74.

Examination of the Reverend William Lee, Thursday, 11th November 1824, who was called in; and Examined on Oath, as follows:

Examination of
The
Rev. William Lee,
11 Nov. 1824.

WERE you at any time employed by the Incorporated Society, to inspect the different charter schools in Ireland?—Yes, in the year 1819.

[T]

Did

Examination of
The
Rev. William Lee,
11 Nov. 1824.

Did you in consequence inspect all the schools?—I inspected all the schools then in existence.

Without exception?—Without exception.

In speaking of them generally, did you find them to be in what may be called a satisfactory state?—I looked upon them as in a state of very progressive improvement, which improvement I attribute to the judicious inspection of Mr. Thackeray; but I cannot say I saw them in a state as fully beneficial as I think they might be, considering all the circumstances of expenditure and superintendence that had been provided for them, speaking generally.

Were some of them in very much better condition than others?—Decidedly; there was a most marked contrast between them.

Are not the same rules and the same scale of expenditure applied to each?—I believe precisely; the rules for the general management of the establishment, are circulated in a printed form.

If the rules for the conduct and management of each school are precisely the same, to what do you attribute the circumstance of their comparative condition being very different?—To the conformity or non-conformity of the conductors with those rules; I should think in the degree that those rules are observed that the schools are well conducted, and vice versa.

Have the committee of fifteen any efficient means of ascertaining that their rules are properly carried into effect, seeing that the schools do not exceed thirty in number?—The committee of fifteen must unavoidably rely upon local information; the visitor catechist is their official organ, and according to his attention or inattention I conceive schools are either well or ill conducted.

Is there not in each case a local committee, the duty of which is to superintend the catechist and the schoolmaster?—There is such a local committee, and such I consider to be their duty; I doubt whether it is exactly to superintend the catechist, he being ex officio a member of that committee.

If in any case the catechist should neglect his duty, do you think that the local committee constitute a body that is sufficient to check the conduct of the schoolmaster?—I do not; I consider that there is unavoidably so much of local partiality, and, in many cases, of local connection, that if a catechist should be disposed to neglect his duty, I am afraid in very rare instances would it be noticed by the local committee.

What check is there upon the catechist, or what means of ascertaining that he faithfully discharges his duty?—The catechist is bound to report, at each visit, the result of his observations in the school; as to those reports the course of proceeding is to have them copied and regularly transmitted to the Society, and thereby they have an opportunity of judging how far the catechist has been attentive or otherwise.

The Commissioners, upon examination, have found that the rule that directs the catechist to forward a monthly report to the Society, containing an account of the state of the school, and the progress the children make in education, is not—scarcely in any instance—conformed to, and that the catechist furnishes only a quarterly or half yearly report; that being so, they would ask you, whether the reports made by the catechist, can really inform the committee of fifteen, what is or is not the state of the school?—I do not think, except retrospectively, that they can, that is if the committee in town looks back to the reports he has at each particular visit entered in the report book, they can then see the state of the school during that past time. But I conceive, independently of those regular reports which he is bound to make, that he makes occasionally, whenever any circumstance arises to render it necessary, special reports; such was my own habit when I was catechist of the school at Newport.

We find by referring to the charter of the Incorporated Society, that the object of establishing those schools was, that of providing some effectual method to instruct great numbers of the Popish natives of Ireland, who are said to be in gross ignorance, and to be much disaffected to the government, and to educate them in the principles of true religion and loyalty; and that hopes were entertained that those schools would produce very considerable effect in converting and civilizing the said deluded persons, and bringing them, through the blessing of God, in time to be good Christians and faithful subjects; we would ask you whether, in your opinion, the schools under this Society, as they have been hitherto managed, have, in any considerable degree, produced those anticipated effects?—I do not think they have.

Do you think, that under the present system of management, they are likely ever to do so?—I do not, nor (I would venture to add) that they would, under any system of management, for I should be sorry that my answer should imply mismanagement.

Do you mean that you consider that the system itself cannot produce those effects?—I do.

And because those effects are not produced, you do not impute it to any particular mismanagement of the system?—No, certainly.

Do you think that any considerable improvement is produced upon society in Ireland, by mixing with it, from time to time, the girls and boys who are educated within the walls of those charter schools?—I do not.

Are they so instructed generally as to be likely to become useful members of society, and to communicate to others the knowledge of industrious habits?—Judging from my own experience experience and observation I should think they are not; I should rather look upon the system as not suited to the habits or feelings of the country.

255

Do you find generally, that the boys and girls when they are sent out from the charter schools, are deficient in such knowledge as would facilitate their providing for their own livelihood?—I consider the situation of the females leaving the school as a very forlorn one; I look upon it in general, that they are not provided with that sort of knowledge which would render them useful to society, or capable of supporting themselves.

Have you had much opportunity of observing what became of them?—In general I have found, when I was an official visitor throughout the kingdom, that the report upon this subject was very favourable, (I could only judge from the report of others); but in my own parish, where I have been for years a visitor of a charter school, my experience leads me to report very unfavourably of the subsequent conduct and fate of those girls who had been educated there; at this moment, in the parish, there are several instances of the unfortunate career of those poor girls, whom I had taken considerable pains with in the school, and was much disappointed and grieved to find so little benefit resulting from those exertions.

Do you attribute it to the friendless state and hopeless condition in which they are, when they leave the school?—Yes; I am quite sure it must be owing entirely to the destitute state in which they leave the school, whence they are moved into the families of farmers, where they have no good example before them, where the discipline of the school is removed, and so many circumstances concur to occasion a dereliction of those principles they had acquired in the school; in very few instances are they bound into families where we could wish; but we were obliged to place them where we could, not being able to get better places.

Why cannot better situations be obtained for them?—It appears to me, that there is a disinclination in the masters of better families to chuse out of charter schools.

To what do you attribute that disinclination, seeing that the girls ought to have the best instruction, and the best habits?—I am afraid it has arisen in most cases, from previous information that children taken out of them have not turned out well; speaking generally, one would imagine, one would get a better description of servant out of a school where so much pains had been bestowed upon them, than any where else; I can only account for that disinclination which prevailed in my own neighbourhood, from the fact, that other girls taken out of the school have not given satisfaction.

Are the girls found to be helpless?—For the most part they are destitute of friends; and if they should happen to give either no satisfaction to their master, or if the master happens to be (which is in too many instances the case), not kind or conscientious in his treatment, they may leave their place, and are driven forlorn upon the world.

Is the expression "A Charter School Girl," a term of reproach?—It is decidedly so; the very fact of her bearing the name of a charter school girl, I have known to exclude her from useful places.

Have many instances come to your knowledge, of their changing their religion and becoming Roman Catholics?—Yes, a great many.

Do you think they are well instructed in the charter schools; are they taught reading, writing and arithmetic effectually?—I think they are.

Do you think that the confinement of the charter schools and their mode of education there, produces a dullness and inactivity in the girls?—Dullness and inactivity I am quite sure prevail there; but I should not attribute it altogether to the causes mentioned. The view I have been in the habit of taking of it, was the absence of social affections, and removal from the parents eye and control; in short the total absence of social affections; to that cause I would attribute it, and not to the confinement of the school, which I do not think prevails to that degree which would produce such an effect.

What effect do you think it produced in the boys?—In this respect I think precisely the same; they seemed to me equally stunted in mind and body, owing, as I conceive, to the same causes.

Are the boys more easily provided for?—They are.

Is there any indisposition on the part of persons throughout the country, to take them as servants and apprentices, or are places easily found for them?—I think there is a greater facility of providing for boys than girls. The former are more required for agricultural purposes, and in consequence of their exemption from the tax on male servants, they were more sought after by gentlemen as servants.

Do the boys in general turn out better than the girls?—The misconduct of the boys would be less palpable than that of the girls, and fewer instances on that account perhaps would come to the knowledge of those intrusted with such an establishment.

Is the term "Charter School Boy" one generally used as a term of reproach in Protestant families, as well as Roman Catholic?—I have known it to be the case in both instances.

Is it confined to any part of the country, or is it general?—I think it is general, but I can only speak with certainty to my own district; as to other parts of the country, those with whom I conversed have led me to think it was the general feeling throughout the country.

How many instances have come to your knowledge, of boys educated in the charter schools, relapsing again to the Roman Catholic religion?—Just now I cannot recollect any instances,

Examination of
The
Rev. William Lee,
11 Nov. 1824.

instances, but I am afraid there have been some; one reason why I can speak with more certainty as to relapse on the part of the girls is, that they generally are found to marry Roman Catholics.

And become Roman Catholics themselves?—I think so.

Do you think that pains are taken in the charter schools, to prevent the children keeping up connection with their parents and relations?—I do not think there are.

To what do you attribute the circumstance of their relations and friends in the greater number of instances abandoning them?—I do not consider, in the first instance, the fact to be so; they come to see them as often as the rules of the Society permit; they are never prohibited within those appointed times, and I believe continually inquire after them by letters to the Society; in many cases the children are orphans.

Do you think that the boys are well instructed in the schools, in writing, reading and arithmetic, and a portion of religious knowledge?—I do; I confine my observation to reading and writing; I think there is a great deal of pains taken with them; I have already mentioned, that some schools are better conducted than others.

For the length of time that the boys generally remain in the charter schools, do you think the instruction they receive is at all equal to what it ought to be?—I do not.

Do you think, that a boy educated in a charter school until he was seventeen or eighteen years old, which is the age at which they usually quit them, would be as well able to get his livelihood as a boy who remained with his parents in an Irish cottage, and had been instructed at a good day school, such as are now frequent about the country?—I think he would do better at a day school, and be more likely to get his livelihood, and go through the world well.

What class of persons generally apply for admission for their children to the charter school?—I consider the children whose admission is generally sought for, to be the children of extremely poor parents, with a numerous family, which they are unable to maintain, or destitute orphans; and that nothing but extreme poverty is an inducement to send them there.

Must there not from necessity be multitudes of children reared in Ireland, the parents of whom are equally poor with those children, and who are not able to get them into a charter school?—Certainly, I believe there are; but the difficulty of getting them into the charter school, is the reason why I believe they are not sent there; there is scarcely a week in my life that an application is not made to me to get them into schools.

At this present moment?—Yes.

And that by persons in a state of extreme poverty?—Yes, chiefly; but there are other sources of application; illegitimate children, for instance, are often sought to be provided for in that way.

Is there not a prevailing opinion throughout the country, that the greater number of the children in charter schools are illegitimate?—Yes, I think there is; I have often heard the phrase "Charter School Brat" and "Brat" is a synonymous term in Ireland with an illegitimate child.

Have you ever heard of applications being made to procure the admission of illegitimate children into the charter schools, by persons themselves whose situations enabled them to maintain them?—Yes, one has lately been made to me to that effect.

Have you known any instances where such applications were successful?—I do not immediately recollect any; but I am quite sure there have been several such applications made and acceded to.

Did you find, that the masters and the mistresses conformed to the rules respecting the clothing, diet, and the general treatment and management of the children?—The observation I made in the commencement of my examination, must apply to that question; in some schools they did certainly, and the schools went on much better than others; it must of course have varied according to the character of the master and mistress, and the attention paid to those rules; in some I had reason to be perfectly satisfied, and in others I found cause to animadvert.

Was the diet generally provided according to the prescribed rules of the Society?—I think deviations from those rules may have taken place, without any injury to the children; for instance, there is one of the rules of the dietary, that potatoes shall not be used after some time in July, I think; for my own part, I should not wish charter school children to be better fed than they would be likely to be after they left the schools, and the farmers use that food till the month of September; in the school to which I was catechist, I was not displeased when such a deviation as that took place.

If the catechist permits the master to deviate from the rule in one respect, how can he prevent him exercising his own discretion in others?—It will require vigilant attention on the part of the catechist; I admit a rigid adherence to rules is the fittest course.

Could there be any other safe course than that of applying to the Incorporated Society to alter the dietary?—I think the dietary is a very wholesome one; I should hardly wish it to be altered; it might be relaxed, in some degree, in particular instances.

With respect to the bread, did you find in general that the rule was conformed to, or did you find a practice among the masters, of separating the flour, and taking the fine part for themselves, and giving the boys the coarse?—I do not think I ever knew an instance of that;

that; but with regard to the dietary generally, I was obliged to derive my information from the local authorities, for instance, the catechist; but I speak with certainty as to my own school, which I had under my care for twelve years as catechist.

Did you ever calculate, whether the allowance made by the Society to the masters, for feeding the boys, was tolerably accurate; or have you reason to think the master made a considerable profit out of it?—I should think the masters could not feed the children on the allowance of the contract, but for the advantages they derive from the land; it appeared to me a very low contract; I think three-pence halfpenny a day was the allowance for three meals; and with my ideas of œconomy, I often wondered how they could afford it.

If the catechist is not in the habit of attending so frequently as to see with his own eyes the food given to the boys, has not the master the means of depriving them of a part of their proper allowance, without the possibility of detection?—Certainly; the only means of detection, in the case supposed, would be the reduced appearance of the children.

Did you find that the clothing, speaking generally, was delivered to the children in the quantity required by the Society?—I think it was; I had the advantage of seeing the schools in a high state of improvement, in consequence of Mr. Thackeray's visit. I am quite sure he had much more cause to complain than I had, and that he obviated a great many abuses.

Do you think the clothing is quite sufficient for the children?—I do; but I was not satisfied with the quality of it.

Is it always provided in Dublin and sent down to the schools, or is it provided by the master under contract?—It was almost always provided by the masters in my own school, and I thought it better than any sent from Dublin; some sent from Dublin was the worst that could be, as I have stated, not merely in my general but the detailed Reports.

Were the dormitories kept in proper order?—I found them uniformly, I think, in the best order.

And the children properly supplied with clean sheets and linen?—I had no cause of complaint upon that point; the impression upon my mind is strong, they were very well taken care of with regard to the dormitories.

What observations did you make as to the cleanliness of the children?—Generally speaking, I found them very clean; in some few cases I found appearances of cutaneous eruptions.

With regard to their health generally, did you find them tolerably healthy?—The Reports from the local committees mentioned to me, that they were generally healthy, and my own observation confirmed their report.

Have you reason to think that the masters or ushers were in the habit generally of treating the boys with harshness or severity?—I am not aware of any such instances.

Do you think that it is possible, upon any casual visitation, such as you were able to make, to ascertain the real state and condition of the boys in the schools?—I must have taken my information from the catechist, for a cursory visit could scarcely let one into the general treatment of the school.

Were you in the habit of applying to the children for information as to the mode in which they were treated?—In some instances.

What answers did you obtain?—That they were used well by their masters. At the school at Clontarf the charges were brought against the master, by two of the children, who wrote me a letter to Newport through the post-office.

Had you any reason whatever to imagine, that the boys lived in a constant state of fear and apprehension of punishment from the master?—I believe that is a feeling which pervades all schools more or less; I am not aware of it being stronger in charter schools.

Do you think, if the boys had any thing to complain of they would have complained to you?—I am rather inclined to think they would have complained to me, for the boys and girls looked upon a visitor, such as I was, as sent for their good, and as a person to whom they might with confidence look for redress: the feeling was very strong in my mind.

If any difficulty arises in the management of the school, or any case that must be provided for by the committee of fifteen, does there exist a facility in drawing their attention to it, and making the required change, whatever it may be?—The local committee and catechist are in continual communication with the board in Dublin.

Are their recommendations always promptly attended to?—Local committees have complained to me, that their communications were not so much attended to as they should have been.

Are not the children in all the schools made to work in some manner or other?—Yes, either in agricultural or some other labour.

Has the master the profit and advantage of their labour?—Yes; he has in the cultivation of the land for instance, in harvest, or any thing of that kind.

Have you ever known any abuse to arise out of it?—I never heard of any. I should rather be disposed to encourage it, for my own part.

Have you ever heard of any schoolmaster occupying land that did not belong to the Society, and employing the boys in the cultivation of it?—I have heard of masters occupying land besides that belonging to the school land, and I presumed they employed the boys upon it as well as the other: in the school where I was catechist the master held such land, but it was too remote from the school to allow of the employment of the girls upon it.

Examination of
The
Rev. William Lee,
11 Nov. 1824.

Are there not some schools in which the boys are employed in weaving?—There is, I believe, but one; my memory at present does not serve me with more than one; I think it is in the neighbourhood of Kilkenny, the Lintown factory.

Can you recollect whether the boys are or not so employed at Sligo?—I cannot say without reference to my notes. I had a very favourable opinion of Sligo school; I spent two days there, and thought it the second best establishment of the kind in Ireland.

Which is the best?—I looked upon Celbridge as the best.

Do not the rules of the Society require that the boys should work for certain hours, and that they should be in school at their lessons for certain hours?—Yes.

Did you ever observe that the masters, in any instances, made them work at hours when they ought to have been at school, either upon the farm or any other labour that they employed them upon?—I believe there may have been instances when they did work, when, perhaps, the rigid rules of the Society required them to be at school; for instance, a favourable day for making hay, the master may have kept them out.

Did you discover any thing like a prevailing abuse in that respect?—I did not; I thought the rule was very generally adhered to.

Have you any reason to believe the masters made much profit from the labour of the children?—I do not consider they did; there was a general complaint among them, that they did not make what they were charged.

Do you think that complaint well founded?—I have no means of judging.

Did you ever examine the matter, so as to ascertain the quantity of work done, and the value of it?—In female schools, the work done was a mere nothing; I knew that to have been the case in my school.

Was the office of inspector a temporary or permanent one?—Mine was temporary.

How long were you allowed to make this inspection?—I was authorized by three different boards. Each board contributed in the following proportions:—The Incorporated Society, 200*l.*; the board of Erasmus Smith's schools, 150*l.*; and the Association, 100*l.* to report upon the state of each school under their respective control; therefore there was no particular time for the purpose, but it occupied from the month of June 1819 to the close of May 1820.

Were there in existence at that time any day schools belonging to the Incorporated Society?—There was one just then established at Trim, but I did not visit it; there were no rules laid down for its management, and I did not think myself called upon to visit it.

Can you call to mind, whether you were informed at Ross, of an act of violence upon a boy, who had two of his ribs broken?—No; I never heard of it, as well as I can now recollect.

Was the school at Clonmel a day school?—That was suppressed.

Were you there?—I was; I did not know it was suppressed. It was returned to me as a school to be visited, and suppressed, I believe, before I visited it.

Did you inspect the buildings?—Finding it had been suppressed, I made no delay there.

Have you ever seen any day school maintained at the charges of the Incorporated Society?—No, except the one in Newport, my own parish.

When was the change from a charter school to a day school?—It was suppressed in the beginning of the year 1819, just previously to my appointment as inspector.

Where did the master of that school come from?—From Strangford.

Do you know the reason why he was removed to Newport?—I did hear it was because Mr. Thackeray did not find him altogether efficient for so large an establishment as that of Strangford.

Do you know the reason of the change from a charter school to a day school?—I was given to understand it was suppressed on account of the bad state of the buildings; the walls were not considered sufficiently strong to bear improvement, and, altogether, not worthy of the large expenditure it would require.

Has any thing been done to it since?—No, except some slight repair to the roof.

The school at first promised to answer as a day school?—Yes; this I must only speak of from report, because it was opened as a day school during my absence from the parish, on my tour as visitor.

You understood at first it did very well?—Yes; I have been told it was largely attended.

What is the attendance now?—Very small indeed.

Have you at any time complained to the committee of fifteen, of the inefficient state of the school, and the incompetence of the master?—In the year 1820 I wrote two letters to them upon the subject of its inefficiency.

Have any steps been taken in consequence of your representation?—No.

Has the school improved since?—No, it still remains in the same state.

Have you been requested to draw up such regulations as you think best calculated to the end proposed?—No communication has been made to me on the subject.

Did you repeat your suggestions in either of the subsequent years, 1823 or 1824?—I am not quite sure; I rather think I did not in the two last years.

Do you consider yourself as the catechist of that school?—No, surely not; but as being in my parish I visit it.

Is there any catechist at any day school?—I do not know any thing of any day school, except that at Newport.

With respect to the union of the farm with the master of the school, do you find that interfering interfering with the duties of master, so as to make him less efficient?—I consider it an injudicious practice.

Did you find masters interfering much in the school, or did they leave it to the ushers?—That information I must have derived from others; I cannot speak from personal observation, but at my own school I had occasion to check the master, for leaving it too much to the usheress; but being a female school, it rather came under the province of the mistress and usheress.

From the situation in which you live, are you acquainted with the state of the Shannon Grove school?—I was never there, except when I visited it officially; it is six or seven and twenty miles from my residence.

Did you consider it a good school?—I did.

* * * * *

Do you remember any particular circumstances about the pump at Monivea?—I do not; I beg to refer to my particular report of that school; it is now more than four years since I visited it.

[The report was handed to the witness.]

Having looked at that report, can you at all call to mind the circumstances that could occasion such an expense?—No.

You have mentioned Celbridge school as being the best charter school, and Sligo as the second; have the goodness to mention which you consider the worst?—There were two or three, I thought, very bad; I thought Ballycastle was badly conducted; Innishannon, in the county of Cork, was badly conducted; Dunmanway, I thought a very bad one; from my present recollection, I would say, that was the worst of them, and Charleville I thought a bad school.

By the phrase, "bad school," do you mean to impute a degree of misconduct or inattention to the managers of it?—The master and mistress not being sufficiently attentive to their duties.

Speaking of the schools, now with respect to the edifices, which would you say was the worst, and which the best?—I thought Strangford a remarkably well arranged school; Cashel was a good one; Charleville was a very bad one compared with the enormous expense; Longford is a very old and ruinous house. I think Dundalk and Shannon Grove very fine buildings; Monivea was a bad building; there had been a bad expenditure upon it, as well as I can recollect; but as to the state of the buildings, I must speak with diffidence, it is so long since I saw them.

Did you ever make any general report upon the charter schools, as contradistinguished from the particular report of each school?—I did.

What became of that; did you give it in to the committee of fifteen?—It was my intention to transmit it, in the first instance, to the committee of fifteen, but I thought it a matter of respect and duty to my diocesan, the Archbishop of Cashel, who was the Vice President of that body, to place it in his hands; I accordingly went to Cashel. His Grace read it in my presence, and I took the liberty of placing it in his hands, referring to his discretion whether he should present it to the board; I am not sure whether he did shew it or not, but I did not see it again until after his death. I then wrote to Mr. George Broderick, to request that he would search among his father's papers, and if he found such a document, that he would return it to me.

What was your inducement to procure it again?—To have it in my possession; not to make any use of it.

You were apprised it was not in the possession of the committee of fifteen?—I thought it was not, or I should have heard of it.

Did you ever hear of any satisfaction or dissatisfaction being expressed by the committee of fifteen, or any persons connected with the charter schools, at the tone and tenor of your particular reports?—I never did, from the board, directly or indirectly; and the only answer I can give is in reference to a private letter I had from an individual about three months ago.

Did the Archbishop of Cashel make any observations to you, with respect to the propriety or impropriety of giving in that general report to the committee of fifteen?—His Grace seemed to think I would consult my own interest best, by not publishing it; that I might perhaps raise enemies to myself by doing so.

Did he express any opinion as to how it might operate upon the interests of the Incorporated Society, or the management of the schools?—He made no observation further than as it bore upon my own interests; I entrusted it to his Grace's discretion whether to lay it before the committee, and, except from conjecture, I have no reason to think he had not done it.

When you visited those schools, did you generally take them by surprise, or had you reason to suppose that your visit was anticipated and expected?—I very carefully provided, as far as I could, that my visit should not be expected; but I believe a practice has obtained among the schoolmasters, of communicating one to the other the probable period of the inspector's visit; I have reason to think such communications existed.

Did it ever occur in any single case, that an instance of personal violence to any of the children, or cruelty on the part of the master, or undue punishment, was brought to your notice?—I have a very indistinct recollection, but I could not affirm it, that such a thing occurred at Sligo.

Can you recollect whether you noticed it in the report?—I cannot.

Examination of
The
Rev. William Lee,
11 Nov. 1824.

Can you now call to mind any partiular mode of punishment adopted by Mr. Hines?—No, I cannot.

Have you any notes of your own upon the subject?—I do not think I have.

Was it a fair copy, or was it the original memoranda you delivered in to the committee of fifteen?—My practice was to copy out every evening, in the form you now see, the proceedings of the day, in order that I might have the benefit of recollection to aid my notes, for I had other schools to visit, for instance the schools of Erasmus Smith and the Association. My practice was, not to let the impressions of one day mingle with those of another, I therefore each day made my report of the school I had visited on that day, rather from memory than notes.

Will you state to what circumstance you attribute the general ill-favoured appearance you have described of the charter-school children?—I have stated the cause to which I would mainly attribute it, the want of social connections drying up the affections of the heart.

Do you conceive, that those circumstances will account sufficiently for the peculiarity of their physical appearance?—I do.

Have you ever had opportunities of examining the Foundling Hospital?—I have been there.

Did you observe whether those appearances also were common to those children?—They are much younger there than in the charter schools, and those appearances would not be so strong; you would not expect in a child of six years of age the same degree of feeling and intelligence as in one much older.

Have you had an opportunity of examining parish schools, where children are boarded and lodged?—I have not.

Is it your impression upon the whole (speaking now upon the average) that the masters of charter schools live more or less comfortably than clergymen whose income may be 200*l.* a year?—I think they do live more comfortably: I, from personal experience, am quite sure they can live more comfortably than clergymen with 100*l.* a year.

Have you the means of knowing whether they often give entertainments, whether they see company to dinner?—I have known no instances in which they have given entertainments; they of course see their friends occasionally, but as to entertaining the neighbourhood, I never knew an instance of that.

Do you mean to say, that you think universally that the clergyman of the parish, the catechist of the school, and the local committee would not associate with him?—I never knew a case of it.

Appendix, N^o 75.

REPORT of William Grant and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires, upon the CHARTER SCHOOL at SLIGO.

William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.
Report on Charter School.
at Sligo.

Monday September 13, 1824.—WE visited the charter school at Sligo, about four o'clock in the afternoon. We were accompanied by Mr. Hume, one of the local visitors. We heard the boys read; and examined some of them in Mann's Exposition of the Church Catechism, and were perfectly satisfied both with their manner of reading and answering; also with some specimens of writing which were shewn to us. We then desired the master and usher to withdraw, which they did, as did also Mr. Hume. When left alone with the boys, we inquired whether they had any complaints to make. One of the boys immediately came forward, and complained of having had bad food, and of general violence in the master. Several other boys followed his example, and the whole school appeared to join in charging the master with extreme severity. Several particular cases of cruelty were mentioned. It was further stated, that the master had had a diseased cow, which he had killed on Friday last, and that part of it had been served up for the boys' dinner on Sunday; that it was so bad that they could not eat it. It was also stated, that although according to the rules of the Incorporated Society, the boys should have two sheets on each bed, yet that they had only one. After hearing what the boys had to say, we called in the master, and stated the substance of their complaints to him. We desired him to shew us the dormitories, and on going to them, we found that there was but one sheet on each bed. The master stated, that he had not sheets enough to allow of two being kept on each bed; and that this had been made known to the superintending committee in Dublin.

We inquired into the charge made with respect to the cow. The master denied that the cow was diseased, except that it had a sore udder, which did not affect its general health. We desired to see the meat itself, but it was all in pickle, and we could form no positive judgment of it. One of the boys, Terence Gallagher, complained, that the master's son (Richard Hines) having been displeased with him for not having stuffed the hoof of a horse properly, struck him with the butt end of a gun. Richard Hines denied having done so. Gallagher stated, that an apprentice (Andrew Armstrong) was present. We called him in immediately and examined him as to the fact upon oath; he confirmed Gallagher.

We notified to the master that we should proceed to a strict investigation of the charges against him, to-morrow; and we afterwards requested Mr. Hume to make known our intention to the local visitors, and to desire the presence of as many as could conveniently attend.

Tuesday September 14th.—We attended at the school at twelve o'clock, and proceeded to inquire into the charges made yesterday against the master. An examination was taken in the presence of William Hume, John Black, G. Gilmore, esquires, and of the Rev. James Elliott,

Elliott, members of the local committee, and was reduced into writing in their presence and signed by them. With two exceptions, the boys expressed themselves much dissatisfied, and spoke of the master's conduct as full of violence. They all mentioned his habit of seizing boys by the throat, when displeased with them. One of the two boys who expressed themselves satisfied with the master's conduct, at first denied that such was his habit; but on being afterwards sworn, he admitted that he had frequently seen him do so. The examination was read over to the master, who denied one or two points which we noted on the examination. At his request, we called the boys together, and enjoined them to observe order and discipline. We at the same time enjoined the master to forbear from any act of punishment towards the boys, which might appear as the consequence of the complaints they had made; and we stated our intention of communicating the evidence taken before us, to the proper authorities.

Wednesday 15th September.—We visited the school this morning, and found that the boys had been orderly. Mr. Hume was present. The master admitted in substance the general charge of violence; but he stated that his wife and himself had always treated any of the boys who were unwell, with the greatest kindness, and all we heard from the gentlemen of the local committee, was in perfect confirmation of this. The general impression made upon us by the statement of the boys themselves, is also to the same effect. We recommended that no more of the cow meat should be given to the boys, as we considered it unfit food for them; the master promised to act accordingly.

(signed) W^m Grant,
A. R. Blake.

This report, together with the following examinations, was transmitted to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant and to the Incorporated Society.

261
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.
Report on
Charter Schools.
at Sligo.

Appendix, N^o 76.

Examinations taken at the Charter School at Sligo, September 14th, 1824, by William Grant and Anthony Richard Blake, Esquires.

GEORGE GORDON.—I am usher to the school; I have been here better than a year. I was educated at Santry; I see the children at their meals; on Sunday morning they had stirabout and buttermilk; I had bread and butter and tea; I did not use the milk the boys had; I did not taste it. They had potatoes, beef and cabbage, for dinner on Sunday; I do not know whether it was fresh beef or corned, it was boiled; I should think there was half a pound for each child on an average; it is not usual to weigh the meat before dressing; they had bread and milk for supper on Sunday night, I believe; most frequently they have milk and potatoes; the boys had potatoes and milk yesterday, and bread and milk for supper.

I did not hear the boys make any complaint on Sunday, but I could see by my observation that they were not as well satisfied as usual with their dinner; I did not hear any thing said about the cow which was killed on Friday last; I made no observation myself.

The usual breakfast is stirabout and milk; in general buttermilk; it may be mixed.

The boys should rise at six, but they are in the habit of getting up early to go to the sea to bathe; they are sometimes assembled for prayers at half-past five. Sometimes they go to the sea before that time; sometimes after, as the tide serves. Instruction commences sometimes at half-past five, and continues until a quarter past eight; then breakfast; then play half an hour. Some of the boys go to labour at six o'clock, if the master has a web that he wants finishing; they are called from labour at half-past twelve, and dine at one; labour from half-past two to half-past five; then instruction till eight; then supper, prayers and bed at half-past eight or nine.

I see the boys write the specimens which are to be shewn to the committee: I have known them written once on a Sunday, when the boys were kept at home; this was in July last (18th). When specimens were last written, I think 42 went to church; these were the smaller boys; the others staid at home. The only reason I know for the boys writing on the Sunday rather than on any other day, is, that Mr. Hines said he was behind the time usually required for sending up the specimens, and wished to have them done; the specimens are not yet sent up to the committee.

I do not recollect James Kinsey getting a flogging; I heard that Mr. Hines used him badly in the weaving shop; I never witnessed any boy beaten in the way I have heard Kinsey was; Mr. Hines has sometimes struck boys in a passion, but not to say violently.

I saw Pat. Grady with two black eyes; I understood it was from Mr. Hines beating him; I inquired no further.

The cow that was killed on Friday had a bad udder; I frequently saw the boy rubbing it; I saw it killed; Terence Gallagher I think attended it. In general, the meat is of a good description; I have not tasted any of the beef, to my knowledge; it was fair looking meat.

Some of the boys did not eat the meat that was given them, but put it back into a dish; the reason I concluded that they did not like the meat is, that they seldom leave any meat if they like it; they seemed to turn up their noses.

The general practice is to give buttermilk for breakfast; I have tasted it.

The general conduct of Mr. Hines is very kind to the boys; he is rather passionate and hasty, but in illness no person is kinder.

I did not know that any complaint was to be made yesterday; but if I had considered, I should have thought there might be complaints.

[U]

The

Examinations
before
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.
Sligo School.

Examinations
before
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.

Sligo School.

The buttermilk is always good; they churn every day.

[Mr. Gillmore and Mr. Black, both members of the local committee, stated, that in June 1823, the boys were asked, apart from the master, whether they had any ground of complaint, and stated that they had none whatever; Mr. Gilmore stated the same circumstance to have taken place in June 1824.]

Ellen Black.—I have been three month's cook to Mr. Hines; always dress the dinner for the boys; some of the boys left part of their dinner on Sunday; that is not usual; the boys told me they could not eat it, as it was part of a cow that was sick. Miss Hines saw what was left, and I told her it was what the boys had left; that they would not eat it. No part of the cow has been dressed for Mr. Hines's table, but Mrs. Hines told me that Mr. Hines had tasted it, and I saw Mrs. Hines taste it on Sunday. The whole cow was salted, sirloin and all; I never saw the sirloin salted before. The master had beef for dinner on Saturday and Monday, but not of this cow. If I had been sent as cook to market, I should not have bought such meat; I should not like to eat the beef; I should think that this beef was not worth more than three halfpence per pound, when prime beef was five-pence; the heart was diseased. The beef Mr. Hines had for his own dinner on Saturday and Monday was bought after this cow was killed.

On Thursday last the beef was tainted, and the boys objected to eat it; I have twice dressed beef out of the same barrel for Mr. Hines; I think the boys had some of the same beef on the Sunday before; I heard the boys complain before Thursday; Mr. and Mrs. Hines ate some of the same after the boys had complained; they had the round; I have not tasted the cow beef; I did not tell Mr. and Mrs. Hines that the boys complained; I smelt the taint.

George Gordon further examined.—[Produced a return of children attending church the 18th of July last, when it appeared that the number in the list had been altered from 72 to 42]—I altered the list from 72 to 42 this morning before my examination; I found the subject had been mentioned, and that I had entered the wrong number, and altered it.

Joseph Hines, master of the school.—I do not keep any account of the children who go to church; I leave it to the usher. I do know that he made a wrong entry; I did not know of his making any alteration. I send up with the half-yearly accounts only the number of those attending church, but not the names.

James Gallagher, 18 years of age.—I have been nine years in this house; there was an intention of complaining when Mr. Handcock called, but he did not stay long enough to hear the boys; we get good diet in general, only the last three meat days we have had bad meat; but in general we have good and enough.

I saw Mr. Hines beat Lawrence French; he caught him by the throat, and knocked his head against the pavement till he was blue in the face, and he could not eat for three days.

There was a boy of the name of Connolly, who was much beat; he is now at Santry; he ran away three times.

Thomas Ludden was beaten for making a complaint three years ago; I wrote my specimen on a Sunday in July; Mr. Sweeny, a Roman Catholic, attended to teach us.

Mr. Hines has often beaten me very violently; he has struck me with a stick so that I was not able to move for a month.

I did not complain when Mr. Lee was here.

James Kinsey, about 15 years old.—I have been in this house near 11 years.

I was hurt by a kick from a horse six or seven years ago; master came into the workshop about four months ago, and, because I had not worked so much as he expected, he said he would beat me; and when I would not take down my clothes (as I told him I was not able to weave on account of my eyes), he called three men, and would have tied me to a beam with a rope, if the rope had not been too short; they pulled down my clothes; I had only my waistcoat and shirt on; he seized me by the throat, and pressed me, and boxed me on the jaw and ears till the blood gushed from my eyes. My ears were black; my ribs were pressed against the bench; he had his knee on my belly, and his hand on my throat. The three men are now in the shop; they are journeymen; Tom Hines, Bazeley Blundell and John Read, are the men. They got ropes round my arms; my ribs were sore for a month, and my eyes for a fortnight. Mr. Hines told Mr. Blackman I put halfpence to my eyes; I applied to Mr. Bell, the surgeon, for something for my eyes, but he said it was of no use.

Bazeley Blundell, [40 years old, superintendent in the weaving shop, and assistant usher, but not in the employ of the Incorporated Society.]

I know James Kinsey; remember his being beaten in the course of this year; it was supposed he idled part of his time, and master did not like it. The boy seemed very restive, and refused to be corrected; he kicked the master in the breast, and was then tied with cords; his feet were tied together; I think he was fastened to the loom; he got a regular flogging with the birch rod; he was not flogged severely; he was struck by the master; he caught him by the throat, and squeezed him; I did not see any blood; I must have seen it if there had been any; I never saw any other boy so used with respect to tying up.

I have seen him catch another boy by the throat; I was not surprised when I saw the master take the other boy by the throat, as he had told a great pack of lies; I have seen him seize three or four boys by the throat; I was reared here; I consider Mr. Hines a good master.

I remember

203

I remember his striking Pat Grady on the head; he had two black eyes, which was the effect of blows repeatedly given on the head; I swear I don't believe his hands were clenched; he knocked him against the loom, but I believe the eyes were blackened by the blows; it was a severe beating; this was in the weaving shop.

A boy will earn about 20 d. a week by weaving; a moderate hand will earn this; the best will earn about 2 s. 3 d. and this is calculated independent of food.

John Read sworn; [a foreman employed in the weaving shop; came on December 28th, 1823.]

I know James Kinsey; one day, about four months ago, his master found fault with him for not doing his usual quantity of work, and struck him on the face and side of the head, whilst he was sitting on the loom, and called him to come out and be flogged; he called for a boy to take him up on his back; a boy came and took him up, and his trowsers were let down, and he received some blows with the rod; he struggled, and got down; and then the master called his own son Thomas Hines, who took him up again, and he was again flogged; the boy then escaped, and ran into the loft, where he was ordered to go by the master, and I heard a struggle and noise there, but do not know what passed there; I heard the boy moan; Mr. Hines followed him; after a little time the boy came down, and ran under a loom; the master came down after him; the boy's trowsers were quite off at this time; the master caught the boy by running a bench against the wall, and then called upon Blundell and myself to come and tie the boy; Blundell pulled him from under the loom, and the boy said, "Oh! Mr. Read, here are my hands, I wont resist;" he put his hands together, and I gently held them, and then Blundell tied them together behind him, so that he could not move them; the cord that bound his arms had another cord tied to it, and the end of the second cord was thrown over the cap of the loom, and there secured; the boy stood on the ground, and he had his back to the loom; the master stood on one side of him, and struck him with the rod from the instep to the thigh in front; it was a severe beating; the boy dropped forward, and said, "Oh! sir, I am off;" then the master struck him with his hand on the cheek, and said, "Oh! you are very bad," and then he was untied; it struck me, that this was said in derision; this was on a Saturday evening; I did not observe any blood; on the Monday, when I came to work, I saw the boy with his face black.

I have seen other boys flogged; Mr. Hines has frequently taken boys by the throat; he is hasty, but when not in a passion, he is very kind to the boys; Mrs. Hines is also very kind to the boys.

When Kinsey was on the back of the first boy, I heard Mr. Hines say, that the boy had kicked him during the time he was first hoisted.

Thomas Ludden sworn; [14 years of age; nine years in the house.]

I saw Kinsey after his beating; there was blood on his eyes; he was beaten in the room below, and in the loft; I did not see him put on any boy's back, but he was tied to the loom, and there flogged; Mr. Hines is in the habit of throttling boys.

[On being asked how he came to complain to us, he said, when they saw one boy complain, they all came.]

I did once complain to Mr. Armstrong, but got no redress, and therefore did not complain again; one boy complained to Mr. Armstrong, and when Mr. Hines came home, he came directly to the weaving shop, and beat him severely; this boy was Richard Swift.

[Found entry in Visitation Book, dated January 21st, 1823.]

"Attended at the school, with one of the local committee, to investigate some complaints made by three of the senior boys, of severity in punishment, and after minute inquiry, found there was no ground of just accusation against the master or superintendent; ordered two boys into solitary confinement for a week, on low diet, for having told lies.

(signed) " W. C. Armstrong.
" C. D. Johnston."]

One of the boys put into confinement was one of the boys who complained, and the other was the boy who opened the gate for myself, and two other boys, who attempted to elope to Dublin. Thomas Duncan was the boy who opened the gate, and William M'Intyre was the boy who complained, and was put into confinement.

Richard Swift. [This witness being only twelve years old was not sworn.]

I have been here two years; about a year ago, I complained to Mr. Armstrong, that we were made to get up too soon in the morning; I did not know him myself, but George Miller shewed him to me; and one day, when he was coming out of the school porch, I complained to him, and told him that Blundell beat me; he spoke to Blundell not to beat me with so large a rod, as the other boys told me; Mr. Hines was then from home; when he returned from the boat race (this was stated to be on the 12th of August), he came to the weaving shop, and asked for me, and brought me out into the school-room, and asked me, what made me go tell of the boys getting up so early in the morning; he then pulled down my trowsers, and beat me with a cane; I think there was forty blows, he beat me so long, but I did not count them; Mr. Hines asked me who showed me Mr. Armstrong; I told him George Miller, when he went and flogged Miller too.

George Miller, not sworn, being a small boy, though about 14 years old.

I have been ten years here.

[This boy confirmed the above statement, except that he said, Swift told him, that he

Examinations
before
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.
Sligo School.

Examinations
before
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.

Sligo School.

was flogged in the weaving shop; whereas Swift said, he was flogged in the school-room.]

I saw Kinsey after the flogging; his eyes were bloodshot; his jaws swelled greatly, and his face was blackened for a long while; his eyes were worse after the beating than before.

William M'Intyre, [15 years old, not sworn.] I do not get school enough; we get up at five, and sometimes before it; we ought to be called in at twelve, but we are never called till half-past twelve, and sometimes hardly get in before dinner comes; I have been working on the farm ever since I came to the house; sometimes I get no instruction in the evening; perhaps it is so three times in the week.

Patrick Grady sworn.—I have been in this house nine years; I am 14 years old; I eloped, and a man who knew where I was told of me, and Mr. Hines promised not to beat me; but after I came back, one day he came into the weaving shop, and struck me on the face twenty times, and more, alledging, that the selvage of my work was uneven, and kicked me in the back, and wherever he could; he gave me two black eyes, and cut my lip, so that it would fill a porringer with blood; my back was hurt, and it is not well yet; I feel weak; it was three weeks next Saturday since I eloped, and a fortnight next Thursday since I was beat; I believe my master beat me for eloping, as he could not find any other ground; master kept me at home the next Sunday, and said that my eyes were a little polished, but that he would polish my backside before I should go to church; my eyes were very black; Mr. Crawford came, but did not see me; I have often been kept working when I ought to have been at school.

Robert Dogherty;—[12 years old, not sworn, very small boy.]

[Examined the loins of this boy, which exhibited several scabs; the boy was flogged about three weeks ago, for having a bit of his coat cuff torn. The boy stated, that the sores came out about a week after he was flogged. Dr. Coyne examined this boy last night. [See his certificate annexed.]

Maurice Behan, and nine other boys, all declared, that they had every reason to be dissatisfied. Maurice Behan stated, that Mr. Thackeray came to visit the school, and on complaint of misconduct of the master, about eight years ago, Mr. Thackeray said, that Mr. Hines should be turned off, unless he promised to behave better in future. One boy had complained, and Mr. Thackeray said, if the boy would forgive him, Mr. Hines should remain, but if not, he must go away.

Daniel Kinsey sworn, [brother of James; between 17 and 18 years old.]

About four months ago I was ill with a pain in my breast, for which I was bled at the infirmary; the next morning my master came into the school, and seeing me with my arm tied up with a ribbon, and not able to write, he called to know why I was not writing, and dragged me to his own desk, and gave me three or four blows on the breast with his fist, and then went to the kitchen, and fetched a whip, and beat me with it; the next day, after dinner, I ran away; master came after me, and another man caught me and brought me back, and when I came home, master took my shoes and stockings away, and did not give them to me for a week; I should be very glad to leave the house; I am quite able to work at the loom; I can work as well as the journeymen; master said, Dr. Bell told him nothing ailed me.

John Dimby, kitchen boy;—not sworn; twenty years old; always kept in kitchen until lately, when the Foundling boys came.

Michael Costello.—I am eighteen years old. I have seen my master take boys by the throat; it has been usual for him to do so. He acts with violence to some of the boys. My master spoke to me to-day, and said, "It would be no harm to mention how I was treated." "I will, Sir," says I.

Edward Nugent, Dennis Gallagher, David Porter, Thomas Stanley, and Philip M'Gann, were not sworn; complained of the master, and stated their wish to go to some other school.

Terence Gallagher, seventeen years old.—My master's son Richard, about a year ago, struck me on the side of the head with the butt end of a gun; he was cleaning the gun; he also struck me on the back with it, and kicked me. This was because I could not stop the horses feet. Also another time he beat me with the handle of a fishing-rod.

Laurence French [Not sworn, being only thirteen years old.]

Master beat me in the stable with his fist, and choaked me, by taking me by the throat, so that I could eat nothing for three days; he kicked me; this was for not having my shoes clean; this was about a fortnight ago; Andrew Armstrong was present; I could only drink milk.

Thomas Fullerton [Not sworn, being only twelve years old, very small.]

I was tied up and flogged by my master very severely, and then he locked me up in the potatoe house, and kept me on bread and water for seven days. I was tied up because I would not let down my clothes. This was about half a year ago; I was flogged for a bad spool.

Andrew

Andrew Armstrong [Apprentice to Mr. Hines, taken from the school.]

Saw Richard Hines strike Terence Gallagher with the butt end of a gun; I do not know whether the barrel was in it.

After I was examined last night, my mistress called me a conniving rogue and a deceiver. I had no conversation with Gallagher about it; I have had a quarrel with Mr. Hines; I had enlisted, and Mr. Hines took me back again; I saw Laurence French choaked severely in the stable by Mr. Hines; he also kicked him, and knocked his head against the flag; the boy called to me to relieve him; the offence was for not cleaning his shoes.

Examinations
before
William Grant and
Anthony R. Blake,
Esqrs.
Sligo School.

I certify, that I was this morning called upon by William Hume, esquire, to visit the Sligo charter school, in the absence of Mr. Bell, the county surgeon; and having examined the side of Dodgherty, one of the boys inmate of that institution, who complained that marks on his side were the effect of chastisement, cruelly inflicted by Mr. Hines, the master of said school, I do declare, the said marks arose from erysipelas, and that there exists a general erysipelatous affection of many parts of his body.

I moreover am of opinion, that these marks could not arise from the infliction of punishment in the manner or at the period stated by the boy.

Given under my hand at Sligo, this 13th day of September 1824, four.

(signed) B. Coyne, M.D.

Senior Physician to the Sligo Dispensary and Fever Hospital.

Appendix, N° 77.

The REPORT of the Local Committee of the SLIGO CHARTER SCHOOL; dated Sligo, 25th September 1824.

Members present:

Lieutenant Col. Dodgin, 66th Regiment, in the Chair.

Colonel Irwin, governor of the County; the Rev. Mr. Stokes, the Rev. Mr. Yeates, Rev. Mr. Elliott, Abraham Martin, I. P., Gowan Gilmore, I. P., John Black, I. P., Charles D. Johnston, M. D., and William Hume, esquire.

THE local committee of the Sligo charter school, having been called upon to investigate certain complaints preferred by the boys against the master, have most minutely and strictly inquired into the same, by examining each boy separately and apart from every person connected with the internal management of the institution. Such boys as were of an age sufficient to understand the nature and solemn obligation of an oath, were sworn to the facts, to which they deposed. The younger boys merely gave their verbal statement.

Report of Local Committee of Sligo
Charter School.

The committee are of opinion, that in some instances, severity has been exercised to an undue extent; and that the master, in the ebullition of momentary passion, in which he unfortunately allowed his better judgment to be overcome, has adopted a mode of punishment extremely objectionable and unjustifiable; however, they conceive, that the complaints of the boys are greatly exaggerated, and proceed more from a desire to criminate the master than from a sense of the injury sustained; this impression rests the more strongly on the minds of the committee, from the absence of all complaints to themselves, though collectively and individually they have been constantly in the habit of interrogating the boys as to their treatment, when the master has been withdrawn from their presence; and is further confirmed by its appearing, that many of them are only enabled to speak, with such precision and distinctness, as they do of remote transactions, from the communications with other boys; and that an endeavour is made to induce some to bring forward accusations who would otherwise be silent, and to deter others who appear inclined to speak favourably of the master, from doing so. The committee have examined the medical attendants of the institution, as to the general treatment of the children, and particularly when sick; and the character they give of the care, humanity, and watchful attention to the health of the boys, is indeed highly favourable to the master and mistress; they have likewise examined some of those persons who were formerly reared in the school, and who are now from under the control of the master, and consequently unbiassed by him, they speak in the very strongest terms of his kindness, attention and friendly disposition towards the boys, while they were inmates of the institution; the concurrent testimony of even the complaining boys, establishes for Mr. Hines, the character of the greatest tenderness and care of them when sick. The fearlessness with which they have come forward to make their complaints, and the boldness with which they state their grievances, clearly convinces the committee, that though the master has been hasty and warm in his temper, he is not tyrannical or cruel in his disposition.

The committee feel quite satisfied that no just grounds of complaint exist as to the diet of the children, on the contrary, they believe that no boys in their situation are better fed; and they have the evidence of two respectable butchers, that Mr. Hines is in the habit of purchasing the best provisions the Sligo market affords. In respect to two of the three dinners, the only ones ever complained of, the fact is, that the meat was tainted, an occurrence not unusual in warm weather: but the committee consider the circumstance of Mr. Hines's family having some of the same meat dressed for their own table, as sufficient to show that it was not unfit for use; and that the description of food previously furnished to the boys, had made them saucy and hard to please. As to the other dinner, from the meat of a cow with a sore udder, the committee have tasted and inspected a piece of that beef, boiled

Report of Local Committee of Sligo
Charter School.

boiled by their direction, and they are of opinion, though not of prime quality, that it was good and wholesome meat; the two butchers coincide in this opinion. The committee, from their own experience, as well as from the judgment of competent persons, state, that it very frequently happens, that cows with sore udders are slaughtered; but that this disorder does not affect the soundness of the other parts, nor render it in any degree unfit for use; and as to the strings of the heart, as they are called by the cook-maid, being hard, it seems they are always so. The committee must conclude, that a mistaken prejudice, and not any unsoundness in the meat, made it objectionable to the cookmaid and the boys.

The committee observe, that a number of the boys have been improperly detained from church one Sunday, when employed in writing their specimens; and they regret to find that the accounts of their attendance upon public worship, are not so regularly kept as they ought to be.

The committee find, on examination, that the boys have only one sheet on each of their beds; this has arisen from a want of sheeting in the school, to afford the necessary change when washing; two pair would be required for each bed; at present there are only 55 pair, leaving a deficiency of 33 pair. Table cloths are also wanting to enable the master to conform to the dietary on meat days. The committee of fifteen, having been applied to for the necessary supply of both articles, the master is not censurable for the want.

The boys it appears, have been in the habit of rising earlier than the usual time; sometimes it has occurred from their being obliged to attend the tide, for the purpose of bathing; sometimes, in cases of emergency, when the master had a pressing and immediate call for the assistance of their labour; but the committee cannot find that this practice has been adopted with a view of imposing more labour on the boys for the master's advantage. There has been some deviation in the hours of instruction; but still there has been no diminution in the time allowed for it; rather an increase.

The complaint of the boys getting butter milk with their stirabout is not well founded, as it appears sanctioned by the dietary produced to the committee, by the master, commencing March 1821.

The committee evidently perceive, that a combination has been formed by some of the senior boys against the master; this they attribute to the dissatisfaction created in their minds, by the accounts they have received from the boys drafted from other schools, of their exemption from manual labour in those schools and in them a greater portion of time being devoted to play; another cause of dissatisfaction, and the committee think it not an unreasonable one, is, that the boys are so long detained in the institution, and after having learned the trade of weaving, and being competent to act as journeymen, they should again be obliged to undergo the servitude of an apprenticeship, and giving to others, for years, the produce of their labour, without any benefit accruing to themselves therefrom; some of the boys now applied for by weavers, refuse to go to that trade, while they would willingly accept of any other; but the smallness of the fee, and the division of it into different payments, operates as an objection to masters of more respectable and lucrative trades taking those boys as apprentices.

When the committee consider the propensity natural to school boys, to feel every restraint and chastisement as unnecessarily and unjustly inflicted; and that in schools of a much higher order, and amongst boys from whose rank in life, a superiority of morals might be expected, that combinations against the master do frequently exist; they think that to impute to the system of charter school education, from the occurrence now investigated, any demoralizing influence, would be to overstep the bounds of candour, impartiality and fairness.

The committee, after having carried their investigation through a period of thirteen years, and heard every charge that could, in the most remote degree, implicate the character of the master, must now, in justice, declare, that it is the conviction of their minds, that Mr. Hines, though he has been in some instances intemperate, and is blameable in the mode of inflicting punishment, yet he has, in every other respect, faithfully and attentively discharged his duty. The healthful and cleanly appearance of the children, best exemplifies their treatment, and their proficiency in learning the attention paid to their instruction. Of Mrs. Hines the boys uniformly speak with respect and thankfulness. She has given them no opportunity of speaking otherwise, for her conduct has been most exemplary, and deservedly merits the praise of the committee.

The committee lament, that the character of a school, which has hitherto stood so high in the estimation of the public, should now, for the first time, be impeached: and particularly that any cause should have been given by a master, whose conduct, for so many years, has been so creditable to himself, so satisfactory to the committee, and so advantageous to the institution.

The committee are glad to perceive, that Mr. Hines does not attempt to palliate his offence; he appears sensible of the impropriety of it, and they believe deeply regrets it.

The committee propose adopting immediately, such regulations as to the future mode of punishment in the school, as they trust will prevent a recurrence of all complaints on this head.

The committee send, for the information of the Incorporated Society, a copy of the depositions, taken before them, with some other documents, to which they beg leave to request their attention. In the latter part of the depositions, they will find an explanation given, as to the the produce of the earning of the boys employed in weaving. There appears to have been some misconception on this subject, in the evidence taken before Messrs. Grant and Blake.

(signed)

Dan' Dodgin,
Lieu' Co' 66 Regt,
Chairman.

Report of Local Committee of Sligo
Charter School.

A true Copy.
(signed)

Ja' Adamson, Secy

Appendix, N° 78.

At a meeting of the Committee of Fifteen, of the Incorporated Society, &c. held on Wednesday the 29th of September 1824, for the special purpose of taking in to consideration the conduct of the master of Sligo school;

Present: The Hon. and Very Rev. the Dean of St. Patrick's, in the chair;
The Hon. and Rev. John Pomeroy, Colonel Blacker, the Rev. Archdeacon of Dublin, Thomas H. Orpen, esq. M.D.

THE Committee of Fifteen having perused with the greatest attention, the various documents laid before them, respecting the conduct of the master of Sligo school, as well those transmitted by order of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, as the report of the local committee and the minutes of evidence on which that report was grounded, have arrived at the same conviction expressed by the local committee, in their very ample and satisfactory report. Two points present themselves to the committee of fifteen, as particularly calling for their interference; namely, the mode of punishment which appears to have been occasionally adopted by the master, arising, as they are sorry to observe, from hastiness of temper; and also the failure, upon a particular occasion, of that regular attendance of the boys upon divine worship, which is one of the fundamental regulations of the society, and on which they mainly insist. With respect to the first of these points, the committee of fifteen have to observe, with satisfaction, that the local committee have pledged themselves to take such measures as may prevent a recurrence of the evil complained of, and which they conceive cannot be in better hands: and with regard to the second, they have given such directions both to the catechist and the master, as will tend to prevent the probability of any future deviation from rule in this particular.

Upon the whole, considering the long and praiseworthy services of the master, Mr. Hines, during a period of twenty-three years, the committee of fifteen would deem it an act of great severity to visit him with the penalty of dismissal for this first departure from the strict line of his duty, in the instances referred to; it is therefore their decision, to convey to him a serious reprimand, and to take effectual measures for enforcing such an undeviating regard to the rules of the Society, as they trust will prevent the recurrence of similar irregularities; and they are the more induced to pursue this lenient course on the present occasion, by the solemn assurances Mr. Hines has given them, of his determination to adopt that line of conduct which can alone insure to him the approbation of the Incorporated Society, and the permanence of his situation in their service.

By order,

(signed) Ja' Adamson, Secy.

Report of Committee of Fifteen, of the Incorporated
Society.
Sligo School.

Appendix, N° 79.

Letter from the Commissioners to His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant.

May it please your Excellency,

Dublin, 4th November 1824.

IN the execution of the important commission which has been entrusted to our charge, we thought it right to commence our inquiries by a personal examination of various establishments for the education of the lower orders in Ireland. Amongst these, the charter schools, over which your Excellency peculiarly presides, naturally presented themselves to our attention; but as they appeared to possess, in some degree, a distinct and separate character, our original intention was to defer their examination until some subjects of a more general interest should be investigated.

The cruel treatment, however, to which the boys at the Sligo school appeared to us to be exposed, by the undue severity of the master, and the apparent disobedience on his part of the established rules of the Incorporated Society, induced us at once to communicate to your Excellency, the information we had obtained respecting that school, with the impression, that as our powers did not enable us to correct the evil, it was our duty to afford to the Incorporated Society the opportunity of providing, without delay, such remedy as might appear requisite.

The subsequent proceedings of the local committee of the Sligo school, and the final report of the committee of fifteen, by which the master is directed to be reprimanded, have been communicated to this board; and we are aware, that by these proceedings the case is for the present disposed of.

We feel, however, on the fullest consideration, that it is still our duty to offer, through your Excellency, to the Incorporated Society, such information as we obtain, upon points which appear to us, on the grounds of humanity, to require immediate consideration and correction. We therefore submit to your Excellency the sworn testimony of three youths, Robert Robinson, John Connolly and John Doyle, who are now wholly removed from the combinations

[U 4]

Letter from the Commissioners
to the Lord Lieutenant.

Letter from the Commissioners
to the Lord Lieutenant.

combinations which are said to be connected with the Sligo school, and which testimony appears to us to strengthen our original apprehensions, that the violence and ungoverned passions of the master, are confirmed by habits of too long standing, to be efficiently controlled by any regulations which the local committee can have it in their power to make. Still less can we rely on the promises of the master, that he will offend no more. Promises equally solemn, it appears, he had formerly given, when detected in the violation of the rules of the Society, and which very rules we found equally disregarded at the period of our visit.

It will be seen, by a reference to an extract from the report of Mr. Thackeray, who visited this school, upon a special mission from the Society, in the month of October 1818, which will be found amongst the enclosures transmitted to your Excellency with this letter, how little trust can be reposed in the assurances of the master, how little power the local committee can exercise in controlling his conduct, and how subdued by terror the children must have been, when Mr. Thackeray could receive the impression, that "the complaint was made evidently against the will of the school generally, who could not support it, though they were desired to declare all they felt." He says, he considered this "as evidence they had not much suffered, and that complaint would not have been made but by a boy who had offended, and of an untoward disposition." "I am very glad, however, (he adds) that the point was brought forward." "No cause of complaint will, I am confident, again occur; and as I have reason to think a line of communication is kept up throughout the schools generally, the effect of complaint made here, and the instant attention paid to it, will operate wherever it can be feared or felt."

The Incorporated Society may observe, that the boys at the Sligo school dared not complain to the catechist, or the local committee, or to casual visitors; nor can it fail to be remarked, that the severities exercised upon them, not only by the master and the usher, but by the master's son, and the two foremen of the weaving department, are stated to have been most frequently provoked by neglect imputed to the boys in their labours at the loom. To these labours, notwithstanding the assurances given to Mr. Thackeray, they have been compelled to rise at undue hours, and at them they have been forced to continue, when, according to the rules of the Society, they ought either to have been engaged in study, or enjoying the usual period of relaxation. It is important to observe, that the cloth, which is the product of their labour, becomes a source of considerable emolument to the master; but as the object of the Society is, that the boys should be taught to weave, not that a profitable manufacture should be established for the master, we think ourselves called upon to suggest, that it may be worthy of consideration, whether an almost irresistible temptation to disobey the rules of the Society would not be removed, by directing, that the product of the boys labour should henceforth be disposed of on account of the Society, and the master released from all pecuniary charge on account of the work.

We now proceed, in the discharge of a painful part of our duty, to communicate to your Excellency the information we have obtained respecting the school at Stradbally. We were preparing to submit the state of this school, through your Excellency, to the attention of the Incorporated Society, and to express our full persuasion, that the boys were not safe from serious personal injury, proceeding from the usher, when, by the examination of Mr. Adamson, secretary of the Society, we became acquainted with the further proceedings which had been taken with respect to that school.

By a reference to the report of the local committee of the school of Stradbally, bearing date the 15th October 1824, it will be seen, that the result of the evidence taken at that school, on the 9th and 10th of the same month, by one of the members of this board, was communicated by the catechist to the local committee, who thought themselves called upon to represent the usher to the committee of fifteen, as having used reprehensible severity towards the children, and to state, that he had withdrawn himself from the school.

We subjoin the usher's letter and memorial to the committee of fifteen, giving his own account of his proceedings. In these, he untruly represents himself as having been dismissed from his situation by Mr. Leslie Foster, on the occasion of his visit, and expresses himself in terms which must have appeared deserving of censure by those to whom they were addressed. This case, however, as we collect from Mr. Adamson, became distinguished from the few others in which a local committee had ever complained of an usher. It was disposed of by the committee of fifteen, without further communication with the local committee, and disposed of, not merely by the acquittal of the person whom that committee had censured, but by his immediate promotion to the situation of an usher at a school of a higher order, and at a higher salary. This decision was adopted, with the knowledge that the usher's conduct had been disapproved of by one of His Majesty's Commissioners of Education Inquiry, and without any further examination into particulars, than a verbal communication with the usher himself.

Though the local committee of Stradbally school expressed their opinion, that the usher's conduct was reprehensible, they were not acquainted with the particulars of the evidence taken by Mr. Foster.

The degree to which the boys were deterred, by the dread of punishment, from complaining, is strongly marked by the circumstance of two of the Commissioners having previously visited the school, and having received no hint whatever from the boys, of their situation, because, as they stated to Mr. Foster, "they took them for common visitors, and if he (Mr. Foster) had not mentioned that he came from government," they told him, "they would not have dared to complain to him either."

We

We subjoin the Report of the evidence taken by Mr. Foster at the school of Stradbally, to which we beg leave to direct your Excellency's particular attention. It will appear by it, that while the master of the school is occupied in the management of three considerable farms, the usher, Mr. Eustace, has, without the master's knowledge or inquiry, inflicted nine floggings in one day upon one boy, "for a sum in long division," and given 67 stripes to another boy, on account of the same sum. That the instruments employed on such occasions were, a leathern cat, a rope, and branches from elm trees. It will further appear, that eight children were found by Mr. Foster, in a state of laceration and contusion, which he describes as quite shocking. These eight children had been punished with unusual severity, on the day before Mr. Foster's arrival, for causes which the usher has not thought proper fully to disclose. It will be observed that the usher at first stated that he had punished only four out of these eight children, and that it was only in consequence of being pressed with questions that he was obliged to admit the punishment of the others, the state of whose persons had previously, without his knowledge, been ascertained by Mr. Foster. It will further be observed, that the usher swears that their offence was "looking at the police men playing ball." "Two of the police men had come into the boy's ball alley, and began to play in it," and for this punishment he ventures to swear, that he had the sanction of the catechist; whilst by a reference to the evidence of that gentleman, it appears that the offence, such as it was, had been committed by two only out of the eight who suffered, and that he had treated it as a matter of censure, not of the children but of the usher.

It is further our painful duty to proceed to draw the attention of your Excellency to the state of the school of Castledermot. Amongst the enclosures sent with this letter will be found Mr. Foster's report on the subject. He found the children complaining very generally of the badness of their food. That irregularities had existed in the dietary, was not disputed by the master and mistress; but the circumstance which principally calls for our observation, is the severity of punishment inflicted on two children, who appear, from hunger, to have eaten a raw cabbage that was growing in the garden, which they were employed to dig; and in consequence of the extreme nature of which punishment, one of the children immediately eloped. To the management of the school the master appears to pay scarcely any attention, and the catechist still less.

The school at Longford was visited by two of the commissioners (Messrs. Grant and Blake) in September. They found that the master had been for some time in a state of insanity, and had finally sunk into hopeless fatuity, in which situation he then was, and had been for some months, during all which time he was permitted to continue in charge of the school. It appears that the character of his malady was never communicated to the Incorporated Society, by the local committee, but it came by common report to the knowledge of the secretary two months ago. We had intended to submit the state of this school to your Excellency's consideration, in the hope that an efficient master might be appointed, but since the draft of this report was prepared, the death of the master has taken place, and we therefore deem it unnecessary now to say more upon this particular school.

Your Excellency, we are certain, is aware that our general Report to His Majesty, on the state of the Charter Schools of Ireland will necessarily require considerable time for its preparation, while the circumstances detailed in this letter are such as require immediate consideration.

It is, therefore, that we thus submit them to your Excellency, satisfied that the Incorporated Society, honoured as it is by your Excellency's being its President, and comprehending, as it does, among its members, the whole Prelacy of Ireland, most of the great Officers of the Crown, all the Judges, and so many other individuals of the highest rank and character in the country, will feel more interest than we can do ourselves, in correcting whatever imperfections or abuses may have found a place in the execution of those duties which by the charter of His Majesty are committed to their trust.

We have the honour to be,

Your Excellency's most obedient humble servants,

(signed)

T. Frankland Lewis

J. Leslie Foster

W. Grant

James Glassford

A. R. Blake.

Appendix, N^o 80.

Examinations of John Connolly, John Doyle and Robert Robinson, Thursday, October 28th, 1824, referred to in the preceding letter.

John Connolly, called in; and Examined on Oath.

HOW old are you?—Nineteen.

When were you first admitted into a charter school?—As well as I can recollect, in the year 1815.

In what school?—Clontarf.

What age were you then?—About nine.

Are they not generally rather younger when taken in?—Yes; I believe it is between eight and nine they are generally admitted.

Were you the child of Roman Catholic or Protestant parents?—Catholic.

Had you ever been to chapel before you were admitted into the school?—Yes.

[X]

Had

Examinations of John Connolly, John
Doyle and Robert
Robinson,
28 Oct. 1824.

Letter from the Commissioners
to the
Lord Lieutenant.

Examination of
John Connolly,
28 Oct. 1824.

Had you learnt the Roman Catholic catechism before you were taken into the school?—Yes; I could say it.

How long did you stay at Clontarf?—Really, I do not recollect; not upwards of two months.

To what school were you then removed?—To Sligo.

How long were you at Sligo?—I think I was about six years there.

When did you leave Sligo?—In the year 1821.

To what school were you removed then?—To the present school, Santry.

Do you remember how long it took you to learn to read?—I think I could read in less than a year.

How long was it before you could write?—About two years.

What catechisms did you learn?—Doctor Mann's catechism.

What other?—Crossman's catechism, and Stopford's catechism.

The church catechism?—Yes; that is comprised in the others. The others are explanations of the church catechism.

You did not learn the church catechism separately, in the form in which it is in the prayer book?—Yes; I learnt that first, and the other ones afterwards.

Do you know the rules for the dietary of the boys of the chartered schools?—Yes; I have read them often.

Are they hung up publicly in any part of the house, either the school-room or dining-room?—Yes; in the dining-room of the present school.

Were they hung up at Sligo?—Not for a considerable time, till Mr. Thackeray went round, and then they were obliged to be hung up.

Is the school at Sligo conducted in the same way as that at Santry?—No; there is a wide difference between them.

In what does that difference principally consist?—Principally in the severity the master used towards the boys.

Which master was most severe with the boys?—Mr. Hines.

He is the master of the Sligo school?—Yes.

Do you mean that his severity to the boys was frequent and habitual, or only casual and accidental?—Casual; but when he would go to punish them he would punish them very severely, and his passion would continue a very long time; and instead of trying to cool his passion, he would add fuel to it, so as to make faults where they did not really exist.

Were the punishments frequent?—Very frequent.

Were the boys punished every day, or every week?—There were no stated times, only when the boys committed faults.

Were there generally punishments every day?—Yes.

Did other persons punish the boys, besides the master?—Yes; the usher and the foreman.

Name them?—William Crauford and Bazeley Blundell; and the master's children used to take a part in it too, they used to punish us as severely as the master himself.

What were the usual faults the boys were punished for?—They were very trivial faults; suppose they had not themselves clean, they were beaten; or if any buttons were wanting on their clothes. He used generally to beat them most for their writing, and also for the weaving.

Were they as frequently beaten for the weaving as the writing?—They were.

Was it for not weaving well, or not weaving enough?—Both.

You say that the master's sons used to punish the boys; did they do so upon complaints made by others, or their own judgment of the faults committed?—They used to do it through caprice; and sometimes they used to deliver them up to the ushers, or if it came under the foreman's jurisdiction, they used to deliver them up to him.

What class of faults came under the foreman's jurisdiction?—Not weaving enough, and bad weaving.

What was the usual mode of punishment those persons had recourse to?—The ushers and foreman used the birch, and the master used to use the birch also; and also a strap, and a whip; and the sons used to use their fists and their feet, and kick them. It did not frequently happen that the sons beat them, but there was one son in particular that used to beat them, of the name of Richard Hines.

Were you ever violently punished yourself, by either of those persons?—I do not recollect that I was; I was punished by the foreman.

Have you seen any instances of severe punishment that you can describe, by the master, or any of the others?—Yes; I recollect one boy, his name was Gallagher, the master found fault with him, he then beat him with the birch, but not content with that, he beat him afterwards with a whip, and as he saw the boy did not satisfy him, by crying, he continued beating him a considerable time afterwards, for half an hour; and when he was punishing him he made use of an expression it would not be proper for me to mention.

State what the expression was?—When he saw he did not satisfy him by crying, (I believe the boy could not cry,) between every blow he would mostly exclaim, "I will knock the devil out of you."

What was Gallagher's christian name?—I think it was James.

Used the boys frequently to elope?—Indeed they could not elope, they were barred in so with high walls.

Did you know of any instances of elopement?—Yes; many.

Did you know any of the boys who eloped, well enough to be acquainted with their motives motives for their elopements?—No; they never communicated them to me, but the principal reason, I think, was the severity of the master, and also on account of the weaving.

Had you a brother in the school?—I had.

Did he ever elope?—He did; I think he eloped three times; the first time he was away a week, the second time he was taken in the attempt, and the third time he escaped altogether.

What course was taken with your brother when he was brought back?—He was punished very severely by the master, and his back was mangled very much; he was not well for a considerable time afterwards.

Did he keep his bed?—No; that would not be allowed.

What instrument was he punished with?—As well as I can recollect, I think it was with a whip; I am not certain of it.

Did you ever make any particular complaint?—I did.

To whom?—To the local committee, that were there; but they did not attend to it.

What individual did you complain to?—Mr Armstrong, the catechist, and Mr. Gilmore.

Was Mr. Hume there?—I do not recollect.

What did you complain of?—The manner in which I was treated by the usher and the foreman.

In what manner did they treat you?—When I was punished by the foreman he punished me very severely for a trivial fault, and the usher also.

What course was taken by the gentlemen of the committee, in consequence of your complaint?—They did not listen to it; I had hardly time to make the complaint before the master prejudiced them, and told them I was a liar, which was untrue, and I suppose he hardly knew my name at that time.

Used the master to teach in the school?—Yes.

Then how could he fail to know your name?—He was not in the habit of teaching in the school, but according as the humour would take him; if he was angry at any thing, the only way was to come into the school and vent his passion upon the boys.

Can you state at what period this complaint was made?—No, I cannot.

Was it long before you left the school that this complaint was made?—I do not know the precise time?—I think it was made the year before I left the school.

Were you examined before the committee as to what you complained of?—Yes; I made the complaint before them whilst the master was there.

Were you examined by the committee, as to what you had to complain of, when the master was not there?—No, he was there all the while.

Was there any particular examination into the facts?—Not the least.

How was the complaint disposed of; what happened in consequence?—I was punished for making the complaint; I do not suppose that was stated to be the cause, but the master said I had told a lie.

When were you punished?—The very evening the complaint was made.

Did the master state to you why he punished you; what did he tell you he was going to punish you for?—He told me it was for the lie.

Was it for the complaint you had made?—Yes.

It was not because you had written ill, or had done the weaving ill?—He did not assign that as the reason.

He said he punished you because you had told a lie?—Yes.

And by that you understood him to mean the complaint you had made?—Yes; I took a very imprudent time to tell it; it was a very considerable time after I had been beaten, and Mr. Stokes took me aside after I complained, to see if there were any stripes upon me; I said there could not be any then it was so long after, and that made good the master's story.

Were you severely punished for making the complaint?—Very severely; I felt very considerable pain a fortnight afterwards.

With what were you punished?—The birch.

In the presence of the other boys?—Yes, they were all assembled in the room.

Did they know for what you were punished?—Yes.

Had the master any particular mode of punishing the boys, which you believe to be unusual in charter schools; any particular manner of handling them?—Yes.

Describe it?—After beating them with a whip he would seize them by the throat, and hold them till they were ready to faint; he often held me in that way.

Have you seen him seize other boys in that way often?—Yes.

Half a dozen times?—Hundreds of times; it was a frequent mode of punishment with him, holding them till they were ready to faint.

Did you ever know any boy seriously injured by that mode of seizing him, so as to be unwell afterwards?—No, I do not recollect that.

Do you mean that he merely laid hold of you, or that he pinched the boys by the throat?—He took them by the windpipe; he held his thumb upon the glottis till they could scarcely breathe.

And this you say was frequent?—Yes.

Did you ever see any boy actually faint away under that process?—I recollect one of the name of Hughes; I think that is nine years ago.

So as to lose his senses?—Yes, but he did not remain in that state long; the master beat him out of it again.

Examination of
John Connolly,
28 Oct. 1824.

Do you know at all what has become of that boy?—No, he was apprenticed at Sligo as a servant.

Did you consider the master had any spite against you?—Yes, for the complaint I made; I was punished a considerable time afterwards for the most trivial faults I committed, or he construed them into faults.

* * * * *

How long did your brother continue from the school after his elopement?—I think he continued a week.

Was he removed after that?—The first time he eloped I think he was away about a week, the second time he was taken in the attempt to escape, and the third time he was never got more into the school; there were no more tidings of him.

Did you ever see him afterwards?—No.

Do you know what has become of him?—He is dead.

How long did he live after he eloped?—I think about two years and a half.

Did he go to your parents?—Yes.

Did he continue a Protestant?—No.

Have many instances come to your knowledge, of boys educated in the charter schools who have become Roman Catholics afterwards?—Yes, in fact I have been told of many, but there are only two who have come under my observation.

Who were they?—I think Ormesby was one; I do not recollect the name of the other.

There was your own brother?—Yes, but independently of him.

When you were at Sligo do you think the boys there were sincere in their belief of the Protestant religion, or had they any doubts about it?—I never heard them say any thing about it.

Did they think much about religion, either one way or the other?—I do not think they did, they minded their other business; and when they were at their prayers in the church, they used to be thinking of their weaving.

They never used actually to weave on the Sunday?—No.

Was the weaving the thing that was always uppermost in their minds?—Yes; they could not take their exercise, if they did they could not have the cloth done.

Did Mr. Hines pass among the boys, as a religious or an irreligious man?—Not a religious man, but quite the contrary; we did not consider him as having the least spark of religion in him; he did not attend to the morals of the boys, and when punishing them, he used to utter the most tremendous curses, and that did not shew him to be a religious man; he did not point out the heinousness of the crime, but only just punished them.

Did he use to make the boys rise to go to their weaving before the proper hours?—No, not while I was there.

Did he make them weave when they ought to have been at their lessons?—Yes, some of them, but not the whole; he used to do it when they were in a hurry to get any particular business done.

Appendix, N° 81.

Examination of John Doyle, Thursday, 28th October 1824, who was called in, and Examined on Oath.

John Doyle.

HOW old are you?—About eighteen.

Are you now in Santry school?—Yes.

How long have you been there?—The first of next month I have been there two years.

What school were you at before you came to Santry?—Sligo.

How long were you at Sligo?—Seven or eight years.

Were you there before John Connolly?—No, I went along with him.

In what way were the boys treated at Sligo?—As to their treatment, Mr. Hines used to beat them very much, but according to diet he used to treat them very well.

Were they taken good care of when they were ill?—Yes.

Was the severity with which he used to punish the boys, as great when you first went there, as during the remainder of the time?—At first he was very severe, and he continued so the whole time along while I was there.

The same at first as last, in point of severity?—Yes.

What used he to punish the boys with?—With a whip and rod, and his hands sometimes and his feet, and kick them, and box them.

Have you ever seen him strike a boy with his fist?—Yes.

And knock him down?—Yes.

Do you remember whom?—He knocked myself down.

Have you seen him knock a boy down more than once?—Yes.

Have you ever received any severe punishment yourself?—I have.

For what?—For my weaving sometimes.

Did he ever strike you with his fist?—Yes.

Upon what occasions used he to kick the boys?—When he was vexed, he would knock a boy down, and kick him on the ground.

Have you ever known any boy suffer materially from the bruises or hurts?—No, I have not, except that they would be sore after for a while.

Have you ever seen the boys with black eyes or bloody noses?—Yes, I have seen one or two with black eyes.

When

When the boys were flogged, how used they to be held or confined?—They used to be taken up on other boys backs.

Did you ever see any boy tied to the loom and punished?—No.

Had he any mode of seizing the boys, which was unusual in other charter schools you have been at?—Yes, he had.

Describe how he used to seize them?—When he would get into a passion, if he had not a rod or whip in his hand, he would immediately seize the boy by the throat, or whatever place offered itself first; he would take and knock the boy down, and knock his head against the boards, or any thing else, till he was almost senseless.

Did he ever seize you by the throat?—Yes.

Did he use to press against the throat so as to produce any particular sensation?—He would press it very tight.

Did you ever see any boy faint away under the punishment of the master?—No, I did not.

Was it for not doing their lessons that the boys were most frequently punished, or for not attending to their work?—Not attending to their work, they used to be beat for in general.

What hours used they to begin to work?—Immediately after they had eaten their breakfast, about eight o'clock, and sometimes they would be earlier than eight o'clock; when he would be in a hurry to get other business done, he would make them get up by four o'clock, and weave by candle-light till day-light, and till eight o'clock at night.

Was that according to the rule of the school?—No, it was not.

Were there many instances when you were there, of being obliged to get up at four o'clock?—Yes, myself.

Day after day?—Yes, till the piece was wove out.

Did the master know it?—Yes.

Were all the weavers up at that time?—No, only those that had the pieces in hand that were in a hurry, such as linings for waistcoats and trowsers.

Was the lining of the clothes worn in the school, wove there?—Yes.

Were their trowsers wove there?—Yes.

What other description of labour was performed there; used they to work on the farm?—Yes, at harvest time they used to go to work there.

Do you know any instances of boys eloping?—Yes.

Many?—Yes.

For what; do you know the reason of their eloping?—They were used very severely, and beat too much; when they complained to the catechist of the school, when the catechist went away, the boy would be beat.

Did that regularly happen?—Yes; I saw a boy who complained to the catechist, of the foreman beating him too much; the master was not in town then, and the catechist went to the foreman about it; when the master came home, the foreman told the master, and the master beat the boy who complained.

Who was the boy?—It was Swift; he beat him and several others that desired him to tell.

Did you ever make any complaint yourself?—No, I did not.

Was it known to the committee, you were forced to work at different hours from what are prescribed in the regulations of the school?—I never heard that it was.

Appendix, N° 82.

Further Examination of John Doyle, Tuesday, November 2d, 1824.

DID you ever know of any other instance of a boy being punished for having made a complaint against the master, on account of the management of the school, excepting the one mentioned when you were here last?—Yes.

John Doyle,
2 Nov. 1824.

Describe who it was that complained, and in what manner, and what took place in consequence?—A boy named Thomas Best; he had no time to write a letter in the school-room, or he would not be allowed to do it; if the master caught him writing a letter, he would read it; and if there was any thing of consequence in it, he would stop the letter; and the boy wrote it in the weaving shop, when the boys were at work; he wrote a complaint against Mr. Hines up to the board, and the letter was stopped by Mr. Adamson, or some of the clerks; and they wrote down to Mr. Hines about the letter; and first Mr. Hines beat Thomas Best, and another boy of the same name as me, John Doyle. I cannot say it was exactly for writing up; but he had malice against him for it; and if he had got a complaint against the boy he would not have beaten him, if he had not done that; and I conjecture it was about writing the letter to the board.

When did this happen, as nearly as you can recollect?—After I had been there about a year.

Did you see the letter before it was dispatched?—No, I did not.

How did it come to your knowledge that such a letter was sent?—The boys were talking about it.

It was a matter notorious throughout the school, that Best had written this letter?—Yes.

How was it known generally to the boys, that it was returned to Mr. Hines the master?—I believe the master mentioned it to the boy that he beat; he beat John Doyle for it; he had something to do with writing the letter too.

Examination of
John Doyle,
2 Nov. 1824.

The master did not mention it to you?—No, he did not.

Can you tell how soon that punishment of Best took place after the letter was returned?—It was since that punishment was inflicted on the boys when they were ready for church.

When do you believe the letter had been sent to Mr. Hines?—I suppose some time; two days; I do not recollect.

What space of time intervened between the letter being sent by Best, and the punishment of Best and Doyle?—I suppose a week, or not so much.

Were you present when Best and Doyle were punished?—I was.

Can you say what offence the master alleged this punishment was for?—It was not for having complained; it was for some fault they had committed.

Can you remember what?—No.

Are either Doyle or Best at Santry now?—No, they are out of the school.

Did the boys at Sligo, pass their time on Sunday, in the way in which they are directed to do, by the orders and regulations of the Society?—Sometimes they used and sometimes not.

In what respect used they to disobey the orders of the Society?—Mr. Hines used, if he was in a passion on a Sunday morning, if he saw the school-room dirty, to make it be washed; and one of the ushers, Mr. Graham, spoke to him about it; he said, "it is Sunday morning;" and he said he did not care whether it was Sunday or Saturday.

Whose duty was it to wash the school-room?—The boys.

Used the boys always to go to church?—Yes; they used, unless on a very stormy day; if he was in a passion, he would stop several of them at home, and make them write copies in the school. There was another instance, he had a pile of webs to sell to the merchants, and the merchants would not give him his price, and shewed him a great many faults; and he got into a passion, and went into the weaving shop, and looked over the webs; and when he came to the least fault at all, he would send down the boy and beat him, and he would look over the task book, and do the same.

Appendix, N° 83.

Examination of Robert Robinson, Friday, October 29th, 1824, who was called in; and Examined on Oath.

Robert Robinson,
29 Oct. 1824.

WHAT age are you?—Twenty.

When were you first admitted into a charter school?—In the year 1811.

Into what school were you admitted?—Sligo school.

Where do your parents live?—In the county of Sligo.

Are they Catholics or Protestants?—My father is a Protestant, and my mother a Catholic.

At what age were you admitted?—I was between eight and nine.

Had you ever been at chapel before you went into the school?—No.

Had you ever learnt the Catholic catechism?—No.

Had you been educated as a Roman Catholic child?—I had no education at all.

Had you no knowledge of the Roman Catholic Religion before you went there?—No.

When did you leave Sligo?—In the year 1819.

Are you now at Clontarf school?—Yes, I went there last July, for the benefit of the salt water.

Have you been at Santry?—Yes.

Are you out of health?—Yes.

Are you educating for a teacher?—Yes.

Have you ever been in any other charter schools except Sligo and Santry and Clontarf?—No.

In what way were you treated at Sligo?—I had no reason to complain; I was treated very well there.

You were well fed there?—Yes, very well.

And well taken care of when you were ill?—Yes.

Was it the practice of the school for the boys to be taught to weave?—Yes.

Did you learn to weave there?—Yes.

Were you a good weaver?—Middling; I was not long at it; I was about a year and a half at it.

Did you ever see any thing in Sligo school different from what you have seen in the other schools; any practice in the management or treatment of the boys, different from what you have seen in the other schools?—Indeed, I cannot say any bad treatment, unless that the master used sometimes to use unnecessary severity towards the boys.

Have you ever seen him punish boys more severely than it is the habit to punish them at Santry and Clontarf?—I have.

Have you ever seen the boys at Sligo punished by other persons than the master?—Yes, by the usher, and the foreman that they used to keep over the weaving boys.

Have you seen them beat the boys?—Yes.

Had the foreman any thing to do with superintending the instruction of the boys?—Yes, he used generally to hear a class in school hours.

What other duty did he discharge in respect to the boys?—He would superintend them in the weaving shop, and tackle their webs for them, and in school hours he used to assist in superintending their education.

Can

Can you tell what it was he used to punish them for?—For not having as much wrought as Mr. Hines would wish; what he would think they would be able to do, and they would not do it.

You mean, if they did not weave as much in quantity as he thought they were capable of doing, he would beat them for it?—Yes.

How used he to beat them; what with?—He used to have a birch rod sometimes.

What else?—I saw him with a strap too; a leather strap.

Was there any other instrument of punishment?—A sort of single, a thin stick; and I often saw him beating them with cords they used to have about the looms.

Were those punishments frequent?—Not latterly; when I was in the school they were not, but sometime ago, when another foreman was there, they were frequent.

Every day, was somebody punished?—In general, every day.

Did you ever see this foreman punish boys for not saying their lessons properly, when he was teaching them in the school?—He had not authority over them in the school the same as in the shop; he would complain of them to the usher or the master.

Had the usher any thing to do with the weaving?—No.

Did you ever see the master's sons punishing the boys?—I never saw them punishing them in form; they might give them a slap or a clout, which they were not allowed to do.

Did they use to overlook the weaving too?—Yes, one of them used, latterly.

Was the weaving a great object in the school?—It was.

Was it the object so much to teach the boys, as that the boys should weave a great quantity; were they satisfied if the boys knew how to weave, or were they only satisfied if they wrought a great quantity?—It should be wrought well, and at the same time as much as they could.

Quality and quantity were both attended to?—Yes.

Did you ever see the master strike a boy with his fist?—I do not recollect; I often saw him using the boys ill; seizing them by the neck, and knock them down; he frequently did that; I do not recollect any particular instance.

How, by the neck?—He used to get hold of their neck, and knock their heads against the boards, or any thing in the way; and I often saw him give them clouts on the jaw.

What do you mean by a clout?—A slap on the jaw with the hand.

Is this mode of seizing the boys by the throat, a punishment you ever saw had recourse to by any other master?—No.

Used the boys to dread it much?—They used.

Did he ever seize you so?—No, he did not, not that I recollect.

What effect used it to produce upon the boys, this mode of pressing them?—It used to stupify them in a great measure, and they would stagger after it.

Did you ever see any boy faint away under it?—No.

Used these punishments to be most frequently inflicted in the school room or the weaving room?—In both; in the school, if they committed a fault there, he would seize them so; and in the weaving room, if he found any thing the matter, he would do so there.

Do you know the hours at which the boys ought to rise at the different times of the year?—Yes; in summer they ought to rise at six, and in winter at seven.

Used they at Sligo to rise at six and seven in summer and winter respectively?—When I went there first they used to rise when it was dark in the winter; they used to have candles in the school room when they were at their tasks.

Was it earlier than seven?—O yes.

What task were they at when they rose so early?—Spelling and reading.

Were they in the winter always called up to rise before their time?—Not always; some mornings earlier than others.

What was the object of getting them up earlier than the regulation?—That the school business might be done as soon as possible in the morning, that they might go to work.

What time used they to go to work?—They used to go to work after they had taken their breakfast.

Was that according to the regulation sent down from the Society?—According to the regulations sent down from the Society, they ought to go to work at half past nine in winter, and summer also.

How long did they continue at work?—Till twelve; and then they ought to go to school from twelve till one, and get dinner then.

Was that the course pursued at Sligo; or used they to go to work earlier than half past nine?—They used to go to work earlier than that.

Used they to continue longer than twelve?—Yes, till twelve; that was the rule of the Society, they should go to school at twelve, but they used to be at work till dinner time.

Was that day by day, or only now and then?—Day by day.

What used you to do after dinner?—From the year 1811, when I was put in, until the beginning of the year 1815, the boys seldom used to get any play at all only of a Sunday, they should play from one until half past two, and then go to work again and stay till five; but after 1815, when there was a change brought about, they used to get more play after dinner and after breakfast.

How long used they to play after dinner, after the year 1815?—I could not tell precisely the time; they should get until half past two.

Used they to play as long as till half past two?—I do not think they used, some days they might; on other days the bell would be rung before that.

Examination of
Robert Robinson,
29 Oct. 1824

When was Mr. Thackeray's inspection of that school, in 1815?—No, in 1817.

What caused the change in 1815?—There was an usher there, and he had a quarrel with the master, and brought some complaints against him; and after that there was a great reformation in the school, there was a local committee held about it.

Was that before Mr. Thackeray, came or after?—Before; I think it was 1817 when Mr. Thackeray went round first.

How long ought the boys to continue at work in the evening?—Until five in the evening.

What ought they to have done after five?—To go to school at five.

Used they to go to school at five?—They used latterly; generally; they used some times not to go to school at five, it would be near six before they went.

They continued at their weaving longer than they ought, according to the regulations?—Yes; but latterly they used to attend school more regularly than when I went there first.

Did they continue at work longer than they ought, according to the regulations of the school in the evening?—Yes, before 1815, they used to be labouring more than they ought; but after that they used to attend school more regularly.

As far as you are able to judge, in comparison with the other schools you have been at, do you think the boys were well taught in reading, writing and religious instruction?—I do indeed think they were.

Did many boys elope when you were there?—No, they did not.

Were the boys more dissatisfied there than at the other schools you have been at?—They were.

Did they consider themselves as unhappy there?—They did.

Did you ever know any complaint made there to the catechist?—Yes.

By whom?—I know it was very customary to make complaints; I do not know what satisfaction he gave them.

Did you ever know a boy of the name of Connolly complain?—I did.

Is there any thing particular that marks it in your recollection?—I remember his complaining of a board day; when the boys were asked, whether they had any complaints, they all stood in ranks, and were all dismissed but him, and he made a complaint of the usher for beating him.

What happened in consequence?—He got a very severe beating in consequence of it, and he was confined; I cannot tell what the gentlemen said to him; one Mr. Stokes it was to whom he made the complaint in particular.

You do know he was beaten for it?—I do.

Did you see him beaten?—Yes; I cannot say it was for making the complaint; they made it out it was not true; that he had no reason for it.

He was beaten that evening?—He was.

Were you present when the punishment was inflicted?—I was.

Was it very severe?—It was.

Did you ever see any boy at Santry or Clontarf punished so severely?—No, I cannot say I did.

Did the boy appear to suffer by it afterwards?—No, he did not.

Was he able to go to the school and to his work the next day?—He was.

Do you remember any boy attempting to make his escape, after he had been severely punished?—Yes, I remember a boy of the name of Pat. Leonard; he ran away when Mr. Hines was punishing him; he was going after him through the yard, and the back gate was open, and he got away, he pursued him but he did not get him again; there was also Lawrence Powel who was attempting to make his escape, he was caught upon the top of the gates.

Had he been punished?—No, not before, but he was afterwards.

Do you remember any other boy attempting to escape after punishment?—No.

Leonard escaped?—Yes.

Was he ever heard of again?—No.

How long ago is it?—To the best of my recollection, I think it was in the year 1816.

Can you call to mind, whether it was a punishment for weaving, or for his lesson?—It was not for the weaving; he had nothing to do with the weaving, he was upon the farm; I was in the weaving shop at the time; I do not know what he was punished for.

Under those circumstances, how did it happen there were so few elopements?—Because they were so well secured, and so well watched; the walls were so high, and they used to be kept so close to their business they had no opportunity.

Do you believe, from what you know of their tempers, that many of them would have eloped if they could?—Yes, I believe they would; there was a foreman of the name of White, who used to exercise more severity than Mr. Hines himself.

Have you ever seen Mr. Hines kick the boys?—Yes, I often did.

Used he to kick them when they were upon the ground, or when standing up?—He would knock them down and give them a kick, or sometimes he would hit them when they were standing; he would give them a kick and a box.

Was this conduct of Mr. Hines to the boys, constant and uninterrupted, or only now and then?—It was according to the humour he was in; he used to get into a passion now and then, and he would exercise more severity then, than at other times; and when he was out of that passion, he would treat them very well; it was generally in the heat of passion he used to treat them with such severity.

Did those passions generally come on every day, or how often?—Seldom a week would pass without his being in one of them.

I understand

I understand you to say, you never saw a boy faint away?—No, I do not recollect any boy fainting away in consequence of the beating, it might have been the case.

Did you ever know any boy, except Connolly, punished for having complained?—I used to see boys treated with more rigour and watched, that made a complaint, but not directly beaten for that; in general they were afraid to make the complaint.

What were they afraid of?—They were afraid of Mr. Hines's severity afterwards.

Were you very well treated at Santry?—Yes.

At which were you best treated, Santry or Clontarf?—Santry, I think; but I was treated well in general at both.

Appendix, N° 84.

Minutes of an Examination taken at the Charter School of Stradbally, by John Leslie Foster, Esquire, on the 9th and 10th October, 1824; referred to in the letter of the Commissioners to the Lord Lieutenant.

VISITED the school. It is an establishment for eighty-three boys. There are that number at present in it. Found the house, dormitories, school-room, &c. all in good order, and every appearance of the physical condition of the children being properly attended to. Found that the master was absent, with eight of the boys, at a farm $2\frac{1}{2}$ miles distant: this farm is not held from the Incorporated Society. I sent the usher and mistress out of the school-room, and asked the boys whether they had any thing to complain of. They were at first silent, but on my telling them that I came from the government, to inquire into the state of the school, and that they might depend on being protected if they had any just cause of complaint, cautioning them at the same time against supposing that there was any intention of interfering with the discipline necessary for the management of every large school, some of the boys came forward, and said that they were very cruelly used, but that they were afraid to speak, for that they had complained once to the catechist already, and that the boys who complained, "had been half killed" in consequence. They seemed very anxious to learn, whether I could and would protect them against the consequences of disclosure. Upon giving them the necessary assurances, the facts which they stated were of such a nature, that I thought it necessary to examine their persons, and found them in such a shocking state of laceration and contusion, as made me feel it indispensable to examine into the whole state of the school upon sworn evidence; which is as follows:

Minutes of Examination:
Stradbally School.

Thomas Eustace sworn.—Has been usher for two years and a half; will not swear that the master has taught in the school at any time within the last month; will not swear to six times within the last three months; would not like to swear to as much as 12 times within the last six months. The master was confined to his bed about a month ago; it was a liver complaint. He was attended by Dr. Jacob and Dr. Lawler. He was confined about a fortnight, he is quite well at present; he has been all to-day and yesterday out at the farm, two miles and a half distant, with eight of the boys, trenching wheat. He spent each day during the week preceding, in superintending the farm.

When the boys are punished, it is sometimes by the master, sometimes by witness. The witness has inflicted punishment within the last month, he should suppose in about 20 instances; and within the last week seven or eight times; and yesterday, three times.

On the 8th he punished William Naggs, William Edmonds, John Read and Richard Little; can recollect no others. On consideration, says he believes he also flogged Luther and Dunn, no others; he admits, on my pressing him as to Macartney, (a boy who had complained to me) that he flogged him also; admits also, that he flogged Henry Barton. Their offence was "looking at the police playing ball." Two of the police men had come into the boys ball alley, and begun to play in it; the boys ought to have been, some knitting, and one in the kitchen, and one handing straw to a thatcher, instead of looking at the ball playing. The catechist, the Rev. Mr. Johnson, saw it, and recommended the usher to flog the boys. (N. B. The catechist afterwards contradicted this). The mode of flogging is with a strap of leather, or a rod out of the broom, ordinarily six or eight strokes; admits he gave the boys a dozen for looking at the police. The instrument he used was "a small twigg," he corrects himself, and says, "a branch of a tree;" he found it in the school-room; he supposes the boys had brought it there. He says, Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake were in the school last week, and made inquiries about punishment; swears positively, that he did not enhance the punishment on the 8th, in consequence of any complaints made to those gentlemen.

Reverend Hunt Johnson sworn.—Is catechist, attends at the school (when at home) ordinarily, once a week, sometimes two or three times; was there on the 8th; saw two police men playing ball in the ball alley, and two boys looking on; called for the usher, and asked him why he allowed strangers to come in; did not desire him to punish the boys; has generally found the master in the school, but not teaching the boys; has found fault with him for not doing it; has not marked such omissions in the report book. (I called for the report book, it is full of the usual encomiums, and represents this as "a perfect pattern for all Charter Schools;") believes the master has not taught at all during the last three months; believes his health was the reason; will not be positive that the physician desired the master not to teach the boys; does consider the master in point of health capable of discharging his duties as a schoolmaster; he is a man of very mild temper, an excellent moral character;

Minutes of Examination:
Stradbally School.

character; thinks the usher discontented, and warm tempered. The master has no power of dismissing him; and the ushers of charter schools have usually friends on the managing committee in Dublin, the belief of which discourages complaint on the part of masters; thinks there is a jealousy between the master and usher.

William Lawler, M. D. sworn.—Is physician to the charter school, thinks the master in rather a delicate state of health at present; his complaint a chronic affection of the liver, has had it for many years, and before his appointment to the school; he was confined to his room for about a fortnight early in September; he was capable of attending to his duties as schoolmaster prior to that fortnight. I ask him, whether before that fortnight, and since, he has been capable of teaching for one or two hours a day in the school; he says, "there is not a doubt of it;" considers the children to be well fed, and taken good care of.

Thomas Wallace, the master, sworn.—Has been master four years and a half; holds 29 acres from the Society, 40 acres more adjoining their farm, and 58 more, at two miles and a half distance; has taken boys to the distant farm six times in this harvest, and twice last spring; he goes almost every day into the school, and sees that the monitors are performing their duty; he reported his illness to the Incorporated Society; received no answer; he considers himself now as capable of attending to his duty; (In this I entirely agree with him, the excuse of ill health is quite ridiculous, except in reference to the fortnight above mentioned,) will not swear that he was an hour in the school during the preceding week; does not know how many were flogged on the 8th instant; the usher flogs without reference to him; considers six strokes an ordinary flogging; thinks it was wrong if eight boys received 16 or 17 stripes on that day; does not think the usher sufficiently obedient to witness; thinks him a man of rather a warm temper; admits that he thinks him vindictive, as well as warm; believes the usher may have been actuated in the punishment of the eight boys, by his feelings as to what the boys may have said of him to Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake.

John Fox, a boy 13 years old, examined on oath.—Understands the nature of an oath. Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake were here on the 2d. Witness was flogged on the 5th; he received 17 stripes with a rope; the rope hurts more than the cat; the rope is in the usher's desk. About four weeks ago Philip Foster received above 100 lashes in one day; he was flogged nine times; his clothes were taken down each time, and all for one sum in arithmetic. On the same day Walter Penrose received 67 stripes for the same sum. The usher sometimes uses branches from the elm trees at the door, which he makes the boys collect. It was with such branches that the punishment was inflicted upon the 8th. (I desired him to collect such a rod. It is about four feet long, and the twigs are as thick as my little finger.)

Philip Foster, 15 years old, sworn.—About three or four weeks ago was flogged nine times in one day, for one sum in arithmetic; got 12 or 13 stripes in the first flogging, and 6 or 7 in each of the subsequent ones.

Thomas Eustace, re-examined.—Recollects punishing Philip Foster five weeks ago; it was for figuring. He used a leathern strap; cannot tell the number of strokes; believes he flogged him four or five times. Will swear positively that he did not flog him 10 times that day; will not swear that he did not flog him eight times. It was "for a sum in long division." It was over-anxiety to improve the boys that made him flog him so. He flogged Walter Penrose on the same day for figuring; believes he flogged him about twice or three times.

I then searched in the usher's desk, and found both the leathern strap and the cord or rope as the boys called it, which I have kept. Eustace admits that they were the instruments employed.

I then called in the catechist and master, and stated to them the result of the evidence. They expressed their wonder at their own total ignorance of the facts. This appears to me one of the worst features in the case. The master's whole time seems occupied in the management of his three farms; and the catechist's visits evidently do not answer the purposes for which they were intended. I asked the boys why they did not complain to Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake, they said they took them for common visitors, and that if I had not mentioned that I came from government, they would not have dared to complain to me either. I was very much struck with the contrast between the mixture of sullenness and terror which marked the deportment of these boys, and the comparatively free and lively air which distinguished the children in the various classes of day schools which I have lately visited. I wish that I could add, that this extreme severity was in any degree redeemed by the proficiency of the children.

I examined the two head classes, consisting of about 20 boys, and I have in no other school found children so extraordinarily ignorant. They had their catechism and exposition very well by heart, but appeared to me to attach little or no meaning to the words which they repeated; and if taken out of the beaten routine of questions were quite unable to answer. Seventeen out of the 20 declared they had never heard of St. Paul—boys of 13, 14 and 15 years old. When I asked who he was, their answers were, that he was "a Saint," "a wise man," "a prophet," "one of the twelve disciples," &c. One boy was sufficiently informed on the subject; the remaining two had some confused notions about his history.

279

One half of the 20 had no idea whether the word "Europe" meant a place, a man, or a thing. Only three boys in the school could name the four quarters of the world.

Only two boys in the school appeared to me to have ever heard of Job; and only one of these could give any account of his history.

I explained to the master that I had no other powers but those of inquiry; but that I felt it my duty to express my apprehensions, that it would not be safe to allow the usher any further power over the boys; leaving it to him to determine on his own responsibility, whether he would not take the management of the school into his own hands, until the attention of the Incorporated Society should be directed to its condition.

(signed) J. Leslie Foster.

I think it right to add, that the boys declared that they liked both the master and the mistress; and I have no reason to doubt that they are mild and humane.

Minutes of Examination:
Stradbally School.

Appendix, N° 85.

Copy of a letter from the Rev. Hunt Johnson, Catechist of Stradbally Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society; dated October 15th, 1824.

Dear Sir,

I ENCLOSE the report of the local committee of this school, on a transaction, which I suppose has been reported ere now, to the committee of fifteen; if any further inquiry or information is thought necessary, it would be very satisfactory to me, and to the other members of the local committee, that the committee of fifteen would authorize some persons in whom they have implicit confidence, and who have experience in matters of the kind, to come down here and examine minutely, every circumstance connected with this and every other part of the establishment. I hope there will be no delay in sending a steady and capable person down, as usher.

Your faithful and obedient servant,

To James Adamson, esq.

Hunt Johnson.

Aungier Street, Dublin.

Letter from the Rev. Hunt
Johnson, to Secretary of the Incorporated
Society.

Appendix, N° 86.

Report of the Local Committee of Stradbally Charter School, dated October 15th, 1824; referred to in the preceding Letter.

THE local committee of Stradbally charter school, having held two meetings, the first on Wednesday October 13th, and the second, on October 15th, for the purpose of minutely investigating what degree of culpability might attach to Thomas Wallace, master of said school, touching the reprehensible severity, that it now appears, has been for some time past practised by the late usher, Thomas Eustace, on a deliberate examination on oath, of boys that had a proper sense of the obligation of the same, as well as of said master, reports as follows:—

That the personal conduct of the master and mistress appears to be marked by kindness, as well as attention towards the children under their care, so that they feel it but justice to acquit him altogether of having been intentionally instrumental to the introduction or continuance of such severity; that they conceive, however, that such a course of severity could not have taken place, had the presence of the master in the school-room been as frequent as it should have been; and had the necessary work of chastising the children been restricted by proper rules. They, therefore, respectfully recommend to the committee of fifteen, that a book be kept in the school, in which the head master shall, on each day, make an entry of the length of time, during school hours, that he has been actually present in the school-room; that he be instructed to be ready to attest the truth of the same, if necessary, on oath, and to have it open to the inspection of the catechist, or any other member of the local committee.

Further, that the master do keep another book, in which a regular diary shall be kept of the offences committed by any of the children, the degree of punishment inflicted, and of the name of the individual by whom it was inflicted. They consider it but justice to state, that the keeping of the last-mentioned book was first suggested by Thomas Wallace, the master.

That they wish to call the attention of the committee of fifteen, to the urgent necessity of immediately appointing a steady usher in the room of Thomas Eustace who has withdrawn himself,

(signed)

*Pierce Moore,
Henry Brereton,
Ham^m Morgan,
Thomas Harpur,*

*Jeremy Marsh,
Edward M. Taylor,
Hunt Johnson.*

Report of the Local Committee of Stradbally School.

Appendix, N° 87.

Copy of a Letter from Thomas Eustace, Usher of Stradbally Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society; dated October 19th, 1824.

Sir,

I BEG you will have the goodness to lay the enclosed memorial, together with a letter from the Right honourable Lord Henry Fitz-Gerald, before the honourable committee of fifteen.

Y 2

I think

Letter from Tho^s Eustace, to Secretary of the Incorporated
Society.

Letter from
Tho^r Eustace,
to Secretary of the Incorporated
Society.

I think it but justice to lay before the board, a statement, as to how I have been treated by a Mr. Leslie Foster, one of His Majesty's Commissioners of Education; been unprecedently driven out of my situation, without an order to that effect from the honourable board.

I therefore humbly appeal to the humane consideration of the honourable committee of fifteen, that they will not cast me upon the world with my family, through the combined malicious stories of a few foolish children.

I beg leave to remain, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,
To James Adamson, esq. (signed) Thomas Eustace.
Secretary.

Appendix, N^o 88.

Memorial of Thomas Eustace, Usher of Stradbally Charter School; referred to in the preceding Letter.

To the Right Honourable and Honourable the Committee of Fifteen, of the Incorporated Society, for promoting English Protestant Charter Schools in Ireland.

The Memorial of Thomas Eustace, Usher of Stradbally Charter School.

Most humbly Sheweth,

Memorial of Thomas Eustace,
Usher of Stradbally
Charter School.

THAT memorialist has been acting in the capacity of usher in the Clontarf, Strangford and Stradbally charter schools, for nearly eight years last past, during which time his conduct has been such as to merit the approbation of every person connected with the said respective establishments; as may be seen by a reference to the several reports of each school, particularly that of Stradbally, in which memorialist has been acting in the above capacity these two years and a half last past.

That, on Saturday the 2d instant, two of His Majesty's Commissioners of Education, Messrs. Blake and Grant, visited the Stradbally charter school, and having inquired into every particular matter, particularly that of the education of the children belonging to the establishment, departed, expressing their approbation as to the manner in which said establishment had been conducted.

That, on the following Saturday and Sunday the 9th and 10th instant, another of His Majesty's Commissioners, a Mr. Leslie Foster, also visited the above establishment, who also expressed his approbation of matters in general, with the mere exception of the chastisement of the boys.

That, on the day prior, 8th instant, five or six boys were detected by the catechist, in company with some police men in the Ball alley, and same being contrary to the express orders of the Society, the catechist not only expressed his disapprobation to memorialist in the strongest manner, but also made a report, in the report book, to the same effect; and that, on account of the report of the catechist, and the conduct of the boys on that occasion, memorialist thought himself fully justified in inflicting corporal correction on such boys as were found so offending.

That, on said 9th instant, being the day Mr. Foster visited, the marks of correction so recently inflicted were of course obvious, and then Mr. Foster was pleased to examine such boys as he thought proper, particularly a boy of the name of Foster, who fabricated a multiplicity of falsehoods and slander against memorialist, on account of correction he had received about five or six weeks prior, on account of his persevering in stubbornness and obstinacy, in not either answering, or giving memorialist any explanation why he would not do so, after receiving the same from the class to which he belonged; and that the correction he received on said occasion, was by no means as severe as he represented, but merely resorted to, in order to conquer his perverseness, and make him yield to compliance; for it must appear evident, had memorialist at any one time used any thing like cruelty, he would have easily made a conquest.

That when the honourable committee of fifteen will consider the many difficulties memorialist had to contend with, the sole education of the children devolving upon him; and when it is also considered the approved state in which those children were found in, by the said respective Commissioners, each of whom expressed his approbation in the most approved manner as to the education;—memorialist thinks there ought to be some small allowance made, if at any time, through over-anxiety, but by no means through cruelty, harshness or passion, memorialist was led to inflict any degree of undue correction.

Wherefore, under the foregoing circumstances, memorialist humbly hopes, that your honourable board will refer to the local committee of said school, who alone can be competent to draw a just conclusion of memorialist's conduct, competency, &c. And memorialist also hopes, that after his long services in the respective establishments under your honourable board, that your honourable board will not throw memorialist and family upon the world, through the mere false representations of perverse and misled children, who, though upon oath, and in whose sight not knowing the difference, was not a preventative from falsehood. However, the great and principal objects of memorialist, in preferring this memorial, is in order to redeem his character, on which alone his present and future happiness depend, and that of the establishment, from the calumnies cast upon it by such false and unfounded representations.

And memorialist and family will ever pray.

(signed) Thomas Eustace.

Appendix, N° 89.

Minutes of an Examination taken at the Charter School of Castledermot, by John Leslie Foster, Esq. on the 12th October 1824; referred to in the Letter of the Commissioners to the Lord Lieutenant.

LUCIUS HARVEY sworn.—Has been master twelve years; was bred a shoemaker; cannot swear how the catechist (Mr. Fitzgibbon) performs his duties, owing to his own absence from the school-room. He (the master) has a spitting of blood, and the doctors advised him to avoid the heat of the school-room. Within the last three months he has not seen or known of the catechist performing his duties; he has come sometimes to the school. The portion of witness's time given to the school is "very trifling;" he walks in and out of the school, and sees the usher do his duty; it is the usher that inflicts punishment; the master does not know at what time; did not hear of any within the last fortnight; admits irregularities in the dietary; potatoes given instead of bread and stirabout; lays the blame upon his miller; he set that matter right about a fortnight ago.

Minutes of Examination;
Castledermot
Charter School.

William Speer sworn.—Is usher; thinks the catechist has not performed his duty of examining the children once within the last three months; does not think the master taught six times within the last three months, until the last fortnight.—(N.B. About a fortnight ago, Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake were visiting the charter school of Monastereven, where the mistress of the charter school of Castledermot happened then to be; she returned to Castledermot in the course of the night; the children were called up to put the house in order, and the reform in the dietary took place on the following morning); during the last fortnight, the master has taught almost every school hour; witness flogs but seldom—one to-day—two yesterday—ten on Thursday last; witness had been for four days in Dublin by order of the committee, and on his return, the monitors reported thirty boys to be flogged for various offences; the usher selected ten; will swear, that for three years last he has not exceeded eight blows at a time; thinks the dietary is in general observed; admits it has been improved during the last fortnight.—(N.B. The boys complain of being very ill fed, and cruelly beaten by both master and mistress, whom they represent as continually striking them when they meet them!)

Mrs. Harvey sworn.—Is schoolmistress; does not beat the boys; "gives them an odd slap;" admits improvement in the dietary within the last fortnight; admits, that she said lately to the boys when at dinner, that she hoped they would not be so ungrateful as to say any thing to the Commissioners about the stirabout; admits that the boys have sometimes bad milk; it is impossible to comply with the rules about milk.

James Conry, a boy, aged 15, sworn.—About three weeks ago, he and White, a foundling, were at work in the garden; they had got very little breakfast, and were very hungry; they ate a raw cabbage; the master caught them, and flogged them severely; witness received sixteen stripes in the usual manner, and six blows on the head with a stick; his head was much cut and bruised; it is so still (I feel it); White eloped in consequence of the beating that he received.

James Kirwan and John Smith, each 14 years old, sworn.—Saw White and Conry punished for eating the raw cabbage; White received ten, and Conry sixteen strokes; the usher beats the boys oftenest, but the master, the most severely; the usher for offences in the school-room, the master for other offences.

The Master re-examined.—Cannot say why White ran away; admits he had flogged him; it was "for idling and doing mischief in the garden."—I ask what kind of mischief: "he ran through cabbage plots, and broke them down;" he punished two that day "for the same crime." I ask him what crime; he says, "by crime he means cursing, swearing, lying." I ask him for which of these he punished these two boys, and caution him to take care of his answer; he says, it was "for running through cabbage plots;" will not swear they broke two cabbages; will not swear they did not eat the cabbage which was broken.

Nothing can be more unfavourable than the manner of this witness, he appears to me to be a man of violent passions; and I have not myself any doubt that the boy's story is the true one. He did not strike Conry intentionally on the head; "in his struggling," admits he may have received blows upon the head

I asked the boys generally in the school-room, as to the performance of duty by the catechist; they agree, that though sometimes in the school-room, he has never once examined them.

I examined the boys as to their proficiency; and am happy to say, that it is in all respects a contrast to what I observed in the charter schools of Stradbally and Cashel. The boys in the head classes have evidently had their understandings exercised as well as their memories; they understand the meaning of all common words; they are well acquainted with the history both of the Old and New Testament, and have no difficulty in referring to remarkable passages and texts. It is scarcely necessary to add, that the usher is entitled to the sole credit of this result.

(signed) J. Leslie Foster.

Appendix, N° 90.

Examination of the Rev. Richard Lorenzo Fitzgibbon, Saturday 13th November 1824, who was called in; and Examined on Oath.

Examination of
the Rev. Richard
Lorenzo Fitzgibbon,
13 Nov. 1824.

ARE you the catechist of the Castledermot charter school?—I am.

How long have you held that situation?—I should think close upon either eight or nine months.

Who was catechist before you?—A Mr. Mawe, who was my predecessor in the cure of Castledermot.

Did you receive your appointment from the Incorporated Society, or take it as a matter of course?—I received orders from them to act as catechist, and his Grace the Archbishop was pleased to approve of it; the official document I never received.

Did you enter upon the duties of that office?—Not for a month subsequently.

Did Mr. Hamilton ever act as catechist, with due authority from the board?—Never; the interval might be a fortnight.

Have you ever received any part of the allowance from the board?—I have received the regular two quarters salary.

Was any return transmitted from Castledermot, for the last half-year?—No; I received the document only eight days ago.

For the half-year ending the 24th of January was any transmitted?—Yes, it was sent to the committee of fifteen.

Is there not the catechist's report?—Never, that I was aware of.

Have you ever sent any report?—Never.

Have you ever communicated with the board in any manner or form, as to the state of the school?—Yes, as a member of the local committee; the catechist acts as chairman; the quarters accounts are passed, and the repairs of the house, that are necessary, are inserted at the end of the printed sheet, in a space left for that purpose; it is not by a communication from the catechist; the catechist is only a member of the body.

Has he no duties, except as a member of the body?—He has a duty separate; but he has no power, except in conjunction with them.

Is there any rule upon the subject of the duties of the catechist?—I believe there is; I saw it by chance; it was never sent to me; I have always acted from my own reason, never from printed instructions; when any predecessor was leaving, I asked him what his duties were, and he told me, I was expected by the board to oversee the school, so far as the dietary, and the repairs of the house, and the moral guardianship of the children; that I was expected to visit about once a week, and to be generally the inspector of the institution, and to enter my visits in the report book.

Did you acquaint yourself with the rules and regulations of the Society, as to the dietary?—Not from the book, but the printed regulations.

Does the master feed the children according to those rules?—He does, as far as I have been able to learn; I have endeavoured to time my visits, so as to be there before the time the children went to dinner, to see whether they were fed according to that rule; but I was afraid to make it the general practice, lest there might be a preparation; the proportion of my visits before dinner might be as one to three.

When you visit the school, do you enter your visits in the book?—I do.

Always?—It is my practice; but I have paid visits I have not entered.

Is a transcript of that entry duly transmitted to the Society?—It is, for I read in a passage in that book, when I saw it in the hands of the master who holds it, that the catechist's salary was 10*l.*; that the other was an increased allowance for punctuality in attending the school; I learnt that but three weeks ago; I have always put down my reports by that direction, not knowing whether they went to the board or not; I thought it was for the inspection and gratification of the public as they went by.

Do you know, whether any such was transmitted for the half-year ending January 1824?—I know it was not in the paper I signed; I heard an abstract was regularly sent from the report.

You are not aware, that it was your duty to compare that with the book?—I should have thought not, if I had been asked the question, being so much interested in it.

You are not aware, that you are called upon to sign any transcript of those entries?—No, I am not.

Has the report for the half-year ending the 24th of June last, for the Castledermot school, been transmitted?—I believe it was; I recollect being present with Mr. Codrington to pass the accounts.

With that half-yearly account, do you know whether there was an abstract transmitted of the different visitations you had made to the school?—I know nothing of that abstract, except that I heard it was sent up regularly; I was never asked to sign it; if I had been, I should have recollected it, for the delicacy of my situation would have been upon my mind.

From whom did you receive your two quarters salary?—From Mr. Adamson, the secretary, and I gave a printed receipt.

Do you send up any report independent of this formal one?—No, I do not.

Have you from time to time written any letter to the Society, reporting any thing that has occurred?—There was nothing to report till this last fortnight, except what was mentioned as to the repairs of the house.

283
Examination of
the Rev. Richard
Lorenzo Fitzgibbon,
13 Nov. 1824.

In whose hand-writing is that report [handing a paper to the witness]?—It is mine.

Was that prepared by yourself, or did the master suggest the materials for it?—There is a kind of skeleton report, which I saw there, supplied by the Incorporated Society, showing the questions necessary to be answered, and the material points to be embodied in the report.

The master himself had nothing to do with the arrangement of this report?—He never suggested any thing for the report.

[The report of the catechist, visitor to the Castledermot charter school, for the half-year ending the 25th of December 1823, was handed to the witness.]

Are you acquainted with the hand-writing of Mr. Mawe?—Yes.

State whether that signature is in the hand-writing of Mr. Mawe?—There is no signature there in Mr. Mawe's hand-writing; it is the most peculiar hand-writing I ever saw, and Mr. Hamilton's too. I would know them any where.

Did you ever inquire of the master of the school, what the laws of the Incorporated Society were, which you were bound to follow?—I recollect, upon a meeting of the local committee, a question happened to arise upon some formula of the school, and Mr. Harvey was called in to ascertain how far the directions of the Incorporated Society went; and he then produced this book from a drawer, which I then saw for the first time; and upon looking at the index, he pointed out the subject in question, which I forget. I looked at it three weeks ago, and I saw something about catechetical examinations, which I was very desirous to have in the school, and the town. There is a vast deal said as to those examinations, and I said "they are very particular in the directions." He said several of these laws were obsolete; not implying that those laws were as to the catechetical examinations.

Did he state that upon any other occasion, when you have found fault with him for not obeying the laws of the Society?—Never, to the best of my recollection; I must observe, I never had occasion to find fault with him.

Can you state how often, and for what periods, you have visited the school since you undertook the duties of catechist?—They were varied. I should think upon the average, I visited it about once and a half, or twice a week; but I was unfortunately knocked up by an accident; my horse stumbled and threw me upon the pommel, and that kept me for near two months in bed. I was up and down, but I was in extreme pain for six weeks. I could not have walked there if they had made me a present of the school-house; and since the ophthalmia has got into the school, I have been excessively knocked up in my sight, so as not to be able to read for ten minutes.

Have you always attended to your duty in church?—Yes; but with great pain.

Is the church farther from you than the charter school?—No, much nearer; the church is just opposite. I live not more than 200 yards from the church.

Were you attended by medical persons during the whole of that time?—I was.

How long is it since you have been sufficiently recovered to attend the school, without inconvenience?—Indeed, I should think a fortnight or three weeks. I am still using strong styptics to prevent the water oozing from my eyes, which causes, for the moment, total blindness.

How often have you catechised the children?—Very often; I cannot tell how often exactly. I catechised them more frequently at first, on account of the confirmation there was to be.

A dozen times?—Yes; more than that. I prepared for the confirmation in the catechism, seven of the boys from the first class.

Was it previous to your indisposition, or subsequent to it, that you catechised the children?—Previous.

Have you catechised the children since your indisposition?—Yes, I have.

What was the longest period during your indisposition the children were without being catechised at all?—I believe five weeks; but during that time the visits were paid; but I was afraid to go into the school-room.

You did not come in contact with the children at all?—I was afraid.

Did you, during the three months previous to the last three weeks, catechise the children?—Yes; oh, certainly.

Are you prepared to say, you have been there more than once during that time?—Yes.

And catechised the children?—Yes; there were 30 boys that were not affected.

Did you catechise those that did not come from the Foundling Hospital?—Yes.

What became of the others?—The boys affected with the ophthalmia, were placed at one end of the school with the window shut, for the purpose of excluding the light.

How many times could you state, positively, you did go into the school and brave the ophthalmia, and catechise the children for three months previous to Mr. Foster's visit?—I believe but twice; it might be more, it was not less.

Would you be sure it was twice?—The impression on my mind is, that it was, I did not keep any note of it.

With reference to the three months preceding that, how often did you catechise the children?—I believe once or twice; my impression is no more.

Did you enter those visits in the book?—Yes, I did.

Did I understand you to say, that your duties had only commenced eight months ago?—I think but eight months. The third quarter will not be due till Christmas of my salary.

During that period of time in the six months you have alluded to, what number of times did you inspect the dormitories?—I never went into the house without going into them.

Did you inspect the dormitories whenever you catechised the children?—Yes; every

Examination of
the Rev. Richard
Lorenzo Fitzgibbon,
13 Nov. 1824.

visit I paid I went through the house, and took up the clothing from the beds, and examined the sheets and the bed covering.

How often do you think you visited when you did not catechise?—I should think a third out of the sum of my visits I catechised.

What was the sum of your visits?—Perhaps six-and-twenty or eight-and-twenty.

What makes you think that?—I generally calculated, when I missed a week, I paid two visits afterwards. After my indisposition I paid two visits in the week. I made them more frequent, after I heard that the visits were to be once a week; whenever I missed, the impression upon my mind is, that I made it up in more frequent visits afterwards.

What number of your visits did you record in your visitor's book?—I think there were no more than three; but there were three to the best of my recollection I did not record.

Do you know whether the master is in the habit of attending the school, or whether he leaves the school instruction to the usher?—I believe he leaves the school instruction to the usher. I know it.

Entirely so, without any interference on his part?—Very little; I saw him once or twice mending pens, and when the usher was indisposed, I saw him attending to the writing.

Is he capable of attending to the duties of the school?—He is incapable from want of health.

Does the management of the school devolve upon the usher and the mistress?—Entirely so; how far he may act as overseer in the house I am not aware, but the education entirely depends upon the usher.

What aged man is the master?—He looks to be 55; between 50 and 60.

What is the character of his indisposition?—I think expectoration of blood.

Has it been of long standing?—I am not aware of that, but since I have been there, he has been at the point of death two or three times; physicians attended him from Wexford and Carlow.

Have you been apprised of the visits that have been lately paid to the school by some of the Commissioners of this board?—Yes, I have.

Have you had any conversation with the schoolmaster or mistress, since the visit of Mr. Foster?—I have.

What did the master inform you?—He informed me that he and the mistress were examined upon their oaths, and that the usher was examined upon his oath; that he was asked, as well as I can recollect, as to the dietary, and particularly as to the punishment of the boys; and with respect to myself, he was put to his oath as to how many times he recollected I had been in the school; and he said he had seen me four or five times, but his indisposition prevented him being in the school-room. I do not think I asked the question, but if I did, it was a very natural one.

What information did he give you as to the punishment of the boys?—The sum of what he said was this; he commenced by saying, that the boys had, every time they were punished, preserved the switches they were beaten with; and he said, that the Commissioners examined his wife with respect to beating a boy with a broom or besom, that they clean out the hall with; he refused to clean out the hall, and she struck him twice or three times with the besom; she was examined as to the weapon she used, and how many times; that the usher was also examined as to the beating the boys, and the switches were produced.

"Switches" was the word, was it?—Yes, I think so.

Not "rope" or leathern thongs?—No, "switches," or "rods," he said the boys had put by the switches they were beaten with, switch or twig.

Did he inform you of any particular punishment that had been inflicted upon two boys of the names of White and Kelly?—I think not.

Did he inform you, that he had beaten Kelly for breaking a cabbage in the garden, and eating a part of it, until the boy had eloped in consequence of it?—No.

Did he inform you he had flogged Kelly, by giving him 16 severe stripes, and had given him six blows on the head with a stick, by which blows the boy's head was found by Mr. Foster to be severely cut and bruised, in consequence of the same trifling offence?—No, I never heard of that.

Did he tell you White had eloped?—Yes, I noticed that.

Did he tell you the cause?—He did not.

Did he tell you he had beaten him just before?—To the best of my recollection he did not.

Did you ask him?—I believe I did not; I asked him the cause.

Did you ask the boys the cause of the elopement?—I did.

Did they tell you?—They said they could not tell.

Did you ask them in the presence of the master?—Yes, I did; when a boy elopes, I ask the master, Are you conscious of any bad treatment that could induce him to elope; to which he answers generally, No; my intentions were to examine the boys that had eloped, as to the facts.

Did you examine White?—No, he never came back, to my conviction.

Did you ever have a complaint made to you by any of the boys?—Yes, one boy complained he did not get enough to eat.

When was that?—Not long ago.

Since Mr. Foster's visit?—Yes, on my last visit.

What was the result of that complaint?—I thought the boy was wrong.

Did you ask Mr. Harvey, whether he had any ground of complaint?—No; but I asked the boys about him.

285
Examination of
the Rev. Richard
Lorenzo Fitzgibbon,
13 Nov. 1824.

In the presence of the master?—Yes; I asked them if they got enough.

Did that boy complain in the presence of the master?—Yes.

Do you know whether the master has been more in the school, in the last three weeks or a month, than before?—I know he has been constantly in the school for the last fortnight, because the usher is ill.

Before that, was there any alteration?—I believe not.

Has there been any alteration in the dietary?—I am not aware of that; I heard there was an alteration in the diet; I heard that Speer the usher, was examined upon the subject, and I heard there was a change upon the subject, in consequence of a visit paid by the mistress to Monastereven, the fortnight before; I heard that was admitted by the usher on his examination.

Did you ask Mr. Harvey yourself, what he had said of your attendance?—A while ago I said I did not think I did ask the question, but it was a natural question for me to ask; the reason I think I did, though I am not certain, is that it was a perfectly natural one.

The master never told you he had inflicted this punishment?—No.

Nor that he had admitted it before Mr. Foster?—No.

Have you been informed by the master or mistress, that they feel themselves deprived of their authority, and are unable to punish the boys if they commit offences?—That is the conviction that they addressed to me; and I took that book of the rules out of their hands, and read to them before the boys for their example, that the master and mistress were allowed to give due correction; I read it to them, explaining, that they had that power, and should exercise it.

Did Mr. Harvey and his wife send to you at that time?—Oh, no; decidedly not.

You happened to be there accidentally?—Yes, I went up to pay my visit; I asked as a matter of course, was there any complaint, and Lambert I saw eying me for some time; he was a boy I liked very well; I asked Lambert, have you any complaint.

When was this?—The last visit I paid to the school; it was Wednesday; the visit after the elopements of the three boys; it was this very week.

Was Mr. Hamilton with you?—Yes; it was either Tuesday or Wednesday I went up, and then heard for the first time that the three boys had eloped, and I told the master I thought he had acted improperly in not giving me notice.

Did you ask him the reason of the elopements?—Yes; and he attributed it to the insubordination of the boys since the Commissioner's visit; and one of the boys, the mistress said, set himself in a way as if provoking her to strike him, and she was prevented on account, I think she said, of the Commissioners attributing it to them.

Have you ever understood from the boys, that Mrs. Harvey had a habit of striking them when she met them—Never; and she herself declared the very reverse.

Not even to give them a clout?—Yes; she said I might give them a shove in this way, but never chastised them, except in this instance, when she used the besom. I think she said the besom itself, not the stick of it.

The boys complained to Mr. Foster, of being cruelly beaten, both by the master and mistress, whom they represented as continually striking them when they met them. Mrs. Harvey, upon being sworn, states she does not beat the boys; she sometimes gives them an odd slap?—I think her words to me were, "I might give them a shove."

You have mentioned, that three boys eloped; when did they elope?—It was Tuesday night at four o'clock.

It was on the Wednesday you were at the school?—Yes.

Do you know their names?—In such a number it is impossible at once to recollect them. I can identify one; the identification I have of one is, that he was the boy that looked as if he wanted to provoke Mrs. Harvey; that boy was Smith, another was Moore. I was surprised at one of the elopements, having lately filled up his indenture paper, being about to be apprenticed to a hosier at Castledermot. I took the boys together, and I spoke to them, I am sure for half an hour, upon the new scene of life they would get into; that they were leaving the school and getting into the world, and that I would take as much care as I could of them; I shewed them the bounty of the Incorporated Society, and the necessity of their taking care of their moral duties.

And they forfeited all those advantages by their elopement?—That was not the point I admonished them upon.

But they gave up all those advantages?—Yes; I was astonished they gave up so much.

And notwithstanding the impressions you made upon those boys, as to the benefits of the institution, they suddenly eloped, and by their elopements have lost all the advantages set before them?—Yes.

Do you not conclude there must have been some cause for it?—Yes.

Have you been able to find out that cause?—No; for want of time. The boys have been brought back, and are now in solitary confinement by my order.

Have you received any directions as to the disposal of the three boys who have eloped?—Yes; from the Archdeacon of Dublin. I was too late for the board, and I met Mr. Pomeroy and the Archdeacon, and spoke to them upon the subject; Mr. Pomeroy thought a board should be called upon the subject, the Archdeacon did not consider that necessary, but he desired me to have the boys flogged for their elopement, and treated according as the rules of the Society direct; he said he could not account why they should elope; I told him one of the boys that eloped, had friends in Carlow; and in accounting for the elopements of the Foundling Hospital boys, that they were nursed in the country, and saw the lime cars

Examination of
the Rev. Richard
Lorenzo Fitzgibbon,
13 Nov. 1824.

passing from the parts of the country where they were nursed, and had the means of running away.

Was there any other person who attended the school to catechise the children, during the period of your non-attendance?—Mr. Hamilton paid many visits; and subsequently to Mr. Mawe leaving the school, he came to me, and said, You must pay great attention to these boys, and make them answer better; but he never would make a report in the book, he has an objection to it.

Did you request him to attend?—No, he did not attend from my instruction; he had a great deal of business in the parish.

When did you first learn it was the Society's regulation, that the catechist should attend once a week?—About three months ago; and I then learnt it from looking at the book; but I heard from Mr. Harvey before, I should go there once a week or once a fortnight.

Appendix, N° 91.

A RETURN of Twelve Boys in the Charter School at Sligo, showing their Ages, and the time of their Admission, as stated in the Register; and also their Ages, as extracted from five successive half-yearly Returns, transmitted by the Master.

NAME.	Admitted in Register.		Age, as stated at time of Admission.	Age, as reported 25 June 1822.	Age, as reported 25 December 1822.	Age, as reported 25 June 1823.	Age, as reported 25 December 1823.	Age, as reported 25 June 1824.
	Year.	Month.
Thomas Ludden -	1814	April -	6 $\frac{1}{4}$	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$
Maurice Behan -	1815	March -	7	13 $\frac{3}{4}$	14	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15
Daniel Kenzie -	1813	June -	7	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	16	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	15
James Kenzie -	1813	D° -	6	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	13 $\frac{1}{2}$	14
Patrick Grady -	1815	March -	7	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	16	16
John Phaire -	1812	February	6	16	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	17	16	16 $\frac{1}{2}$
David Porter -	1812	November	7	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	16	16 $\frac{3}{4}$	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	17
Denis Gallagher -	1815	April -	6	13	13 $\frac{1}{2}$	14	13	13 $\frac{1}{2}$
Terence Gallagher -	1814	September	6	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$
John Dimby -	1811	December	6	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	16	17 $\frac{1}{4}$	15	18 $\frac{1}{4}$
Philip M'Gann -	1815	March -	8	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{2}$
James Gallagher -	1816	March -	8	14	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	15	15 $\frac{1}{4}$

Appendix, N° 92.

Report of the Local Committee of the Sligo Charter School.

Report of the Local Committee of the
Sligo School.

AT a meeting of the local committee of the charter school of Sligo, held on the 11th of October 1824: Present, Colonel Dodgin, in the chair, Reverend Gabriel Stokes, Gowan Gillmore, Esquire, Reverend James Elliot, pro catechist;—

An order of the committee of fifteen, bearing date the 6th of October instant, being laid before us, we report upon it as follows: we recommend the undernamed boys to be discharged, having fulfilled the usual period of apprenticeship as weavers, and well qualified to earn their own support as journeymen:—Thomas Ludden, aged 16 years, in school 10 years; Maurice Behan, aged 16 years, in school 10 years; Daniel Kenzie, aged 16 years, in school 10 years; James Kenzie, aged 15 years, in school 10 years; Patrick Grady, aged 16 years, in school 10 years; John Phaire, aged 17 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, in school 10 years.

We also report the undernamed boys as well qualified to earn their own support as agriculturists: David Porter, aged 18 years, in school 12 years; Denis Gallagher, aged 13 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, in school 9 years; Terence Gallagher, aged 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, in school 10 years; John Dimby, aged 19 years, in school 13 years; Philip Mc Gann, aged 15 $\frac{1}{2}$ years, in school 10 years.

These boys, as also the weavers, we recommend to get the usual apprentice fees, to enable them to set out for themselves in life.

We recommend that James Gallagher, aged 18 years, and in school 8 years, be dismissed, he having been convicted of eloping from school on Thursday last, for which he was this day punished, by the order, and in the presence of the local committee, being also a boy of bad character in other respects.

We strongly recommend to the committee of fifteen, that Mr. Gordon, the usher, be removed to some other school, as it appears to the committee that he has not kept the boys of this school at the proper distance the usher ought to maintain, and they now presume upon it; the committee at the same time think Mr. Gordon will conduct himself with greater greater propriety at another school. Mr. Gordon has expressed to the committee his wishes for it himself; and we request an experienced usher may be sent as soon as it can be effected, to supply his place.

(signed) Daniel Dodgin, Lieu^t Col. 66th Reg^t Chairman.

Appendix, N^o 93.

Examinations taken by the Local Committee of the Sligo Charter School; referred to in the preceding Report.

AT a meeting of the local committee of the charter school of Sligo, held at said school, on the 11th day of October 1824: Present, Colonel Dodgin, in the chair, Gowan Gillmore, esquire, J. P. Rev. Gabriel Stokes, Rev. James Elliott, pro catechist;—

It having been mentioned to the committee, that a boy of the name of James Gallagher, had eloped on the 7th instant, and had been retaken on the 9th; it was resolved, that those persons who might be called, should be examined as the committee should think proper.

James O'Donnel examined.—Is three years in the school; has been employed as keeper of the outside gate; remembers the 7th of this month, on the evening of which day James Gallagher eloped from the school; Gallagher told him he was desired to follow the master to the land; that he opened the door for him, and then closed it; opened the door again to see which way he was going, then saw him, not going towards the land, but in the contrary direction, towards Sligo; can give no reason why he locked the door and then opened the gate again to see which way he was going; did not tell the usher, Mr. Gordon, or the mistress, that he had seen him going in a direction quite contrary to that he alledged he was going; no alarm whatever was given, till a woman, who had seen him running through Sligo, called and mentioned she had seen Gallagher in a way that induced her to suppose he was eloping.

James Gallagher sworn and examined.—Is near 18 years of age; in the school eight years; says he eloped from the school in consequence of what Colonel Dodgin said in the school; the words Colonel Dodgin made use of were these, "that every boy who behaved ill, should be punished, but that every good boy should be treated with the greatest kindness, and protected; and that it was the duty of the local committee to see every justice done to the boys, and that any just complaint should be attended to, and redressed; but that a boy could not be guilty of a greater crime, than making a frivolous or an unjust complaint;" wanted to get money from the usher previous to eloping; went to the porter, told him he was going to the land, to get the keys; O Donnel objected to opening the door, as he did not think he was sent; he asked Mr. Gordon for five pence when he went away from school, as Mr. Gordon owes him four shillings, and he knows Mr. Gordon owes Duncan ten shillings.

Was the above the only reason of your eloping?—I thought the master would do nothing for me.

John Duncan, aged 17, nearly 10 years in the school, sworn.—States that the usher, Mr. Gordon, owes him eleven shillings, which he gave to him to keep for him, at different times; the money was given occasionally by Mr. Hines, for good conduct; and that Mr. Gordon has repeatedly called him Mr. Conscientious, and Mr. Consequential, and he has no doubt it was in consequence of his not joining in complaints against the master; that Mr. Gordon has repeatedly beaten him, since he complained to Mr. Armstrong against the usher. The boys, when the Commissioners were sitting, asked him if he had any complaint against the master? he replied, no; that he had been always well treated; on that, Pat Gredy struck him on the cap, and said, "further out of that," he, Gredy, then knocked off his cap.

James Gallagher recalled.—States, that the master, Mr. Hines, has given him money several times for good conduct; and that Mr. Gordon, the usher, owes him four shillings; one shilling and eight-pence for a knife, and the remainder he lent him; it has never been paid by Mr. Gordon.

A true copy, compared with the original.

(signed) William Armstrong, Catechist.

Appendix, N^o 94.

Extract of a Letter from the Rev. William Armstrong, Catechist of Sligo Charter School, to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society; dated Sligo, October 23d, 1824.

Sir,

IN reference to the following words of the Report of the local committee of this charter school, dated 2d September, 1824, viz.; "they regret to find the accounts of their attendance on public worship have not been as regularly kept as they ought to be." To prevent misconception, I beg leave to state, that the boys have attended public worship, accompanied by the master and usher, &c. with the greatest regularity, save in the one instance mentioned in the report; the censure of the committee applies to the accounts of such attendance. The dress, healthful appearance, order and cleanliness of the boys, as they moved to the church on Sunday mornings, has been a sight peculiarly grateful to the heart

[Z 2]

Extract of a Letter from Rev. William Armstrong, &c. to the Secretary of the Incorporated Society.

Extract of a Letter from Rev. William Armstrong, &c.
to the Secretary of the Incorporated
Society.

heart of every observer who wished well to the Charter School Society, and the established religion.

May I beg to repeat to you my former request of a copy of the book of general orders and regulations of the Charter School Society, as I have not yet obtained one, though I have been catechist since last January, and have been unwilling to take away from the school for my private study the copy belonging to the master.

Having, in consequence of severe illness, been unavoidably absent at the past meetings of the local committee, held in consequence of the recent complaints; having acted by deputy on those occasions, I beg leave here to add my hearty assent to the high character of Mr. Hines, given by the local committee. And I must say, without fear of contradiction, where his character is known, that it would be most difficult to find a man capable of filling his situation with the same ability, spirit and conscientious feeling, which he has proved himself to be possessed of.

May I request you will take a favourable opportunity of recalling to the attention of the committee of fifteen, the Report of the local committee, dated October 11th, recommending the removal of certain boys therein named, as it is very difficult to make them attend to their respective branches of industry with proper diligence, and to keep them in that order necessary to the well-being of the school.

With an anxious hope that the most minute investigation of the affairs of this school will place it in the estimation of the Charter School Society, as high as I feel confident it deserves to be;

I am, Sir, your very obedient and very humble servant,

W^m Armstrong, Catechist.

To James Adamson, esq,

Appendix, N° 95.

Examinations of John Phair, David Porter, Daniel Kenzie, James Kenzie, Thomas Ludden, Phillip M'Gann, Maurice Behan, Denis Gallagher and James Gallagher. (Sligo Charter School Boys.) Tuesday 30th of November 1824.

John Phair, was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows:—

Sligo Charter
School.

Examinations of
John Phair, &c.
30 Nov. 1824.

HOW many years have you been at Sligo school?—Twelve.

How old do you believe yourself to be?—Between seventeen and eighteen. I came in in the year 1812.

Were you admitted in Sligo school first?—I was,

Have you ever been in any other?—No, never.

How long have you been a weaver?—Three years. I was for three years past weaving.

When did you use to begin to weave in the morning?—He generally used to have them down pretty early in the morning; between seven and eight. The weaving time is until half past twelve, and from that to one at the school, and sometimes they would not be called in till six or half past six, and then from seven the schooling.

Did you use to begin at six?—We used to be weaving until six in the evening.

How soon after dinner did you go to weaving?—At two.

Did you dine at one?—Yes; and at play from that till two.

Used you to do this every day?—Yes, we used.

Did you always begin to weave on every day at two o'clock?—Yes.

And weave till six?—Yes; sometimes they would come up at half-past five, and sometimes not till six. They would have the boys out to the farm.

Can you read well?—I can.

Can you write well?—I can write middling.

[It appeared by the return sent from Sligo, dated 20th of October 1824, that the witness was then 16½ years old, and had been admitted the 20th of February, 1812.]

Used the master to attend in the school to teach the boys?—Very seldom; only when he would be in a passion, he would come in in a passion, with a horsewhip, and if he found a bad stroke in a copy, he would beat them with the horsewhip. It was not once a year that he came there, but since Mr. Blake and Mr. Grant have been there, he has attended very much in the school.

Were any applications made by any body to take you as an apprentice?—There was this month, a man came from Cork, to apply for six boys, and he was a long time taking them up; and there was an order came down, and I was put out the next morning; we did not know we were to go until the moment we were called down stairs.

Have you ever been severely beaten by the master?—Yes.

On what account?—For not weaving more than could be expected of me, and only what I did one day. I always strove to keep up a regular task, that was two yards. I one day did two and a quarter, and he came up and asked me could I do no more than two and a half; I said I never did more than that; but since that, he brought me out and beat me very severely, and whipped me several times.

Did he seize you by the throat?—He did.

Were the weavers willing to take the boys?—Yes; but some of them were so long, that they had to go to the weavers; there was no other man came but the weaver. Once in a half-year, a man would come to apply for a boy.

Is John Reid a servant with Hines now?—No, he is not; he is turned away.

How long since?—When Mr. Hines came to Dublin,

Was he an apprentice?—He was foreman of the weaving shop.

Is Ellen Black the cook there now?—No, they turned her away.

When did they turn her away?—When the master was on his travels; the very night the master came into Sligo she was gone.

Who was the female servant before Ellen Black?—Her name was Susan Lital.

Did she go to church or chapel?—To the chapel.

How do you know that?—She told the boys so, and she told me so; she was striving to get back.

Who was servant before Susan Lital?—I believe there is one there at present, of the name of Killigrew.

Is she a Roman Catholic or Protestant?—A Roman Catholic.

Is she there now?—Yes, and another, of the name of Daly; she is there now. If there is a Protestant generally they will strive to find every thing against her, and to turn her away.

Do you know any reason for that?—For fear she should shew the boys any kindness, or wash their clothes for them; I suppose that is the reason.

Was Frances Lital a servant there at the same time with Susan Lital?—She was.

Was she a Protestant girl?—Yes, she was; she was trained up in the charter school, and used to go to church, and her sister to chapel.

Has Patrick Grady left the school?—Yes; he is bound apprentice to a weaver in Newtown Stuart.

Did he know how to weave well?—He was a boy the master used to like very well; he generally wove from four to five yards a day, at his leisure, and not to work hard.

Was he bound apprentice since two of the Commissioners were there?—Yes; it is not much more than a month since. It was the 8th of October he was apprenticed out.

How are you off at Santry?—I like the place very well; but the school is very full. I should like to get a trade, if I could.

Are your parents alive?—I believe my father is.

Where does he live?—At Castlereagh,

Do you suppose you could get your livelihood as a journeymen weaver?—I do not suppose I could; I would not be strong enough for the weaving business.

What should you have done if you had been discharged from the school?—I should come up to the Society, and speak about it.

Suppose the Society had discharged you as a boy that knew how to weave?—I would have bound myself to another good trade.

How could you do that. If you were out of school now, could you bind yourself to any thing; who would take you?—I do not know.

Could you find any body that would take you?—No, unless I would send to Castlereagh where my father was; I do not know what he might do.

Did you ever know any boys discharged from the Sligo school, and 5*l.* given them to provide for themselves?—No, never.

Could you now provide for yourself if you had 5*l.* given you?—No, I do not think I could.

Has any alteration taken place in Hines's mode of inflicting punishment since the Commissioners were there?—He has left off thrapping and the whip.

Does he strike them with his fist?—Yes, he does sometimes.

What instrument does he use now?—He uses a rod now; he strikes them as hard as he can draw his hand down, and calls out the number quite loud; he gives them six strokes, and calls out the number.

Appendix, N° 96.

David Porter was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows:

David Porter.

HOW many years have you been in the school?—Twelve.

Do you know when you were admitted?—No, I do not.

Were you admitted unto the Sligo school first?—Yes.

Are you a child of Roman Catholic or Protestant parents?—Of Protestants.

Do you know how old you are?—I think I am eighteen and a half.

How long have you been taught to weave?—I was not at the weaving business at all.

Have you been lately employed upon the farm?—Yes.

Were you employed on the farm when you ought to have been reading and writing, according to the rules of the school?—I was.

Were you upon the farm all day?—Yes; generally we were.

From day to day?—Yes; when the ploughing was going on I would be there a fortnight.

Can you read and write well?—I can read and write pretty well, but not so well as I should.

Can you say all your catechisms?—I can say the best part of them.

Of how many catechisms?—Mann's Catechism and the short catechism.

Can you spell?—Yes.

Can you say the multiplication table?—Yes.

Can you do a sum in the rule of three?—Yes.

How came you not to have been bound out apprentice long ago?—I could not get any man that would take me to a trade.

Did Mr. Hines seek to find a person who would take you as an apprentice?—He did about half a year ago.

Sligo Charter
School.

Examination of David Porter,
30 Nov. 1824.

What exertions did he make to get an apprenticeship for you?—He made no exertions only spoke to a smith of the name of Ralph Johnson to take me, and the man was not willing to take me at the rate the fee was paid.

Would any body else take you but a smith?—There was a nailor going to take me, up at Neelcanock, and I refused going to him.

Did you want to go as a farm servant?—No; at that time I knew the farm business very well.

Could you hold a plough?—Yes.

Did Mr. Hines behave well to you?—Yes.

Have you any thing to complain of?—No; except the schooling.

Did he neglect your schooling?—Yes.

Did he punish you often?—Yes, he did.

But not oftener than you deserved it?—I am sure I did not deserve it near as often as I got it.

Have you any mother living?—Yes; and two brothers.

Is your mother a Protestant?—Yes.

Where?—Below Enniskillen, three miles from that; at the end of Lord Belmore's demesne.

Do you ever write to her or hear from her?—I heard from her three months ago.

Did she write, or did you write?—I had written to her.

Can she write?—She did not write; but she sent word by a boy that lived beside her.

Appendix, N° 97.

Daniel Kenzie was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows :

Daniel Kenzie.

HOW old are you?—I am eighteen.

When were you first admitted into the school?—Between ten and eleven years ago.

Were you admitted into Sligo?—Yes.

[The witness appeared by a return to have been admitted June 8, 1813.]

How many years have you been a weaver?—I am upwards of three years being a weaver, but I was in the shop some time; I was not weaving all the time; I was in the shop; I was a winder, learning to be a weaver.

How many yards of cloth could you weave in any day?—In a long day, sometimes I used to weave four, sometimes five yards; I wove six and a half one day.

Were you kept pretty closely to it by the master?—Yes, when I wove the six yards; but when we were weaving of ticking for our trowsers or lining, we used to be always at it.

All day long?—Yes.

Was there no schooling?—Yes, but I never was at it.

Were you forced to get up before the usual hour, to weave?—We used to get up in the morning and weave all day; I never got any schooling.

Why you in particular?—Because I was the best weaver; me and another boy used to be continually at it.

Can you read and write well?—No, I cannot.

Can you spell well?—No.

Can you do sums in arithmetic?—Yes, some.

Can you do a sum in the rule of three?—No; I only went as far as reduction.

Did you never go as far as multiplication?—Yes.

And division?—Yes.

Could you do a sum in division now?—I would.

Could you get your livelihood as a journeyman weaver?—I would; there are some boys that leave Sligo school, that are as good as any journeymen.

How came you not to have been bound apprentice?—I was bound just a month or two before Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake came to Sligo, and the day they came I did not wish to go to the man on account of my being weaving so well, and I did not wish to go to the man. When the master was in Dublin about this business, the man came for me, and my indentures were filled; I was not asked about it, whether I would go or not; my indentures were half filled, and they called me up to know how many years I would go to him, and I said I would not go at all, and the man went away; and they called a board upon me, because I did not go at all; and I was told by several people he was a very bad master, and a very great drunkard.

Where did he live?—At the town of Ballymoate.

Were you kindly treated by the master?—Very often I was not; at other times I was.

Has the cook been turned away?—Yes.

Who is come in her place?—Mrs. Daly.

Has she a son in the school?—He was in it just a few days before she came to it; his name was Thomas Daly; he was bound to Parson Elliot.

Is she of the Roman Catholic religion?—She is.

Is that known to the committee?—No, it is not; and after this cook was turned away, they brought another girl who almost poisoned us; and we spoke to Dr. Johnson the next Sunday, and he came, and she went away that Sunday, on account of his speaking to the master about her; we did not like her.

What was her name?—Susan Lital.

What objection had the boys to her?—She used to give us our victuals so very dirty, and every thing else.

291

Appendix, N° 98.

James Kenzie was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows:

YOU have been injured by the kick of a horse?—Yes.

Has it injured your sight?—Yes, it has.

Can you do as much weaving as another boy?—There are some boys that do more than others.

How much can you weave?—I used to weave sometimes a yard and three quarters a day.

How long have you been in the school?—Eleven years.

[This boy appeared by the return to have been admitted the 18th of June 1813.]

What part did you come from?—Roscommon.

Have you any friends living there?—Yes, an uncle, and a sister and brother,

Are they Roman Catholics or Protestants?—Protestants.

Would they take care of you if you went to them?—I think they would.

Do you know how many webs of cloth Mr. Hines used to sell in a year?—The last year we saw 150 webs go to be bleached.

How did you know there were so many as that; used you to count them?—We used to count them.

Were those webs all wove by the boys?—Yes, and no other one.

Did he not keep a man in the workshop?—Yes, to look over us; but he never gave us any assistance, than to tie a web that was broken; or bend a web.

How many yards is a web or piece?—Fifty-two.

Sligo Charter
School.

Examination of James Kenzie,
30 Nov. 1824.

Appendix, N° 99.

Thomas Ludden was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows:

HOW many years were you at Sligo charter school?—Ten.

[Upon reference to the return from Sligo, it appeared that the witness had entered the school on April the 30th, 1814.]

How old do you believe yourself to be?—About sixteen.

Can you weave?—Yes.

How many yards in a day?—I used to weave three; when I used to be at work over hours, I used to weave six.

Were you frequently employed over hours?—No: when the master would be in a hurry with the web, sometimes I used.

Were you ever punished for making a complaint?—No.

Did you ever make a complaint to the catechist, or any one of the local committee?—Yes.

What of?—The boys used never to get any play hours at all.

Was that a true complaint?—It was.

Was any thing done in consequence of it?—There were two boys confined.

In consequence of the complaint?—Yes.

Why were you confined, because you complained?—It was said that one of the boys had hired the rest to elope, and he was confined for it.

Had that any thing to do with the complaint made by you?—Yes, it was a complaint made by the boys that were coming up here to complain.

How long ago are you speaking of?—A year last January.

Did you know a boy of the name of Best at Sligo?—I did.

Did you ever hear of his making a complaint?—I heard of his writing a letter.

Did you hear of any thing happening in consequence of it?—No.

How long ago was it?—About 11 or 12 years.

It was before you were in the school?—I cannot tell whether it was before I was there or afterwards; I heard of it.

Do I understand you to say, that the weavers were never allowed any time to play at all?

—At the time we complained to Mr. Armstrong, we had not from May till January.

Was that last January?—January before the last.

Have you been allowed more time for play since?—We have.

Have you been allowed your regular hours of play?—We have since the Commissioners were there last.

Were you before the Commissioners were there?—No.

Were you allowed your regular quantity of food?—It used not to be weighed; we used not to get new milk, or half a pint of milk any time unless in summer; in winter time we never got two noggins of milk; it would be nearly all water the boys used to get; they never used to get new milk at all, but since the Commissioners were there, they get it on Sunday mornings and Sunday night, and at dinner Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Saturdays.

Have you been punished so severely since the Commissioners were there, as you were before?—The master never beats any of the boys, he only flogs them with the birch.

In the regular way?—Yes.

Any harder than usual?—Yes, harder than he used; but he only gives them six blows.

Have you ever had six blows since the Commissioners were there?—I got five from the usher, the local committee ordered me, for going to write a letter to Mr. Magee.

You and Gallagher had written a letter?—I had copied it out on a slate.

[Z 4]

Did

Thomas Ludden.

Sligo Charter
School.

Examination of Thomas Ludden,
30 Nov. 1824.

Did they find you out?—Yes, the foreman Bazely found it out.

Did he tell the master?—Yes.

What happened upon that?—The committee were there that day, and the master told the committee about it.

What was done?—They ordered me to be flogged.

For writing that letter to Mr. Magee?—Yes.

What was the letter about?—Mr. Magee was down there last July, and he recommended me to be a candidate in Santry school, and I heard that none of the boys that complained ever got to Santry; and I was going to write to Mr. Magee about it.

To put him in mind of his promise?—Yes.

Was the letter ever written on paper?—No, it was not.

State as nearly as you can what it contained?—It was nothing only putting him in mind that he promised to send me to Santry, to get me brought there; I did not mention any thing about that none of the boys would be allowed up; only putting him in mind that he promised to get me brought up.

In your letter, did you find any fault with the master?—No, I did not mention any thing at all about the master.

Did they rub it out?—Yes, they did.

Can you remember the words of it?—No.

Did any of the local committee examine you upon the subject?—They did.

Did the local committee read the letter?—No, they only read a little of it; they could not read it.

Did they ask you to read it to them?—No.

Did the master represent to the local committee, that your letter was a complaint not founded on fact?—No, he did not.

Do you understand that it is an offence to write a letter at all?—I knowed the master did not like it, but I did not know there was any order against writing it.

Did the committee express to you their disapprobation of your conduct?—They did.

What did they say?—Mr. Elliot said I was a very bad boy; and Mr. Dodgin said so too.

How did he know?—I do not know; Mr. Armstrong, the catechist, always said I was a very good boy.

How have you been used at Santry?—Very well.

Was any fault found with you, or any of the other boys, in consequence of what passed at Sligo?—No.

Do you expect to be appointed a candidate?—If I could see Mr. Magee, I think I should; I do not think I should without seeing him.

Appendix, N° 100.

Philip M'Gann, was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined, as follows.

Philip M'Gann.

HOW old are you?—I think I am about seventeen.

[This boy appeared to have been admitted into the school in March 1815.]

Do you know when you went into Sligo school?—About ten years ago.

How long have you been employed as a weaver?—I never weaved any.

Were you employed upon the farm?—In the garden.

Were you in the school the regular hours?—No, I used not to be.

What has been your attendance in the school this last year, how often in a week, and how many hours in a day?—I used not to be in it some days at all.

Were you ever a week together without being in the school?—No.

Were you ever a week together without reading or writing?—I was often a fortnight without being writing, or three weeks, because I used to be sick; and I was so once a long time.

When you were well, used you to be a long time without writing?—No.

Can you read and write very well?—Not very well.

Do you remember Ludden being flogged for writing?—Yes, about writing a letter.

What was it?—There was the major in the yard, that ordered him fifty blows.

For what?—He forged writing; he was writing a letter to Mr. Magee.

How was he found out; what was done upon it?—There was a foreman there, and he found it out; he got the slate from him, and he told the master about it.

How was it found out; how did Major Dodgin know any thing about it?—They held a board on it.

Was he flogged?—He was.

How many blows had he?—I really do not know.

Was it in the school, before you all?—Yes.

Did you all know what he was flogged for?—Yes, we did.

What have you been employed upon principally at the school?—In the garden.

What would you wish to pursue?—I should like to go to a trade.

Appendix, N° 101.

Wednesday, 1st December 1824.

Maurice Behan was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined as follows:

DO you know how old you are?—I think between 17 and 18.

Do you know when you were admitted into the school?—On the 22d of June 1814, I was admitted into Clontarf school.

How long have you been at Sligo?—Ten years, next March.

Have you been well treated there?—No; we have not been well treated, we have been better treated this two months past than we used to have been.

Were you well instructed there?—No; we have been better these two months, since the Commissioners were there, than what we used to be.

Can you read well?—Pretty well, I can.

Can you write well?—Middling,

What cyphering can you do?—Interest.

Can you spell well?—I can.

Do you ever read any books for your own amusement?—No; we never read any histories, we always read the Bible there.

Have you any parents living?—Yes; a father.

Where does he live?—In Kevins Port.

Is he a Protestant, or a Roman Catholic?—Roman Catholic.

If you left the school should you go to him?—No; I should not wish to be a Roman Catholic.

Must you be a Roman Catholic if you went to him?—No.

Are you a good weaver?—I am.

Do you wish to follow your trade as a weaver?—No.

Did any body wish to take you as an apprentice?—My brother was up with me last Sunday, at Santry, and he was intending to ask leave for me to go and get a trade for me.

What sort of a trade?—He was telling me he could get a shoemaker for me, or a servant. Mr. Devine was telling me there was an Institution going to be in the Foundling hospital, like as it is at Santry, and teachers were going to be reared in it; and he was asking me should I like to go to it.

Were you called upon to do much work upon the farm?—No.

What number of yards can you weave in a day?—If I was at it all day, four yards.

Were there many days in which you used to weave four yards?—Yes, I used.

Were you frequently punished for not weaving enough?—Yes; we used often to be.

Were you yourself often punished for it?—I was.

Have you ever been punished so as to receive much injury by the punishment?—Yes; Richard Hines, the foreman, beat me very much once, and pulled me through the looms, and blood-shot my eyes; and when the catechist came to the door of the room, I told Richard Hines to tell him of it, and when he went to the door he gave me another box of the eye, and my eye was blood-shot nearly a month after; and the foreman beat me very much the same day.

You never told this to the Commissioners?—No.

Why did you not?—Mr. Hume was in the room, and he told me to go out, as you bid me.

You were before Mr. Hume again?—Yes.

Why did not you tell him?—He told me he only wanted to hear things relating to the master.

What was the cause of your receiving that beating?—I was a very short time on the loom, because I did not do so much as they would wish me.

Have you any reason to know what quantity of linen is made for Mr. Hines by the boys in a year?—There used to be some years 150 webs; he would get them bleached, and send them up here to Dublin.

How came you to know there were a hundred and fifty?—The book was there in which they used to keep the account.

Have you ever seen that book?—Yes.

Do you know to whom he sent the webs in Dublin?—I understood it was his sons he sent them to here, two attornies.

How many webs could you make in a year?—If I was doing for myself, I could make twenty six; if I had a loom set up, and every other thing, I could make a web in a fortnight.

Were every one of those webs made by the boys?—They were.

Did Bazeley and Read weave, or only teach you?—They only assisted the boys.

Neither of them kept a loom to himself?—No.

How long have you been in the weaving shop?—Three years.

Have you been weaving all that time?—I was a warper about five years.

You mean preparing the threads?—Yes.

And you have been at the loom actually three years?—Yes.

And you have been eight years since you first began to work in the weaving shop?—I was from the time I went to the school in the shop; I was five years warping, and a short time winding, before I went to the looms.

[A a]

Do

Sligo Charter
School.Examination of Maurice Behan,
1 Dec. 1824.

Sligo Charter
School.

Examination of Maurice Behan,
1 Dec. 1824.

Do you mean to say you have been three years actually with the shuttle in your hand?
—Yes.

What schooling did you use to get?—In the winter time, the breakfast would be so early we would get no schooling; we were all the morning put up to work, and we had no schooling.

What was the reason of that?—He said he had got the better of all his enemies, and would let us know he would keep his situation as well as ever; and he was trying to make us all tremble under him, as he formerly used.

He has not been so severe since?—No; but he would give a boy six blows if he found out any fault, and count out the blows, and give him it as hard as he could.

Do you remember a boy of the name of Best, at Sligo?—Yes.

Do you know of his writing a letter to the local committee?—I was not there at the time; I heard of it.

What did you hear of it?—That he wrote a letter to the committee here, and it was sent to Mr. Adamson, and he sent it to the master.

Was it known amongst you so as to prevent you from writing?—It was; we knew if we would be seen writing, we would be punished for it, the master would come in at supper, and if he found us writing he would search us.

Has Ludden been flogged since?—Yes.

What was it for?—For writing to Mr. Magee.

Were you in the school at the time?—Yes.

Just state how it was?—He had it on the slate, and he was going to write it on paper, and the foreman saw him, and took the slate and shewed it to the master, and the master locked it up, and had a board the next day held on him; and the boy was ordered to be flogged, by the committee.

Were you all present when he was flogged?—Yes.

And you were told the reason?—Yes, for writing; and Colonel Dodgin said, any boy who would be known to take a pen in his hand to write, he would have him flogged.

To write to any person?—To any person; that the master was to see the letters before they were written to any person.

Did you prepare a letter to write to the Commissioners, at any time; or did you say the Commissioners had told you to write to them?—I did.

Did you write any letter?—No.

Have you any thing else to say?—The usher that is there, is used very ill, he has no life at all.

Who uses him ill?—The master; he says he was the cause of the boys complaining. He lays the blame of it upon him.

Did James Gallagher elope soon after this business?—He did.

What was the cause of it?—The gentlemen of the committee were so much against him, he was coming up here.

Did the gentlemen of the committee say any thing to you, aloud, about punishment?—Yes, Colonel Dodgin did; he said I was one of the boys he got a bad character of; and that me, and a great many others had need to mind ourselves. He told me he would bring over a drummer, and give any boy fifty lashes that would make any quibbling complaint of any trivial matter.

Did you hear him say that?—Yes.

In the face of the whole school?—Yes.

Were you confronted with some other boys before the local committee?—I was.

What was it for?—They laid all the blame upon three of us; the usher, at the time the Commissioners were there, was more on our side than the master's, but since then he is speaking every thing against us.

Your master used to give you money sometimes?—Yes; a good while ago.

How much used he to give you?—A five penny he used to give us.

You bought some pipe-clay with it?—Yes.

What was it for?—To clean our trowsers.

Had all the boys pipe-clay?—No; some of them used to have it because our trowsers were not washed for us, nor our stockings.

Have you always had your three pair of shoes every year?—No; sometimes they would make them so strong I would only wear one pair in a year.

You had your new clothing a month ago?—Yes.

How many shoes had you then?—A pair of shoes was given to me the 13th of September, and two pair were sent with me.

Had not each person three pair of shoes given out?—Yes; there were three pair made for each boy, and they will count them out to us, but they will not be half worn, and the others will be kept till the next year.

Have you never more than one pair in wear at the same time?—Sometimes we have two pair.

How many stockings have you now?—Two pair.

Had you not three pair regularly?—No.

Were they ever washed?—No.

What soap was allowed to wash yourself?—The master would never allow us any soap.

Where did you wash yourself?—In a large pan that was there, full of water.

How often was that water changed?—Every second day.

Were

Were the rules ever read in the school?—Yes, they used to be, a good while ago; they were in a sort of glass thing that was there, and had been there twenty years.

Do you remember a boy of the name of Daly?—Yes.

What is become of him?—He is bound to Parson Elliot.

Do you know his mother?—Yes.

What is she?—She was one of the servants there.

Is she a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—A Roman Catholic.

How do you know that?—I have heard Daly often say she was a Roman Catholic.

Do you know Henry Smith?—Yes.

What do you know of him?—He was sent up to Mr. Hines's son, but he did not keep him, and he is down there now, labouring.

Where does he labour?—On the farm, and in the stable.

Does he work in Armstrong's place?—Yes, he does.

Armstrong has been dismissed since the Commissioners were there?—He has.

Armstrong was an apprentice?—He was; and he was turned away.

What is become of him?—He is working about the country.

Did he serve his time out?—No, he did not; the morning the master came back from Dublin, when the breakfast was brought in, it was almost cold, and he ordered all the doors to be left open, and the windows to be opened, and when I went to shut one down, he ordered me to leave it alone; so that in any little thing he can, he shows us all the spite and envy he can.

Appendix, N° 102.

Denis Gallagher was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined as follows:

HOW old are you?—I believe I am past fourteen.

How long have you been at Sligo?—Nine years.

Denis Gallagher.

[This boy appeared, by the return, to have been admitted into the school at Sligo, the 7th of April 1815.]

Were you at any school before Sligo?—No.

You are brother to Terence?—Yes.

Have you been employed always upon the farm, or in the weaving shop?—I have been in both; I was about a year and a half in the weaving shop at first, and then I was put upon the farm.

Have you any thing particular to say to us?—Not since the Commissioners were there last; that day I spoke to Mr. Grant in particular, and asked to be removed from the kitchen, and he desired me to keep at it for that week, and the master said he would put me from it immediately, and I then went from it; and at the coming on of dinner time about 12 o'clock, the potatoes were, some of them, home from the land, and the rest were not; and they made a black book and put me in it, and said I refused to wash the potatoes; I washed all that was at home, and then I went to the school.

Did you get out of the kitchen at the end of the week?—They called a committee upon it, and Mr. Hume said, I should not be kept from my schooling; and it is now that the kitchen boy is out of the school, and has been ever since.

Have you any thing else to say?—The foreman that is down there, he is a very bad example to the boys; he curses most shockingly. Read was turned away after the Commissioners left.

He told the whole story?—Yes; they suspected he was one of the leaders of the boys complaining, and put the boys up to it. The night the master was coming home from Dublin, they had bonfires at night, outside the gate.

What were they made of?—We could not tell; we were not allowed to look outside; but we saw it outside the windows, and heard the shouting.

Was it the 5th of November?—I cannot recollect the day of the month.

Do not you have bonfires that day?—Yes; but it was after that, I think.

Or before, which?—I think it was after that.

What month are you in now?—This is December.

Was it when he came home from Dublin?—Yes.

And after the local committee sat?—Yes, just after that; when they had the fire outside the gate, they rapped two or three times outside the gate, to get in with them, to bring the people into the house.

Who rapped?—The people that were there.

How do you know this?—There was a boy there that used to be working, and he was telling us the next day who it was that was at it.

Was it your brother that was hit by young Hines with the gun?—Yes; and that night the foreman came up stairs in a great fury; he said he had drank his master's health and happiness, and that he had put down all his enemies under him.

Can you read pretty well?—Yes.

And write?—Yes.

How many pair of shoes did you get at Sligo?—We were allowed three; but some of us used not to wear three.

How many did you wear?—I generally wore two pair out, but not three. I kept a pair of stockings nine months there.

You never washed your stockings?—We had to wash them ourselves, since this business commenced there with them.

Sligo Charter
School.

Examination of Denis Gallagher,
1 Dec. 1824.

They were never washed before?—Yes, they were at first every month, but not since this business commenced; some of the boys have to wash them themselves; they have only one pair, and they have to wash them on Saturday night, and if they have not them ready on Sunday morning, he will beat them; he has orders from the committee to give no more than six blows, and he counts them out as he goes on. The very morning he came home from Dublin, he sent some of us out to clean our shoes, just to let us know he was in his post as well as ever, and that he would keep both big and little under him; and that the Society here were very glad he kept the boys at such a distance from him.

Appendix, N° 103.

James Gallagher was called in, and having been Sworn, was Examined as follows:

James Gallagher.

HOW old do you believe yourself to be?—Eighteen.

Do you know how many years you have been in the school?—I think I am going on nine years.

[It appeared by the return, this boy was admitted into the school the 26th January 1815.]

Are you of Protestant parents?—I do not know whether I was or not; I know I have an uncle a Protestant.

Are you a weaver?—No.

Are the two other Gallaghers brothers to you?—No.

No relation?—No.

Since the Commissioners were at Sligo, have you had a local committee meeting?—Yes.

Since then you have eloped?—Yes.

Tell us truly and honestly the cause of that elopement?—The time the account came down from the grand committee here, the local committee was there, and the master had told them, that we were of a bad character, me and the other boys, and Ludden, and wanted to have us expelled from the school immediately.

Did you hear him say that?—Yes.

To the local committee?—Yes.

In the presence of all the boys?—Yes.

Who did he point out?—Me and Ludden, and Behan, and the other boys that complained; and then one of the local committee made answer, that that was all we would want; but he was to keep us there and to punish us according as the Colonel gave orders. The Colonel said he would bring the drummer down and give us fifty lashes the next fault he found; he said the bad boys were those that complained, and the good boys those that did not; and upon that, I thought I would come up to Dublin, because before that, he had given a good character of me to Mr. Magee and one Mr. Stokes; and Mr. Elliott had given a good character of me to yourselves.

Was that the reason of your elopement?—Yes.

You were coming to Dublin to state your complaint to the committee of fifteen?—Yes; I was coming to Mr. Magee; and when I was taken, I told parson Boyle I was coming to Mr. Magee, and I was examined below, and put upon my oath by the local committee, and I told them I was coming to Mr. Magee, and they would not believe me.

Are you sure Colonel Dodgin said he would have his drummer down, and give every boy fifty lashes?—Yes; any boy that committed a fault.

Do you remember Ludden being flogged?—Yes.

What was it for?—For going to write a letter to Mr. Magee.

Did you work upon the farm?—Yes.

How long have you been upon the farm?—Ever since I went to the house.

Did it interfere with your schooling at all?—I used to be in the school almost every time the boys were there.

You had your share of it?—Yes.

Can you read and write pretty well?—Yes, I can.

Appendix, N° 104.

Copy of a Letter from the Secretary of the Incorporated Society to the Right honourable Henry Goulburn; dated Incorporated Society's house, December 16th, 1824.

Copy of a Letter
from Secretary of the Incorporated
Society, to the Right Hon. Henry
Goulburn.

SIR,—The general board of the Incorporated Society, having taken into their most serious consideration the charges against the master of the Sligo charter school, transmitted to them by order of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, and having gone over the whole of the evidence formerly laid before the committee of fifteen; the Report of the local committee of Sligo school, and the evidence taken by them upon the subject, and also the additional evidence since received; and having personally examined several witnesses;—have come to the enclosed Resolution, which I am ordered to forward to you, for the information of His Excellency the Lord Lieutenant. I am desired to add, that the general board, having taken into consideration the conduct of Thomas Eustace, late usher of Stradbally school, have dismissed him from the situation of usher to Santry school, to which he had been appointed by the committee of fifteen, in the absence of information, since received, as to his unjustifiable severity.

The

The general board will proceed with all possible expedition, to take into consideration the matters referred to them relative to the schools of Castledermot and Longford.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

(signed) James Adamson, Secretary.

To the Right honourable Henry Goulburn,
&c. &c.

297
Sligo Charter
School.

Appendix, N° 105.

Resolution of the General Board of the Incorporated Society, referred to in the preceding Letter.

AT a General Board of the Incorporated Society, &c. held on Wednesday, the 15th day of December 1824.

His Grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin in the chair.

THE General Board having devoted three several board days to an attentive consideration of the evidence respecting the conduct of the master of Sligo school, as well that on which the decision of the committee of fifteen of the 29th of September was founded, as also additional evidence since received, are unanimously of opinion, That the said master of Sligo school should be removed therefrom.

Resolved, therefore, that Mr. Hines be, and he is hereby removed from said school.

Resolved, that the forgoing Resolution be communicated to the Right honourable Henry Goulburn, for the information of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant.

By order,

(signed) James Adamson, Secretary.

Resolution of the General Board of the Incorporated
Society.

Appendix, N° 106.

Copy of a Letter from the Secretary of the Incorporated Society to the Right honourable Henry Goulburn; dated Incorporated Society's house, 22d December 1824.

SIR,—I am directed by the General Board of the Incorporated Society, held this day, his Grace the Archbishop of Dublin in the chair, to acquaint you, for the information of his Excellency the Lord Lieutenant, that the Society proceeded to take into their most serious consideration, that part of your letter which related to the school of Castledermot; and having read the Report of John Leslie Foster, Esquire, one of the Commissioners of Education Enquiry, and the evidence taken by him, upon the occasion of his visit to that school, and having subsequently read the resignation of Mr. Lucius Harvey, the master of that school; the Society were unanimously of opinion, that under all the circumstances, it was most advisable to accept said resignation; the Society have therefore resolved to accept the same, and have appointed next Wednesday for the purpose of electing a master and mistress to the said school.

Upon the subject of the gentleman acting as catechist, whose conduct was adverted to in Mr. Foster's Report, it is to be observed, that no catechist was regularly appointed to Castledermot school, since the resignation of the Rev. Mr. Maw.

The appointment waits for the recommendation of his Grace the Lord Archbishop of Dublin.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient humble servant,

(signed) James Adamson, Secretary.

To the Right honourable Henry Goulburn,
&c. &c. &c.

Copy of a Letter
from Secretary of the Incorporated
Society, to the Right hon. Henry
Goulburn.

Appendix, N° 107.

Examination on Oath of the Venerable the Archdeacon of Dublin, on Thursday, 30th December 1824.

YOU are a member of the Incorporated Society?—I am.

And one of the directors of Erasmus Smith's charity?—Yes.

And a member of the Association for discountenancing Vice?—Yes.

Are you also a director of the Foundling Hospital?—I am; I am also a governor of the Marine School, and the Hibernian School, in the Park.

Do you fill all those offices, "virtute officii;" or in consequence of any particular appointment?—I am elected as a resident clergyman of the town, to all the situations except that of the Marine School; that is official.

Are you a frequent attendant of the committee of fifteen of the Incorporated Society?—Almost constantly.

Have you been so for many years?—As long as I have been a member of the Incorporated Society, which is since the year 1818; during the summer I resided formerly in the country for five months in the year, about twenty-five miles from town; during that time I was not so constant an attendant of course, as I have been latterly, since I have resided nearer town, and can give up more time to it. I generally attend more constantly to these institutions in the summer, because the other governors are mostly out of town; but that institution I almost constantly attend, because there are very few members who do attend.

[A a 3]

About

Examination of
The Archdeacon of
Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

About what number is the average of those members who attend the weekly meetings of the committee of fifteen?—Our weekly meetings average from five to six, and sometimes not even that.

Are they usually attended by the same persons?—They are usually attended by the same persons; they have latterly been attended mostly by the same persons.

Does any inconvenience arise from the circumstance of the business falling successively under the management of different individuals composing the committee?—I should think some inconvenience might arise if there was not always one person who had been present at the previous board.

Has it ever been considered whether it would be desirable to have a permanent chairman of the committee of fifteen?—No, I do not think it has; we have gone by the former regulations; I do not think we ever took that into our consideration. It would be of no use, unless there was some person entirely free from other duties in town, a person specially appointed, that had little else to attend to. I do not think it would be at all in the power of any of the present members to fill such an office.

Have all the gentlemen composing the committee of fifteen, other important duties to attend to?—I think they all have.

Have the goodness to describe in what way the business is prepared and brought before the board?—First; we see the returns from each school; then the numbers of the male and female schools are taken down, and under that head we see the different correspondence; and whatever may be the business of that day, we go through as much of it as we can. It is always prepared by the secretary, who is supposed to be a person that has more understanding and knowledge of the general concerns of the institution than any individual of the committee can have.

In what way is the chairman of the day fixed upon?—The third person coming into the room is always chairman; sometimes it may not be convenient to him to remain there as long as the board sits, and then he requests any other person to take the chair for him. In general the first person coming into the room, compares the minutes of the preceding day's proceedings with the rough minute, and signs the book, and then the business of the day commences.

Are there any sub-committees?—None; sometimes there may be two or three gentlemen appointed to look into any thing special, that it may be necessary minutely to inquire into.

Is it the habit of the committee to refer the consideration of particular subjects, specially to individuals selected for the purpose?—It is not the constant habit, but such things have been done to my knowledge.

Do you happen to remember whether any alterations have taken place of late years, in the rules for managing the charter schools?—No, I do not think there have been any alterations for some time past, since the schools were inspected by Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee. I rather think there were no rules made after Mr. Lee's returns.

It appears amongst the regulations, that no catechist shall be considered deserving the increased allowance, unless he shall send in, every quarter, a report of the state of the religious progress of the several children, distinguishing them into classes; those reports have not been regularly furnished, we have observed?—No, they have not; and I do not know why they have not; we always supposed they were returned regularly, generally half-yearly. The returns must be signed by the catechist. We have frequent reports from them; and whenever any thing is wrong, we refer to the catechist generally, and through him to the local committee; we entirely depend upon them.

Are the half-yearly returns, as furnished from each school, regularly submitted to the inspection of the committee of fifteen?—I think they are; they have not been regularly returned; there have been a great many delays, because many of the country masters have a difficulty in getting the local committee to attend, to sanction their accounts; we have often called for such returns, when they could not be laid before the board; and the only excuse of the master was, that he could not get the local committee to attend. Latterly we have sent round to say, that we would not pay them their money, unless those accounts were furnished regularly, and came up in due form.

As soon as they are returned, are they submitted to the consideration of the board?—Yes; each return in succession, as nearly as we can do it; it is impossible to take them into consideration in one, two, three or four days; but we ask regularly, "Have the returns been sent up and examined, and are they correct?"

To whom is that question put?—To the secretary.

Can you recollect what answer he gives?—Sometimes he says, they have not been returned.

Does he state, that he examines them himself?—He ought to examine them; sometimes he has stated he has examined them; at other times he has not stated it; at other times we have not put the question to him; but we always suppose he has done it.

Are the returns made on oath by the master?—Yes.

Do you apprehend that the oath is applicable to the whole of his return, or a part of it only?—I am not aware how far the oath would affect the return, but I believe thus far it ought to affect it;—he is bound to swear it is a just return of all sums he has received, and the expenditure, and the number of boys.

[One of the returns alluded to, was handed to the Archdeacon.]

Do you observe that a part of the return comprehends the ages of the boys?—Yes; I think he might swear, to the best of his knowledge, as to the ages of the boys, but he might might not be correct; we are, I am sorry to say, often deceived ourselves in the ages of the boys, some of the wretched creatures who apply, are very dwarfish, in consequence of being half starved.

The question does not apply to the real age of the boy, but it appears that a boy has what may be called a charter school age, or official age; we wish to know whether the master verifies the account of his official age?—I do not think the oath refers to the age of the children.

Would it not be desirable that the oath should apply to all the parts of the return that the master makes, the truth of which can be ascertained?—Yes; we ought to be as perfectly acquainted with the age of the boys as the master himself, and we could do it by reference to our roll.

Is such an examination ever made?—Yes; whenever we wish to know how long a boy has been at school, or when he has returned from his apprenticeship, at what period of life he was admitted, and who was his recommender; we can refer to any single boy, and have often done so.

Does not the half yearly return include a statement of the boys fit to be apprenticed?—I am not quite certain of that; we very frequently make inquiry how many boys are fit to be apprenticed out. Sometimes we wish to bring up the larger boys to town, to transfer them from schools where we cannot get them apprenticed, and put younger ones in their place; we have drafted a good many up to Santry.

Looking at that return, is any examination of those returns made, that would enable the committee to know that the age that is stated in the return by the master, is correct according to the fact?—I do not think those things are so frequently looked into, unless particular circumstances should come before the committee.

Has your attention been lately called to the return made of the ages of the boys in the Sligo school?—It has.

Did it appear that they were very incorrect?—It did.

What was the opinion entertained of the probable motive?—The motive assigned was, which was denied by the master, that he was retaining them for his own purposes; they immediately ordered them to be sent up, and directed that they should be sent out with a premium, or apprenticed out; it appeared he had been extremely inaccurate in that respect.

Is that the only case in which false returns of ages have appeared to have been made by masters?—I do not know; we have not inquired into that; I do not think it is likely in any other school, except in a weaving school, because the boys become very troublesome when they grow up, and they are anxious to get rid of them.

Unless they gain a profit by their labour?—I do not think that compensates them.

Is there any other school in which the labour of the boys is of much value to the master?—I think the general labour of the boys is not of any great value to the masters; in some schools they pay too much for the labour of the boys.

Is there any other school in which the children are employed in weaving?—In none except the Lintown factory, and there they are educated as tradesmen.

Are you aware that looms for weaving have been lately introduced into Shannon Grove?—I am not aware of it; it may be so. Wheels are recommended in some of the schools.

Is the establishment of looms in the schools, thought a beneficial practice?—I should think the establishment of looms, or any thing that would give the children industrious habits or trades, would be useful and beneficial; but I do not think it right to give the master the emoluments.

Have not the masters hitherto had the emoluments?—Yes, at Sligo he had.

Did he make a half yearly return of the amount of his profits?—I rather think he did.

Has it been found to be correct?—I do not know that he has made that return; I do not think he was required to do so. He made a return when called upon, after the visitation, as to the profits; but I believe it was the intention of the Society to remove the looms out of the school, or prevent the master getting the advantage of the emolument.

Did the fact appear to you, upon the examination of his returns, that the more efficient weavers in the Sligo school appeared to become younger in proportion as years elapsed?—No, it did not; if that had appeared to me, it would have been a very strong reason either for removing the master or the boys.

[A paper was handed to the Archdeacon, containing the ages of 12 Sligo boys, as returned by the master at different times.] See App^x N^o 91.

Were you shewn that paper by Mr. Adamson?—I did not see this paper; I believe some other members of the committee of fifteen did see it; it occurred the day that this business was inquired into; I was detained at my church, which is very near the Incorporated Society, till a certain hour, and I went in just as the business was nearly concluded. I see it was to this paper that Mr. Magee alluded; the Commissioners will very well conceive, if a person was so disposed that he wished to detain those boys who were more profitable to him than others, he could; and I think that is one reason for doing away the whole system.

[Another paper was handed to the Archdeacon, being a return of profits, as stated by the master of Sligo school.]

The Commissioners wish to draw your attention to that return; have you had any occasion to see returns similar to that, which is a return of the value of labour for four years in the Sligo school?—I have not seen this return before.

Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

It appears, from the book kept by the master of the Sligo school, that from the 4th of January 1821, to December 1821, the quantity of pieces of linen amounts to 94; from the 3d of January 1822, to the 31st of December in that year, 109 pieces; from the 14th of January 1823, to December 1823, 161 pieces; from the 3d of January 1824, to the 30th of November, which is the period when the book was called for, 130 pieces. Of those pieces, in the year 1822, eleven were made by his son, and an apprentice, and therefore ought to be deducted from the amount; in the year 1823, two were made by the apprentice, or a boy not connected with the school; in the latter year there is no work by an apprentice. From other parts of the book it appears, that in the year 1821, there were eleven pieces of plain work and twilled, each containing from 25 to 41 yards, all worked by the boys, some for sheeting for the mistress, some for ticking, some for towels. In 1822, there were six pieces, from 26 to 53 yards each, all twilled; in 1822, eight pieces, chiefly twilled, one piece being ticking for the boys, and two pieces of a pattern called Barleycorn, for the mistress, for table cloths; in 1824, four pieces twilled and plain; were you aware of these facts?—No.

Do you know whether the boys that have been educated in the weaving school, and taught to weave, have turned out better than those children educated in schools where weaving was not practised?—I have no general information upon that point; they are generally apprenticed out in distant parts, where we could have no cognizance of them, but if my opinion was to be taken, I should rather think they do turn out better, and I will tell you my reason for it,—I think they are generally induced to go to the north, to settle among the people there, where they are more industrious than they are towards the south; and I think whatever induces them to go to a place where industry is prevalent, must be advantageous to them.

Do you know whether the boys who have generally been educated in weaving, have been apprenticed to weavers?—Yes.

Do you not think it would be better to apprentice them to trades they had not learnt?—Yes; I think that extremely wrong. They might be apprenticed out to diaper weavers, with very great success. I think it a very bad system to apprentice them when they are perfect in the business already. We have taken that now into our consideration, and shall send them out; we have sent down an order telling them they may go out if they choose.

What examination do the half yearly accounts undergo, when they are received from the respective schools?—There is a committee of accounts, chosen from the body at large, of men most conversant in accounts; in general, Mr. Ashworth is the chairman of that committee of accounts, whom we look up to as one of the most intelligent men in Dublin; he is, certainly, a very accurate accountant, and has hitherto looked most minutely into the several accounts. We, of the committee of fifteen, who are not so conversant with that subject, rely upon his accuracy. Latterly, Mr. Ashworth has not been able to pay so much attention to it, and some of the members of the committee of fifteen have undertaken to look into some of the accounts. Mr. Pomeroy, and myself, have spent a great deal of time in the last year, in looking into the accounts, looking at the different charges, and the different receipts, and to see that the drafts, at the time they purport to have been drawn, were drawn, and had been expended.

Who were the persons who composed the committee of accounts?—Mr. Ashworth, Mr. Lanigan, Doctor Orpen, and Mr. Drury.

Were they also members of the committee of fifteen?—No.

Do those committees consist of a fixed number?—No, they do not; they are members of the body of the Incorporated Society.

Were they regularly appointed by the Incorporated Society, as a committee?—Always.

For the purpose of inspecting the accounts?—Yes, and seeing into the accounts; and I believe they have done it with a great deal of strictness.

Do we understand you to say that that committee no longer exists?—No; it exists, but Mr. Ashworth is not able to give it that attention he did when his health was better. It was at my request he has been on the committee for the last year.

Has he been able to attend the committee?—Not latterly; he comes in some times, and if there is any case of difficulty or doubt, he is generally referred to.

Do the funds which the Society has the controul of, arise from different sources?—Yes; bequests, estates, and money and grants from Parliament.

Are not some of the permanent funds applied to particular schools?—Yes.

Will you have the goodness to name which they are?—There are the Roscommon and the Athlone schools, and the Lintown Factory.

Are those funds managed and applied separately?—Those funds have not been managed and applied separately for some time past, until the commissioners of imprest accounts wished very much to keep them separate; the estates belonging to those several funds, ran, during times of difficulty, very much in arrear, and had fallen in value. I know that they were obliged to take some of the government money to supply the expenses of those schools. We had a sum of money remaining that had been a former saving from the Pococke fund, of 2,000*l.* which was lodged in the funds here; we thought it right the other day to sell that out, and to apply that money to the payment of the money that had been advanced out of the government fund to those special purposes before.

Do you know whether the committee of fifteen think themselves authorized in applying that money voted by Parliament, to the Pococke school?—I do not know that the committee

301
 Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
 30 Dec. 1824.

mittee of fifteen could think themselves authorized to do it; but still it has been the habit of the Society to do it; I do not think they could have authority for it, I think it was contrary to law.

Is that, in fact, a charter school, or a separate school?—It is a charter school, under the regulation of that body; the Roscommon school is for the benefit of certain estates in the county of Roscommon,—Lord Ranelagh's estates. I believe the arrears are very considerable on those properties still. I find, if the arrears were paid, we should be able to liquidate the sum advanced.

Do you happen to recollect the amount due from those estates?—No, I do not; I think it is 2,300*l.* I think we have paid off one debt entirely. I think the Pococke property is very clear now; and I think the other would be clear, if the arrears of the estates were made up.

Are all sums received by the Society, excepting those which are applicable to the Ranelagh schools, and the Lintown Factory, applied generally to the maintenance of the charter schools?—They are.

Are the accounts of the money granted by Parliament, kept separately from the accounts of the money arising from other sources?—They are; the money afforded to us by the Treasury here, is in certain sums; very often we require a larger sum for our expenses than may be in the banker's hand; we find out how much we can draw, and we are sometimes not able to draw for more than half the money that we owe at the time; then we apply for an additional sum.

Have you ever attended the auditing of the accounts at the Imprest office?—I have, once; so far as I happened to be on the committee who signed the accounts, and it was necessary for me to swear to my signature. I went there, of course, to swear it was my signature, and that I believed that the account had been examined by our committee, in the usual manner; I distinctly stated, I had not been over it myself, and they stated that was sufficient.

The signature does not certify that the individual has examined?—No; they had been at that time, particularly examined by Mr. Ashworth. There were some things he complained of, which we rectified.

Have the accounts been allowed, and passed as correct, by the officers in the Imprest office?—No; several accounts have been returned, and several disallowed, not having proper receipts, and for some other reasons that I do not at present recollect. I know there was another reason for a large sum not being allowed.

Do not the auditors of accounts state in their report, that there is a considerable sum unaccounted for by the officers of the Incorporated Society?—They do.

Can you give us any explanation how that sum has fallen into arrear?—Yes; as far as I have understood it, it is an extraordinary thing, that we could not make out for a long time; it appears to be entirely through a mistake of both the officers of the Incorporated Society and the officers of the Imprest office; there was one period of the year, when a certain sum, that ought to have been charged to our credit, was charged to our debit, four thousand odd hundred pounds. We should have got credit for it.

Whose mistake was it?—It was a mistake in our persons who furnished the account, and a mistake in those who passed it; they are rather slow in acknowledging their mistake; they have acknowledged their error. We thought, for a long time, that our secretary must have made some improper use of it; we could not make it out, until the Bishop of Ferns, and several other persons, came to look into it; they went back so far as twenty years ago. It was the Report of the Commissioners, and the notice Parliament took of it, drew our attention to it; for the persons who had not been at the board so long back, thought there was something improper, for the balance had been increasing.

Has any communication lately taken place between the Incorporated Society and the Commissioners of imprest, upon the subject of that account?—Yes, about two months ago, not immediately with the board, but with a gentleman belonging to them, who was supposed to be the best accountant among them. I rather believe he is unwilling to allow the mistake on his part; his name is Vale; but, however, I think the Bishop of Ferns shewed him he was not correct, and that we ought to have got credit for it; and that that sum had been accounted for regularly by us, if the account had been made out properly.

Up to what period of the year are the accounts regularly made up; is it the 5th of January?—It is at the usual time that all the government accounts are made up; very often we are obliged to return the accounts several times for being incorrect and informal.

It appears on examining the report of the auditors of accounts, that one account from Ross school, was found to be so imperfect, that they could not enter at all into the consideration of it; would you be so good as to state in what way the imperfection of that account escaped the attention of the local committee and the officers of the Incorporated Society?—It was never brought under the notice of the committee of fifteen, until we heard it had been disallowed; then we examined it, and found out the inaccuracy; it is rather an intricate account to make out; it might escape a person who did not pay particular attention to it: it is according to the number of the days and different periods of time that a boy has been at the school. I should think it was entirely owing to some want of proper examination on the part of the committee of accounts, if it was brought before them at all, which I think it was.

Is it understood, that the local committee at all examine into the correctness of the accounts?—Yes, that is always understood; I think our main dependence is upon the local committee;

Examination of
The Archdeacon of
Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

committee; when I was a member of a local committee, which I was for some time, when I resided near Castledermot, I looked into the accounts.

Have you reason to believe that the local committee execute that part of their duty diligently?—I have reason to think they do not in some instances; the masters always complain they cannot get the local committee to adjust their accounts, and I know it is difficult.

Is it any part of the duty the Incorporated Society expect to be performed by the catechist?—No, he signs the account; his signature is only to show that the local committee have attended and examined the accounts. I do not think it is any part of the catechist's duty; nor do I think it ought to be.

Is he always a member of the local committee?—I am not certain of that; he is supposed to be a member, or to have controul there as a member. I do not think it always follows that he is; but he acts as such in general, and I should think would be supposed to be so.

Is it the duty of the secretary or any other officer belonging to the Incorporated Society to inspect and verify in detail the charges in the accounts?—I cannot say it is exactly the duty of the secretary; but it is a duty we expect him to perform; he is acquainted with all the circumstances of the different schools; and in general we ask him, Are these accounts correct; and he says he has examined them, and that they are correct, to the best of his skill and knowledge; however, we do not depend upon that, because they are referred to the committee of accounts; at the same time we do not refer them to the committee of accounts until we have a report from the secretary; till they are in some measure examined, and he returns them; and I think we do not generally refer them to the committee, unless he reports some inaccuracy in them; he might pass by some inaccuracies certainly.

Is it frequently found that the charges made by the masters, for feeding the boys, are erroneously calculated, that is to say; that assuming that in the dietary he is allowed a certain sum per head for each boy, for so many days, does it often appear that the sum he charges is much larger than it would come to at that rate?—Upon my word I do not think it is; none that came within my knowledge; if it had, I should conceive it to be an act of dishonesty.

Was not that the case with the master of Ross School?—I believe there was something of that kind; but the great error was charging for boys who had not been there at all; I think that was the case, as far as I recollect it: I was very much surprised to find, that in the producing of the imprest reports, they had been disallowed; I thought they were correct; we have securities from the masters, to the amount of 200 l. each; in case there should be any thing incorrect of that sort, we can come upon the securities; and if there appeared the slightest dishonesty, the masters would be dismissed.

Has the practice of taking securities, long prevailed?—I believe so; we appointed masters yesterday, and the first question put to them was, whether they were prepared with securities.

It appears there were some masters who are no longer so now, but who are still indebted to the Society; are you aware of that?—No, I am not aware of it; I was not aware of any except the master of Clontarf school; I was aware that the master of that school ran away.

It appears on one of the reports of the auditors of imprest accounts, that a sum of money is accounted for as a loan, to Mr. Stuart, the registrar and clerk of the Society; can you inform us under what circumstances such a loan was made?—I recollect the circumstance of its being proposed in the committee, not as a loan, but to advance him his salary; I think it was in consequence of some misfortune; I rather believe the person had got into some difficulty, and he petitioned the board, and they granted him an advance to be repaid at a certain rate out of his half-yearly payments afterwards.

In the year ending the 5th of January 1822, is this entry among the receipts "Received from Thomas Stuart, registrar and clerk, first, second, third and fourth instalments, towards the repayment of a loan of 100 guineas, 45 l." and then in the next year, that 45 l. being so entered and paid, was found to be erroneous; for in the next year it is deducted from the original balance, the sum erroneously brought to charge in the last account, being a payment on account of 113 l. 15 s. advanced to Thomas Stuart, registrar and clerk; but for which loan advanced, the accountant had never taken credit?—I was not aware of an advance to that extent.

There also appears "Advanced to James Waterstone, master of Maynooth school, 25 l." do you know any thing of that?—No, I do not; that is one of the schools suppressed. I think Mr. Waterstone is now employed as a schoolmaster; he is a very correct and honest man; and I have no doubt will pay it; I think it probable the Society would have been justified in giving him that money entirely.

When will the accounts for the current year be finally made up?—They are in very great progress; I think in a very short time; yesterday we spent three or four hours at them.

Are the accounts for the year ending the 5th of January 1824 completed?—I think they are not quite completed; but I believe they are very nearly so.

What has occasioned the delay?—I think the difficulty of getting returns from the masters, and in short the great press of business that is incident to the management of such a concern.

Have the masters themselves any difficulty in making out their accounts?—They state to us they have great difficulty in getting the local committee to inspect their accounts; it may be inertness or want of energy, but I do not think they can have any benefit by delaying the the accounts. I think it would be much better for themselves, if they furnished them at once.

Do you entertain any doubt, that the explanation which has been made on the subject of the sum stated to be in arrear, by the officers of Imprest, will prove satisfactory?—I am perfectly satisfied myself upon the point.

Does that account for the whole of the balance?—Yes, I believe, within 9*l.*; and it appears satisfactory to Doctor Elrington, and the Bishop of Ferns, mathematical men, more conversant in accounts than I can be. There were a great many inaccuracies that should have been noticed by the Commissioners of Imprest accounts, at first, but having made a mistake, they would not admit it.

There is a fund called Mitchell's Bequest; what is the nature of it?—It was a sum of money left to the Incorporated Society, and I believe they found a difficulty to recover it; a part of it they did recover, if I recollect right; and then the heirs of Mr. Mitchell took some further steps in legal proceedings, and I think they afterwards recovered back a share of the property.

According to what rules are the children admitted into the charter schools?—In general, since I have been a member of the committee, we have admitted according to seniority of application; we took down a certain number of applicant's names, during the time that we had no room for admission into the schools, and we admitted from them as far as they appeared to be objects; we admit according to the applications, and according to the objects; we generally prefer orphans, and if it is properly certified that the children are great objects, and likely to be lost, and have no chance of being taken care of, we admit them immediately; at other times, we take time for inquiry; if it appears there is any great object pressing at the moment, then he or she is instantly admitted, and I am sorry to state, that I never saw greater objects than are at present applying for admission.

Does it appear that the greater number of children admitted, are orphans?—No, not the greater number; I believe they are always preferred. In general, I think the greater number admitted are orphans, as far as the loss of father or mother; in general we admit orphans in the first instance, then afterwards the next consideration is, where they want their father.

Are the children now selected on account of the religion of the parents—are the children of Roman Catholics preferred to the children of Protestants, or otherwise?—I believe they were a long time preferred; I believe it was an object to get as many of them into the schools as possible; very few Protestants applied, but now I believe we rather lean towards the admission of the Protestants, unless the children of the Roman Catholics are orphans.

Do you know the reason of that change?—Yes, I do; the reason of that change is this; I think the spirit of the people at present, of the Roman Catholic population, is very much against the charter schools; and I think their great anxiety to bring their children back to their own way of thinking on religious subjects, creates dissensions. I have known several instances of it; we have admitted children into charter schools, at the request of parents in this town, and afterwards those parents have been obliged to take them out of the schools, in consequence of the priests coming to the knowledge of it, and obliging them to take them out.

Are children always given up to their parents, upon application for that purpose?—I have seldom known it refused; there may have been instances where they have been refused, where a child was unwilling to go, or be given up, or where the parent had no means of taking care of it.

Can you state, whether there have been any complaints of the recommendations of particular individuals being attended to in preference to others?—I never heard of it; I heard some inquiry was made, something about the neighbourhood of Portadown.

Some papers came before us, in which it appeared that the local committee had retired, in consequence of some dissatisfaction expressed; that was at Strangford?—The local committee might have retired; I did not hear the particulars of it. They complained there were some children admitted; I think they mentioned the name of Portadown; I do not know the reason for it; I do not know that the recommendations of the local committee at Strangford were unattended to; I think there might have been circumstances much stronger than those at Portadown, to every person who is anxious to support charter schools, and pay them the slightest attention; the object of the committee is to pay the first attention.

Is it desirable to put the children from any particular neighbourhood into the nearest charter school; or do you prefer removing them to a distance?—I think that is according to the request of the person who recommends the child; I think we are guided in general by that; if we find that the children are children of Popish parents, and that those parents are likely to interfere with their education as Protestants, of course we remove them from that neighbourhood; I know the Strangford local committee were extremely displeased at the removal of the master, and made a great number of claims upon us, which we could not answer. Strangford costs us a great deal of money; and I dare say some of them were dissatisfied at not having the entire controul of the school, and the funds supplied to it.

You have said, that in selecting the children for admission into the school at Strangford, the most necessitous objects were always chosen; referring to a paper, by which it appears that sixteen girls were admitted upon the recommendation of one individual, into Dundalk school, and nineteen boys, into Strangford school, within the period of one

Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

year; do you entertain any doubt that the rules of the Society were strictly followed in those instances?—I was not aware of the cases; we could look at the book, and see the number we had to admit; we generally inquire into who are the most necessitous objects, and their recommendations are read. They may have been all from Portadown; I was not aware of the circumstance at all, till this moment. I heard of the charge being made, but I did really think it was unfounded as to the extent; I think it was an improper exertion of influence to have given it to any one parish; I would not have it given to any one of my extensive parishes in Dublin, but I am satisfied that a great many of the committee of fifteen are wholly and entirely guided by the necessitous objects, and no person can tell that so much as myself; I see so much of the distress that prevails here.

Do not a very large portion of the children admitted, come from Dublin?—Numbers; we are very anxious to pay every attention to any gentleman who makes an application to have a child admitted into the school, because we suppose no gentleman would make such an application if he had not a good opinion of it.

Some of the Commissioners have seen two mulatto children in a charter school, who appear to be the sons of an officer of some rank in the army, who died in England; do you think such children are proper objects of the charity?—I do, and will tell you my reason; I believe they were the natural children of an officer who died upon his passage from the East Indies; those children were sent here to a most deserving lady; they were sent here by his connexions, and they were left upon her; she came to me in very great distress, and told me her situation. She said, "I have but 100 l. in the world I can spare, that I mean for these children; if you will educate them, they shall have that money, but in the mean time they might starve." I visited the children and saw they had been taken care of in some measure, and I thought them the most deserving objects I ever saw in my life; and I did bring them in, and had them admitted. I do think they were as legitimate objects for the institution, as any I ever met with.

The Commissioners had occasion to observe in the school at Clontarf, that special orders had been given with respect to certain children, that they should not be removed from the school; has that been the practice long?—It has been the practice with me, as parish minister; there are a great number of distressed objects in this town at present, who do not like to have their children entirely removed from their superintendence; they put their children there for temporary subsistence and temporary education, and they are most anxious to take the children out again if they can, and if not, they must remain; and I have given orders in two or three instances, to have the children kept separate. I have done it with respect to those children, and also as to the children of a gentleman whom I had known myself in the county of Kildare. He died suddenly, and his children were put into the school and I retained them under my own inspection, and I apprenticed some of them out from other funds I had the command of. I believe there are one or two of them remaining here by my direction. Another reason for placing them there was, that I had very great confidence in the master and mistress; but as to the other children, the children of the officer, they must have been entirely kept at the expense of this gentlewoman, or they must have perished.

Does the application of a rule to a particular child, that is not general, create any unpleasant feeling amongst the children?—I think not; I think the people are so extremely anxious to get the children in, that they would allow them to go to any school at all; many of the parents make a request that their children should be kept in Kevin-street, that they might have an opportunity of seeing them at proper times, and I think it right to comply with it, as far as we can; and the reason of the miscarriage of a great number of our children from the charter schools, is the want of that proper feeling of parental affection; they go into the world, and have no family whose honour or character they wish to support, and too often fall victims.

Have the committee of fifteen reason to think that many of the children educated in the schools, do not turn out as well as they could wish?—Yes; they have reason to think that numbers do not. The Incorporated Society lose sight of those children who have prospered in the world, and such children are ashamed of the sources where they have received their education; if they become merchants, or men in professions, of course they conceal the school from which they have derived their education; if they are unsuccessful we are most likely to hear of them, for they come back to us; but I do not think a great number return, considering the vast number we have under our care. I think that latterly more have returned in consequence of the differences of religious opinion that have been excited; at present, there are very great objections in families where there are a number of Roman Catholic servants; they do not like to live with them, they make their lives uncomfortable or uneasy.

Do you understand that the Roman Catholics of the lower orders have a greater objection to living with a child educated in a charter school, than with a Protestant educated in any other way?—They have not any more objection to them, than to children educated in parish schools; but out of their master's hearing, they call them nothing else but parish brats, and charter school brats.

Do the Roman Catholic servants in a general way, make objection to having Protestant fellow servants?—No, not in a general way; but they are very anxious to have persons of their own way of thinking.

Has not the school at Strangford lately been very much enlarged?—I think it was enlarged about the year 1817.

Can you explain why that school was pitched upon as one particularly fit to be enlarged?

larged?—I do not know of any particular reason; but I can conceive one that would have weight very much with myself, being in a manufacturing country, and one of the best parts of Ireland. I think the county of Down is the most industrious part of Ireland—that is certainly what we require.

Is not the situation of that school so remote as to make it very little likely it should be properly inspected?—It is remote, but not near so distant as Ballycastle or schools in the county of Cork; it ought to be as well taken care of from its vicinity to active intelligent people, as any school in Ireland. I think the local committee of Strangford might be as efficient as any other, perhaps more so.

Is it thought desirable to have the children assembled in large numbers, rather than subdividing them into a great many schools?—I think it is in general preferable to have them in large numbers; it is according to the directions of the government. During the time of Mr. Grant's secretaryship here, he said one establishment would take care of a much larger number; if we have them dispersed in smaller numbers it requires a number of establishments; and all the contracts are cheaper in consequence of contracting for a large number.

Have not some of the schools lately been converted into day schools?—Yes; Monivea, Trim, Newport, and Castlemartyr; that was converted the other day.

What regulations are issued to the masters for the management of those day schools?—No particular regulations; they are supposed to be under the direction of the clergy of the different parishes.

Are the committee of fifteen apprized from time to time, of the state and condition of those schools?—They are.

Do you happen to recollect the attendance of the school at Newport?—No, I do not recollect the number; at first there were very few; our anxiety was that it should be a general school, and we had expectation that the Roman Catholics would go to it.

Are there any rules and regulations that prescribe a fixed system of instruction; is it made necessary the children should learn the catechism, or read any portion of the Scriptures?—No, certainly not; but as to those that would be admitted as Roman Catholics, we would insist upon the Testament being read. I do not think we should insist upon their being taught the Protestant church catechism.

Have the committee been lately informed of the state of the school at Clonmel?—No.

One of the Commissioners visited it, and found three children in it?—I do not know any thing of it.

What is your opinion of the present state of the day school at Dunmanway, in the county of Cork?—I cannot form any opinion upon it; I have had nothing particular to attract my attention to it.

Have any instances come to the knowledge of the committee of fifteen, of any of the officers employed by the Society, receiving bribes?—Never to my knowledge; never one; I have heard it often whispered there is some understanding at times between the masters and some of the officers of the Society; I never could find it out. I have seen interest expressed by an officer to bring forward one man's claim in preference to another; and wherever I have seen that, I have marred it, and if I suspected any thing, I would let my suspicions be known. I have heard, that they have received presents. I have heard, that there was an understanding sometimes between them and the different masters; but I never knew of any one instance of any thing of the kind that we could possibly put our finger upon, except a trial that took place between Mr. Adamson and Mr. Russell.

Will you be good enough to state what you can recollect of the particulars of that trial?—I do not recollect the particulars of the trial; but I recollect, that it appeared that this man had sent in certain loads of straw or hay, I am not sure which, or both; that after Mr. Russell was removed from Santry, when he thought that Mr. Adamson's patronage, whatever it was, was at an end, he then processed him for the value of the things sent in. Mr. Adamson proved, I believe, that he knew nothing at all about it, if he had sent them in. He alleged he had sent them in, and Mr. Adamson proved, he had never received them, and knew nothing about them, and Mr. Russell was defeated in recovering the amount; and we supposed Mr. Adamson was clear of suspicion, as he had denied all knowledge of it, and had not received them. I was not aware of the trial at the time, or I would have paid more attention to it.

Have you ever heard of loans of money being made by masters of charter schools to any of the officers of the Society?—I never did; if I had, I should certainly have brought it before the board.

Or a present of a horse?—Never.

Or considerable contributions in fowls or things of that description from the country?—No, I have never heard it officially; I have heard that they received fowls and things of that kind; but I could never find it out.

Or Waterford glass?—No, nothing of the kind; there does not appear to be any thing of the kind in Mr. Adamson's house.

The question does not assume it was Mr. Adamson?—I never heard of any thing of the kind; I do not think any body but Mr. Adamson could serve them; Mr. Adamson might serve them.

Suppose a boy was to bring a representation, complaining of a particular master, would it not be in the power of Mr. Adamson or Mr. Stuart to suppress it?—I do not think it ought to be in the power of Mr. Stuart, nor do I see how it could be; Mr. Adamson has his own clerks.

Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

Have any instances come to the knowledge of the committee, in which any of the catechists have had advantageous dealings with the masters?—No, none.

Are you acquainted with the establishment in Charlemont Street, in which girls are received, who have quitted their apprenticeships?—Yes; I do not go there very often, or hardly at all; I am not very anxious that they should be received there; and I do not wish to appear to be a visitor there; if I did, I should be followed by every single creature of that kind in the street, and not have one single moment to myself, free from those applications.

Do you think this establishment has any tendency to tempt girls to leave their places?—I think it might have that effect; yesterday there were two very great objects I sent there; one of those girls produced to me a very good discharge from her master; she said she was in that state she was obliged to leave, because her fellow-servants would not let her live in tranquillity; the other person had been in town some time, and had every appearance of poverty and disease.

Are any persons admitted into the establishment, who have abandoned the paths of virtue?—No, not at all; on the contrary, there is a Miss Keating, who has been a very active person; she is very zealous, and I have great reliance upon her report and her character; she looks minutely into it.

Is there a sufficient superintendence of the young women when in that house?—The mistress is a very correct woman; the master is dead, he was a very correct man, and a very useful man, as far as I can judge. I had a high opinion of Mr. Vickers.

Is there not an officer connected with the establishment, whose duty it is to examine into the places to which the children are to be apprenticed?—Yes; in town, a man of the name of Ricky.

Are his duties well performed?—I think so, as far as he is capable.

Is he not extremely incapable, from age or infirmity?—No; I do not think he is totally incapable. I think in general now, from his want of hearing, we rather receive his recommendations with caution, and we generally see the people ourselves.

Is it a part of his duty to look to the children after they are apprenticed?—No.

What is considered to be his duty?—To go to the residence of the people; to inquire, in the first place, whether they are Protestants; in the next place, to see that they have the means of maintaining an apprentice, and whether they have proper accommodation for one; if they are trades-people, to see whether they are in that capacity as to require an apprentice.

Have you frequently reason to believe that his inquiries are not sufficient, and that you are deceived in the report he makes to you?—No, I do not think we are deceived in the reports he makes; I think we very often do not attend to them, we think he is deceived himself; it is very hard to deal with a great number of people when they come to look for apprentices, and for the apprentice fees; and though I have very sharp men looking after a particular charity I am concerned in, I am very often deceived. It is almost impossible to counteract the cunning of the lower class of people in this country.

Do the committee think themselves authorized to grant retired salaries to persons who have served them faithfully?—They do.

Has it been under consideration to provide for Mr. Ricky?—I do not think it has; we are watchful of him now, and think we are as conversant with the people of the town as he is himself. If the members of the committee of fifteen were strangers to Dublin, and did not know the character of the people, or the parish minister, they ought to discharge him, or superannuate him; but those recommendations must be signed by the parish minister, if we know him to be an upright man, and that he looks to the character of the man before he gives it; we should look more to that than to Mr. Ricky's recommendation.

Is not the certificate of the minister very much a matter of form?—No.

Does he inspect the premises of the individual applying?—That is not necessary for him to do, if they are Protestants, because he is supposed to know the residence of every individual in the parish.

Does he know the trade of each individual?—Yes.

Does he know the fact, whether the trade is carrying on?—Yes; I think so. I think my curates know the trade of every Protestant in the parish, the curates of any standing do, certainly.

An instance has been lately communicated to us, of a girl bound apprentice to a person who was represented to be a milliner in Dublin?—Yes; and that was to a person who not only appeared to be a milliner or a straw bonnet-maker, but who had all the paraphernalia of her work before her, and appeared to be so; after that we were obliged to remove the girl.

Do you conceive that to be a solitary instance?—I think it is; it may have occurred in other instances, but it is a rare instance in my knowledge. I have known another, where both Mr. Ricky, and the clergyman, and all have been deceived; and it is very frequently the case that the very parents of the children engage in the conspiracy to get them out and get the apprentice fee.

The Commissioners have seen in the accounts, that very large sums of money were expended in erecting pumps, one at Monivea and one at Roscommon; can you say why it was thought necessary to go to that expense?—From the difficulty of getting water, and the charge made by the master for drawing water, and the complaints of the boys in consequence of being employed in that way; we sent down most efficient persons from hence to see the best course to be pursued; we were led into more expense than we expected, because we know that persons may be deceived as to the depth at which water may be procured.

Do

Do you know the expense of those pumps?—One, I believe, cost 700*l*.

Do you think the money was really and bonâ fide expended?—I have no doubt it was expended; we sent down those men, and they made their estimate.

Who were they?—The pump-borers in town; and that estimate was referred to our architect, he went down and saw the difficulty, and reported it was a fair one.

Who is the architect?—Mr. Farrell; and I believe the pump-borer was Robinson.

Did Mr. Farrell inspect both those places, and certify they were worth the money?—Yes, certainly; no work of that kind is ever undertaken without consulting him; we were obliged to sink further the other day, for the water failed during the drought of the summer.

Are the committee of fifteen generally satisfied with the instruction of the children in the schools?—As far as the committee of fifteen are acquainted with it, I think they are; but the committee of fifteen as a committee, can have little knowledge of it. The particular charter school I pay any attention to, is the charter school at Kevin-street, and I am now perfectly satisfied with their progress, as far as I can judge. I believe they are very well instructed at Clontarf.

Have you any acquaintance with the establishment at Santry, for the instruction of candidate teachers?—I have been there, and I am aware of the Institution; I could not attend to it, but I am very much interested in it, and I provide for a great number of men who have been educated in it.

Is the committee generally satisfied with the success of the experiment?—I think the experiment is as yet in its infancy; I think there is one thing wrong in the formation of that Institution; I think they took in too many at first, and they took in boys too young; I could have provided for half as many more if they had been at a more advanced period of life; they want a knowledge of the world, and have not arrived at a period of life at which any school should be entrusted to them: that is a great defect.

Do you think, as a clergyman, it would be desirable to select persons as parish clerks, who had been fourteen or fifteen years confined within the walls of a charter school, and therefore quite unacquainted with the ordinary dealings of the world?—Yes; I think so much the better, the less they know of the world.

Does not a certain obloquy and reproach attach to children educated in the charter schools?—There does.

Is it desirable to appoint a person to the situation of parish clerk, who is subject to that reproach?—That reproach is not among the Protestants; I think the Protestants would feel most comfortable towards them; they would have no objection to them; my parishioners would be glad if I sent them such a person to-morrow.

Do you think the masters of the charter schools generally conceal from the children the fact of the usher having been educated in a charter school?—I do not know that.

Do you conceive, that as a general principle, it is desirable that the same individual should be the parish clerk and parish schoolmaster?—I think very much depends upon the individual; I have been very often obliged to employ my parish clerk as a schoolmaster, and if he is qualified for it I can see no objection to it; the duties do not interfere.

Do you conceive, that a general degree of knowledge of the world is desirable for a schoolmaster?—I do.

Would it not follow, that in those instances where they have been selected from the Santry school, they should not be schoolmasters?—Certainly; I say a knowledge of the world is not necessary for a parish clerk.

It would follow, then, if the system should become generally acted upon, of supplying the parish clerks of Ireland from the Santry Institution, it must form a part of the same system that the parish clerk should not be at the same time schoolmaster?—I do not say it is desirable to have them both united in one; that must depend upon the circumstances of the parish, and the character of the man. I think it would be more desirable to have two persons, than one.

Does your experience enable you to express any opinion as to whether, generally speaking, the parish clerks are found to be efficient schoolmasters; or whether there is any tendency in the mere circumstance of having a separate source of income, to make them particularly remiss in their duties as schoolmasters?—I do not know of any instance where they are; I think the parish clerk is more under our observation on a Sunday, than the schoolmaster would be, and he would be more morally affected by being parish clerk, by being obliged to appear in a decent garb, and from his duties; I think that would be rather a favourable circumstance in behalf of having a parish clerk and schoolmaster in one person. I found my parish clerk in Narraghmore as schoolmaster, and I continued him and his son, who is now parish clerk; he will not be parish schoolmaster.

Do you conceive that parish clerks have in any instance been appointed schoolmasters, more as a means of increasing their income as parish clerks, than providing good schoolmasters?—I cannot say that; I do not think so.

Are there not many instances in which the same person unites both offices; but is in fact the real clerk and only nominal schoolmaster?—I do not know of any such instance; I should think the person employing such a schoolmaster, would be acting highly improperly.

The question supposes him merely to receive a small salary in his character of schoolmaster, but to have no pupils?—I do not know of any instance of the offices of parish clerk and schoolmaster being so united; I have an instance in my own parish at Narraghmore, of parish clerk and schoolmaster; as parish clerk, he receives 10*l*. a year, and as schoolmaster,

Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

schoolmaster, he receives the emoluments and a small sum from myself; he was perfectly eligible for each situation; but as parish clerk he was superannuated after losing his voice.

In any general system of parochial education that might be hereafter adopted, should you think it a good principle, that the same individual should necessarily fill the same situations?—No; I think the general principle, if laid down, should be against it.

Do you think it would be the general feeling of the parochial clergy, supposing there was that option given, but not of necessity imposed, to see the offices united in the same individual, or vested in two different individuals?—I should think they would wish to have two separate individuals; but there might be instances where it might be the interest of the parish and the people, that they should be united in one person; but that should be left to the diocesan, and the rector of the parish should give very good reasons why they were so united. I think the more you multiply such officers in this country the better.

Are you acquainted with the books supplied to the charter schools?—I am.

Has not an alteration of late years been made in the catechisms taught to the children?—I believe there was at one time a catechism that was thought would excite certain feelings, and I believe it was thought wise and prudent to withdraw it; I do not know the specific time.

Do you think it desirable in a course of religious instruction for children, that so many catechisms should be taught, as the children in the charter schools are taught?—I think they are not different catechisms, they are explanations of one and the same catechism; I think it is right they should know every explanation of the catechism. There are gradations in those different catechisms, one is an easy explanation, and the others more difficult; and as a child gets on in knowledge his information is expanded.

Do they begin with the Church catechism?—Yes.

Which do they take next?—Stopford's or Lewis's.

What follows?—Mann's.

Is that the last?—I think so.

Do I understand you to say, that you think that is the best mode of communicating religious instruction, rather than by explanation and comment upon the Scriptures themselves?—I think that is best for children; it is a method I have pursued in my own family, and I think it is the best.

Do you bear in memory the books that are furnished to charter schools for the instruction of the children?—I could not well recollect them.

In a volume of Archbishop Secker's Lectures, which is furnished to the charter schools, the Commissioners have observed a tract added at the end; do you know of that?—I do not recollect it; I have not seen it.

Are you acquainted with Doctor Porteus's Confutation of Popery?—Yes, I have read it.

Do you know it is bound up with Secker's Lectures?—I have heard so; I have not seen it.

Do you happen to recollect whether it is by the special direction of the committee of fifteen that it is so?—I apprehend it must be by a special direction.

Do you know why it was bound up with another tract, and not circulated as a separate volume?—No, I do not know the reason for it; nothing of the kind could have happened without the special direction of the committee of fifteen, or the general board.

Do you think the same motive that induced the committee to desire that the Protestant catechism should be withdrawn, would also induce them to direct that this volume should not be used?—I do not know that the committee directed the other not to be used; I never heard of the other being used in the school.

Are you acquainted with Stopford's catechism?—I am.

Do you think that all the parts of it are desirable to be taught?—Indeed I should conceive so.

Do you not think that any motives that could have led to the discontinuing of the Protestant catechism, would apply as strongly to Stopford's?—I do not see any objection to Stopford's catechism. The Commissioners are aware of the objects of the charter schools.

Do you recollect when Porteus's book was first introduced?—No, I do not.

Do you think that the learning of a series of catechisms is likely to lead a child to a due sense of religion?—I practise it with my own family, and therefore conceive it to be so.

Have you, in your own experience, found that teaching a number of catechisms to a child, does in fact lead him to a due sense of religion?—I should conceive so, as far as I know as a parish minister, I think it necessary to teach them a series of catechisms; the more you explain them, to shew their connexion with each other, the better they are grounded in religion.

What number of catechisms would you teach a child, to lead him to a due sense of religion?—First, the Church catechism; and then I would explain it as far as I could make him understand it, and then give him the other catechisms as explanations.

We are desirous of knowing what catechisms, because not fewer than ten have come before us, as the means recommended by some one or other, for the same purpose?—Different men may take different views; I would teach the Church catechism, then Stopford's, or Lewis's, and then Mann's.

Do you approve of Lewis's catechism?—I think I do.

Are you aware that the Association for Discountenancing Vice have, upon solemn consideration, declared it to be unfit for them to publish?—I know some of them have disapproved of it.

Are

309
Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

Are you acquainted with Usher's catechism?—No.

Did you ever hear of it?—Yes.

Did you ever see it?—No.

Would you consider the Church catechism and Stopford's catechism, sufficient catechetical instruction for a child?—No.

What other?—Mann's is supplemental to those.

Should you be satisfied to rest upon the three?—I would.

What degree of use should you recommend to be made of the Scriptures, in the instruction of a child in religious knowledge?—The entire of the Gospels, and as many of the Epistles as I thought he was capable of understanding.

The question means, in what manner would you propose the Scriptures should be employed, or brought under the consideration of the child, in order to enable him to extract from them the matter they contain?—My idea is, that I should like to give the Scriptures with note and comment.

Where would you find the notes and comments you would recommend?—I am not sure I should find them, such as I should bring before the intellect of a child; but I think I could cull out from other notes and comments such as I think a child would be capable of retaining.

Would you propose that the teachers should, by a selection of notes and comments, explain it to the child?—Yes, that is what I mean; but if there was any objection to it, I would not force my comment upon a child whose parents did not approve of it.

Would you call upon the children to commit any portion of the Scriptures to memory?—Yes, particular parts of it; not any very great part, bearing in view the connexion between the Bible and the Testament.

Do you consider it a desirable practice, to suggest Scripture subjects to the mind of a child, desiring him to find out texts illustrating the subject referred to?—It might be useful to some who were capable of it, but not as a general system; the teachers would soon find out who were capable of it.

In what way are the contracts made for the clothes for the charter school children?—They are advertized for; and then we receive proposals and specimens of the different articles proposed for, and in general it is given to the lowest, according to the quality of the article provided.

Are all the schools supplied alike, with clothing, or do the masters provide them in some schools?—They do.

Can you say why that course is adopted for some schools, and not for others?—Yes; near town, here, they can be contracted for cheaper than they can be made in the country; and there may be cases in a distant part of the country, where the master could get the material cheaper than we could provide it; there, they think it best to take the clothes from the master, where they have been doing their business well, and have acted honestly; the committee are unwilling to remove the order from them in that case; but where they have acted differently, it is taken away from them, and we send them down from Dublin, but there is the expense of carriage to be added.

Have the committee reason to believe the masters make much by the contract for clothing?—No, I believe not.

What is done with the clothes that do not fit?—I believe they are sent back, and are changed; but those complaints are often made to discredit the contract.

Are the clothes always delivered to the children in the quantities allowed by the Society, or do the masters ever withhold a part?—We have heard they do.

Is the allowance to each child fixed?—It is.

If the quantity allowed to each child is not actually delivered, does that part withheld become the perquisite of the master?—Certainly not.

Has such a practice ever been reported to the committee?—Yes, lately, where the children were provided for by the masters and mistresses, we have heard that some were withheld, a pair of stockings or a shirt; we heard that was the case in Kevin-street, and we investigated it, and found it was the case, and we ordered the children a proper quantity afterwards; that was the cause of the removal of the mistress.

Have you reason to believe that the masters make a good deal of money by the contract for the supply of food?—In my opinion I do not think they can; we had the master of Stradbally school, before us yesterday, and examined him very closely. He had but 3½d. for giving three meals a day to the children. I do not think we could give less.

Is it not generally found that the situation of a schoolmaster of a charter school, is a very beneficial one?—They are much sought after; and from the appearance of persons in that situation, I should think it was; they appear to be much better dressed than they were before they got into those situations; but as far as I have examined into some of them, they declare that they do not make money by the feeding of the children.

In what way is it supposed their advantages arise?—I suppose their having their income regularly paid, and being persons not accustomed to very great expenses, that they are saving. Their situation is very much sought after; but I am not quite aware of their means, and I do not think the man we examined yesterday, could get much by the rate we paid him; we charged him a half-penny a day for the labour of the children.

Do not the masters make a good deal of the land they occupy?—Yes, they do; but I do not think that is a saving to them; I think they would get it as cheap by contract, where there was a market town near them.

Is not the land generally worth a good deal more than the rent they pay for it?—I do not think

Examination of
The Archdeacon of
Dublin,
30 Dec. 1824.

think it is; I think in general they are charged very nearly the value, and sometimes they have been assisted in consequence of the bad crops. The lands are reduced, and we give them a temporary abatement.

Are you aware of the nature of the land at New Ross; thirty acres, rent ten guineas a year?—I am not.

Which is stated in the Report taken before the Education Commissioners, in 1809, to be worth 7*l.* an acre?—I never heard of the circumstance before; I should think no land there was worth 7*l.* an acre.

What do you consider the ordinary average age for children entering charter schools?—I think the average age is from about six years old; I think they make themselves a little older to get in; and sometimes they are apt to take off three or four months to get them in also.

What do you consider the average age at which the children leave the schools?—I think of the females I have seen apprenticed out since I have been a member, the average age was from sixteen to eighteen.

And the boys?—I cannot form so good a judgment; I should think from fifteen to seventeen.

Appendix, N° 108.

Further Examination of the Venerable the Archdeacon of Dublin;

Thursday, 6th January 1825.

6 Jan. 1825.

DO you not think that the success of the charter school system very much depends upon the efficiency of the local committees?—I do.

Do you not think that their efficiency is indispensable to afford any tolerable prospect of success?—I think their efficiency is certainly indispensable in distant schools where the committee or the board of the Incorporated Society can have no control; but in the neighbourhood of this town our influence might reach as far as Santry; we need not depend so much upon them where we can have the master before us.

Will you mention any local committees in which you feel a particular degree of confidence at the present time?—I do not feel much certainly in the local committee at Santry; I feel confidence in the local committee of Clontarf, particularly the superintendent, Mr. Mulloy.

Do you feel any particular confidence in the local committee of Longford?—I confess I cannot.

Do you feel a positive want of confidence?—I should think it hard to say that, because I am not at all acquainted with them; so far I do feel a want of confidence, the withholding the report of the particular illness of the master of the school; if we had been advised he was an idiot we would not have kept him; we would not have supposed he could have recovered.

Did not they allow you to continue in ignorance a year together, of his first being a madman and then an idiot?—Certainly we were in ignorance of his being a madman for a long time; at length we heard it whispered among the people attending at the board; we presumed it was but a temporary illness.

Are you aware that Mr. Lee, in his report of the school at Longford, pointed out his inefficiency, and the incompetency to perform the duty on the part of the local committee?—I do not recollect that part of his report.

Do you conceive that the local committee of Sligo are entitled to the confidence of the Incorporated Society?—I was not much acquainted with the reports of the local committee at Sligo, till a very late occasion, and then they appeared so strenuous and so open in what they stated, I had confidence in that particular report, which I immediately referred to at the time.

Do you think, upon the occasion to which you refer, that they exhibited themselves most in the character of partisans, or impartial judges?—I am afraid in all that business there was too much party spirit on both sides, and I would not say they were more than partisans; but I think that feeling influenced them in that report, I think so, that is my own feeling; I think it very likely it might have guided my own feeling if in the neighbourhood, knowing the man's care of the children.

Do you conceive that there is a greater tendency on the part of the local committees to take the part of the master, and to screen any fault he may have committed, rather than to expose it for the purpose of correction?—I am not aware of it; but the local committee I was acquainted with at Castledermot, were not at all disposed to screen the master; the catechist was, I think; but when I was there myself, I think they were very anxious to find out every thing that they could, ever since Mr. Coddington has been upon that committee; I have the utmost dependence upon them.

Do you think there are many or any schools of the Society more favourably circumstanced for the obtaining efficient local committees, than the school at Longford, and the school at Sligo?—I do not know much of Longford; but I rather think they might have a very good local committee at Longford. I think Sligo is particularly well circumstanced.

If under those favourable circumstances, the local committees have, in point of fact, not been found to perform their duties in a sufficient or satisfactory manner, should you hope, adverting to the tastes of the Irish gentry, you could permanently reckon upon local committees efficiently performing their duties in the various schools?—I think we might, by laying down a strict line of duty, and getting them to subscribe to it, and pledging themselves to attend to it; and telling them it was not merely a nominal attendance which was expected from them.

311
Examination of
The Archdeacon of Dublin,
6 Jan. 1825.

Do you think there are country gentlemen in the vicinity of your schools, who would be led by tastes or habits, or any other views, to undertake the performance of such duties?—Yes; I think there are some in the North of Ireland who might be of such tastes, and I think that taste is encreasing; I think the habits of the gentry are much changed for the better; and after this inquiry, and after seeing the necessity of education, there may be further improvements in the tastes of the gentry. In the neighbourhood of Dundalk, there are gentlemen who have undertaken to act on the local committee, and have performed it with some degree of diligence; I have understood so from my friend Mr. Thackeray.

You are of course aware of the manner in which the printed regulations of the Society lay down the duties of the catechist; is it your impression that the catechists of the Society generally perform those duties in an efficient and faithful manner?—I think they perform them so far as catechising the children and inspecting the schools. I think they have been deficient in making their returns to the board; I think, as far as I have known, they have performed their duty.

The Commissioners have no reason to doubt that in a large majority of cases the catechists have actually visited the schools not infrequently; but the question is, whether you think, upon the occasion of those visits, they have administered catechetical instruction bonâ fide, in a manner calculated to improve the religious knowledge of the children to any considerable extent?—As far as I am acquainted with it, they have; I have been present very frequently at the examinations of Mr. Mawe, and I think he performed it well. I think he had got into the line from practice; he is the only person I had immediate personal communication with upon the subject, except that I have seen children in the town, educating by Dr. Murray. I have been present at his examinations. Mr. Lewis, who was the catechist at Baggot-street, performed his duty very well,—he had been long in the habit of it.

Do you think it would be a sufficient performance of the duty of the catechist, if he should hear them repeat their catechisms merely by rote, but without giving them that sort of examination that would ascertain whether they understood it or not?—No, certainly not; and therefore I conceive that the other catechisms, which are merely explanations, are necessary; that makes it necessary for the catechist to examine the children.

May it not be doubted whether the children will not find it more difficult to understand those explanations than the original Church catechism?—They do, at first.

Do you think the catechist ought to explain those explanations to them?—Yes; or ascertain that they understand them. I do not conceive he performs his duty if he does not.

Do you conceive he is further bound to examine them in their proficiency in the knowledge of the Scriptures?—I do.

Do you think the catechist could have performed his duty otherwise than in a mere nominal manner, in any particular school in which there were eighty boys collected, only two of whom had ever heard of St. Paul?—I should think not; I know the school alluded to, Stradbally; and that catechist certainly came up to town, and said the boys were in a fit of sullenness or obstinacy, or were dismayed by your examination; but he said there was scarcely a boy that did not understand it, and could not have answered the question, and when he put it to them the next day, they explained it to him very well. I had a long conversation with him upon the subject.

Can you account in any manner, why the boys in a charter school should be in a fit of sullenness or obstinacy, which the Commissioners can state they did not experience in any schools of any other description?—No; I cannot well account for it, only by accounting for those children being taken away, and not educated in any knowledge of the world, and having nothing to direct them to a better feeling, except that which arises in the occurrences in their own small sphere. I think one bad boy may do a deal of mischief in a charter school.

It is right to state to you, that in the school at Cashel, there were but two boys who appeared to have heard of Saint Paul, and two only in Stradbally, although every hint and suggestion was given in both schools, by the Commissioners who visited them, to recal that history to the children, in case they had ever been acquainted with it; for instance, they were asked if they recollected any thing of a great light shining on Saint Paul, going on his journey to Damascus; and after all those things, they were equally unsuccessful in their attempts to answer. One said he was a king; another, a wise man; another, a prophet; another, one of the twelve disciples. It is right also to state, that in another school, namely, Castledermot, in which the children appeared to have been subjected to very particular severity, they were found not only perfectly acquainted with the history of Saint Paul, but able to answer generally in the Scriptures, in a manner that reflected the highest credit upon those concerned in their education?—While I was in the neighbourhood of Castledermot, I thought their education excellent; and I had the greatest confidence in the usher I sent down there.

The question now put is, whether you can assign any cause, except the neglect of those concerned in their instruction, that would account for their being found in a state of ignorance at Stradbally, while we see the system is able to convey instruction when administered in such a school as Castledermot?—There must be a cause; I do not wish to attach blame to the catechist at Stradbally; he wished us to send down a person, which we did, and the school has been examined; he has reported very favourably; I cannot account for it. I think it is impossible, that any boys who were at all acquainted with the Testament, should not have heard of Saint Paul; I must attribute that particular to obstinacy.

Are you aware there were but two or three boys in that school, who knew the meaning of the word Europe?—From your report I knew of it.

Examination of
The Archdeacon of
Dublin,
6 Jan. 1825.

Should you attribute their ignorance upon that point, to sullenness and obstinacy?—No; it might have been from the course of education that was pursued being a Scriptural education, and not a general one.

Do you not think, that in attending those schools, miscellaneous knowledge ought to be conveyed to the minds of the children?—Surely; I wonder it was not.

Are there any regulations of the charter schools that would tend to make it necessary that such knowledge should be supplied?—I am not quite sure of the regulations; it is the expectation of the committee it should be so.

Are there any books that are supplied by the Society, calculated to convey any knowledge but catechetical or scriptural knowledge?—I am not aware of any.

Do you not think, it would have been desirable that such books should be supplied?—Certainly; where the usher is able to introduce such knowledge.

Are you aware, that upwards of fifty varieties of books calculated to supply such knowledge as may be useful in rural life, and to persons in the lower classes of society, have been published by the Society for the Education of the Poor of Ireland?—I am aware that many have been.

Has it ever been under the consideration of the Incorporated Society to supply such to the charter schools?—It has not been taken into their serious consideration; but it has been mentioned, and I think rather intended, though not resolved upon.

Are you aware that lending libraries, consisting of such books, would be supplied gratuitously, upon application to that Society, to charter schools, or any others that might wish to possess them?—I am not aware of it.

The Commissioners would be glad to know your opinion as to the probable success of the Institution at Santry, for the training of schoolmasters and parish clerks?—When it was established at first I had the highest expectation of its success.

What is your present impression as to its prospects?—I am not so sanguine about it as I was at first, because I think the boys have shewn a certain degree of impatience I did not expect from boys so well treated, and so likely to be placed in respectable situations in life, and I am afraid that impatience would prevent them from being respectably educated; no man would take a parish clerk that is not somewhat advanced in life; and I think the great fault has been sending up boys to this institution at too early a period; they get tired, expecting situations immediately.

Has it not been understood, that the boys sent up from the various charter schools for admission here, have not been the best in those schools?—There have been suspicions they have not been the best.

Is it not intended that they should be?—Yes.

Is it not understood by the masters and the boys, that the admission to the institution at Santry, is a positive reward?—Certainly.

Do you conceive, that a young man, when first admitted into that institution, considers himself promoted by the admission?—Yes; their change of clothing, and different appearance, shew this.

Are you aware, that of the number of ninety-five, who have hitherto gone to that institution, nineteen have eloped?—Yes; I am aware a great number have eloped. I do not know the number precisely.

Must there not have been some very strong circumstance tending to disappoint the hopes of the young men in that institution, that would induce such a number to elope from a place into which admission is considered a privilege?—I think they form too sanguine expectations in the first instance, and when they find the necessity of delay, they then get impatient; many of them think they are so well qualified they can provide for themselves, and as soon as they think so, they then go away. I think they are much more liable to elope than those less well informed; I know a boy who eloped and enlisted, and I never read a better letter than he wrote to the master after he left; he enlisted in the service of the East India Company, at Chatham; my brother was there, and I wrote to him upon the subject. He was the most promising recruit that had been there for some time; they sent him to India as a corporal; he is gone out with every prospect of making his fortune, and I am sure, his success when he did elope may have induced others. I had a letter yesterday from one, referring to his own qualification; these boys get impatient, they think they are men long before they come to the age of discretion.

Do you find that the patrons of schools and the incumbents of parishes feel any considerable anxiety to obtain young men from this institution?—They do certainly; in many instances they have applied to myself; wherever I could recommend a steady well conducted man, I have done so. The brother of that boy before alluded to, a person of the name of Leonard, the other day I recommended to a school near Enniskillen, to the patrons of the school there, and they are extremely well satisfied with him.

Have you found that all the patrons have manifested the same disposition that the ecclesiastical patrons of schools may have done?—All the patrons that have come within my knowledge, generally depend upon the discretion of the parish minister, as far as I know any thing of them, and I think many are anxious to get boys from the institution; but I do think that it has not had a fair trial yet.

The total number of boys that have been hitherto supplied to schools from the institution being twelve, five of whom have been taken by a person who is understood to have recommended the formation of the plan; do you think you see in it a sufficient demand upon the part of the public, to justify a hope that there will ultimately be any considerable demand for them?—If you recollect the establishment, twelve would be a great number to be taken out; they were nothing nothing more than boys when brought up there, and there are very few of them more than of age.

The institution has been now six years in existence?—Yes, I believe so.

What do you yourself consider the probable average time it will be found desirable to keep the young men in the institution?—I think the men, as far as their instruction and learning go, are fully qualified to go out to situations, if they had come to that period of life when they might be considered as having formed a steady character.

What do you consider the general average age at which it is desirable for boys to leave the charter schools?—I cannot tell; that will depend upon the knowledge the boys have acquired. I think a boy should not remain in the charter school longer than beyond the age of seventeen. I think the proper time for a boy to leave would be from fourteen to sixteen; if we could get a proper master to apprentice him to, I would rather send them out at fourteen, and apprentice them for seven years.

Supposing then the candidates for the Santry institution, to be sent from the schools to Santry, at the average of fifteen, being the mean age between fourteen and sixteen; how many years should you propose they should continue in the institution at Santry, before they went out as parish clerks and schoolmasters?—They might be educated in four or five years sufficiently; but I should not like to take them at the age of twenty-one, if I could get one at the age of twenty-four or twenty-five.

Supposing twenty-four should be the mean age at which you suppose it would be desirable for them to fill those situations, it is manifest upon this hypothesis, they must continue nine years in the institution at Santry; has it occurred to you to calculate how much each of those masters would then cost the public, during those nine years?—No; I think we have qualified some for clerks. I have known some go out, one to Belfast the other day; there was a person who applied, and we gave him leave to go. I have not made any calculation as to that—it would be a very large sum of money.

Do you conceive that any young man entering that institution at fifteen, and leaving it at twenty-three, would have cost the public so little as 150*l.* merely for his residence at Santry, and in addition to whatever else he might have cost while in the charter school?—I do not take that into my consideration, I have not thought of it; I dare say that may be the sum; I do not think that would be a great sum for the public to pay, if the institution sent out a well-educated man as a schoolmaster, in the state of society at present in this country.

It is a question of comparison, whether under other systems, you might not send out ten schoolmasters for the same money?—Of course; but I do not think that is very likely; we are trying another plan now in another place.

Referring to the charter of incorporation, it appears it was the original intention of the founders of that institution, to obtain for the country such a system of education as should instruct the poor inhabitants and natives of this country in the principles of true religion and loyalty; and that some expectations were formed, that a very extensive change would be produced in the manners of the people, by the schools about to be formed; in your opinion has such an effect been produced?—To a certain extent it has.

Do you think it has to a considerable extent, or a very limited one?—I should hope to a very considerable extent.

Can it be said to have had any perceptible effect upon the face of society?—I cannot say it has upon the general mass of society; circumstanced as this country has been, and is, I think it is one means of great improvement, and I am sure that the exemplary appearance and success in life, of a great number of those who have been educated under this institution, have encouraged many to go to school who would never have gone. I repeated before, that I think we hear of a great number of people who miscarry, and we do not hear of those who have been fortunate.

Do you not think that the miscarriage and failure of so many persons that have been educated in charter schools, have tended very much to bring that system of charity school education into disrepute in this country?—No, I do not; I think all systems of education that are for certain purposes, for making converts, are regarded with a great degree of suspicion; those persons are generally subjects of attack from those people who otherwise might be connected with them by blood or religion.

Do you think that the proportion which the Roman Catholic and Protestant populations now bear to each other in this country, has been materially affected by the charter schools; or that there are substantially more Protestants and fewer Roman Catholics than there would have been, if the charter schools had never existed?—There are more Protestants, in consequence of the charter schools, no doubt of it; I know many myself who certainly would have been Roman Catholics, had it not been for the charter school education.

Do you think it can possibly exceed the difference of a few hundreds or thousands?—I should think some thousands.

Has it ever occurred to you, how many thousands have been sent forth into society from the charter schools, since their first commencement?—No it has not; but it has been of very long standing; and I have known charter schools ever since I have been able to form an opinion of any schools.

Have many instances come to your knowledge, in which the children have returned to their Roman Catholic friends and relations, and have relapsed into Popery?—Not a great many; there are some certainly; I am not likely to hear of them; they conceal themselves. I have had some servants, and have known many other servants who were strenuous Protestants, who had been brought up in the charter schools.

Are they, if Protestants, likely to be strenuous Protestants, eager upon the point of religion?

religion?—I think some of them might be strenuous Protestants; but I think they are unwilling, and at present they would be very shy of bringing forward their opinion; but I know some who are convinced, and anxious to make others of their own opinion.

Appendix, N° 109.

EXTRACT from the Examination of the Reverend Doctor Charles Richard Elrington; Saturday, 22d January 1825.

Examination of
Rev. Dr.
C. R. Elrington,
22 Jan. 1825.

ARE you aware of the experiment that has been tried at Santry, of training up charter school boys?—Yes.

Are you aware of the general results of that experiment?—I have heard that several good schoolmasters have been taken out of Santry; but what number I do not know.

Have you heard of any instances in which individuals who have been trained in that institution, have not turned out well?—I do not remember any; it may have been so.

You are a member of the committee of fifteen of the Incorporated Society?—I am.

Have you given particular attention to its concerns?—Not constantly; only occasionally.

In what manner do you conceive the candidate teachers admitted into the institution at Santry, are selected for that purpose; are they taken from the different charter schools?—Yes; they are taken from the different charter schools in Ireland.

Is it generally understood, that the individuals selected out of the charter schools for that purpose, are rather superior to their fellows?—Certainly.

Do you conceive, that the individuals so selected, consider their admission into the institution at Santry as a privilege, and affording them prospects of future advancement in life?—I have lately had reason to know that they do; I heard some of the boys at the other schools complain of their not having been at Santry, and not having been as well treated as the boys there.

Enumerate the several objects of ambition that you conceive open to the minds of those youths admitted into the institution at Santry; we collect from you, that they may reasonably hope by good conduct, to become clerks and schoolmasters?—Yes; and ushers in charter schools.

And if they conduct themselves well in that capacity, they may be promoted to be masters?—Yes; the last two appointments were from ushers.

By whom is the selection made of boys for Santry?—I declare, I do not at this moment distinctly recollect.

Is it a selection made by the master of each school?—I do not distinctly recollect.

Should not you reasonably suppose, that a young man, once admitted into this institution, and enjoying its advantages, would not be very willing to leave it of his own accord, before those prospects were decided?—He ought not, I should think.

Are you aware whether due attention has been given to the instruction of those young men, in that institution?—The impression on my mind is, that there was; the committee had a very high opinion of the master of Santry.

Has not the master other occupations; for instance, the taking care of a pretty large school of boys, as well as a pretty large farm?—I doubt his farm being very large; but the principal part of his attention was to be directed to the instruction of those young men and the boys he superintended, with the assistance of ushers.

It is your understanding it was Mr. Devine's duty to take those candidate teachers under his own immediate superintendence?—Yes, so I thought; but I must state to the Commissioners, that there is scarcely any member of the committee of fifteen from whom they would not derive more information than from me. The ordinary routine business is carried on at an hour in which I am always, in term, occupied by college business; I have gone to the committee of fifteen whenever there was any important business.

The Commissioners would wish to put you in possession of the fact, that ninety-five young men in all, have been admitted into this institution at Santry; that three have been expelled, and nineteen have eloped; does that statement of facts considerably surprise you?—It does, certainly; the elopements surprise me very much.

Do you conceive that any state of things that would induce young men, apparently so advantageously situated, to elope in such numbers, could have any very beneficial influence upon those that remained?—I would not argue from any instances of misconduct of individuals; I see so often individuals throwing away the greatest advantages for present gratification; and there was considerable slowness in getting provision for those men; they were there till they were 23 or 24 years of age, which made them impatient.

Though you would not draw those inferences from a few individuals out of a large number adopting that course; do you not think that nineteen is a number that must excite more than suspicions upon the subject?—I really cannot conceive any situation that an educated lad in that rank of life should be more anxious to acquire, than that of parish clerk and schoolmaster; therefore I cannot see what better prospects are open to them, or what they can hope to attain by running away.

Do you conceive, that the previous instruction they have received in charter schools, necessarily separated from their friends and the world at large, is such as is likely in itself to qualify them for those scenes and pursuits that would be incident to the offices of parish clerk and schoolmaster?—I should think it the best preparation that could be given to them, theoretically speaking.

Do you not think a certain degree of knowledge of the world, and the habits of real life, would become a parish clerk, who must in many instances be the assistant of the parochial clergyman,

315
Examination of
Rev. Dr.
C. R. Ebrington,
22 Jan. 1825.

clergyman, and very much his instrument?—I know, if I wanted a parish clerk and school-master, I would go to the institution at Santry.

Is it your impression, that the peasantry, generally speaking, attach honor or opprobrium to the circumstance of charter school education?—The Roman Catholics will, of course, attempt to fix opprobrium to it; but I should think the Protestants do not.

Do you then, ceteris paribus, think, that the Protestants consider as highly of an individual educated in a charter school, as they would, if with the same degree of attainments, he had been educated in a country day school?—Yes, I do; I have tried it in my own family; having servants from them, I heard one attacked as being educated in a charter school, but it was by a Roman Catholic.

Do you think, young men trained in a charter school, who become servants, are not treated with disrespect by their fellow servants, except those fellow servants are Roman Catholics?—I never heard of it, and I had one myself.

Had you ever more than one?—No; only one.

What age was he when he came into your service?—Sixteen.

How did he conduct himself?—Very well.

How long did he continue with you?—About two years; and I got him another situation; he was a very dull, heavy boy, but extremely well conducted; he did not answer me, and I got him another situation.

What situation did you get him?—As a servant.

Do you know how he turned out?—He is living in the same situation.

* * * * *

Have you frequently attended meetings of the Incorporated Society?—Yes.

Are you a member of the committee of fifteen?—I am.

How long have you been such?—Four years.

Have you taken an active part in the administration of its concerns?—Whenever I was able, I have; but it has been at considerable intervals.

You are of course perfectly acquainted with the professed objects of that institution, as declared in their charter, namely, “to convert the Roman Catholic part of the population of Ireland to the religion of the Established Church, and to implant in their minds principles of true religion and loyalty.” The Commissioners would wish to know your opinion, as to whether these objects have been attained in any degree commensurate with the labour that has been employed to give them effect, and the sums of money expended for that purpose?—To convert the natives, I do not think it has.

Do you think it has made the number of Protestants now in Ireland, materially greater than they would have been if the system of charter schools never had been resorted to?—I should suppose it must.

Have you any impression upon your mind as to the total number of members sent into society through the charter school system, since its commencement, or the expenditure of money, at which it has been effected?—No: I have often heard the average expenditure per year, for each child, but I have no idea of the sum total.

What do you conceive is the average expense that each child stands the Incorporated Society in, annually?—I have so many different statements running in my head, I might put a wrong one to the Incorporated Society; I did know exactly. The average is about 15*l.* per annum.

What do you conceive is the average number of years that the children continue or ought to continue in the schools of the Incorporated Society?—They ought not to continue longer than eight or ten years. I know they do continue longer, according to the age at admission. They ought not to continue longer than that.

What is your impression as to the manner in which those children usually turn out, when they are sent into society?—I believe the great majority of them turn out well; in a few instances they turn out ill, and those make a great noise; and we do not hear so much, except by minute inquiry, as to the others.

Is it your decided impression that some proportion, greatly exceeding one half, do turn out well?—It is.

Do you conceive that that proportion are upon the whole, better principled and better educated than an equal number of persons living in their parental homes, and educated in the well regulated day schools in the country; for instance, in the schools of the Association for Discountenancing Vice?—No, I should suppose not; I should suppose in an ordinary day school they could be educated as well as they ought to be.

Do you think they are better principled, more honest or more disposed to speak the truth, than children educated in any other general manner?—I do not.

We wish to know whether it is your impression that there is any virtue in the boarding school system of instruction adopted by the Incorporated Society, to produce superior morality or superior religious feelings, than might be reasonably expected from the ordinary well regulated day schools in the country; for instance, again, the schools of the Association for Discountenancing Vice?—There is not, if you consider the children at the day schools to be supported in the rank of life that they can be supported in the charter schools.

We beg to state to you, that it is now just ninety-three years since the Society were incorporated; that in that period they have expended 1,606,237*l.*, and we should wish for any general opinion you can now form as to what number of members of society, the public might reasonably be satisfied with for that sum of money, so as at all to warrant that expenditure as a rational proceeding?—I cannot answer that question, except in this way,
C c 4 that

Examination of
Rev. Dr.
C. R. Elrington,
22 Jan. 1825.

that I remember having accurately inquired into what the annual expense of each child was, and not having considered it exorbitant.

Is it not perfectly possible that by keeping a child for a much greater period of time than would be at all reasonable, the expense, however rational in reference to a year, might be exceedingly unreasonable in reference to the total cost of the child?—Except so far as the peculiar circumstances of the country are considered, where it might be a charity for the support of the individual.

We beg to state to you, that there are at this moment in the schools of the Incorporated Society, thirty persons, who are called children, but who are, in fact, twenty years old and upwards; that there are thirty-four of nineteen; that there are forty-eight of eighteen; that there are 108 of seventeen; that there are 159 of sixteen; 167 of fifteen, and 152 of fourteen years old; we would wish to know your opinion as to whether that is a right arrangement even with respect to the principle of economy?—No; but you cannot turn out the children when they are once in.

Do you mean that nothing can justify the detaining such a number of young persons at such advanced ages, except the impossibility of disposing of them in the shape of apprentices?—Yes.

Do you conceive that a difficulty is felt in sending them forth as apprentices?—I believe that very considerable difficulty is found in sending them out as apprentices; they are strictly limited as to the individuals to whom they are to send them out as apprentices.

Are you aware there are other institutions in which no such difficulty in finding masters for apprentices exists?—They are not limited as the charter schools are; the master must not be a Roman Catholic at any rate; he must be a Protestant.

A considerable premium is given with the child as an inducement, is it not?—Not considerable.

To a certain amount?—Yes.

Do you conceive there is no other cause for the number of children already stated, amounting in fact, to 706 who have passed what is understood to be the ordinary age of apprenticeship, now remaining on hand in the schools of the Society, except the difficulty of finding masters for them?—I cannot conceive any other.

Were you at all aware, as a member of the committee of fifteen, before the question was put to you, of the proportion of the children who had passed the age of apprenticeship?—I was aware there were a great many. I have seen children apprenticed repeatedly at the charter schools, they are always asked their age; and I think it was never under fifteen.

Were you aware, before the question may have suggested it to you, of the number of children, fifteen years old and upwards, at this moment in the schools of the Society?—Yes, generally, I was.

Do you not consider it a considerable waste of money, speaking of it in a mere financial point of view?—As an education, certainly.

Considering it now as a matter of morality, do you not think it likely, that the retaining such a number of young men of this age, cooped up in these schools, must almost inevitably produce consequences greatly to be deprecated in that respect?—It might certainly.

The question is, whether it is not your opinion, that in a moral point of view, the continuance of boys, at those advanced ages, is wholly inadmissible?—I think it wrong, certainly.

It appears, that in fact, the expenditure of the Incorporated Society, since its commencement, has been 1,606,237*l.*, and that the total number of boys and girls apprenticed from its schools in the same period, has, in 90 years, been 12,745, being at the rate of nearly 130*l.* a piece; speaking of that result merely in reference to economy, do you conceive it is satisfactory?—For the education I do not think it economical; but I look upon the charter schools in another light; I look upon them in the light of an extended charity, for the purpose of educating those children that would not have any other means of actual support; that is the view that is taken now, as will appear if you look at the book of candidates for admission; the passage read to me from the charter, is not the principle that has been acted upon for some years; they admit the children of Protestant parents; it is an extended charity, in which the children are educated in the Protestant religion.

Considering it then as a charity for the purpose of relieving the physical distress of the country, do you conceive that it has been a profitable application of 1,600,000*l.* and upwards, to relieve the number of persons stated to you?—I think it is higher than it could have been done on other plans, and I think it is higher than the average at present.

Are you not of opinion that various modes for the education of the people of Ireland might have been devised, in which the application of an equal sum of money would have led to more beneficial results?—Yes, I am; the plan did not succeed.

Do you conceive that any possible extension of the present system, supposing the funds to be almost unlimited, could ever answer the purposes of a national system of education?—Certainly not; I think not.

Then, considered in the light of a national system of education merely, we understand it does not meet with your approbation?—No; as a national system, it is impossible.

Considering it now not in its character of a system of education, but as a charity for relieving physical distress, do you not consider it to be necessary to give it up, even in that point of view, upon the point of expense?—I do not know; I do not think the present expense of the children per annum is too great. I inquired into the different expenses, and they did not strike me as too great.

The question is, not whether there is an unnecessary rate of expenditure per annum upon each child, but whether it is upon the whole a justifiable expenditure to employ thirty or forty thousand thousand pounds a year, producing no better results in a financial, moral, physical and religious point of view, than it appears the charter schools lead to?—Looking at the books of applications, I know not what would become of the children if the books were shut. It was tried for four years, and the misery produced by it, any person in Dublin would be able to state. I do not know what would become of them in this country.

Then, are we to understand, that you think it would be desirable the schools should be continued upon their present scale?—I think the applications of distress are fully commensurate.

Do you not think, if the expenditure and the number of schools were doubled, there would be applications sufficient to fill all of them?—There might be applications, but not of the kind of distress upon which admissions are made now.

Do you then consider the present scale upon which the institution is established, is about commensurate to the actual emergencies of the country, such as you have described them?—That would require me to know what the number of applications have been for the last three or four years.

Do you then think, that the number of applications from any particular district of the country can be taken as a criterion of the extent of the real necessity for admission into charter schools?—No, I should think not; because the districts in Ireland differ very much; I should think the north a very unfair criterion.

You think the admissions from the north ought to be fewer than from the south?—Yes; and from Dublin more than elsewhere.

We wish you to be informed, that from one spot even in the north, in one year there were thirty-five successful applications made for admission into charter schools?—You may get a poor district in the north, as well as in the south.

The district was Segoe, in the richest part of the county of Armagh, in the midst of the linen manufacture; from that, and the two neighbouring parishes, there were sixteen girls admitted into the charter school at Dundalk, and nineteen boys admitted into the charter school at Strangford. Do you conceive there is a degree of distress in the parish of Segoe, at all commensurate with that extent of application; and if you think there is, we would put it to you, what is to become of the other parishes of Ireland, which, upon any such supposition, would equally require an increase of accommodation, to the extent of many hundred fold, in the existing schools?—It is quite an unreasonable proportion.

One inference among others, which the Commissioners would draw from the circumstance is, that as long as charter schools are open, extend them as you will, applications will not be wanting for children to go into them?—That I am quite sure of.

Is it within your knowledge, that in very many instances, the children of servants are admitted into them, on the application of their masters, as a matter of convenience certainly to the servants, but not of necessity to the children?—I have never known any thing of that sort, since I have been a member of the committee of fifteen; I have a case of the most pitiable distress, which has been on the books six months, and I cannot get it in.

Have you any knowledge, whether it is the practice of the officers of the Society to receive presents or loans of money from the masters of charter schools?—I have not.

Should you conceive such a practice to be obviously objectionable?—Certainly.

If known to the committee of fifteen, would it meet with their decided condemnation?—It would.

Have you never had occasion to suspect any thing of the kind?—Two or three years ago, there was some suspicion that there was some unfair dealing about the clothing of the children; and it was said positively, that none of the officers of the Society should have any thing to do with the contract.

Was it discovered upon that occasion, who had obtained the contract you allude to?—I do not think there was any thing known, except mere suspicion; I did not know, but I suspected, certainly.

Was it ever known to the board, who was at that time the real contractor for all the shirts, stockings and shoes used in the charter schools of Ireland?—It was at that time known, that a relation of one of the officers of the Society was the contractor, and then it was stopped.

How near was the degree of relationship?—It was a female relation; I forget now.

You never heard of loans of money, to a considerable extent, from the masters of charter schools to the officers of the Society?—No; never.

Appendix, N° 110.

Examination on Oath of James Adamson, Esquire; on Thursday, October 28th, 1824.

YOU hold the situation of Secretary of the Incorporated Society for promoting English Protestant schools in Ireland?—I do.

How long have you held that situation?—Twenty-six years.

In the situation you hold, is it part of your duty to superintend the books of accounts that are kept for the Society?—Yes.

Do all reports that are made to the Society, necessarily pass through your hands?—Yes.

What reports are made from the different schools to the board?—There is a half-yearly and yearly report made by the local committee of every charter school; and there is a letter to be written by the visitor catechist of each school, every month, upon the state of each school.

[D d]

What

Examination of
Rev. Dr.
C. R. Elrington,
22 Jan. 1825.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

What inspection do those reports undergo, upon their being received?—They are laid before the committee of fifteen.

How long after their receipt are they laid before the committee of fifteen?—According to their dates; they receive five or six of these reports every Wednesday.

Are the reports from the different schools all made up to corresponding periods?—Yes.

Are they, in point of practice, received from each school nearly about the same time?—No; there may be a month or two difference between them.

To what do you attribute that?—It depends upon the attendance of the local committee.

How often does each local committee report in a year?—They ought to report half-yearly, the 24th of June, and the 25th of December.

State what is the course that is usually held with respect to each of these returns, as they are received; according to what rule do you submit them to the committee of fifteen?—The committee meet every Wednesday, and they are generally laid before them according to the priority of their dates; they read as many of them as they can, and consider as many of them as they can on each Wednesday.

In what way are the observations of the committee of fifteen minuted; is there a minute book kept?—Yes, there is.

Are the reports themselves filed, or copied into books?—No; they are not.

Is there a regular entry made into the minute book, on the day on which each report is submitted to the committee of fifteen?—Yes; there is. I should mention, when you asked me in what order they are laid before the committee of fifteen, there may be some of them requiring an earlier answer than others, and any report of that nature is laid before the committee, before another which might be of an earlier date.

And you are to be understood, that if there is nothing of any particular urgency, they are submitted according to their dates?—Yes.

Suppose a return is not received within three months after it ought to have been in due course, should you write to inquire why it had not been transmitted?—We do not always write; we take it for granted there is nothing particular relating to that school, and that the local committee has been prevented assembling.

Is there any thing that makes it imperative upon the local committee to assemble?—No; it is voluntary.

Can you state the longest period that has elapsed without a report in any instance?—Indeed, I think not more than three or four months.

What course is taken with regard to the letters of the catechists?—They are laid before the committee of fifteen, every Wednesday.

Are they transmitted regularly?—I cannot say they are.

Do I understand the rule to be, that each catechist should transmit a letter monthly?—Yes.

Can you give us any idea of the degree to which it is neglected?—If there is any thing particular at the school, any matter of any particular importance, the catechist writes; and he very frequently omits doing so, if there is nothing particular to communicate to the Society.

When those letters are received, are they always submitted to the consideration of the board?—Yes.

Are the letters copied or filed?—No; neither copied nor filed.

They are preserved?—Yes, generally; any important letter.

Is it not a matter of course that they are preserved?—Yes, they are preserved.

Can the files of them be produced?—Not for any length of time past.

For a year past?—Yes.

Are the catechists instructed, when a child goes to service in any particular district, to communicate with the clergyman of that district?—There is a rule, directing that the officiating minister of the parish should be acquainted with that circumstance; there is a printed form of letter which the masters have, and which they ought to send to the minister of the parish where the child is apprenticed.

Is that invariably done?—I do not know whether it is, or not; it ought to be done by the masters of the different schools.

Has any inquiry ever been made of the master upon the subject, when a doubt has arisen?—Sometimes inquiry has been made to that effect.

Can you recollect the answers that have been given?—Yes; we have had letters sometimes from the minister of the parish, stating the conduct of the apprentices, but not many.

Do you apprehend, that is a rule which has been pretty generally neglected?—Very lately the committee renewed that order.

What circumstance led to that order?—An inquiry of one of the clergymen in Dublin, with regard to apprentices in his parish.

Is it not a part of the rule, that the clergyman should report to the Society, at stated periods?—No; it is not. I might mention, that before the payment of any portion of the apprentice fee, there is a certificate required from the clergyman, as to the situation of the child.

Is it not paid till the expiration of the apprenticeship?—No, it is paid by instalments, 40s. at the end of the first year, 30s. at the end of the second, and the rest is paid at the expiration of the time; and before that is paid, the Society requires a certificate from the minister of the parish, as to the care taken of the child; no part is ever paid without it.

In what way are they able to ascertain the facts they are called upon to certify?—According to the indentures of each child, the master must produce that child to the minister of the parish, and he can get no portion of the apprentice fee unless that child is taken care of, and brought regularly to divine worship; and the master must produce that certificate.

In

319
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

In case of a boy being apprenticed in Dublin, how would it be possible for a minister to know the facts?—It is very difficult; the clergymen of Dublin often mention the difficulty, but the certificate is not dispensed with.

What proportion of the boys apprenticed out, ultimately receive their fee upon the certificate being produced?—I cannot say that exactly; but I think the great majority of them.

Do you entirely lose sight of them after the apprenticeship is over, or are the Society able to trace what becomes of them?—They are not accurately able to trace it; the only mode they have of knowing their state, is the marriage portions they receive, both men and women.

Under what rules is this marriage portion given?—That they shall marry Protestants, and make an application within seven years after the expiration of the apprenticeship.

Do you happen to know what number of marriage portions have been given in the last twelve months?—Generally thirty in a year or thirty-five.

Have you any certificate that they continue Protestants to that period, to enable them to obtain the marriage portion?—Yes.

In what way do you maintain any connection with the children bound out to service?—They are apprenticed as servants, and payment is made of the bounty, at the end of the apprenticeship to the individual apprenticed; there is no fee paid with children apprenticed as servants; but at the expiration of the time, the person apprenticed, gets a bounty of three guineas.

Have you any means of knowing, whether the boys for the most part continue in the Protestant religion, or become Roman Catholics again?—I can only judge from the number of bounties paid, and marriage portions; in general, I think, they adhere to the Protestant religion.

Of those who are children of Roman Catholic parents, do you think the majority continue Protestants, or do they relapse?—I declare I have no means of judging.

Have you any reason to believe that many of the girls turn out ill; do they become of loose habits, and become abandoned women?—Not many, I hope.

The question is, what you have reason to believe?—I really cannot tell; the majority of them are apprenticed in the country, and I think the children in the country turn out much better than those apprenticed in Dublin.

Of one hundred apprenticed, is it your impression, that the majority turn out well or ill?—The impression is, that the majority turn out well.

What means have you of ascertaining, that the catechists do their duty, seeing you do not enforce the rule, that they shall make a monthly communication?—There is a return made with each half-yearly report, of the monthly visit of the catechist; he enters his visit, and his examination of the children in their learning.

Is that statement contained in the half-yearly report of the local committee?—No, it is not; he transmits it; but at the same time there is a copy in the books of the school.

What means are there of knowing that the account sent to you is correct?—The catechist certifies it; that is the only mode; he certifies a copy of his report, and enters a copy of it on the book.

What is the salary that is paid to the catechist?—Twenty pounds a year, I consider that is the salary; but that the committee of fifteen are authorized, under that rule, to suspend 10*l.* a year, if the duty is not performed satisfactorily.

Do you understand that the original salary was to be paid to him, whether he performed the duty or not?—That depended upon the committee of fifteen; the addition was an encouragement for greater exertion on the part of the catechists.

When was the addition made to the salary, to make it 20*l.*—I do not recollect.

Is the payment of the whole salary optional?—It is always paid to every catechist; and to two or three of the schools near Dublin, an additional 10*l.* a year.

To which schools are those payments made?—Clontarf, Santry, Kevin-street, and Baggot-street.

In what way is it known to the committee of fifteen, that the conditions required of catechists are properly fulfilled?—The catechists in Dublin have books lying before the committee every Wednesday; and with regard to the others, there are reports transmitted with the half-yearly reports; that is the only check they have.

Then supposing the catechist did not send up that return or report, which according to the rules, he is required to do, would the committee, notwithstanding that default, pay him the salary?—I do not recollect an instance of their omitting each half-year, to send up the weekly visiting reports.

Have you ever known an instance of the salary being withheld, in consequence of the duty not having been performed?—Not for the last fifteen or twenty years.

Do you believe during all that time the duty has been faithfully performed?—I believe it has generally.

Is it your belief that it is faithfully performed out of Dublin?—I declare, I cannot tell; I am afraid some of the gentlemen are not so attentive as others; but in general, I think they are attentive.

Are there weekly visiting reports sent up half yearly, such as would entitle them to that increased salary under that regulation?—Yes, there are.

In every instance?—I declare I do not know; I do not always read those reports.

Previous to the issuing of the salary, or when it is demanded, is any step taken to ascertain whether the duty has been performed?—No; the salary is charged by the master in the account.

And it is issued as a matter of course?—Yes.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

So, that supposing the catechist altogether to have omitted his duty, the salary would be paid?—No; not if there was apparent neglect on the part of the catechist.

The master draws for the money, as a matter of course?—Yes.

And it is issued, as a matter of course?—Yes.

And no inquiry takes place previously, to ascertain whether the duty is performed?—Only those reports.

Do the committee see when the masters' accounts are sent, whether the duty is performed?—Yes; they always see the report.

Supposing the report has not come up, would they stop the issue?—No; I conceive not.

The catechist is directed by the rules, to transmit a quarterly report; how do you distinguish that from the monthly letters?—It is a half-yearly report that is now required.

The catechist's report?—I do not recollect any thing about that in the rule.

There is a rule, "That no catechist shall be considered as deserving of the increased allowance, in pursuance of the resolutions of the 6th May 1801, unless he shall, at least once in every quarter, distinctly report the state of the religious progress of the several children under his care; distinguishing the classes into which they are divided, the books that each class respectively reads, and the improvement of the children, not merely in the recital of the responses, and the Church catechism and explanation, but in understanding the full meaning and import thereof, and the practical knowledge of the truths and duties of the Christian religion." I wish to know whether that report has or has not any thing to do with the monthly letters you alluded to before?—The monthly letter is a different thing; that rule is now complied with half yearly.

Does the half-yearly report comply with that rule?—In general, it does.

Do the reports that are sent half yearly, comply with these requisitions, or not; is it done half yearly by any new rule or direction, or is that the subsisting rule?—I consider this rule rescinded, in consequence of sending up the reports of the local committee half yearly.

By what power was that rescinded?—By the committee of fifteen directing them to send half-yearly reports.

When was that order made?—Four or five years ago, I believe.

Has that been transmitted to us, together with the other rules and regulations of the Society?—I do not know.

Do you, or any other person, ascertain that those half-yearly reports contain the requisites required by the rule of the 6th of May 1801?—The catechists in general send them; they may omit it sometimes.

You must understand the distinction between the fact of sending the report, and the fact of that report containing the particulars that are required by the regulation of the 6th of May 1801; do the reports contain those requisites?—They do; I mean the reports of the catechist, not the local committee.

Do they particularize those things?—Yes; I do not say they are constantly sent, but in general there is a printed statement for the purpose; a printed form in which it should be done.

Does the half-yearly report of the catechist contain any thing else but a transcript of the entries he is to make weekly, in the book?—No; but there is a separate return made, in conformity with the rule of the 6th of May, stating the advancement of the children, and the books they read.

Is it a part of the duty of the catechist to inspect the different parts of the school-house and rooms?—Yes, it is.

Supposing it to be a fact, that at one school there was a dormitory in which the catechist had never been during the recollection of any of the boys now in the school, how would that be known to you as secretary of the Incorporated Society?—It could not be known to us.

Could it be known without the catechist told it himself?—No.

In page 20 of the printed regulations, there is a direction with respect to the return of the number of children from the several chartered schools who attend divine service; and in order to enable the clergyman the better to sign the return, it is directed that a list of the children attending divine service on each Sunday, shall be shown to him, and signed by him, and that he shall see that they correspond with the list; have those directions ever been rescinded?—Never.

According to the best of your belief, are they in general complied with?—I cannot tell at all, about the names; but so far as the return goes, they are complied with.

Would you consider, if it were brought to the knowledge of the Society that it was not complied with, that the conduct of the catechist would be examined into?—Yes; I should think if the committee thought that rule neglected, they would inquire into it.

Did it ever come to the knowledge of the board, or of the committee of fifteen, that such lists were not kept?—No, it never did.

Did any omission of duty in any catechist ever come to the knowledge of the board?—Yes.

What was the consequence?—The consequence was, an application to the bishop to recommend another gentleman.

In what case?—I do not recollect the case; I believe I may be able to do it; it is a great while ago, it was at Trim; it is fifteen or sixteen years ago.

For the last fifteen or sixteen years, has any omission of duty by any catechist, ever been discovered by the committee of fifteen?—I do not recollect any.

Has any communication been made to the catechist at Sligo, upon the subject of the attendance of the children at the church?—I wrote a letter to the catechist at Sligo school, by order of the committee of fifteen, requesting his particular attention to the returns of the children's attendance at church, which was the complaint made by the Commissioners.

Has

32/
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

Has any thing else been done?—No.

Have not the committee of fifteen thought it right, on some occasions, to send round to get individuals as inspectors?—Yes.

On what occasion has that happened?—It was found necessary some years ago, to appoint a person to teach the children in the different chartered schools, Psalmody, and there was a person appointed for that purpose; and in performing that duty, the committee found his services very useful in other respects, and they appointed him to visit the schools, and report upon different matters connected with the schools.

What was the name of that person?—Mr. Nelson; the committee found that that measure gave them fuller information upon the state of the schools, than they before received.

What authority did he receive from the committee of fifteen to visit the schools?—To inspect them, and visit them and report.

Did he draw up regular reports?—He did.

Are those reports in existence?—I believe not.

In what condition of life was he?—Something perhaps of a better description of parish clerk.

Have not some other individuals been appointed since?—Yes; the Rev. Mr. Thackeray.

Was that in consequence of any complaint, or in consequence of suspicion of any individuals, which gave occasion to his being sent round?—I think it was in consequence of the report of the board of education.

They recommended it should be done at stated periods—I do not know that; they recommended a permanent person.

Upon how many, and what occasions has this visitation been made?—Since that person, the only persons who have been visitors, are Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee.

How often did Mr. Thackeray make that visit?—Two years.

Have you his reports?—Yes.

How often did Mr. Lee make the visit?—One year.

Have you his report?—I believe we have not his report of all the schools.

Does any individual hold that office at present?—No.

Why not?—It was struck out of the estimate sent to Parliament last year, or the year before, in consequence of a reduction of the expense being requisite.

What was the expense of it?—About 300*l.* a year.

Did Mr. Lee report specially upon each school?—Yes.

Was there any general report of his?—No.

Was there any general report of Mr. Thackeray?—Yes; there were two general reports of his.

Have you ever heard, whether any general report of Mr. Lee existed?—I have heard so.

Can you account why it is not now in existence?—Yes; my opinion is, that Mr. Lee did not think it expedient to send the report to the board.

Have you ever heard whether any member of the board had it?—No.

Have you ever heard any reason assigned, why he did not think it expedient to send it in?—

No; I have heard it was transcribed, and that it was very unfavourable to the general management of the affairs of the institution; and for that reason he did not think it proper to send it to the board.

Who did you hear that from?—From the master of one of the schools.

Is that fact known to the committee of fifteen?—No; not as a body.

When did Mr. Lee's inspection take place?—In 1820, and 1821.

Was the office of inspector considered a permanent office?—No; never, I believe.

At whose recommendation were the different reductions made; did the committee of fifteen submit to the chief secretary, a plan for reducing the expenses of the chartered schools?—The chief secretary wrote to the committee to make the estimate as low as could be, and they reduced the allowance for the diet of the children, and made reductions upon various items, and this they struck out.

This was struck out at the suggestion of the committee of fifteen, not of the chief secretary?—Yes; having reports so recently from the school, they did not think it requisite to continue the inspection.

Are the board to understand, that upon the committee discovering some of their schools were in an unfavourable state, they thought no further inspection was necessary?—No; I mentioned that the report of Mr. Lee never went before the committee of fifteen, nor do I know that it is known to many members of the committee, or perhaps any of them.

Are the reports you have of Mr. Lee of particular schools favourable or unfavourable?—I think in general favourable; in some schools it is otherwise.

All the reports of course are preserved?—The reports of those inspections are preserved; but the mere weekly reports of the catechist, as they only mention his visiting the school and examining the children, are not preserved.

Do any persons generally attend the meetings, except the committee of fifteen?—No.

How many constitute a quorum?—Three.

Does the name of each person who attends on each Wednesday, appear in any book?—Yes.

When any business of an extraordinary nature is to be taken into consideration, is any special notice given to the board?—Yes.

What is the course taken, if you find that a master declines in health and becomes incapable of performing the duties?—The committee recommend him to be superannuated.

Have not some schools been discontinued?—Yes.

Can you state what number have been discontinued?—Arklow, Ballykelly, Creggon, Kilfinane,

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

206]

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM COMMISSIONERS

finane, Kilkenny, Loughrea, Maynooth, Clonmel, Dunmanway, Trim; Newport and Ray are day schools.

What has been done with the houses and lands attached to those that have been discontinued?—In every instance but one, they have reverted to the heir of the original donor; Arklow, for instance, is given up to Lord Carysfort; the lease of Ballykelly had expired; Loughrea given up to the heir, and Maynooth to the Duke of Leinster.

By what considerations were the committee of fifteen guided, in the selection of the schools that were abandoned?—The bad state of the buildings, the remoteness of the situation, and the indifferent inspection.

* * * * *
Have any instances occurred of girls being seduced away from the schools by young men?—I believe not.

Are there elopements reported to the board?—Yes.

In case of elopements taking place, are the children always looked after, or do they suffer them to be abandoned?—The master generally inquires about them, and exerts himself to recover them as much as he can.

Do you know an instance of ten girls having lately eloped from a school?—No.

Do you know of any instance of girls being seduced by the master to whom they were apprenticed?—I never heard of it officially, nor do I know it.

In the case of elopements being reported to the board, do the board ever direct steps to be taken to recover them?—Nothing more than what the general rules require, which is, that the master shall make every exertion in his power to recover them.

Are they directed to punish them?—They are to correct them for faults; and that is a fault.

Do you recollect from Stradbally school, any boys having eloped at a late period, and the Society declining to take any trouble or expense in recovering them?—Yes.

Some of the Foundling Hospital children?—Yes.

They are lost now?—The committee ordered, that notice should be sent to the Foundling Hospital; but they declined any expense in pursuing them.

That was in the course of the present year?—Yes.

By whom are the masters appointed?—By the Society at large.

What rules do they follow in the selection and the appointment of the masters; is there any rule as to the age, or any previous qualification or instruction?—Yes; there is a rule that requires an examination by the committee of the Society, as to their qualification.

Is there any minute kept of the person by whom the masters are recommended to be appointed?—No; the names of the recommenders are not recorded.

Is it customary with the masters to apply to the committee as a committee generally, or do they apply to individuals?—I suppose they apply to individuals as well as the committee at large.

Are you in the habit of receiving letters from persons applying for situations as masters?—Yes, of course.

Are they addressed to you individually, or in your character as secretary?—As secretary.

Do you consider them as applications to you in your public capacity, and do you enter them as such?—They are not all entered; but when a vacancy occurs, all applications made are laid before the board.

Are not applications made to you by friends?—Yes.

Is there any rule as to age?—Yes, I believe there is.

Must he have been a schoolmaster before?—No.

Is there any rule as to his education?—Yes; there is a committee to inquire into his moral character, and his capability of teaching what is to be taught in the schools.

Do you frequently appoint people that have been themselves educated in chartered schools?—There have been instances.

Many?—Yes; I think many.

Have you been present at such examinations into the qualifications of the masters?—Yes.

Is there an election out of a plurality of candidates on each vacancy?—Yes.

On occasion of any particular appointment, are there more persons examined than one?—Yes; every one offering is examined, and then they submit such as they select to the board at large.

Do the committee recommend one?—Yes; they have sometimes recommended one; in general they have recommended an individual candidate.

Is the board at large, a different thing from the committee of fifteen?—Yes.

Do the board at large appoint the ushers?—No; the committee of fifteen.

By whom can the ushers be discharged?—The committee of fifteen.

Only?—Or the board.

Can the local committee dismiss the ushers?—No.

Can they suspend the ushers?—Yes; they may do that.

Have you ever known a case?—No.

Have you ever known any instances of ushers being dismissed?—Yes.

Lately?—I do not recollect whether very lately.

Have you had any complaint lately, of the conduct of any usher?—There was a complaint lately made from Stradbally, from the local committee.

Has there been any communication from the local committee of Stradbally?—Yes.

When was it received?—The week before last.

In the nature of a report?—Yes.

Has it been submitted to the consideration of the committee?—It has.

And any step taken in consequence?—They have appointed a new usher.

What

223
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

What have they done with the old one?—They have sent him to Santry.

That is considered rather an advance, is it not?—I consider it so; and I believe he did.

What salary does he receive now?—Forty-three pounds five shillings.

What was it before?—Thirty-eight pounds.

Was the complaint against the usher, for misconduct?—It was a report from the local committee, stating they had discovered that the usher had been guilty of undue severity to the boys.

Do you recollect whether they state how they discovered it?—I believe upon the investigation of Mr. Foster.

Did the local committee transmit any evidence?—No.

Did the committee of fifteen understand, that one of the Commissioners of this board had, as you say, discovered improprieties in this school?—The local committee reported, that Mr. Foster had visited the charter school; and that they were concerned to learn, that an undue severity had been exercised towards the boys.

Did the committee of fifteen decide upon that case, without expressing any wish to know what the Commissioners had discovered?—The report of the local committee was read yesterday week, and the subject postponed until yesterday; and yesterday they appointed him usher of Santry.

Was any wish expressed to know, what it was the Commissioners had so discovered, previous to coming to their decision?—There was a report from the local committee, stating what they had discovered.

Was any wish expressed to know, what it was Mr. Foster had so discovered, previous to the committee of fifteen coming to their decision?—No.

Was there any inquiry whatever as to the particular facts that came to his knowledge, on the part of the board?—There was not.

Did the local committee transmit any evidence?—No; only the report, stating what had been discovered; I do not know the words of their report.

Did it appear from their report, that they had themselves examined, or that they were acting upon what Mr. Foster had discovered?—It appeared, upon their report, that they were satisfied that there had been undue severity.

Upon their own examination and not the examination of Mr. Foster?—Yes.

In point of fact, were the committee of fifteen in possession of any particular facts that came to Mr. Foster's knowledge, previous to their decision upon the case?—No; only a general statement. I was asked by a member of the committee, at the board, whether any communication had been made respecting Stradbally school, by the Commissioners of Education; and I said, No.

Has any other report been received from any other local committee that has been visited?—None but Sligo.

Has any step been taken with respect to the school at Castledermot, within this fortnight; any particular step?—No.

Have you had any communication from the catechist at Longford, as to the state of health of the master there?—Not very lately; not in the last month or two.

Have you heard any thing in consequence of the Commissioners being there?—No.

Are you aware of the state of his health?—Yes.

Are you aware he is an idiot?—I am.

How long has the board been aware of that fact?—Two or three months.

Not more?—No.

Recollect yourself?—It was not; it was never stated to the committee of fifteen, that he was in that state.

Has it ever been stated he was in a state of fatuity?—I do not think that it has.

The catechist has not reported that fact?—No.

Is the master of Longford the only master in the service of the Society, who is an idiot?—I believe so.

How did you learn he was an idiot?—I heard it about the office from report.

Has it ever come officially to the knowledge of the committee of fifteen?—I believe not.

Have you, being aware of the fact, ever communicated it yourself to the committee of fifteen?—Yes; I think I mentioned it.

How long ago?—About a couple of months ago.

Did you communicate it to private individuals of the committee, or to the committee as a body?—Not at all to them as a body.

Then the committee have never known it as a committee?—I think Dr. Hancock mentioned the circumstance to the committee, and proposed that steps should be taken to change it from a school for boys to a school for girls.

Does the fact, that the man is an idiot, appear upon any report, or in the proceedings of the committee, or upon any document?—No, on the contrary; it appeared to the committee by the last report we had from the medical person attending the school, that he was getting better.

Then the fact, that he has been in a bad state of health, was known to the committee?—Yes, to individual members of the committee, but not officially reported.

You have stated, that so far from knowing it, by the last report he was getting better?—There was an application for leave of absence, on account of his health.

The nature of his illness was not communicated?—No.

In consequence of the communication that took place between you and individual members of the committee, have the committee taken any steps to inquire into the state of his health?—

[D d 4]

No;

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

No; I think they have received letters from the catechist, stating all the matters go on very well in the school.

The catechist has never represented, that he is in such a state as to be incapable of conducting the school?—I cannot state that positively.

Either that he was an idiot or in an infirm state of mind?—No.

It has never been stated that another person has been managing the school altogether?—No.

The usher managing the school part, and a relation of the wife managing the house and farm?—We knew nothing of that.

But there has been no report from the catechist of his being insane, or of his labouring under any infirmity of mind?—No, not to my knowledge.

How did you come to know it yourself first?—It was stated to the committee, he was in a bad state of health, and that it was necessary to change from his present place of residence to the place where he had lived, his native air; we had certificates from the medical person there, and they were, that they thought he would recover.

How did you happen to hear of the state of the infirmity of his mind?—I heard it accidentally in the office.

Are you aware there is a boy in that school that is an idiot?—No; I was not aware of it.

Does the system generally provide any means for removing idiots?—No.

Have you ever known instances of there being idiots in a school?—Yes.

What is done with them?—There are endeavours made to get them into the House of Industry, in Dublin.

If they are not got in, they are left?—Yes.

Is there one at Farra?—Yes, I believe there is.

Is it believed that the schools are all equal in management; or is it known to the committee, that the management of some is less good than the management of others?—It is known.

Are there any particular steps taken by the committee to improve the management of those that they suspect to be not in so good a state as the others?—I do not know of any; a master may not conduct the affairs of the school so well as another, and yet not be considered as deserving to be dismissed.

What schools do the committee believe to be the least well managed?—I think Longford is the lowest; we know more about some schools than others.

Which do you consider the next least meritorious?—We have very little experience at present. The Shannon-Grove; there is a new master there.

How long is it since he was appointed?—Not a year.

Was he under the establishment before?—Yes.

Where?—At Maynooth.

What was his character there?—He was a very well-conducted man; but that school was not in so well a conducted state as others.

Had the conduct of the master any thing to do with the abolishing of the school?—No, I believe not. Castle Martyr is not in a very favourable state.

Do you know any thing of Newport, in the county of Tipperary?—That is a day school.

Do you happen to know any thing of it?—I know it through the catechist, he has not reported very favourably of that school.

Did he report unfavourably of it?—No, I believe not.

Do you know any thing of the person of the master of Newport school?—Yes; he was master of Strangford.

Why was he removed?—For being inattentive to his duty.

Being inattentive to his duty, another school was found for him?—Yes; that was a day school. Mr. Thackeray visited the Strangford school, and reported rather unfavourably of it.

Was he represented by Mr. Thackeray, as a person incompetent for the situation?—No; in point of qualification he was very competent; but he was inattentive and negligent; and Mr. Thackeray recommended his removal from that school, considering that such a large establishment as that required a more efficient master; but he gave him hopes of another situation in a day school.

Do you know whether the day school at Newport has succeeded in the point of having scholars?—We have had a return of the number attending there.

From your general recollection of that return, can you say whether that school is well attended, or otherwise?—I cannot form an opinion upon that subject, because we have not the reports of Mr. Lee upon the subject.

Do you look to see the numbers?—Yes; and I know that other day schools are better attended; I know that Ray is better attended.

Do you know the situation of Clonmel?—Yes; I think fifty scholars attend there.

[Mr. Lewis.—I have been in the school at Clonmel, within the last fortnight, and found only two scholars there.]

Do you know the supply of the books at Clonmel?—I do not know the supply.

[Mr. Lewis.—There are no books in the school except the remains of the books that were there when it was a charter school; there are a few tatters of testaments.]

[Mr. Adamson.—We have had no applications for books.]

Do you know the condition of the master at Clonmel?—Yes; Andrew Martin is his name; he was the master of the boarding school when kept there.

Do you believe him to be a competent person?—Yes.

Are you aware he is a cripple from ill health?—No; I never heard of that.

Were

225
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

Were you aware he was so afflicted with the rheumatism as to be unable to go about?—No; I thought him a very healthy young man.

Do you know the person of the master at Newport?—Yes.

Do you consider him qualified for the situation of master?—I recollect his being examined by the committee, upon his election to Strangford school; I should consider him qualified in writing and accounts.

The question was asked generally; do you think him qualified to fill the situation of schoolmaster?—I must consider him a person qualified, from the committee having appointed him; I am not very intimate with him. I think he has peculiarities.

Are you acquainted with the master of Castledermot school?—I have seen him, and I consider him inferior in point of qualifications to many others.

Has he any peculiarities that you are aware of?—No.

Do you know any thing of his temper?—No.

Do you know that he was a shoemaker?—Yes.

What are the peculiarities you alluded to before, of the master of Newport school?—He is a whimsical kind of man; a flighty man.

And silly in appearance?—Yes.

Do you know what the schoolmaster at Clonmel is paid?—Fifty pounds a year.

Has he a house to live in?—Yes.

Has he also twenty-four acres of land, for which he pays 25s. an acre, a year?—Yes.

Are you aware that it is worth 4*l.* a year, per acre?—No, I am not.

Do you consider it contrary to the regulations of the Society, that the masters should take other farms than those that are leased to them by the Society?—It is not contrary to their regulations; they have given leave for it sometimes, but they must always state the quantity of land they have in addition; and if the board think proper to prevent it, they can; but it is sometimes an advantage.

Are you aware of any master having more than two farms?—No.

Can you state how much land the master of Stradbally holds?—Yes; I heard it from his usher, very lately, since the commission was appointed; he told me, and I was surprised at it.

Do you consider that as contrary to the regulations of the Society?—Yes.

Was that the first intimation you ever had of his holding three farms?—Yes; I never heard that he had a farm three miles from the house.

How many acres of land does he now hold?—About 100 acres.

Do you know what was the particular recommendation of the usher there, that induced the committee of the charter schools to advance him to a better appointment?—He was educated in the schools of the Society; and he explained the complaint made against him.

Do you mean that the committee of fifteen admitted his explanation, before they heard the charge?—They heard the charge the local committee had made, and upon his explanation, they sent him as usher to Santry.

Which was a promotion?—It is a larger salary; they wanted an usher there, and he was sent there, and the salary there was larger; they have given this man less than the salary the former usher had.

Have the local committee the power of examining on oath?—No.

Were the examinations upon which they founded their report, taken upon oath?—I cannot tell that.

You cannot tell whether they took any examinations?—No, I cannot.

Did the committee of fifteen, before they came to a decision upon the case of the usher, direct any inquiry, whether the local committee had taken any evidence?—No.

Were the committee of fifteen aware of the particular facts that had come to Mr. Foster's knowledge?—I think it right to state, that I mentioned when this man memorialled the committee of fifteen yesterday, to be appointed to the situation of usher, that there was a complaint against him of undue severity to the boys, and that the local committee had made such a representation.

Did it come to the knowledge of the committee of fifteen, that particular acts of cruelty had been made known to Mr. Foster?—They were aware that acts of misconduct had been charged against him.

Are we to understand, that though they knew the fact of Mr. Foster having discovered acts of misconduct, they were still ignorant what those acts were?—They understood they were acts of severity to the children.

Did he exculpate himself generally, or as to particular acts?—No, only generally; he was asked with what instrument he whipped the boys; and he explained.

Did the committee inquire as to the names of any particular boys that had been punished?—No; but the usher stated some particular boys, that had been punished the evening before Mr. Foster was there.

Do you conceive it probable, that the usher stated in his memorial, all the facts that Mr. Foster had discovered?—Indeed, I do not.

Do you think it probable, that the usher took exactly the same view of the facts stated, that Mr. Foster did?—Indeed, I do not.

Would you, if you had been acting as a member of the committee, have come to a decision upon the subject, without hearing what Mr. Foster had discovered?—I would not; but some members that were there on the first day, were not there on the second day.

You have stated, that the gentlemen who attended the first day, were not the persons who attended the second?—Not all of them; some were the same.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
28 Oct. 1824.

Were there many?—I think there were five attended the first day.

How many yesterday?—I am not sure, whether three or four.

Of the three or four who attended yesterday, how many were there who attended the first day?—Two; only two, I think.

The minutes of the last meeting are always read over?—Yes.

Are the whole of the minutes read through?—Yes.

Had the committee on the Wednesday se'nnight, done any act as to this case?—Yes.

What act?—They read the report of the local committee; the letter of the Reverend Hunt Johnson, the catechist; the master's letter, and certificates with regard to his health; and the usher's memorial, and the accompanying letter from a gentleman, Lord Henry Fitzgerald; and they resolved, That the further consideration should be postponed till the following Wednesday.

What date was that letter of Lord Henry Fitzgerald?—I believe, an old letter, testifying to his character.

What did the man pray by his memorial?—That his case might be inquired into, as he had been unjustly dismissed from his situation.

He had been dismissed?—So it appears.

By whom?—He stated Mr. Foster had dismissed him.

In point of fact, has he ever been dismissed?—No.

Has he ever been suspended?—No.

His memorial purported to be an appeal against the decision of Mr. Foster?—Yes.

And the committee decided upon it without any communication with this commission?—Yes, they did.

And the result of the memorial and the examination of the case was, that he was promoted to Santry?—The report of the local committee was not read yesterday, it was read before; and they appointed yesterday to take into consideration the appointment of an usher to Santry, and they appointed this man.

They did nothing whatever as to the case with respect to Stradbally, but there being a situation vacant at Santry, they appointed this man?—Yes.

Is there any expression of opinion upon their minutes, as to the conduct of this man?—No.

Will you now state, which you consider the best schools?—I can tell which are considered good schools; I consider Celbridge to be a good school, Monastereven also; Ross is a good school, and I have always heard that Stradbally was well conducted; Clontarf and Cashel, Baggot-street, Dundalk, Farra and Kevin-street.

What do you think of Charleville?—I think that is pretty favourable.

Have you heard any thing of Monivea?—I would not consider that one of the best schools.

What is your opinion of Sligo?—It is not necessary to mention that now.

But before the late inquiry it stood very high?—Yes.

Have you the means of tracing, in your own office, what has become of any particular boy; supposing the documentary evidence relating to that boy, in the country, should be lost?—Yes; so far as the termination of the apprenticeship.

If he was transplanted half a dozen times, you could trace him?—Yes.

Appendix, N° 111.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esquire; Friday, October 29th, 1824.

29 Oct. 1824.

ARE there not some schools that stand upon a footing somewhat different from those generally called chartered schools?—Yes.

What are they?—The Athlone and Roscommon schools, and the Lintown factory.

Are there any rules and regulations peculiar to those institutions, and that are not in common with the other chartered schools?—Yes; with respect to the admission of the children; they are different institutions; the Ranelagh schools are exclusively for the children of Protestants, and the Lintown factory is exclusively for the children of Roman Catholic parents, between the ages of twelve and sixteen years, who must be of Roman Catholic parents, and never have been in any seminary before, and particularly in none of the charter schools, to be brought up to the weaving business.

Is that a condition strictly abided by in the Lintown factory?—It is.

Are children never taken where one parent is Roman Catholic, and the other Protestant?—Yes; the committee have considered, that taking in such a child is complying with the will of the testator.

Are the children made to work in the schools belonging to the Ranelagh foundation?—They are expected by the committee to be employed.

Have they any peculiar system of labour?—No.

Have they at the Lintown factory?—Yes, the linen weaving business.

What agreement was made with the master of the Lintown factory, as to the work which they so produce?—The master has the entire produce, besides the Society paying him a salary, and for the diet and clothing of the boys, and they allowed 16*l.* a year for the repair of the looms.

Have the Society any means of knowing what is the value of the work produced in the schools?—No, they have not, except by the return of the master, unless the master was called upon, but he has not been called upon to make any particular return.

Is

227
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
29 Oct. 1824.

Is it supposed to be a situation of much value?—I think it is one of the best.

Is he paid as much money as the other masters?—I think he gets a larger salary; he is paid more.

How many boys are in the Lintown factory?—At present, not more than from seventeen to twenty.

What is the present amount of the income of the estate left for the maintenance of the Lintown factory?—It does not exceed 500*l.* a year.

I have before me the Return made to the Commissioners of Education, in the year 1808, in which it is stated, that the income of the Pococke estate is 964*l.*; has it diminished in value?—It has, considerably.

Where is it situate?—The principal part is in the county of Waterford; the remainder is houses and ground in the city of Kilkenny.

Are any funds applied to the maintenance of the Lintown factory, except those that arise from the Pococke estate?—The Society have been obliged to advance money out of their funds, for the support of that and the Ranelagh schools.

Is it in the nature of an advance of money upon account, or a payment towards the maintenance of the school?—Towards the maintenance of the school.

Does the Society look for the repayment of that fund?—Yes, they do; since the debt has been increased they have diminished the number of boys, it was formerly forty; it is now only twenty; they have diminished the number so as to cause some saving.

Is there any particular application of the funds left by the late John Rogerson?—No; it goes to the general fund.

Does the estate of Dean Stewart of Ardpatrik, go to the general fund?—Yes.

Is Baron Vryhouver's in the same way?—Yes.

There is a bequest of 40,000*l.* by an unknown person?—Yes.

Is it at all supposed who that was?—It is not known to the board; but I have heard that it was a Mr. Hawkins, of London.

Does the grant of Erasmus Smith, of 250*l.* still continue?—It has been discontinued for two years; I have applied to the agent, and he said he would pay it next December.

Is there any other peculiar payment to the school at Sligo?—No.

Are the boys at the Lintown factory, clothed in the same way, according to the same regulations as the boys in the other schools?—Yes.

There is no difference in any respect?—No.

Has there ever been at any time any difference?—I believe there was, when the master clothed them; the Society now send down clothing from their contractor in Dublin, for the boys in the factory.

How are the boys from the Lintown factory disposed of?—They are apprenticed to the master of the school, according to the will of the testator, Bishop Pococke.

Do they, in that respect, differ from the weaving boys at Sligo?—Yes, entirely; those at Lintown are apprenticed, at least those who have attained the age of fourteen years, and they are admitted between twelve and sixteen; the Sligo boys are not apprenticed.

Is it known what becomes of the boys after their apprenticeship expires?—No.

Do they receive any premium?—Yes; they get a marriage portion. Some years back, the Society resolved to give those boys the same encouragement to marry Protestants.

Is that premium paid out of the funds of the Pococke estate?—Yes; indeed very few have got it.

To what do you attribute that?—To their continuing Roman Catholics; they are admitted between the ages of twelve and sixteen, and I think it is too late then to expect to make them Protestants.

Do they invariably conform to the Protestant worship, and learn the Protestant catechism, during the time they are in the school?—Yes; the Church catechism.

Is there a catechist there, as well as in other schools?—There is.

Is there any mode by which the Society are acquainted with the proportion of boys who relapse to Catholicism and those who remain Protestants?—No; except that very few receive marriage portions.

Can you state how many marriage portions have been paid in the last few years?—There is one.

There is no chance of that marriage portion being applied for by a person who is not a real Protestant?—No; it requires certain certificates.

Is there any rule of the Society that goes to this point, whether the children should sit down to their dinner, or stand up?—No: not that I know of; I believe it is practised both ways.

Is it at all thought objectionable that they should sit down to dinner?—I do not know that it is; I know they sit down at Clontarf school to their meals.

When the sites of the schools are restored to the families of the original grantors, are the buildings that are upon them valued, or are they transferred?—No; they are generally given up.

Are the buildings considered of any value?—No, they are not; at Maynooth, the old building was taken down by the Duke of Leinster.

Can you state what number of applications were made for admission, in the last year?—I should think from five to six hundred; besides the five hundred from the Foundling hospital.

Was the decision in the Sligo case made upon the 29th of September?—Yes.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
29 Oct. 1824.

Was the whole of the evidence which had been transmitted by the local committee, and the whole of the evidence which had been taken before Mr. Grant and Mr. Blake, as Commissioners, read before the decision was made?—To the best of my belief, it was; it was given, after I had read it, to individual members of the committee who afterwards came in, and who had it in their hands for a length of time.

You read the whole of it, aloud?—Yes; I think, the whole of it. Yes, I did; I recollect I did.

What time did the board sit that day in the morning?—Before twelve.

At what time did the board break up?—Between two and three; or perhaps after three.

Between that time the evidence was read, considered, and the decision made?—It was.

Had the evidence been previously communicated to the members of the board?—I declare, I forget whether it was, or not, at this moment; it is in the possession of one of the members.

Prior to the meeting of the 29th, had the evidence and the minute of this board been sent round to the members?—No; it had not.

When was the evidence received from the Lord Lieutenant?—I do not know exactly the day it was received; but two or three days previously to the meeting of the 29th.

The evidence which was received from his Excellency, was the same as was transmitted by us to the board?—Yes, precisely.

The report received from Sligo, was taken into consideration on the 29th?—Yes.

Had it been previously considered by the board?—No.

Can you state, upon what day it was received in Dublin?—No.

Neither the evidence taken before the Commissioners who were at Sligo, nor the evidence taken before the local committee there, had been read by the committee of fifteen, or the persons who attended on the 29th, before the 29th?—No.

When the members of the committee who attended on the 29th, assembled, did you read the whole of the reports, and the evidence?—Yes.

That is to say, the minute made by the members of this board, the report of the local committee, the evidence taken before the members of this board, and the evidence taken before the local committee?—Yes.

Do you recollect how long it took you to read all these documents?—I read very fast; and I was desired to read it fast; and I read it in the course of three quarters of an hour.

The whole?—Yes.

How many members were present when you commenced reading?—I really do not recollect at this time; I believe all the five were present, who appear there; I recollect particularly, Dr. Orpen took it into his hands after I had read it.

Was the decision which appears on your minutes, drawn up that day, and reduced into writing?—Certainly.

Is it your duty to prepare documents of this description?—It is.

The minute therefore was drawn up by you?—It was.

Did it undergo any alteration after you had drawn it?—I believe not.

When was it signed?—On the following Wednesday, the 6th of October.

Was there any minute made in writing; short heads for this detailed minute on the 29th?—Yes.

By whom was that minute made?—By the Registrar.

Who is the Registrar?—Thomas Stuart.

Have you got the original note?—No, I am afraid not; these [producing a paper] are the rough notes taken by him; when they are written out, and signed, these are destroyed.

You stated, you had been directed to write to the catechist, at Sligo, desiring he would pay more attention to the attendance of the children at church?—I stated I did write; but there was no particular special direction,—under the general order I had authority to do it. I would wish to correct myself as to that minute; the whole of that minute was dictated to me, or written by the chairman, or a member of the committee.

Name him?—It was Colonel Blacker; and a fair copy was perused by the same member, at the request of the committee. I was asked yesterday, which I thought to be the worst managed school, according to my recollection, and I really think Kilkenny.

Appendix, N° 112.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esquire; Saturday, 30th October 1824.

30 Oct. 1824.

REFERRING to the memorial of Thomas Eustace, the late usher of the school at Stradbally, presented to the committee of fifteen of the Incorporated Society, dated the 18th of October, I see, that the memorialist prayed, "That the honourable committee of fifteen would refer to the local committee of the said school," which he states to be "alone competent to draw a just conclusion upon the memorialist's conduct;" I would wish to know, whether the committee of fifteen, before they decided upon the conduct of that usher, made such reference as he applied for, to the local committee?—They did not.

Do you consider, that the proceedings of the committee of fifteen upon the communications they received of the state of that school, are now entirely closed?—Yes; unless some member of the committee thinks proper to bring the matter under further consideration; I am not called upon to do so.

Are you aware, that in one letter, signed "Thomas Eustace," dated October the 19th, 1824, he uses the following expression; "I think it but justice to lay before the board, a statement

329
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
30 Oct. 1824.

a statement as to how I have been treated by a Mr. Leslie Foster, one of His Majesty's Commissioners of Education;" and that in the memorial from the same person, transmitted with the same letter, the following expression occurs; "Another of His Majesty's Commissioners, a Mr. Leslie Foster?"—I am aware of those expressions.

Did the committee of fifteen, or any one of them, make any observations upon those expressions?—I do not recollect that they did; upon reading it they did not.

At any time afterwards, in the course of the meeting?—No; not upon those expressions.

They were passed over as any other part of the letter?—It may be proper to mention, that on the 27th, the day of the new appointment, I was asked by a member of the committee of fifteen, whether any report had been received from Mr. Foster, and I answered "No."

But there was no observation upon that expression?—No.

And upon your replying there had been no such report, they disposed of the business in the course of the day?—Yes.

It was not proposed to send to know whether there was any such report?—No.

You were not directed to make any application to any member of this board?—No.

Was it considered by the committee of fifteen, that Mr. Foster had dismissed this man?—Yes, it was, at least by some individual members of the committee, that Mr. Foster had turned him off.

Was their attention called to that expression of the local committee in their report, that he had "withdrawn himself?"—It was read by me, and it was then put into the hands of the chairman of the day, and there was no more attention called to it.

Was there any discussion or conversation upon the question, whether Mr. Foster had dismissed him or not?—No, there was an inquiry made whether he had so punished the boys.

Was the man present?—I do not recollect that he was present on the 27th, when he was appointed, but on the preceding Wednesday he was.

Were you present at that examination?—Yes.

Was any minute made of the questions and answers?—No.

Was he examined at much length?—Perhaps ten minutes.

Were the questions put to him by yourself or the chairman?—By the chairman.

Do you at all bear in mind the course of the examination?—Yes.

State it?—The chairman asked him the mode he pursued in chastising the boys, and he described the instrument as leather thongs, called Torrs; the chairman observed, that he had sat at that board for nine years, and that was the first time he ever knew such an instrument was used in the correction of the children. Another member observed, that such kind of punishment could not be dispensed with, or words to that effect; the chairman observed, that sitting on the form two or three hours, would soon bring a child to better conduct, instead of whipping them in that manner.

Did Mr. Eustace tell the committee any thing about a rope he occasionally made use of?—This was a rope.

Did he tell you any thing of a hempen rope, as contradistinguished from a leathern cat?—I do not recollect that he did; I understood it was the same instrument that the master used in chastising the boys, and which was used in the former school, Strangford.

Did he give any account with reference to the severity with which he used this, or the frequency of it?—I think he admitted he flogged them pretty severely; he does so in his memorial.

Was any inquiry made as to the number of stripes?—No.

Or as to the number of times in one day he ever punished one boy?—No.

Or into the extent of the injury any one boy had received from his punishment?—No, he was asked upon what part he flogged them, and he said he took down their breeches.

Did the usher make any mention of ever having used any branches of trees for punishment?—No.

Was the account given by the usher of this practice, such as to remove from the minds of the committee of fifteen, the impression they must have received from the report of the local committee, that he had practised for some time reprehensible severity?—I think he removed it from the minds of the majority of the members present, in a great measure,—not that they were all satisfied that he was not too severe.

Do you believe if the committee had continued to think he had long exercised undue severity, they would have preferred him to a more beneficial situation in Santry school?—No, I do not; I believe the majority thought the boys were not too severely punished.

And they were satisfied of that by the account given by the person punishing?—Yes.

Was any and what observation made as to the reason of appointing him to Santry school?—He had gone down to the school at Santry between the two Wednesdays, and the master of the school at Santry attended, and he was asked his opinion of Mr. Eustace, and he replied he thought he would make a good usher.

Had the master at Santry school had any previous acquaintance with Mr. Eustace?—I do not know.

Was the opinion of the master of Stradbally school asked as to the propriety of the subsequent appointment?—No.

Was the attention of the Committee called to the report of the local committee of Stradbally, before they examined the usher?—I certainly did advert to the report of the local committee to the chairman, who was not present on the preceding day, and asked him,

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
30 Oct. 1824.

whether he was aware there was a very unfavourable report of the conduct of the usher, and he seemed to be acquainted with it, and he seemed to think it not necessary to make any further communication.

Was their attention called to the opinion of the master of Stradbally school, that the usher was a liar, he states, "it gives him much concern to add, that his, the usher's remarks to Mr. Foster, respecting his the master's attendance in the school-room, were unkind, and by no means founded in truth," was the attention of the committee called to that passage in the letter?—Not on that day; that was on the 20th.

Was the letter of the 18th of October read at all upon the 27th?—No, nor the report of the local committee.

Were there on the 27th, persons present who had not been present on the preceding day?—Yes.

Did those persons dispose of the case without reading the documents upon which the merits of the case depend?—They did.

Or without seeing the individual accused?—Yes.

Did the members who were not present upon the preceding day, see the usher upon the day on which the case was disposed of?—No.

Is it usual for the committee of fifteen, where a complaint is made of an usher, or where disapprobation of his conduct is expressed by the local committee, to examine into the case by the examination of the usher, and decide upon the case without communicating with the local committee or catechist?—No, it is not.

Is it their course, when a complaint is made, or disapprobation expressed, of the conduct of a master or usher, to refer the subject to the consideration of the local committee, to be guided by the report?—Yes.

Can you inform us why the usual course was departed from in the present case?—The committee had before them the report of the local committee upon the subject,—they had sufficient information before them as they supposed.

The local committee express upon that report, disapprobation of the usher's conduct; I have asked you where disapprobation was expressed, was it usual for the committee of fifteen to examine the person accused, and dispose of the case without referring to the local committee?—No, they always refer to the local committee, they frequently have their opinion before them at the time.

Has it ever occurred before the present time, after disapprobation had been expressed of the conduct of the usher by the local committee, that the committee of fifteen examine into that case, and dispose of it either by confirmation of the usher in his appointment, or by promoting him without further communication with the local committee?—I do not recollect any instance.

Then this case stands alone in that respect?—I consider that the committee of fifteen had the opinion of the local committee before them.

Did not that local committee express disapprobation of his conduct?—Yes.

Did any similar instance ever before occur?—I do not recollect an instance.

Is it usual for the committee of fifteen, where a complaint is made by the committee below, of the conduct of an usher, to go into the consideration of his general character, and dispose of the case without further communication with the committee below?—No, it is not usual.

Has it ever occurred before the present case to your recollection?—No, it has not.

Has the evidence said to be taken by the local committee, ever yet been transmitted to the committee of fifteen?—No, it has not.

In the present instance, the committee of fifteen were aware that the conduct of the usher had not only been disapproved of by the local committee, but also by one of his Majesty's commissioners?—I mentioned the circumstance; two of the members were certainly present when the whole business was read, and I mentioned that there was an unfavourable report.

Were the persons who had not been present upon the first day, but were present upon the last day, aware that the conduct of this person was disapproved of both by the local committee, and by one of his Majesty's commissioners?—Yes, they had heard that Mr. Foster had made an unfavourable report, but they had no document upon it.

And you know of no instance where the conduct of the usher was disapproved of by the local committee, taken by itself, in which the committee did not dispose of it upon communication with the local committee?—I recollect no instance of the local committee having reported unfavourably of an usher.

Did they ever come to a decision without communicating with the local committee upon the subject?—No, they have always communicated to the local committee their decision.

Previously?—No, not until after their decision. I do not recollect any case of the local committee reporting unfavourably of an usher; they have generally commended the ushers.

Have you brought the reports of the catechists, and of the local committees you were yesterday desired to bring?—I have not.

Why have you not done so?—I have not had time to make inquiry whether I could supply them; I have searched for them.

In what manner are they preserved in your office?—There is a vast multiplicity of papers in the office that are of such importance to be preserved, that these are not,—as to the copies of the visitors reports from the schools, so much attention is not paid to them,—but they are all in the office.

What

33/
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
30 Oct. 1824.

What the commissioners require is not the copies of the visitors reports, but the originals of the catechist's reports, and the originals of the local committees reports?—They are kept.

About how many catechist's reports may you have received altogether since the first of January last?—Since the first of January last we have received a great mass of the reports for the half year ending the 25th of December; I may say all; and the greater part of those ending the 25th of June.

Do you mean, that those reports, ending the 25th of December, had been lost, or are forthcoming?—No, I hope they are all preserved; but for three years I could not get them.

If the rules of the society were observed, is it not the fact that each catechist would monthly have reported upon his own respective school?—Yes.

There are about thirty schools belonging to this society?—Yes.

It would follow, that about 270 monthly reports at least, ought ere now to have been made; of those 270 how many have been made, as nearly as you can answer?—There is a very small proportion; I cannot tell how many.

Have ten been received?—From the first of January to the first of October there ought to have been nine letters from each catechist; that would be 270 letters.

How many of those 270 have you received?—I declare I do not think there are fifty.

Upon your oath, do you believe that as many as ten out of those 270 regular monthly reports, have been received by you?—Upon my word, I doubt it. I think not; not regular monthly letters.

Can you recollect any one instance in which a catechist has made one of his monthly returns since the first of January last?—I do not think there is; there are schools in Dublin from which a monthly return is not expected, because they have a weekly list.

Have you searched for any of the reports of Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee?—I have them; I have not brought them here; I can send them this day.

[The witness was directed to send every paper he could possibly find of those called for by the Commissioners, on Monday next.]

Appendix, N° 113.

Examination of John Vickers on oath, Thursday, 4th November 1824.

WHAT office do you hold in the Incorporated Society?—Messenger.

What is it your duty to do as messenger; have you any particular duty?—To go on all messages for the board, and carry letters, and one thing or another, and to attend the board on board days, or any other day; I am there every day from ten till three, and sometimes four.

What salary have you?—Forty pounds a-year, and five guineas a gratuity.

In what house do the Society hold their meetings?—55, Aungier-street.

Do you live there?—No, I do not.

In what office does Mr. Adamson transact his business as secretary?—In the society house.

Is it your duty to attend in Aungier-street as messenger?—Yes.

Do you attend from day to day?—Yes.

Is the time you have stated, the time you ought to attend, or the time you actually do attend?—The time I ought to attend.

From what time do you actually attend?—From ten till three.

Is there any other messenger than yourself?—No.

Do you employ any deputy?—No.

Have you any other duty, trust or employment connected with the Society?—My wife is matron to the asylum for girls that are out of situations, and that are sent to her, and she provides them with situations.

Where is this institution?—In Charlemont Place

Have not the Society for some years been in possession of a house in Charlemont-street?—Yes, they had a charter school there formerly; now they have not.

Describe the purpose to which that building is now applied?—It is now occupied by a parcel of vintners, who took it from the Society; this institution is in another house that belonged to the Society.

Which is now converted into a refuge for young females out of situations?—Yes.

Under what circumstances do they come to that house?—As to some of them, their masters and mistresses went to America, and left the poor girls in the streets; and then the board sent them up to my wife, and she provided situations for them.

When was it first established?—I think two years ago.

How many persons have been in it since it was established?—I dare say about sixty.

How many are in it at this moment?—Thirty-one.

What is the greatest length of time that any of them have been absent from a charter school?—They are young women mostly; some of them four or five years; I am not exactly sure.

In order to obtain a refuge in this asylum, what step is it necessary the young women should take?—They come forward on Wednesdays and memorial the board, and then the board inquire into their circumstances.

Have any of them been admitted without presenting such memorial?—I believe none; indeed they might have come forward and had no letter at all.

What is the age of the oldest person who has been in this asylum?—I think about twenty-four.

Examination of
John Vickers,
4 Nov. 1824.

Examination of
John Vickers,
4 Nov. 1824.

216]

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM COMMISSIONERS

Are there any persons that are now in this institution that have been in it ever since its first opening?—I believe there is one of them, and she is a very low girl, and I am afraid not fit for any thing.

Do you mean low in stature, or low in intellect?—Low in stature.

A dwarf?—Yes.

Are the number that you can receive limited?—No, they are not.

Is the house full?—Indeed it is pretty full now; we have room for a few more.

What is the greatest number you have ever had in it at any one time?—Thirty-four.

What allowance is made for their maintenance?—Ten-pence a day, no salary whatever; and I find coals, candles, soap, and every thing myself.

What allowance is made for the clothing?—£. 1. 19s.

By whom is the clothing supplied?—By my wife.

Is it by contract?—Yes.

What quantity of clothing is she bound to supply?—That is according to circumstances; I have an account of what we furnish. Some girls, when they come in, may have a good shift or two, and we do not then buy them a shift, we buy them things that they want; I have an account of every thing I buy. I expend the whole £. 1. 19s.

Have you received some idiots into the institution?—Not one.

In what way do you account for the necessity of providing this institution; why is it necessary there should be a refuge for these people, when they are able to gain their livelihood?—Yes, if they have situations; but it is very difficult to get situations; they have often been obliged to pawn their clothes.

Have they conducted themselves well in their situations?—Indeed they have, very well; we have got some very respectable situations for them.

What made it necessary to provide this institution for the boys; is it at all necessary when a boy is provided with a good education?—I think it would be very necessary to have such an institution for boys; when they leave their situations, they have no place to go to, and they are in the streets, and may commit thefts.

What have you to do with boys six or seven years old?—They were sent to me from Dublin; they were admitted, and sent up to our house.

For what reason?—To have clothes, and be sent to schools; I believe Ardbraccan school; it was merely a temporary thing.

Are the people in this institution employed?—Yes, we have them generally at work making shirts, or any thing we can get to do.

You take in work?—Yes, we do.

Are you charged by the rules of the Society with any value for the work?—None whatever; what little we do Mrs. Vickers has the profit of it.

Is any account kept of the work done?—No, I have not kept any.

Are the women constantly employed?—Indeed pretty well.

Are they made to spin?—No, not yet.

Or to weave?—No, but I have thought of putting up two or three looms for them.

Have you ordered any looms?—Not as yet.

Have you stated to the Society it will be very desirable to have looms?—No.

Is it your intention to do so?—Certainly.

Are the persons in this institution healthy?—Very much so.

Are they tolerably well behaved?—Indeed they are, very well.

What is the name of the dwarf you spoke about?—M'Gill.

Suppose the case of any girl having unfortunately so conducted herself as to lose her good character and reputation, under those circumstances would she be received into this institution?—Indeed I do not know; I never had any of those girls.

Have you had any applications from such girls?—There was a girl came the week before last to Dr. Thackeray at the office, and she was with child, I think, though she would not acknowledge it; he desired me to make inquiries into her character, and she went off before I could make the inquiries.

Have the girls any body to recommend them?—We always inquire into them; there is a lady who is constantly inquiring about them.

Who is that?—Miss Keating.

Do many persons apply for admission who are not admitted?—No.

Do you know John M'Hugh?—Yes.

What has become of him?—He is somewhere about Charlemont-street, working about here and there.

How came he to be sent, at seventeen years and three quarters old, to Stradbally?—All the boys were sent out of the house to make room for the girls; there were, I believe, three more of them sent at the same time.

Thomas Fitzpatrick, the same?—Yes.

Do you remember him?—Yes, he is doing very well.

He was sent to Stradbally?—Yes, I got a situation for him the week before last as a servant, and he is doing very well; these girls I have now with me would have gone to ruin if they had not come into the Asylum.

Is Mary Reid with you?—No.

How long did she stay in the school?—I do not know.

Do you remember the story of that girl; she seems the oldest girl of the party; where had she been?—I think she was from Charleville school.

She must have left it a great many years?—Yes.

Do

Do you know what she had been doing from the time she left Charleville, till she came to you?—Indeed I cannot immediately answer; I believe she went to her friends at Limerick.

Have any of the young women in this asylum relapsed to the Roman Catholic religion in the interval?—Not one.

Who is the catechist of this institution?—We have no catechist.

Have you any local committee?—Only Miss Keating; she visits very frequently.

Are you subject to any inspection, except that of Miss Keating?—Yes; other persons call in occasionally.

Are there any persons directed by the Incorporated Society to have an eye upon it?—No.

Does Miss Keating superintend voluntarily?—Yes.

Has she any authority to make observations, or find fault?—She has the authority of the Society; I believe she is one of the visiting ladies of Kevin-street school.

Whose duty is it to exert themselves to find situations for these girls?—Mrs. Vickers and mine.

Are the young women at liberty to go in or out as they please?—No.

Are they confined?—The door is not locked; but they do not ask to go out; they do not attempt it.

Have any of them gone away without giving you notice?—No, I cannot say they have.

Would you let a girl go away if she asked it?—Yes, I think I might.

Has any girl asked to go away?—No, never to my knowledge.

Is there any limitation of the age at which you receive them?—No.

Or of the time that they are permitted to stay?—No; any thing of a good servant does not remain long there. I dare say I could get off twenty good housemaids if I had them; we have not a good servant I dare say, now; I sent out four last week, and two this week; but we also teach them to wash and get up linen.

Do the girls read; have you any books?—They have prayers morning and evening.

Have you any books?—Only bibles and prayer books.

One?—We have more, but that is the only book we use in the house at present; we make them industrious.

Do the women ever read at all?—They do read the Bible occasionally.

Is there any premium given to the persons who take the girls as servants?—None they hire them as servants, and give them so much a year.

Who inspects the state of the dormitories?—Mrs. Vickers herself.

Whose duty is it to receive papers and letters addressed to the members of the Society, or to Mr. Adamson, at the Society's house?—Generally mine.

Does it ever happen, that the boys of the charter schools prefer complaints of the manner in which they are treated at the Society's office?—No, I do not recollect any.

Do they ever make communications in writing to the Incorporated Society?—No, I do not recollect; I recollect now, that some time ago, a candidate teacher at Santry brought a book of complaints of some of the masters, and he handed it to me in the office.

What was his name?—I do not know his name; I know his face.

Was it Moyle?—I believe it was, a sandy-haired boy; he handed me a book, and I asked him what it was; he said it was a complaint he had against some of the masters; "Dear me," said I, "this is very strange; when did it occur, or what is it." I think he told me either two or three years ago. I advised him, "Boy, take care what you do, it is a long time since; you should have laid it before the board when it occurred, and not have brought it so long afterwards;" however, so it was, he did not send it up to the board room that day, not that moment.

Did he leave it in your hands?—No; I laid it down by his side, he was standing by the desk.

Was it directed to any body?—I believe it was directed to Mr. Adamson; it was rolled up.

Was it sealed?—No, I think it was not; it was rolled up, and a string tied round it, and knowing the boy, I advised him to consider well before he acted, and he seemed to wish to take a little time to consider; I was afraid of it's injuring the poor boy and the masters, both.

What reason had you to think it would injure the boy?—Bringing it forward two or three years after it occurred. I told him he should have brought it before the board immediately.

What became of it?—Mr. Stuart came down stairs, and I believe he handed it to Mr. Stuart.

It does not seem he was convinced by your arguments, that he had better not deliver it; but finding you were unwilling to receive it, he gave it to somebody else?—He did not seem inclined to send it up.

Do you mean, he did not seem inclined to trust it with you?—I do not know; it might have been so.

Answer this explicitly; did you refuse to deliver it, or not?—Oh no, certainly not; I merely advised him to think of it.

Did you express great unwillingness to deliver it?—I do not doubt but I did.

In point of fact, he gave it into your hands, and you put it out again, advising him not to deliver it?—Yes.

And then seeing Mr. Stuart, he gave it to him?—I think so; I did not see it.

Is this the only occasion you have been applied to, to transmit to the Society papers containing complaints of the conduct of masters?—The only case; never before.

Examination of
John Vickers,
4 Nov. 1824.

Have you ever seen letters received by the post that you have known to contain complaints?—No, I have not; never.

Are you in the habit of receiving applications from masters or ushers connected with their objects, views and wishes?—Sometimes; very seldom indeed.

To whom is it usual for the masters and ushers to address their applications, for whatever point they may wish to carry?—Mr. Adamson, the secretary.

Are they open or sealed?—Always sealed.

Do they attend in person, or send them by post?—By post; they come free to Mr. Adamson.

Does it often happen, that you are acquainted with what the ushers wish; in desiring to be removed, for instance?—No.

Do they never consult you about the best mode and time of applying?—No, indeed; I do not recollect.

Are you personally acquainted with many of them?—No, very few.

Is it your duty to attend in the room when the committee are sitting?—To go in and out with letters, and any thing that may occur.

In whose hands are the memorials placed of those destitute women to come into the Institution?—I very often get them when they come to the board-room.

Are they sealed, or are you acquainted with them?—I believe they are generally sealed.

Are you in the habit of receiving fees or gratuities from persons applying to the Society?—No, I am not.

Have you never received any presents from any schoolmaster, or his family?—No, indeed, nothing; I believe I got about a year ago a few young goslings, from a master in the country.

Was that the only occasion?—Yes; to my knowledge.

Have you ever known of any presents from the masters to any officer of the Society?—No.

You never heard of such?—No; not that I know of.

Do you know of whom the boy complained, in the statement handed to you?—I forget; the boy told me three or four schools, but I knew the boy before, and that was the reason I took such pains with him.

This was in June last?—I really do not know, indeed; it was about that time.

How long have you known him?—About four, or five, or six months; coming backwards and forwards from the school.

What brought him to the office so frequently?—He very often brought the report book on the Wednesday, from Santry.

Was that all you knew of him?—Yes.

Did you know none of the persons of whom he intended complaining?—I think Ross was one of them.

Do you know the master of the school at Ross?—Yes, I do.

He is a friend of your's?—He was an officer with me for some years.

What did he complain of in particular, as to the master at Ross?—I really do not recollect?—I do not think I asked him any questions.

You only knew he complained about that master?—I think he complained of several.

Did you read the paper?—I read the first page; I had not time to read more.

What did it state?—I do not recollect the particulars.

Do you not recollect any of the other masters?—No, I do not recollect.

Did you not know at the time?—No.

Who was the master from whom you had that present?—I think the master at Stradbally.

Was there any particular inducement for it?—No, nothing; I was quite astonished.

Was he an old friend of your's?—No; I knew him by coming to the office.

What situation did the master of Ross hold in the office?—A clerk.

Had he ever been a schoolmaster before he was a clerk?—I believe not.

Had he been educated in a charter school?—I believe he was.

Is there any gratuity or donation of any sort or kind, received by any officer of the Incorporated Society from masters or ushers when they are appointed?—Not that I know of.

Have you never known an instance of any such?—No; not to my knowledge.

Nor of any present of any sort being made?—No, never.

Excepting the woman of low stature you have mentioned, whom you think it would be difficult to provide with a situation, are there any other persons in the Institution for whom you think there is little hope of getting situations?—We shall get situations (please God) for every other; they are very good girls.

Most of those girls have been apprenticed?—Yes.

Do you expect that the Institution will always be full?—I dare say it will.

Do you think, with the difficulties those girls find in providing themselves with situations, it would be possible to fill another Institution in the same way?—No, I think it is enough; but I think if there was one for boys, it would be well.

Have those girls all been apprenticed in Dublin?—No; some in the country.

Every girl is able to tell her own story, as to where she went and where she came from?—Yes, every girl.

Appendix, N^o 114.

Examination of Mr. Thomas Stuart, on Oath, Thursday, 4th November 1824.

WHAT situation do you hold on the Incorporated Society?—Registrar, or clerk, according to the Act of Parliament; I am generally denominated registrar.

What is it your duty to do in that situation?—A great variety of duties. In the first instance, I attend the committees and board, and take minutes of their proceedings; these minutes afterwards the secretary and I compare, and a rough copy is made out from them by him; when that is done, I have to copy all the transactions that pass at the board for the different correspondents, and after that to make a fair copy into the minute book and general board book, of all the proceedings, and in fact, any other incidental business in the office, under the direction of the secretary.

Do all applications and memorials necessarily pass through your hands?—No; I do not know what you mean by applications; of what nature; I can tell you that applications for apprentices pass through my hands in the first instance, in regard to endorsing them, and preparing them for the board; all letters that the secretary hands to me for endorsement pass through my hands, and are returned to him, but any other letters and correspondence with the secretary comes to him in the first instance direct.

Are they necessarily known to you afterwards?—Not always; it may sometimes happen, I am not in the board room when a particular letter may be read; sometimes I have been desired to go down from the board room to copy some business, and during my absence business might occur that I might not be acquainted with, so far as the letter itself.

Are letters, papers, memorials and applications addressed to Mr. Adamson?—They are, generally; some come under the name, "To the Honourable the Incorporated Society."

Who opens them?—He does.

Are all papers of that kind opened by him?—Yes, and him only.

Are applications for admission into a charter school transmitted through you, or known to you?—They are known to me, for they come in the first instance to the office; many of them come inclosed to Mr. Adamson; those from the country all come to him in the first instance—then they are endorsed and entered in a book under my superintendence, either by myself or under my superintendence.

Do you reside in the house at Aungier-street?—No.

What salary have you?—One hundred and twenty guineas a year, including gratuity.

Any other privileges, perquisites or emoluments annexed to your office?—No, except in cases of extra business occupying my time after office hours, which occurs but seldom.

Is it customary to give fees by persons who apply at the office?—There are no fees of any description ever given that I am aware of.

Do you recollect an application being made to Mr. Vickers, to transmit a memorial which a boy of the name of Moyle had addressed to the Incorporated Society?—I recollect the transaction.

What do you know of it?—I recollect on a particular Wednesday after the board was over, I came down stairs and found on my desk a small book; a boy had been copying a letter at my desk; I asked him what the book was; he said that it was a book he wished to transmit to the Society; and I either asked him (I am not sure which) for it, until the following Wednesday, when he might come for it, or he requested me to keep it for him; I did do so, I kept it in my desk for five or six weeks, and the boy never called for it; Mr. Adamson had asked me for the book, and I gave it to him.

When?—Indeed I should think about a month ago; I should indeed think it above a month.

Are you sure it is more than a month?—No, I am not.

Are you sure it is more than three weeks?—I really cannot be positive.

Are you absolutely sure it is more than a fortnight?—Yes, to the best of my recollection.

Did you see the boy who delivered it on more occasions than one?—No, I do not recollect that I did.

What conversation took place between you and the boy at the time he presented it?—None.

Was his first application to deliver the paper made to you?—He did not make any application to me to deliver it, but to keep it for him.

Did he tell you what it was about?—He did not.

Was it in the boys hand at the time you received it?—No, it was on my desk.

Did Mr. Vickers tell you what it was about?—I do not think he did then; he afterwards told me.

Did you look at it?—I did.

Did you read it?—I do not know that I read it then; I gave it a cursory reading in the course of the day; a very cursory reading.

It contained complaints against different masters?—Not particular masters; it was general; the tenor of it was in the nature of a complaint; there were not any particular schools mentioned, that I recollect.

Did you read it?—I read it cursorily through; in fact I thought it a matter of no moment whatever, hardly worth reading.

Merely a complaint?—Merely a complaint.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
4 Nov. 1824.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
4 Nov. 1824.

Of the conduct of the masters of the charter schools?—Yes.

What was it he complained of?—It appeared to me to complain of the mismanagement of the masters, or rather not doing their duties to the scholars; that appeared to me to be the tenor.

Therefore you thought it of no consequence?—Not coming from a boy in that sort of way.

Recollect whether there was any particular school mentioned?—I do not think there was.

Was Ross mentioned?—I do not think it was.

What has become of the paper?—I do not know.

Did you deliver it to Mr. Adamson?—I did.

Was it addressed to Mr. Adamson?—I think it was addressed to the committee of fifteen.

Being so addressed, you did not think it your duty to present it to the committee?—No; particularly as the boy requested I would keep it till he called for it.

Are you quite sure you have made no mistake in that, that the boy requested you to keep it till he called for it?—It was either I said, "I will keep it till you call for it," or he said, "keep it." I think it more likely he requested I would keep it till that day week.

But still you are not quite sure but you might have said that?—I might have said it.

Were you long in conversation with the boy?—I had no conversation with him.

Was he talking to Mr. Vickers at the time you first saw him?—No, he was copying something at my desk.

What was the purpose of his bringing it?—He did not bring it to me.

He was at your desk?—It was lying by his side; it was not for the purpose of my presenting it.

But you did present it to Mr. Adamson?—Mr. Adamson asked me for it, to the best of my recollection.

Did the boy hand it to you, or did you ask him for it?—It was on my desk, and I took it up and asked him what it was, and he said it was a book or paper he had just written; and I either asked him to leave it with me, or he said keep it, I cannot recollect which.

Did he tell you the purport of it?—No, he did not.

Did he call it a book?—It was like a book, with a blue cover on it; and I think he did.

Did he call it a complaint?—He did not to me.

Did he mention it was a paper he wished should come before the committee of fifteen?—Not to me.

Did you learn at that time in any way that his object was, that that paper should come before the committee?—Not till afterwards.

When did you learn it?—In the course of that day, after I put the book in my desk, or the next day.

From whom did you learn it?—Mr. Vickers.

What did he say?—He said it was a complaint against different schools.

Were you informed he wished Mr. Vickers to present it to the committee of fifteen?—Not then.

Were you afterwards?—Yes.

By whom?—Mr. Vickers.

What did he tell you?—That the boy had given him the book to give to the secretary, and he advised him to be cautious in what he was doing; that it might injure him.

When Mr. Vickers told you that, where was the paper?—In my desk.

It was after that you gave it to Mr. Adamson?—Yes; the circumstance took place nearly three weeks ago.

When you delivered it to Mr. Adamson you knew it contained complaints against charter schools?—I did.

Did you tell him so?—I did not; he asked me if I had not a statement of complaints against the charter schools; I said I had. He said, "Will you lend it me?" I said I would; but I told him the boy was to come for it.

Did you tell him the boy was to come for it?—I think I did.

Are you positive of it?—I think I am positive of it.

Has that paper ever come under the notice of the committee of fifteen?—I do not know.

Do you not see the minutes of each day's proceedings?—I do; it has not been noticed in any minute.

Did Mr. Adamson tell you how he knew of the existence of such a paper?—He did not.

Had the boy been writing at your desk?—He was copying something.

Did he tell you what it was?—Upon my word, I do not recollect that.

Was Mr. Vickers near you at the time you first saw the boy?—He was not.

Do you recollect any other instance of complaints being transmitted from charter school boys to the board?—I do not think I do; it is not in my recollection.

Try to recollect, whether from Sligo school you have ever known of a letter written from a boy there, making a complaint of the manner in which they were treated?—I do not recollect any such.

How long have you been in the office?—Upwards of twenty-one years.

Have you ever known any application made from Ross school?—No, I do not recollect any from the boys.

Have you any recollection of any letter having been received from any boy at Shannon Grove?—No, indeed I have not.

Then, generally, upon full consideration, you do not remember any written complaint of any boy having been seen by you, addressed to the board?—I do not recollect any such.

Would

337
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
4 Nov. 1824.

Would your hand, or Mr. Adamson's hand, be the hand that answered this letter?—My hand and his signature. All answers to letters and applications are generally written by me, and signed by him.

Do you make entries in the books?—I do.

Do you keep all the books?—Not all.

Have you any thing to do with the account books?—No.

Do you keep the book in which applications for admissions are entered?—It is kept under my direction.

Can you say, what number of applications are made in a year for admission?—I think, within the last three or four years, applications to the extent of sixteen or seventeen hundred have been made; I believe the book is before the Commissioners.

In what situation of life are the applicants for admission, principally?—Very poor, very distressed; it occurs to me that the greatest distress prevails among the applicants for admission.

By whom are the applications actually made; are they by the parents of the children themselves, or are they transmitted by any other person of influence?—Generally, by the parents of the children; those residing in Dublin, come to the office and say they want a blank form for admission; this, Mr. Adamson or I, or whoever is in the office, gives to the parent or applicant, and the parent or friend then goes to the clergyman of the parish, or some respectable person, to recommend; it is always necessary that the clergyman of the parish should sign, and some respectable person to recommend, the mother, or father, or friend who applies, always signing the requisition.

Understanding that the document must be signed by the parent or friend, does not it however proceed in the form of an application by the recommender?—No, it is not in the form of an application by the recommender; the recommender states he knows the facts that are mentioned in that paper; if he is particular, he states the facts that he knows of the distress of the applicant.

Is the written application to the Society usually sent from the recommender, or the parent?—The application signed is in a printed form.

Who applies for that printed form?—The parent or friend.

Always?—In some instances, gentlemen in the country write for them; and sometimes gentlemen call for them.

In applications from the country, are the instances most frequent of gentlemen applying, or the parent?—Of gentlemen; the parents never apply from distant parts of the country.

They wish to lighten the burthens of the parents?—Yes.

Is there no portion of the Dublin applications of the same description?—The fewer number are; indeed there are not a great many instances of gentlemen coming in Dublin for those recommendations, the poor persons themselves almost constantly come in Dublin for those forms.

Are the applications principally on behalf of the children of Roman Catholic or Protestant parents, or orphans?—I cannot at the present moment draw the proportion; but they are for orphans, and for Protestant parents, and Roman Catholic parents.

Which is the greater number?—I should think the Roman Catholics.

Do you see the memorials that are presented for admission to the asylum at Charlemont-street?—There are no regular memorials; the individuals admitted there, come forward and produce testimonials of their good conduct—sometimes there are letters from them requesting to be admitted; in other instances, ladies in the neighbourhood recommend them to the notice of the Society; one lady in particular, who takes a great interest in looking after the children of the schools, has been in the constant habit of applying for admission of young women into the asylum.

What is her name?—Miss Keating.

Are there many applications made from young women who wish to get into the asylum, but who, from it not being sufficiently extensive, are not able to be admitted?—Several.

Have you reason to believe, that many girls educated in the charter schools, become destitute or forsaken?—I do not know; I have no means of knowing.

Can you, by reference to the book on the table, state the number of applications for admission into the Charlemont-street asylum?—No.

Or any book in the room?—No.

Or any book out of the room?—Yes; I can make it out.

Do the applications of the masters and ushers for promotion, or any other subject, come under your cognizance?—They do.

In what way are they forwarded or arranged?—They are forwarded to the secretary.

What does he do with them?—He has them placed in his alphabet or presses.

To whom does he transmit them?—He keeps them himself; the applications made to him for situations he keeps.

Does he dispose of the applications and decide upon them?—No.

To whom does he transmit them?—He lays them before the committee; the committee of fifteen.

Are the ushers or masters in the habit of applying through particular individuals, or always direct to the board?—To the board, through the secretary; they may apply to individuals, for what I know, to an individual member of the committee.

Do you believe that is a frequent course with them?—No, I do not; I believe the constant course is to apply to the secretary.

Is there any particular book of appointments or dismissals of ushers kept?—No.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
Nov. 1824.

It is only to be taken out of the general minutes?—Just so.

Does it often happen, that an usher who is dismissed from one school is appointed to another?—I do not recollect an instance, at this moment.

Do you remember Maurice Egan being dismissed from Castledermot?—I believe he was.

Do you remember his being appointed to Ross, afterwards?—Yes.

Do you remember Thomas Eustace being dismissed from Strangford school?—Upon my word, I am not sure, whether he was dismissed or not; he was discontinued there.

What is the difference?—The one is a disgrace, the other may be for some offence that the committee might overlook, and again take into consideration.

You have those distinctions in your vocabulary, dismissed and discontinued?—No; I say with regard to him it might have been the case.

Do you know whether it was, or not?—No.

If an usher was dismissed from one school, would he be appointed to another?—Not without great consideration of his case; there may have been some feature in his dismissal, that the committee might afterwards take into consideration, and appoint him, as was the case of Egan of Ross.

What was the strong case of Egan of Ross, that entitled him to lenient consideration?—I do not know at this moment; it is some time since.

Are ushers generally dismissed in consequence of reports of local committees?—Yes; or the catechists.

Are all those reports preserved?—Generally; at least for a year back.

Have you an annual burning?—No.

What is your period of destroying papers; how often does it occur?—There is no particular period.

They are destroyed from time to time?—Yes; the useless papers are made foul paper of, those that are not of any consequence; I do not mean reports of the local committees, but the specimens of writing, and mere common reports of the local committees that do not relate to any thing particular.

Are they kept by themselves separate, or included with others?—When there is any number of them together, they are tied up in parcels in the first instance; when they come up from the local committee, they are inclosed, with the papers belonging to that half-year, in the account to which they relate.

They are taken out sometimes?—When that account has been before the committee, audited and read, and their resolutions made known, then the specimens of writing, and other useless papers, are considered of no value, and are thrown out of it.

You have said, you do not recollect any letter of complaint from any school in the country; do you recollect any letter coming from a boy of the name of Best, at Sligo, at any time?—No; I do not recollect that.

You do not recollect any circumstance of being directed to return any letter of complaint, or being directed to give any notice to the master of it?—No.

Do you recollect any other place where it occurred?—No.

Do you know what is the practice on those occasions of the board, if a letter comes up containing complaints of mismanagement, whether it is the custom of the committee of fifteen to send notice to the master, or the local committee?—I do not know of any such instance occurring respecting a complaint from a boy.

Has the catechist the power of suspending?—No; there is no member of the local committee, or catechist, who has the power of suspending.

Appendix, N° 115.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esquire, Thursday, 4th November, 1824.

James Adamson,
Esq.
4 Nov. 1824.

THE board are desirous of calling to your recollection the memorial of one of the candidate teachers at Santry, which appears to have got into the hands of Mr. Vickers; would you be so good as to state what you know of it?—I have that paper in my hand.

[The witness produced it. See post.]

State under what circumstances it came into your hands?—It came into my hands from Mr. Stuart, the registrar and clerk, who just went out of the room.

Had the existence of such a paper come to your knowledge before Mr. Stuart delivered it to you?—No.

What is the first time you heard of the existence of that paper?—From Mr. Stuart, several weeks after it was given to the messenger.

Be so good as to state the first period you heard of its existence?—I should think better than two months ago, perhaps more.

Do you feel confident it was not less?—I am not certain; perhaps about two months or more.

Can you recollect at all the way in which the matter arose when Mr. Stuart communicated it to you?—I went into the office one day, and he opened his desk, and asked me, "Have you seen this paper?" "What is it," I replied. He shewed it me, and gave it me to read over. I afterwards found out that it was given to the messenger to give to me. I very recently found out, it had been inclosed for the purpose of being given to me.

Did you take the paper from Mr. Stuart's desk?—He handed it to me.

Did

Did you read it at the time?—Not at the time, I did in the evening. I read it in a hasty manner.

Did you put it by?—Yes.

Did any thing occur upon it. Did you think it your duty to submit to it to the board?—No, by no means; when I got it I had no idea it was to go before the board; and indeed I understood from Mr. Stuart, that it was in the hands of several of the members of the board.

Did you communicate with the boy?—No; nor he with me.

You only learnt the truth of the case within a very short time?—Yes; a very short time; about a fortnight ago; I heard it was intended for me; I think it was from the master of Santry school, I heard that it was folded up in an envelope, and given to the messenger for me, as a document to have been laid before the board; and if it had been so, I would have done it; for never did I suppress a paper that was to come before the board, even if it arraigned my own conduct.

What next occurred after reading it?—I laid it by with an intention of returning it to Mr. Stuart.

Did it occur to you to speak to any body of it?—Not till very lately I heard from Mr. Devine, that it was a document intended to be laid before the board.

Did no conversation pass with any body upon the subject, but Mr. Devine?—No; only with Mr. Stuart at the time he gave it me.

But with that exception, nothing passed?—No.

What passed between Mr. Devine and you upon the subject?—He entered into conversation with me upon the question of what the object could have been of summoning those boys, and he mentioned a boy of the name of Moyle, and he mentioned the Ross school, was the subject of the evidence he was to give here; and then he mentioned the circumstance of that paper—that Moyle was the author of that book, and that was the first time I knew he was the author of it, for I did not recollect it.

Do you know how Mr. Devine acquired his knowledge of that fact?—Indeed I do not.

What led you to believe that the existence of that paper was known to any body?—Mr. Stuart mentioned it was in the hands of several members.

In what way could it come into their hands?—By the boy himself.

That he had multiplied copies of it you mean?—Yes.

When did Mr. Stuart mention that?—At the time he gave it me; I read it in the evening, and have never seen it since, until opening my drawer yesterday, looking for the charter of the Incorporated Society, which one of the members called for; I thought it might be it, and took it up.

If you had not believed it was in the hands of the members, should you have thought it your duty to present it?—No, not at all; I considered it merely as a production from a forward boy.

Did it not occur to you to ask some of those members, whether they had got it?—No, indeed I did not, nor should I deem it proper to ask what papers had got into their hands; I think he mentioned one gentleman of the committee who had got a copy.

Mention the name?—The Archdeacon of Dublin.

After the conversation with Mr. Devine, did you mention the subject again to Mr. Stuart?—No, I did not; I had no conversation with Mr. Stuart upon the subject till last night or yesterday.

Did any thing particular lead to the subject last night; had you received any other communication respecting it?—We had a general conversation as to the Santry boys; I think I was enumerating to Mr. Stuart what schools I considered good ones; and that I had mentioned Ross; I think he mentioned something about it. I never saw Ross school.

Did Mr. Stuart explain to you in what way he had become possessed of the paper?—I believe not; I am not quite sure; perhaps if Mr. Stuart was present he might recollect that he did; I do not know how long it was in his hands.

You did not know how it came to Mr. Stuart's hands until lately?—After I had the conversation with Mr. Devine, I remonstrated with the messenger for withholding any paper, saying if it was a complaint against myself I would lay it before the board. The moment I heard it had been delivered to the messenger to give to me, I asked him how he came to keep it back, and told him he acted extremely improperly in having done so; that if it was a complaint against myself I would have laid it before the board as I would have done.

Did you first hear of the existence of that paper from Mr. Stuart?—Yes.

Do you think Mr. Stuart gave it you after any thing had transpired as to the Sligo business?—I think it was before that business.

[Mr. Thomas Stuart was again called in; and his evidence relating to the memorial was read over in Mr. Adamson's presence, upon which Mr. Adamson stated, "The first intimation of the existence of that book I received from Mr. Stuart.]"

(To Mr. Stuart.)—Do you wish to give any further explanation of the preceding part of your evidence?—No; it is still on my mind, to the best of my recollection, that Mr. Adamson did ask me for it.

Have you any reason to suppose, that the existence of this paper, or any copy of that paper, had ever come to the knowledge of any member of the committee of fifteen?—No; I have no knowledge of any such circumstance; the master of Santry school told me, that

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
4 Nov. 1824.

some of the boys had written letters to the Archdeacon of Dublin. I did not hear that any copies of this had been given, and that the boys were in the habit of writing to the Archdeacon of Dublin.

[At the request of Mr. Adamson, the following question was asked of the witness.]

At the time that Mr. Adamson was first informed of the circumstances under which that paper had been presented, did he express his disapprobation at the conduct of the messenger in not delivering the paper to him?—He did.

At what time did he so express his disapprobation?—I do not recollect.

Was it at the time you first delivered the paper to him?—No, for he did not wait a minute when I first gave it to him.

When did you first hear of any of the Santry boys having been examined by this board?—I think it is about a fortnight ago, some days ago.

Was it since the Santry boys were examined at this board, that Mr. Adamson expressed that disapprobation of the conduct of the messenger?—No; I think it was long before that, as well as I recollect.

Are you certain of it?—No, I am not certain of it.

(To Mr. Adamson.)—When did you first learn that the paper had been intended for the committee of fifteen?—I cannot state the precise period, I think about a fortnight or three weeks ago, to the best of my recollection.

I understood you that you learnt it subsequently to some of the Santry boys having been examined before this board?—Yes, I did.

Will you state when and under what circumstances you heard that that paper had been intended for the committee of fifteen?—I protest it is impossible for me to tell, perhaps Mr. Stuart can recollect.

Mr. Stuart.—No, I cannot.

(To Mr. Adamson.)—When did you first understand that this paper had been intended for the board?—I cannot recollect exactly.

Can you recollect from whom you heard it?—From the messenger himself.

And that it had been inclosed in an envelope for you?—Yes.

Did the messenger mention that fact to you, in consequence of any conversation between you and him upon the subject?—He mentioned it in consequence of hearing that those Santry boys were under examination—it was then he mentioned it.

You did not know that that paper had been intended for the board until the Santry boys were under examination?—Never, to the best of my recollection.

It was after you heard it was intended for the board, that you expressed your disapprobation?—Yes.

After you had finally learnt it was for the board, did you lay it before them?—No.

Will you explain why you did not?—I got it from Mr. Stuart, to return him again.

But you were in the possession of the document after you acquired the knowledge it was intended for the board?—No, I did not say I acquired a knowledge it was intended for the board; it was directed to me inclosed in an envelope, as I understood, and recalled by the boy.

Have you not just said, you did finally learn it was intended for the board?—I have said, I had learnt from the messenger the paper was directed to me to be laid before the board.

[The witness was desired to look at the title page of the paper in question.]

Does not that express directly that it was for the board?—It is addressed to the board; I had it in my drawer. I never thought it my duty to lay it before the board. I cannot say how many copies are published. Mr. Stuart desired me not to lose it, as he should return it.

Then we misunderstood you in supposing you to say, it did finally come to your knowledge that it had been intended for the board?—Yes, very lately I heard from the messenger that the paper had been put under a cover and directed to me on the Wednesday. “Why did you not give it to me,” I inquired.

It having so come to your knowledge, was it your intention to lay it before the board or not?—Not at all.

Why?—Because I did not receive it for the purpose of being laid before the board.

If this commission had not existed, what would have finally become of that paper?—I should have given it back to Mr. Stuart when he asked me for it.

With the knowledge that you had obtained from the messenger, that it was intended for the board, and had been directed to you to be delivered to the board, should you have thought it your duty to deliver it back to Mr. Stuart?—Yes, I should; and I did not consider it such a production as was necessary to be laid before the board.

What do you think constitutes the title of a document, inclosed to you for the purpose of being delivered to the board, to be dealt with as intended by the memorialist?—I should think a direction to the board, or to me as secretary to the board.

Is not, in point of fact, that document directed to the board, and was it not inclosed to you?—I do not think that document is a document directed to the board.

Will you explain why?—From the manner in which I received it, I did not know but it was a matter published.

After you found it was not a matter published, and that it did not come into the accidental possession of Mr. Stuart, but that it was a document actually intended for you, did you not then consider it as a paper coming to your hands officially?—No, I did not consider it

341
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
4 Nov. 1824.

it as coming to my hands officially; if I had received it on the Wednesday morning directed to me to be laid before the board, I would have laid it before them.

Suppose you had received this paper in the envelope in which you have learnt from the messenger it was originally inclosed, should you have deemed it your duty to have laid it before the board?—Yes, I think I should.

On finding that through the impropriety of the messenger, it was not delivered to you inclosed in that envelope, why was not it equally your duty to lay it before the board?—I did not receive information that it had been sent to me in that manner till very lately.

But when you received information that the paper had been in an envelope addressed to you, and therefore that it was a paper which, if it had come to you as it ought to have done originally, you would have laid before the board, why did you not then lay it before the board?—I believe there has been but one meeting of the board ever since.

Had you parted with the paper?—I had not the paper in an official manner; I had it from Mr. Stuart.

Have you ever parted with the paper since Mr. Stuart gave it to you?—No.

Have you allowed any person to read it?—No.

Do you consider it would be your duty to lay it before the board at any future period?—No, I should return it to Mr. Stuart.

Then it is not because there have not been meetings, but because you did not think it your duty to do it?—I thought it a very useless paper.

When did you first learn that any duplicate was in the hands of any member of the committee?—I never knew that any duplicate was in the hands of the committee.

Do you consider yourself at liberty to exercise your judgment upon the importance of a paper intended for the board?—No, I do not, by any means.

If you considered that this paper, instead of being in your view, one of an insignificant nature, was one containing matter that you thought of a grave, weighty, serious nature, should you have laid it before the board?—I think I should have spoken to Mr. Stuart, having got it from him.

If that paper contained matter of grave and serious charge against the general system of the Incorporated Society, or any particular person employed by it, would you have felt it your duty to lay it before the board?—Yes, if it came from any other source than that from which it came.

What do you mean by any other source?—From one of those Santry boys.

Do you conceive it coming from a boy, relieved you from the duty of laying it before the board?—From the manner in which I received it, I did not consider it a document at all to go before the board at the time I received it.

Then in the particular case, you did consider yourself at liberty to exercise a judgment upon the importance of the paper?—The paper was given to me not in an official way; I received that paper from Mr. Stuart, not to lay before the board, not as an official paper to lay before the board, but to read over and return to him, and it was only a very short time since I understood it was inclosed to me to be laid before the board.

If you thought the messenger was wrong in not delivering that paper to you, it being his duty so to do, would you not consider it equally your duty to lay it before the board, as it was his duty to deliver it to you?—No, I should not.

And you have read that document carefully over?—I never read it but that one evening.

Perhaps you have read many such?—Yes, I have at different times, but I paid very little regard to them.

Have you communicated them to the board?—I never received a letter or document to be laid before the board that I did not do it, even if it reflected upon myself, upon my honour and my oath.

Do you consider in general, that the complaints of the boys or girls at school, are to be treated with indifference?—Indeed I do not; but I think that those boys who are at Santry school are not boys, but that they have been kept too long at school, and are refractory and disobedient.

Was that one of the reasons why you thought it ought not to be laid before the board?—That was one reason, I paid very little attention to it.

The boys there are in the habit of making complaints?—Yes, and writing letters to different members of the board; and I understood that members were acquainted with writings of this kind.

Have you heard of any particular letter being written?—No.

Or of any particular member of the board having received such?—I mentioned before, that I understood letters were sent to the Archdeacon of Dublin.

[Mr. Stuart was here directed to withdraw.]

Do you recollect any letter of complaint being transmitted from a school in the country, intimation of which was almost immediately sent to the master, stating the name of the boy who complained?—No, I do not recollect.

If any such letter had been received by you, would it have been laid before the board?—Most undoubtedly.

Are you then quite sure no such letter was received by you?—I never received any letter signed by a boy from a charter school in the nature of a complaint, which I neglected laying before the board; the paper in question I considered as a kind of literary production from the Santry boys, not as a complaint.

The Commissioners have been informed by a boy, who stated upon oath that a letter was transmitted

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
4 Nov. 1824.

transmitted from the school, which letter he either partly wrote or saw written, and which he knew was dispatched; that within a week from dispatching that letter, both he and the other boy who were concerned in it were punished by the master for having transmitted it?—I should think such a letter never came to my hands.

Can you enable us to trace by whom that letter was received and opened, and by whom the information was sent of it to the master?—I do not know whom it was from, nor whom it came to.

Is it possible that the letters could be opened by any other persons than yourself?—It is possible; the messenger goes for them and brings them to the desk; they are frequently opened at the post-office to see that they contain no private communication; they are generally open. If I had got this letter from the Santry boys on that day, I would have laid it before the board, but I did not consider it a complaint, but a kind of pamphlet to be disseminated among the members and others.

Do you think it is the impression of the charter school boys, that there is little use in complaining?—Indeed I hope not; I have had several letters from boys of charter schools, and I never failed to lay them before the board.

As to any such letters as you have described, what has been the general course of answering them by the committee of fifteen; do you recollect any case where a letter has been sent down to the master informing him of the complaint, and of the boy who made the complaint?—I must consider from whence there was a complaint.

What do the committee of fifteen do when they receive one of those letters?—They refer it to the catechist of the school.

Does the catechist make returns of all punishments ordered by him otherwise than by his weekly or half yearly returns?—No, he does not.

Have the local committee any right to order a punishment without making an entry or note of it?—I do not recollect an instance of the local committee punishing; the rule is, that the master shall punish for faults.

If it had ever happened that a boy who had complained to the local committee, had been ordered by the local committee to be chastised as an example to the school, would the committee of fifteen have thought that the local committee outstepped their duty in so doing, would they have checked them or commended them?—They would not have considered it outstepping their duty.

If every boy who complained was punished, it would be an effectual mode of stopping complaints?—To be sure it would.

Appendix, N° 116.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esquire, Tuesday, 16th November 1824.

[The witness was referred to extracts from several half yearly accounts, transmitted from the Charter School at Sligo.]

16 Nov. 1824.

REFER to the name of Philip M'Gann, who appears in the return of June 1822, to have been sixteen years and a half old, and in the return of the 28th of December 1823, to have been no older than fifteen, and to have been returned at fifteen and a half in the following half year, so that after the lapse of two years, he appears to have been a year younger than at the period of the first entry. How do you account for that state of the returns?—I cannot account for it.

Does it appear to you, the master could derive any benefit from making a false return?—I think I perceived in some of the evidence given, that the usher kept those lists.

If the returns are made by the usher, must they not be made under the direction and superintendence of the master?—Yes, certainly.

Do not the committee of fifteen hold the master responsible for the truth of his return?—Yes, certainly.

Are the original returns in the hand-writing of the master or the usher?—[The witness examined the returns.]—It appears to me to be the hand-writing of the master; I am not certain of it.

Is there not a column in those returns, in which the names and ages of the boys fit to be apprenticed out, are to be sent up to the committee?—Yes, there is.

Have you any previous to the one you now hold?—Certainly.

Refer in the papers before you, to the name of John Dimby; what is his age returned to be on the 25th of June 1822?—Sixteen and a quarter.

Look at the return of his age a year and a half afterwards?—It is stated to be fifteen.

Look at the name of James Kinsey, the 25th of June 1822?—Fourteen and three quarters.

What was it a year and a half afterwards?—Thirteen and a half.

Daniel Kinsey, the 25th of June 1822?—Fifteen and three quarters.

A year and a half after that?—Fourteen and three quarters.

Have you any doubt in your own mind, as to what the real motive of the master in making those false returns was?—It is a question it is impossible for me to answer.

Do you not see he had a direct interest in doing it?—It appears to me certainly, after what I have read as to the manner in which the boys were employed, to bear a suspicious appearance.

Had he not the benefit and advantage of the labour of those young men?—Certainly.

If they had been apprenticed out according to the rules of the Society, would not their place have been supplied by young children?—Yes.

Could

343
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
16 Nov. 1824.

Could he have derived from their labour, an advantage any thing like equal to those elder boys?—Certainly not.

Does not it appear to be a direct breach of the regulations of the Society, for his own advantage?—Certainly, it appears to be so; it may be explained by the master.

Is not the account to which those returns are annexed verified upon oath?—No, not the lists; the account is.

Do you consider the oath to extend to the truth of the lists annexed to the account?—No, I do not.

Have you lately received any communication from the school at Castledermot?—Yes, I have had a letter from the master, stating the usher is in a fever.

Does it contain any other statement?—No, I do not recollect that it does; I have a letter this day from a gentleman, who has discovered that three of the boys had eloped, and he has returned them by the police to the school.

Who was the gentleman?—The Rev. Mr. Morgan.

Have you had any communication upon that subject from the catechist, or any member of the local committee?—No.

Nor the master?—Yes, I think the master stated the elopement of the boys.

Did he assign any reason for it?—I think he mentioned they were foundling boys, and not so amenable to order as the other boys of the school.

Are all the members of the Incorporated Society summoned to attend the general meetings of the Society?—I cannot say that they are all summoned; we do not summon the Lord Chancellor and the Judges, we summon all the bishops that are in town.

The ecclesiastical members in particular?—We summon all the members except the Lord Chancellor and Chief Judges; the bishops are members by charter; we do not summon at all times all the members by charter.

Are the Judges ever summoned?—They have been summoned.

Have they been summoned the last year to any one meeting of the board?—I believe not.

Has the Lord Chancellor?—No.

Have any of the law officers of the crown?—I should think the Attorney General; but I am not sure—it is the duty of the messengers to summon them.

Is any notice given to the members of the board, when any matter of particular importance is to be brought under consideration?—Yes.

What is done upon those occasions?—A note is inserted in the notice, of the subject that is to be taken into consideration.

[The witness was directed to furnish a list of the members of the Incorporated Society at present.]

Can you state why a difference is made between those who are summoned?—It has not been the practice to summon those personages.

Can you state why?—Because they would not attend, probably.

Has it been discontinued of late, or can you say when it was discontinued?—I have never known any of those great personages to attend the board.

* * * * *

Are the Commissioners to understand you, that in point of fact you do summon all the laymen who are members of the Society, except the Judges and the law officers?—All those that are in town.

How do you know who are in town or not?—The messenger knows it.

How many such laymen may be members of the Incorporated Society, at present?—About twenty-five.

Not more?—I believe not more.

When is the general stated meeting of the Incorporated Society to be?—The regular meeting will be on the first Wednesday in the next month.

Do you summon the members for such regular monthly meetings?—Always.

Could you ascertain which of the members you summoned for the last such meeting?—I could not, myself.

Could it be ascertained in the office?—Yes, it could.

[The witness was directed to furnish a return of the names of all such members of the Incorporated Society as were summoned to attend the last general stated monthly meeting.]

Are you more particular in summoning the members for a quarterly meeting than a monthly one?—No.

Appendix, N° 117.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esq. on Oath, Tuesday 11th of January 1825.

11 Jan. 1825.

IN what way are the contracts made between the Society and individuals who supply the schools?—What contracts.

Either for building, or for the supply of any of the articles used?—The Society contracts for the clothing of the children of the several schools, about the month of April or May every year; they insert an advertisement in Saunders's News Letter, calling for proposals, and appoint a day for the consideration of those proposals, and then they declare the contractor.

Do persons desirous of contracting give in tenders?—Yes.

Are they sealed?—Yes, they are.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
11 Jan 1825.

Are they generally numerous?—No, indeed, not very numerous.

That system began only in 1818?—Yes, I believe so, I am not sure.

Previous to that time the masters had generally the contract themselves?—Yes.

Do the masters now in all cases contract for the supply of the food?—Yes.

What public contracts are there?—There are contracts for clothing.

Is there only a contract for clothing?—There are several, there is a contract for the cloth, coats, waistcoats, and breeches; there is a contract for shirts, and there is a contract for shoes.

Who supplies the bedding, is there a contract for the bedding?—It is supplied by a man of the name of Saul, in High-street.

By contract?—No.

In what way is it supplied?—He furnishes his bill every quarter.

In what way is it ascertained that the prices charged are right?—If there is any material variation in the price of linen, there is an explanation called for; the blankets are mostly always the same price, I think they are 20s. and the ticken the same price.

Have blankets been at the same price for the last three years?—Yes, they have.

Are they English or Irish blankets?—Irish blankets.

Kilkenny blankets?—Yes.

Has not there been a great fall in the price of blankets in the last two years?—I do not know; but the person in the habit of furnishing, has been so for many years, and is a very respectable character, and supplies most of the public institutions.

Has it ever been suggested it would be better to contract for the supply of those articles—that they might be obtained on more easy terms in that way?—No, it has not, that I recollect.

Can you recollect how many persons offered to take the contract for the boys clothing in the first year that it was advertised?—Four or five.

How many in the second year?—I really do not recollect, I suppose about the same number.

Do as many persons continue to offer every year?—No, I think not; I think there were less last year.

How many offered last year, do you recollect?—Either three or four.

Are you sure there were so many as three or four?—Yes, I think there were; yes, there were.

Did more persons offer to make the clothing than offered for the shirts?—No, I think less persons proposed for the shirts; there were either two or three competitors for the shirts.

How was it as to the shoes?—I believe there were not more than two for the shoes.

Has the same person had the contract for the clothing from the first?—No.

Who was the first contractor for the clothing?—Mr. Thomas Oxley, merchant.

How long did he continue the contractor?—Four or five years.

Did he give satisfaction?—He did.

How came he to discontinue the contract?—There was a lesser proposal by another person.

Who was that?—A man of the name of Cusack.

Has he executed the contract to the satisfaction of the committee of fifteen?—Yes, he has.

Is he the contractor now?—No; he has become insolvent, and it is now in the hands of Mr. Peile, of Westmoreland-street.

Did he take it at a lower rate than Mr. Cusack?—I think about the same; I am not quite sure; a very trifling difference.

Who is the contractor for the shirts?—Catherine Tyrrell is at present the contractor.

Was she the contractor for the first?—No, she was of the firm; she was concerned in it.

Who took the first contract for the shirts?—The first contract for the shirts was under the name of Tyrrell and Company.

Who took the second contract for the shirts?—Catherine Tyrrell.

When did any variation take place in the contract?—Two or three years ago.

What change took place in the contractor?—I will tell you candidly; my poor wife contracted for the shirts for the Society, under the name of Tyrrell and Company, and executed the contract very faithfully and well.

Was it by the consent of the Society your wife became the contractor?—I cannot say it was by their consent, though it was known to some of them.

Known privately, or was it avowedly stated to the board?—There were several concerned in it; my wife and sisters, and the present Catherine Tyrrell, were concerned in it.

Is Catherine Tyrrell any relation to yourself, or your wife's family?—No she is not, she is the sister of my late brother-in-law; but I have no concern whatsoever in it; no interest whatever in it, and have not had these three years.

Can a wife become a contractor without it being in point of fact the contract of the husband?—Her name was not known to the board.

When the contract was taken by Tyrrell and Company, it was in the eye of the law Tyrrell and yourself?—No; I did not conceive it to be so.

Who were the parties?—My sisters were concerned in it, and the present Catherine Tyrrell.

And your wife?—Yes.

Was

345
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
11 Jan. 1825.

Was any other name stated upon the face of the contract than Tyrrell?—No.

Was it stated Tyrrell and Company?—Yes.

Was any question asked as to who the Company were?—No, not publicly.

Is that usual in the case of contracts with the board when a company offers?—She sent in the proposal as well as I recollect, in her own name, and some of her friends thought that would not be right, so she then got some other persons to join her, and she executed it faithfully, and the children never had better shirts nor cheaper. I have now no concern nor have had any in it for three years; since her death; and it was not with my approbation she first contracted.

In point of fact, had Miss Tyrrell any thing to do with it, or was her name used, and the whole business conducted by your wife?—Yes, mostly.

Was it entirely?—She assisted in cutting out the shirts, and in buying the linen; my sisters also; but I may say she was the contractor.

Was all the linen of which the shirts were made purchased by your wife?—Every atom of it; every inch of it.

Was it not necessarily purchased by your own money?—The Society advanced the money as they did to the other contractors.

Tyrrell and Company?—Yes.

How many other tenders were there at the time the contract was taken by your wife, in the name of Tyrrell?—There was a tender from the House of Industry, and patterns exhibited; a sealed tender and a person attending.

Was there any other?—Yes.

From whom?—I do not recollect the name now; there were others.

It is now executed you say by Miss Tyrrell?—Yes, and I have no interest in it, nor any of my family. She has the sole interest in it.

Was it shirts only that your wife contracted for?—My wife contracted for the shoes and stockings; but not during the whole time. She had a good deal of trouble in the examination; when they came in she took a great deal of pains in the business.

Was that also known to the board?—No, it was not known to them as a board.

What number of the committee were aware of the fact, or advised Mrs. Adamson to change the offer from her own name to others?—I really do not recollect the names.

Did you ever know any other contract by the wife or near relation of any other officer connected with the Society?—I do not recollect any.

Did any of the clerks take contracts?—No.

Are the buildings executed by contract?—Yes, generally.

When was the house at Kevin-street built?—I believe, about the year 1814 or 1815; it was not built by the Society,

Was it purchased by the Society in 1814 or 1815?—It was taken about that time.

Were any considerable alterations made in the building?—Yes.

Were any old buildings pulled down?—Yes; there were several thousands altogether laid out upon it, in additional buildings, repairs and furniture.

Of whom was the house purchased?—It is rented of Mr. Cooper; the Society pay 315*l.* a year for it.

What description of house stood there before the present charter school was built?—A very fine house; but it was not calculated for a public school, it required a great deal of alteration.

By whom were those alterations made?—Under the inspection of Mr. Farrell.

Were they done by contract?—No; I think Mr. Farrell was directed to get the building done.

Who is Mr. Farrell?—The architect of the Society; I do not recollect that there was a contract.

Do you remember who the persons were that were employed in building it?—Yes; Mr. Dwyer of Camden-street, was employed principally, and Mr. Robinson the carpenter.

Was there much building pulled down there, or was the principal expenditure in the erection of new buildings?—I do not know; Mr. Farrell signed all the bills for the payment of it.

Do you know in what way the materials of the old buildings were disposed of?—No, I do not.

Have you any recollection, whether any of them were disposed of, or purchased, or used in any way by any officers of the Incorporated Society?—Yes; I purchased some small quantities of timber and bricks, some very small quantity.

Of whom did you purchase them?—From Mr. Dwyer, and from Mr. Robinson the carpenter.

Do you know what quantity you purchased?—I do not recollect, at this moment.

Do you know what sum was paid for it?—No, I do not; but I paid for what I purchased, the full value.

Did you pay it to Mr. Dwyer?—Yes.

Is Mr. Dwyer living?—Yes; and to Mr. Robinson.

With whom did he account for the proceeds?—The proceeds were the property of those persons.

Had they bought the house of the Society?—No, the materials were, I presume, their own property by purchase; but upon that point they could give information.

Did any thing but bricks and timber, from the house in Kevin-street, come into your possession?—No, I think not.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
11 Jan. 1825.

Were there any chimney-pieces removed from that house in Kevin-street?—I cannot tell; I got no chimney pieces.

You are quite sure of that?—Yes; quite certain.

Do you know whether any other officer of the Incorporated Society purchased materials from the house in Kevin-street?—I do not know; I believe not.

By whom were the materials you purchased removed from Kevin-street to the place where you used them?—I borrowed two or three horses and carts, once or twice.

Of whom?—I borrowed them of the master of Santry school; and I believe Mr. Dwyer sent me the remainder.

What number of loads might there have been?—I declare, I cannot recollect now; perhaps half a dozen loads; upon that point Mr. Dwyer could give information. Mr. Robinson is dead; this is a matter inquired into upon a former occasion, and I have some documents upon the subject, which if necessary, I can send to you.

By whom was it inquired into?—It was insinuated that I had got these in an improper manner; and there was some inquiry set forward upon the subject.

By the committee of fifteen?—Some members of it, I believe.

Who is Mr. Russell?—He was the master of Santry school.

What has become of him?—I understand he is gone to America.

How long had Mr. Russell been master of Santry school?—I do not recollect, precisely; I suppose ten or fifteen years.

Is Mr. Russell the man who brought an action against you, for the recovery of money he said he had advanced?—Yes.

What were the circumstances of that action?—The circumstances were the most iniquitous that could possibly be thought of; I happened to buy a few loads of hay occasionally from him, and he sent me in a bill of 1,500*l.* (when he was dismissed), for oats, hay, and other things, and I can declare to you, in the most solemn manner, upon my oath, that I paid him to the last shilling for every thing I got from him.

We presume you had no difficulty in proving that payment before the court?—Of course it was proved; the jury, without retiring, instantly found a verdict for me.

Was he dismissed upon Mr. Lee's visit, or before that?—Before that.

Mr. Thackeray's visit?—I believe so; there never was a more wicked attempt to destroy a man than that man made on me, without the smallest foundation.

Was it true, you had actually received goods at one time or other, to the value of 1,500*l.* from him?—No; nor to the value of 10*l.*

Did you ever receive the gift of a horse from any master of a charter school?—I did.

From whom?—I received it when I was a boy from the master of Monivea school, twenty-five or thirty years ago.

What was his name?—Davis.

How long did he continue master of Monivea school?—I do not recollect; till within about fifteen years ago.

Were you at that time an officer of the Incorporated Society?—I was.

What situation did you hold?—I was a clerk.

Was it part of your business to inspect the accounts of the school-masters?—Yes.

What did you consider to be the object of that present?—It is so long ago, I can scarcely recollect; it was an act of kindness, the horse was not worth more than four or five guineas, and I am not sure whether my father did not pay the man for it, my father was alive then; Davis's widow is alive, and receives a small annuity from the Society.

Are those presents from the school-masters to officers of the Society frequent?—I have received no presents of any consideration whatever from the masters.

The question does not go to their consideration, but their frequency?—I have received no presents of that kind for many years.

Did you ever receive a present of glass from any school-master of a charter school?—Not to my knowledge; I have not received any thing of any kind for many years back; something may have been sent many years ago, but that of very small value indeed.

Did you ever know a schoolmaster of the name of Moorhouse?—Yes.

Did you ever receive any thing from him?—No.

Who is Moorhouse?—The master of Monasterevan school now.

Was there a complaint against Mr. Hines, of Sligo, six or seven years ago?—There might have been; I do not recollect; there were quarrels I think between him and Finucane, the usher.

Do you recollect the nature of those charges against him, or what was the general run of them?—I do not recollect the particular charges, but I know they were separated.

Finucane went to Ray school?—Yes.

Were the committee aware of that, when they stated the other day that he was a man against whom no imputation had been made before?—I do not know that there were imputations; there was some kind of quarrel between them; I do not recollect any charges against him.

You do not remember the nature of the charges?—I do not.

Have you ever known of any loan of money made by Mr. Hines to any officer of the Incorporated Society?—No.

Were you present when Mr. Hines was before the committee?—Yes, I was.

What explanation did he give of the apparent incorrectness of the ages of the children, which appeared on the face of the accounts?—He said he left it to his son to make them out.

Did

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
11 Jan. 1825.

Did he state that he was ignorant of it?—Yes.
How did he account for not returning any of those boys as fit for apprentices the two years preceding, and then at once after our inquiring, returning a whole dozen of them?—He said he left all that to his son or his usher.

Is there not a form to be returned half yearly, in which the number of children fit to be apprenticed is sent up by the master?—Yes.

And their ages stated?—Yes.

Looking at the half-year ending the 25th of June 1823, what names do you see?—David Porter, Andrew Armstrong, Thomas Ludden, Maurice Behan, and John Green.

David Porter is there stated to be sixteen and a quarter, Thomas Ludden fourteen and a half, Maurice Behan fourteen and three quarters; looking, also, at the 25th December 1823, do you find those three boys last mentioned, again stated fit to be apprenticed?—Yes.

State the ages they appear at that period half a year later?—David Porter sixteen, Thomas Ludden fifteen, Maurice Behan fourteen and a half, that is a quarter less than he was a half a year before.

Looking at the return, dated 24th June 1824, will you see what names appear in that list?—Thomas Ludden sixteen, Maurice Behan sixteen, Daniel Kenzie sixteen, James Kenzie fifteen, Pat Grady sixteen, John Phair sixteen, David Porter seventeen, Terence Gallagher fifteen, Dennis Gallagher fourteen, John Dimby nineteen.

Can you account for those boys not appearing upon the two preceding half-yearly returns, as fit to be apprenticed?—No, I cannot.

Are you aware in point of fact, although that last instrument bears date the 24th of June 1824, when it was received?—The 13th of October.

Was that after the inquiry had taken place by some of the commissioners at Sligo?—Yes, it was.

Supposing a master who had the profits of his boys weaving, found a number of good weavers in his house, would it not be his interest to keep back the ages of those boys, so that the Society should not know they were fit to be apprenticed out?—Yes, of course.

Can you assign any other reason for that anomaly that appears upon those papers?—No, I cannot.

Have you seen a paper containing the different ages of the Sligo boys, taken at three different periods?—Yes, I have.

I wish to bring to your recollection a particular connected with the accounts of the Society, passed in the year 1822, with regard to 4,000*l.* stock brought forward on the part of the Society as an item in their accounts, to make up a deficiency that was detected by the officers of the Imprest; how came it that the interest of that stock had not been accounted for and its existence known?—The whole interest was placed to the credit of the Pococke fund.

Would not that have appeared in the accounts rendered?—No.

The Pococke fund did not form part of the general fund for which you accounted to government?—No.

In point of fact, I understand you to say it was annually brought to the credit of the account of the Pococke fund?—Yes, it was.

Then they separated it, and debited you with the dividends due upon that part that belonged to the Society, and the other remained with the Pococke fund?—Yes.

And it was never overhauled by the commissioners of imprest?—Yes, it was then.

Do you remember what conduct of the master and mistress of Strangford school in 1823, induced the committee of fifteen to withhold the premium?—The report of the local committee, that the boys had not improved.

They soon relented, and recommended afterwards that they should be paid it?—Yes, half a year afterwards, I believe.

And it was paid?—Yes.

The catechist joined in the recommendation that it should be paid to them?—Yes.

Do you know whether the catechist had in his returns and reports of the period, stated the master as negligent?—No, I do not think he had.

Was it the return of the local committee entirely?—Yes, stating that the boys generally had not improved as they ought to have done, and attributing it to deficiency on the part of the usher, and the committee acted upon it, and suspended both premiums.

That was the inference drawn by the committee of fifteen?—Yes.

Not recommended by the local committee?—No, it was not.

And when the local committee found it had the effect of stopping the premium, they joined in soliciting it should be restored?—They did.

"The proficiency of some of the boys appears not to be agreeable to the advantages they possessed;" was that the report?—Yes, it was.

The committee of fifteen acted upon the recommendation of the local committee, and did in truth allow the master and mistress the whole salary for the year?—They did.

Who supplies the shoes now?—A man of the name of Ewing.

Do they go down as he chooses to send them?—No, he has a contract. Another person has a contract for Santry school.

Did it ever happen that any complaints were made against the shoes not fitting, being too big or too little?—Yes.

Do you recollect the case, where there were a certain number of shoes sent down to Strangford, that were returned as misfitting?—Yes.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
11 Jan. 1825.

Do you know how many?—I believe about sixty pair; they have been changed by the contractor.

Do you recollect any complaints being made about stockings, from the persons who received them in the country; do you recollect Mr. Thackeray complaining that the stockings were so bad, they were worn out on the first time of wearing?—I do not recollect at this moment.

Do you recollect ever expressing any anger or surprise against any master of a charter school, for bringing up a report made by the local committee that the clothes furnished were bad, or that he had suffered the local committee to send up an unfavourable report of the clothes?—I do not recollect it.

Do you think such a thing could have occurred without your recollecting it?—No, I think not.

We observe, with respect to the last two years of the accounts being audited before the board, there were two or three of the dietaries of the different schools rejected as so incorrect, the officers could make nothing of them; do you recollect how that happened?—They were inaccuracies in the dietary; no material over-charges.

Had you looked at them to make them correct?—Not sufficiently.

Is it the duty of any body in the office to do it?—The accounts were correct, but there were inaccuracies in the returns; in the lists of the children upon which the dietary was calculated, they were incorrect.

These could only be made correct by yourself?—Yes, they were returned by me, and sent to the school, and afterwards allowed.

That particular checking should have originated in the office?—Yes.

What means had they of discovering that the number of children charged were incorrect?—It was the number of days, not the number of children.

Was the error discovered by casting up the columns of days, and seeing so many three-pence halfpennies?—No.

What means had the officers of the Imprest Office to check it?—They saw it was wrong cast up.

If it had been examined in your office, and it was seen how many days of the diet was charged that would have been discovered?—Yes.

Who makes up those accounts?—They are made up at the schools.

And the accounts sworn in the country?—Yes.

And then transmitted to you?—Yes.

How could it happen this was sworn the 9th of April 1824 and put into the post office, as stated in the proper place, the 28th of February preceding?—It was received on the first of March by me; probably it was sent up to be examined before it was sworn; I suppose so.

Is that usual?—Yes; it has been done in some cases.

Is it not extremely irregular?—No, it is not.

I thought the local committee were to superintend the making out of the accounts; to see that they were correct, and that they were sworn and sent to you?—Yes.

Is it usual to send them up to the office to have them examined; to see if they are correct, and then to send them down to be sworn?—It is not usual; it was done so in this case, I believe.

Look at the balance stated to be in the master's hand, the 24th of June 1823?—
234*l.* 15*s.* 3½*d.*

Will you see if that balance is carried on properly to the next half-year's account?—Yes, it is 334*l.*

How does that happen?—He got a particular loan of 100*l.*

Would that appear between the two intervals?—Yes.

Look at the balance left in hand on the last day of the last account you have there?—
313*l.* 17*s.* 7½*d.*

Have you no such balance as 245*l.*?—Yes; that was the balance he had in hand in December 1822, that is exclusive of the loan of 100*l.*

Looking at the half-yearly accounts ending 24th June 1823, the balance in the hands of the master was 234*l.* 15*s.* 3½*d.*; can you account, why in the half-year from the 25th of June to the 25th of December 1823, the balance in hand by him should be stated as 334*l.* 15*s.* 3½*d.*?—He includes in that sum the loan he had received, which he did not in the half-year preceding.

Do you recollect when it was lent?—No, I do not; it was before December 1822, I think.

It would appear if it was entered regularly in the account, ending 1822-3?—Yes, it would.

In looking at the accounts passed at the public office to the year ending the 5th of January 1823, it appears there was in the hands of the master of Ross school 349*l.* 7*s.* 11*d.*; in the accounts there stated by the master, and sworn by him, the beginning of that year, the balance stated to be in his hands is 245*l.* 3*s.* 6½*d.*?—That is so.

Do you conceive this oath to apply to all the accounts?—I do.

This account, you conceive, was sent up to you to be made correct before he swore it?—I do not recollect the circumstances of that account; there are no alterations in it.

Are the Society in the habit of making loans to persons, independent of the regular advances?—Yes; they have done it in some instances.

Appendix, N° 118.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esq. Saturday, 22d of January 1825.

THE Commissioners have received from you since they last saw you, an abstract of the receipts and disbursements of the Incorporated Society from the commencement of the institution, and there are some points in that return upon which they would wish for explanation; they observe in the column headed "apprenticed" from the beginning down to the year 1781, the number entered is 5,858; is the meaning of that, that the number from the period of the Society being instituted down to that period, amounted to 5,858?—Yes, it is.

The Commissioners observe in the same column, opposite to the year 1796, the number 7,243; they presume the meaning of that is, that down to that year the total number from the commencement was 7,243?—Yes.

The Commissioners observe opposite to 1819, in the same column, the number 4,527; it is obviously impossible that that can mean the total number that had been apprenticed from the commencement; they beg of you to explain what it does mean?—That is the additional number between those two years from 1796, to the year 1819.

Does not it occur to you, that any total of the column in its present state, as returned by you, must lead to a very erroneous conclusion?—Yes, but for the line that is drawn.

The Commissioners observe, that no return is made of the sum expended upon building and repairs from the commencement of the institution, down to the year 1806; to what is that owing?—They are not particularized in the accounts of former years.

Were you an officer of the Society during any portion of the time when they were not so particularized?—A very short period, two or three years before.

How came the sums expended in building and repairs, to have begun to be specified in the year 1806?—The accounts became more full in the statement of the particulars at that period.

Was there any particular reason that they became more full; did you receive any particular directions upon the subject?—No.

It appears, that in that year, namely, 1806, the schools of the Society were thirty-eight, and that at the present time they are thirty, and that they have been continually decreasing from 1806 to the present time; has any new school been built within that period?—I believe only two.

Which were they?—Baggot-street and Kevin-street, those two have been established.

Were they built at the expense of the Society?—No.

It appears, that during those eighteen years, the total number of schools were continually decreasing, by no new schools, according to you, being built at the expense of the Society?—I have made a mistake, there were two others, Dundalk and Strangford, and considerable sums were expended in Kevin-street, as much as if a new house had been built.

It appears, that during the eighteen years that have elapsed since 1806, the sums expended in building and repairs, have been 83,689*l.*; are you able to say generally, from your official acquaintance with the circumstances of that expenditure, that it was all reasonable and necessary?—Indeed, I believe it was.

Are the Commissioners to understand from you, that it is absolutely impossible from the official documents, at present to ascertain the sums expended in building and repairs previous to 1806?—Yes, totally impossible.

The Commissioners observe, that in the year 1749, the private subscriptions in Ireland were no less than 4,536*l.*; in 1750, 1,034*l.*; in 1751, 2,166*l.*; in 1752, 2,906*l.*; in 1753, 3,066*l.*; in 1754, 1,926*l.*; being in six years a total of 15,634*l.*: the commissioners observe, that in the last six years that have just elapsed, the total amount of subscriptions have been 1*l.* 2*s.* 9*d.*; they would wish to know, what is your impression as to the cause of this remarkable difference in the inclination of the public to subscribe at present to what it was at the early period referred to?—At that early period, the Parliamentary grant, and other resources of the Society were very small; now the Society receive a large Parliamentary grant, and the subscriptions of the members have been very inconsiderable.

Is it your impression, if the Parliamentary grant were withdrawn, there would be private subscriptions to any amount in support of the charter schools?—I should think not to any considerable amount.

To what do you attribute that?—Subscriptions in general to charities have fallen off.

Do you think the taste for subscribing to other charities has been decreasing of late years?—Yes.

Do you think the managers of the present religious societies, that occupy a considerable portion of the public attention, would agree with you?—I mean, that the parish schools have fallen off very much in their subscriptions.

May it not have originated from the impression that the money can be better employed than in the support of charter schools or parish schools?—It has not been wanted so much by the Society as by other institutions.

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
22 Jan. 1825.

Appendix, N° 119.

Further Examination of James Adamson, Esq. Monday 24th January 1825.

WE observe, that in the accounts of the Society for the year ending the 6th January 1813, there is an item of £.7,308. 19*s.* 7½*d.* entered as cash advanced to sundry masters of schools; will you explain the nature and cause of those advances generally?—The 24 Jan. 1825.

[H h]

committee

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
24 Jan. 1825.

committee of fifteen, at the commencement of each quarter, advance money on account of the subsistence of the children to the masters of different schools.

Is money advanced for any other purpose, excepting as part of the subsistence?—Yes, subsistence, clothing and fuel.

Is any rule generally observed, with respect to the extent of the advance to be made in that manner?—The rule states, that three-fourths of the whole of the usual subsistence money shall be advanced, but that is frequently extended at the discretion of the committee.

Is it advanced periodically, or at the commencement of the year?—At the commencement of the quarter, and at other times afterwards.

In the same account, we observe an entry of cash due by Oliver Brown, the former master of Cashel school, to the amount of £.163. 5s. 3d.; on what account do you consider that this money could have been due by a former master?—I cannot perfectly recollect all the particulars now; but there was a sum of money advanced to Oliver Brown, by the order of the committee of fifteen; he was then the master of Cashel school, and he came to town to receive it.

Was that a sum advanced in part of the subsistence of the children?—Yes, the principal part of it.

Was any part of it advanced for any other purposes?—Part was a balance due by him.

In what manner did it occur he should have remained indebted to the Society after he had left the school?—Immediately after receiving it, he left the country.

Was he dismissed by order of the committee of fifteen?—Yes, he was dismissed.

Is it the practice of the Society in cases of that kind, to order any security to be taken for the master?—Yes.

Can you state, whether security was taken in the instance of this master?—I believe there was.

Do you recollect, whether it was afterwards recovered?—It certainly was not.

Have they in any instance, had recourse to the securities taken?—I believe there were proceedings attempted to be taken, but the committee found that any proceedings would be unavailable; I believe his securities became insolvent.

We observe, from the accounts of the Society for the year ending January 1814, a sum stated as due by Mr. Hampton, the master of Clontarf school, £.190. 16s. 1d. and a further sum due by Mr. Foote, the master of one of the schools, amounting to £.108. 16s. 3d.; do these sums stand in the same situation as that you have last mentioned?—With regard to the sum due by Mr. Hampton, the committee took it into consideration, and he made a claim on the Society for losses sustained by him in dieting the children, and though the committee would not allow that claim, they thought it would be to no purpose to proceed against him or his sureties for the amount of the money due; and there is on the books of the Society, as well as I can recollect, an order to the purport that proceedings should not be taken.

Had the allowance for diet in that case been the same during that year, as upon former occasions, was it according to the usual rule?—Yes, but he stated a loss by the contract for the diet.

Has it not been the practice of the Society to authorize advances to a certain extent to some of the masters, to enable them to lay in their provisions at a suitable rate of cheapness?—Yes.

Are those advances different, and in addition to what you have stated, with respect to the advance of usual subsistence?—Yes, I should not say it is usual; but it has been done when there was a prospect of a very dear year, the committee have made additional advances.

What were the circumstances attending the advance of money to Mr. Foote?—That sum remained due by him upon settling his account after he was dismissed.

Does it happen in many cases, that the sum so advanced to the master, exceeds the whole of the subsistence money that he may have a claim for?—Yes, it has happened in many instances.

Is a calculation made previously to the advance of the money, of the sum that will be due on this account on the account of dietary and clothing, according to the returns of the number in the school at the period for which the advance is made?—Yes, there is.

How does it happen, that a sum exceeding the whole of the subsistence and clothing money should have been so advanced in any case?—The committee have, at their discretion, advanced more money than the usual sum upon particular applications.

Were those sums due by Mr. Hampton and Mr. Foote, or either of them, afterwards recovered?—No.

They are losses to the Society?—Yes, they are.

In the year last referred to, there is an entry in the account in these terms: "Loss by Oliver Brown, a former master of Cashel school, £.163. 5s. 3d.;" was the recovery of that sum then considered desperate?—Yes, it was.

And the sum struck out of the books of the Society?—The sum was lost to the Society, and considered desperate; there was an application made to the sureties.

In the accounts for the year ending the 5th of January 1816, the sums lost by Oliver Brown, Hugh Hampton, Robert Foote and Robert Shaw, are entered under the description of the "state of the balance;" do those sums continue to be still carried on in the accounts of the Society?—Yes, they do.

It appears from the accounts of the following year, ending January 1817, that there is no item of this nature, containing the sums lost by the former masters; can you explain the reason reason why it appears in some of the accounts, and not in others?—[The witness examined the accounts.—I believe it to be included in the sum of 7,250*l.* 6*s.* 11½*d.* the amount of sundry sums remaining in the hands of the masters of the several schools, and advances made to them on account of the subsistence of the children.

It appears from the accounts of the two following years, ending January 1818 and 1819, that the sum of 471*l.* is in each of those years entered, as lost by former masters of schools, while at the same time there is an item in those accounts, under the head of sums advanced to the masters of the several schools on account of the subsistence of the children; on what principle are those items entered differently in those different years?—[The witness examined the accounts for those years.—It is probable the accounts were made up by different persons, and the particulars specified in one, not particularly specified in the other.

We observe in this account, various entries of considerable sums under the head of printing and books; does this refer to books which the Society have got printed for the use of the schools, or to what books? The amount in one year is 1,074*l.*; another year, 1,400*l.*; in another year, 819*l.*; will you explain what those books are?—The charge is principally for books purchased; the Society have not printed books themselves of late years.

Do they furnish a supply to various schools under their management?—Yes, they do; the printing is mostly abstracts of accounts, and different things of that kind; general rules and orders.

We observe, that in the year from 1816 to 1817, the officers salaries are stated at 974*l.*; and that in the following year, from 1817 to 1818, the same item is stated at 1,255*l.*; will you explain in what manner this considerable difference arises?—I believe the architect's salary was included in the 1,255*l.*; I cannot at this moment recollect.

Is there a regular architect employed by the Society?—Yes.

Who was the person employed at that time?—Mr. Farrell.

Has he an annual salary?—Yes.

What is the amount of the salary?—It has been reduced from three guineas a week to one hundred guineas a year.

What was the amount of the salary in the first of the above mentioned years?—Three guineas a week; the visitors expenses may be included in the 1,200*l.* which were about 300*l.* per annum.

By visitor, you mean Mr. Lee?—Mr. Thackeray and Mr. Lee.

Did any alteration of the salaries of the regular officers take place about that time?—Yes, there did about that time; I believe the salary of the secretary was increased about that time.

Has any alteration taken place since, in the salaries of the regular officers to which you can refer?—No.

Will you turn to the account from the year 1820 to 1821, and 1821 to 1822; you will observe that the officers salaries are stated in the first of those years, at 978*l.*; and in the latter, at 871*l.*; what was the occasion of this variation?—There might have been a quarter's salary to different persons included in one year that was not included in the other; for instance, the December salary might have been charged in the subsequent year.

Is it the practice sometimes to advance part or the whole of the salaries, to any officers?—No; it has only been done in one instance.

Can you recollect the year when the school at Kilkenny was broken up?—Not exactly.

Was it before or after the year 1820?—Before.

We observe, from the account ending January 1822, the sum of 317*l.* is stated as then due by Mr. Rogan of Kilkenny school; that must mean the former master of that school?—Yes.

Can you explain how it happens that this sum does not appear on the account of the preceding year, but is mentioned for the first time in the account of that year?—I should think it was included in the advances made, and it was in a subsequent year that he furnished his account, in which the precise balance due by him appeared.

Could it happen, that if he was dismissed from the school, or the school was broken up, previously to 1820, that his account should not have been transmitted to the Society sooner than 1822?—The accounts were not transmitted until a considerable time after he was dismissed; he made claims in the same manner, and they remained unsettled. I have his accounts.

Has that sum been recovered, or any part of it?—Never.

Do you recollect a loan having been made to the master of Maynooth school, Mr. Waterston?—Yes.

At what time, and on what occasion, and for what purposes was that loan made?—I do not recollect at what time it was; a short time I believe before the suppression of the school.

Do you recollect the occasion on which it was, and the purpose for which it was made?—It was on a memorial to the board; I do not recollect the particular circumstances he stated, that induced the committee to order the loan.

Do you recollect the time when the school at Maynooth was suppressed?—I do not recollect the time at this moment; I think about seven years ago.

In the year ending January 1819, the sum of 3,324*l.* is entered as the amount of clothing; was that the period when the clothing was first prepared in Dublin, and furnished to the country?—I believe it was.

It appears from the accounts stated, that the sum of 1,100*l.* was disallowed to a person of the

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
24 Jan. 1825.

the name of Cusack, being part of his claims for clothing; can you mention the circumstances that occasioned this temporary disallowance?—It was a temporary disallowance, as a sum paid on account would not be allowed by the commissioners.

The accounts had not been completed?—No, they had not.

It is the rule of the commissioners of imprest accounts, that they do not give credit for sums paid on account?—It is.

Has the expense of clothing varied considerably from year to year, as furnished by the Society, or does it amount pretty nearly to the same sum?—It has been less of late years than it was formerly.

The amount which appears to have been charged under this head, for the year ending January 1822, was 1,623*l.*; in what manner is this great difference to be accounted for between those two years, the one being 3,324*l.*, and the other 1,623*l.*?—The whole of the sums were not included in the 1,600*l.*

Do you mean that these were sums paid in part of the contract only?—Yes; I mean that the whole clothing was not included in that 1,600*l.*; and I should mention also, that some of the masters obtained the contract for clothing in subsequent years, which lessened the charge for clothing in Dublin.

Has an alteration or deviation from the rule taken place then in some instances, subsequent to the time when it was resolved to have the whole clothing made in Dublin?—Yes; several of the schoolmasters have since become contractors again for the clothing; the committee received proposals from every master as well as the contractors in Dublin, and they gave them to some of the masters who had done them well on former occasions.

It appears, that in the year last mentioned, the whole sums which were stated as due to the master of Ross school were disallowed by the commissioners; will you state the ground on which this took place?—There were inaccuracies in the statement of the master's annual account, which prevented the commissioners from being able to examine the correctness of the charge for the dietary; they disallowed the whole sum, which, upon explanation, was allowed in the subsequent account, the correction being made.

Is it not the practice for some officer of the Society in Dublin, to examine those accounts before they are transmitted to audit?—Yes, I ought to have examined it.

Can you state, in point of fact, that you did examine it?—I examined the half-yearly accounts; but did not refer to the list of the children upon which the dietary was made.

Did the half-yearly and yearly accounts not agree in one instance?—The half-yearly accounts were correct; but there were inaccuracies in the annual accounts in the list of the children.

The list of the children, with the half-yearly accounts, did not agree with the annual accounts?—The number of days for which the diet of the children was charged, was not correct in the annual account.

Have many instances occurred in which similar inaccuracies were detected in the last stage of the audit, so as to occasion a disallowance to this extent, or any great extent?—There were two other instances lately.

In those two instances you had not examined the annual accounts?—Not the list of the children.

In the account, for the year ending January 1822, we observe an item of 1,280*l.* as the amount of law costs due by the Society; can you state in what manner this large amount of law costs arose?—It was the charge for several years.

What is the usual or average amount of the law costs the Society incur in the course of a year?—I think for seven years it cost 1,800*l.*; the bills were about that sum.

In the year ending the 5th of January 1823, there is an item of 1,028*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* also under the head of law costs, how do you explain those two statements; the preceding year the accounts contain the item already mentioned of 1,280*l.*?—The sums charged there were paid to Mr. Card, the law agent, by the order of the Society, having been regularly taxed.

Were the Society engaged at that time, or about that time in any important law suits?—Yes; they are constantly engaged in law proceedings.

We observe, that in various instances, sums have been disallowed by the commissioners of imprest accounts on this ground, as sums that they had already disallowed in former years, which were again improperly charged; how can you account for this circumstance, that after the disallowance and the grounds of it had been stated, that the same items have been again presented?—The sums were paid, although they did not appear to be sufficiently vouched to the commissioners; I do not think that any sum has been charged that had been before allowed.

The items having been disallowed, and the grounds of disallowance having been stated by the commissioners of accounts, how could it occur, that exactly the same sum was presented again?—They appeared to the commissioners improperly charged; but they were deducted from the accounts, although included by the masters again.

One instance out of a good many occurs; in the last mentioned year, "Santry school over charged diet disallowed in last account, again improperly charged?"—The master will explain that; I believe, in fact, it was not charged again, having been deducted at the foot of the original account, although entered in the body of the account.

According to the statement contained in the report of the commissioners of audit it appears it had been again included in that year, and there is the same circumstance as to the usher's salary under this head, "Usher's salary and bounty disallowed under the same circumstances?"—The master of that school insists that the charge is right.

Under the head of Strangford School "Thomas Eustace, amount of salary, diet, and premium of usher to the 25th of March 1822, disallowed, he having received the entire year's

353
Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
24 Jan. 1825.

year's salary, diet and premium, up to that date, under the head of Stradbally school, as appears from his receipt;" how can you account for the circumstance of this item being again presented in the account, without being struck out when the accounts were examined by the Society's officers?—The master of Stradbally improperly charged it.

Would not an examination of the accounts of those schools have shown the over-charge?—I am not able to explain that at present.

In the statement of the Society's accounts for the year ending January 1822, there is a notice of a bequest by a person of the name of Mitchell; what is the nature of that bequest, and when was it received by the Society?—The will was made several years ago by Topham Mitchell; he left his estate to his widow, so long as she continued unmarried, and afterwards to the Society; and it came lately into the possession of the Society.

When did it come into their possession under those circumstances?—Within the last three or four years.

How long have the Society been in the practice of employing a regular architect on their own behalf, to inspect and report on the buildings of the Society?—I think since the year 1811 or 1812.

Is it his duty to proceed to the spot and inspect what repairs are necessary, or what is the nature of his engagement?—Yes, certainly; when the repairs are of magnitude.

Have any cases occurred in which this has not been done, although the repairs were of considerable magnitude and importance?—No, I think not.

Do you recollect the circumstances attending the building of the school-house at Trim, where some very considerable additions were made?—Yes.

What year was it?—It was previously to the appointment of the architect.

Do you recollect the year?—No, I do not.

Do you recollect who was employed at that time to report upon the works?—The local committee only.

Do you recollect who was the contractor?—As well as I can recollect, the master of the school got some of the repairs executed; he had been a builder.

The master of the school had been a builder, and was the contractor for the additional buildings referred to?—Yes, I think so, as well as I can recollect.

How did he execute the work?—It was reported to the board to be well executed, by the local committee, previously to payment.

Was it ascertained afterwards that this report was incorrect?—I do not recollect.

Are you aware, that on an inspection made by one of the gentlemen employed by the society, Mr. Thackeray, that a statement was made by him relative to this transaction, in which he represents it to have been, in truth, a shameful job on the part of the contractor, and that the work had been extremely ill executed?—I do not recollect that circumstance at all.

Have any other instances occurred, in which the contract for building or repairing has been given to the master of the school, or to any person nearly connected with him?—I do not recollect any.

Are you aware of the situation of the present house at Arklow, which is occupied for the purposes of the Society?—The house belongs to the mistress.

Are the expenses of the establishment paid by the Society?—No; merely the expense of the diet and clothing of the children.

Can you state on what account the school, formerly kept by the Society in the neighbourhood of Arklow, was given up?—It was given up in pursuance of a plan which had been recommended to the Society, of suppressing various schools and enlarging others.

Do you understand it to be the intention of the Society, or not, to re-establish the school at Arklow, or in that neighbourhood?—I believe it is not their intention. The school at Arklow is occupied as an infirmary for the girls bathing.

How long has it been used in that way?—Six or seven years, or more.

Has the state of the house, with respect to its local situation, and its inadequacy in point of accommodation, been represented to the Society?—I do not recollect that it has.

Do you recollect, whether any application has been made lately by the master of the school at the Lintown factory, for a supply of paper and other stationery for the use of the school?—I do not recollect at this moment.

One of the Commissioners visited that school lately, and found that a great number of boys could not be employed in writing, on account of the want of paper and copy books; that there were only five or six copy books?—I now recollect there was an application made by Mr. Rowe, the catechist, for paper.

Do you recollect the date of that application?—A month or six weeks ago.

Do you think it possible, or probable, that the master of that school should have applied three several times to the Society, at considerable intervals, stating the want of stationery, and the impossibility of carrying on the instruction of the children without a supply, and yet that such application should have been overlooked, or not complied with?—I do not recollect such applications by the master; but I know that there was a supply ordered on Mr. Rowe's application. It rests with the master to direct the carman to call for the goods, after they have been ordered.

Is it not the practice of the Society to forward the articles required at their own charge?—The carriage is at the charge of the Society; but the masters are by a general order to direct a confidential carman to call for the goods, and then they are given to him.

Do you think it possible that the school of the Lintown factory should, down to this time, not have been supplied in consequence of an omission of that nature?—If it is not supplied,

Examination of
James Adamson,
Esq.
24 Jan. 1825.

it must be the master's fault; he has been frequently in town, and might get the paper at a moment's notice. I will take care that paper shall be sent directly.

In the accounts of the Society for various years, there is an entry frequently under the head of sundry schools, a considerable sum, in one instance, £.586. 14s. 9d. and similar sums in other years; what do these items apply to in general?—Blankets and bedding, and various articles of furniture, supplied in Dublin.

Is that independent of the clothing?—Yes, it is.

Have the whole of the sums that were lent to the Pococke and the Ranelagh estates been now repaid?—No, not yet.

Has a considerable part of them been repaid?—Yes, a considerable part.

Is there a prospect of soon being able to replace the money to those accounts?—Yes, there is.

Appendix, N° 120.

Further Examination of Mr. Thomas Stuart, Thursday, 13th of January 1825.

Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

ARE you personally acquainted with all the masters of the charter schools?—No, not with all.

How many of them?—I should think more than half of them.

We forget how long you have held the office you now fill?—Twenty-two years this month.

Has it fallen within your observation, are you able to communicate to us, whether a custom has prevailed among the masters generally, of giving gratuities of any description to any officers of the Incorporated Society?—Gratuities!

Yes.—I really do not know of gratuities being given by the masters generally to any officer of the Society.

Have you known of any instances?—Yes, I have known of instances of presents to myself, or rather to my family.

Of what description?—Butter, sometimes fresh eggs, &c.

Any thing else?—Some bacon or hams occasionally, but not for some time past.

Any thing else?—I do not recollect any thing else.

Was the butter the produce of the farm of the school?—I do not know; I should think so.

The eggs?—I should think so.

What opinion should you form upon that subject, as to the hams?—I should think they were all the produce of the farm, and the making up of the master or mistress.

Describe any occasions upon which you may have received hams?—I do not recollect; not for some time.

Have you ever received more than one at a time?—Two at a time.

Have you ever received three at a time?—I do not recollect, I may have done so.

Have those hams ever been supplied to you from any house in Dublin, or were they sent from the country?—Yes, from the country.

In all instances?—Yes, that I recollect.

On such occasions, was there any note or communication made to you upon the subject?—I do not recollect any.

Did you always know who they came from?—I was seldom at home when they came; there was a message left with Mrs. Stuart or the servant.

Do you mean distinctly to swear, upon no occasion there was money?—I really do not recollect at this moment; there might have been, but it must have been a long time since; I do not recollect any instance of money being given to me.

We should collect from your former evidence, if such a circumstance had arisen, you would have deemed it a very extraordinary one, and likely to have made an impression on your memory?—It might have made an impression upon me; I do not recollect it, but I will endeavour to recollect.

Will you swear no instance has occurred, of a present of money from a master to you?—No, I will not; but I do not recollect it at present.

Will you swear there have been no loans of money to you from masters?—No.

Will you swear there have?—Yes, there have been.

Mention them?—If you would allow me to answer generally, I would be obliged to you.

No, we wish for it in all its minuteness?—Because if there was any irregularity in it, the persons might come under censure as well as myself.

We have no line to think of but our duty; you will answer the question?—I borrowed money from the master of Farra school.

How much?—I think £.200.

When?—Some years ago.

How many years ago?—Perhaps five or six years.

What security did you give him?—My own personal security.

In what form?—In the form of bills.

Has the money been repaid?—Part of it has.

How much is still due?—I do not recollect exactly; I know I have paid over £.100.

Did you pay him interest for it?—I do not think I paid him interest for what I have paid him; but he may demand interest for the remaining part.

How

255
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

How did the transaction originate; did he apply to you to accept of his money, or did you apply to him?—I applied to him.

What induced you to apply to him?—I had known him a long time, and we had been upon intimate terms.

Did he comply at once with your request?—I do not recollect.

Did he make any difficulty about lending it to you?—I cannot state that; I rather think he did not at once give it me; perhaps he was not prepared; I did not get it altogether; I got £. 100 at one period, and £. 100 at another.

Do you mean to say, upon your application to him, and in your communications with each other, there was no distinct understanding come to, whether interest was to be paid for this money or not?—I do not recollect that there was any distinct understanding upon it.

Do you think he would have lent this money to any body but yourself, without knowing whether interest was to be paid for it?—I do not know; my wife keeps a boarding school, and there was an understanding that his children were to be sent to Mrs. Stuart to school, and they were so sent; it was in that manner I repaid the money I have done.

You have not repaid him actually in cash?—No; but there was an understanding of that kind between us.

For what length were your bills drawn?—I do not recollect.

Are they due yet?—They were due long since.

Has he called upon you for payment of any of them?—Credit has been given for the sum charged for educating his daughter.

Has any account ever been stated between you?—Yes, at the period of every quarter there was an account between us.

Does his account specify the charge for the tuition of the children merely, or take any notice of the sum you were his debtor?—No, it did not take any notice of it.

Have any accounts ever been settled between you and him, taking notice of your being his debtor?—I have stated so much was allowed towards the debt.

Has the account of the debt been stated, or has there been any statement showing how much you were his debtor, at any particular time?—I do not recollect any particular statement.

Can you say there has been none?—No, I cannot; I do not recollect any at this moment.

Is it your own impression, that he is to have interest?—My own impression is, if he demands interest, I will pay him.

Do you think it probable he intends to demand interest?—I think he does intend it, but I do not know; I will pay him if he does.

Suppose he does not demand interest, what do you suppose were his particular inducements for lending you this money upon terms more disadvantageous than he could have employed it in any other manner?—He has gotten the education of his children upon better terms than I believe he could do in any other way.

Do you mean to say, he expected to make a gain to a greater extent in that way, than 12 l. per annum?—Yes, I should think so.

How much do you charge per annum?—We charged him 40 l.

How much do you charge other persons?—Taking in extras, fifty guineas.

Did you charge him nothing for extras?—We included every thing in that sum.

How many daughters had he?—Two.

At what time were they sent to Mrs. Stuart's school?—I believe, three years ago.

How long did the loan of money precede the sending of the children?—I am not quite certain as to that; it was a year before, at all events.

Had he never lent you any money preceding that?—No.

Never?—I am sure he did not, that I can recollect.

There is a circumstance in your evidence we do not quite understand. If the two daughters had been three years at your school, it would appear that the debt must have been overpaid long since?—I did not say they were three years; they have not been at the school latterly.

Where have they been?—At home, with their parents.

When did they leave the school?—Six months ago; when I say about three years, I am not sure as to the time.

Do you mean to say, they have been taken away from the school, leaving a considerable portion, about one half, remaining unpaid, without any account being settled?—The father is in expectation of sending another young girl to my house; and it is in that way, unless he makes a claim for the payment of the money, that I have expectations of repaying him.

At the time the loan was first made, was there any understanding between you and him as to this peculiar mode of repayment?—Yes, I think I did mention it.

Will you undertake to say you did?—I am not positive; I think I did.

Is it any portion of your duty to look over the accounts of the charter schools, when they are sent up?—No, it is not.

Whose is it?—Mr. Adamson's.

Do you ever, in point of fact, perform that duty?—I do not examine them as to their correctness.

Who does?—Mr. Adamson, I believe.

Does Mr. Adamson ever depute it to any other person?—He has his clerk.

Does he employ you for that purpose?—No.

[H h 4]

Describe

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

Describe the whole extent of your duty, as to the accounts sent up by the masters to your office?—On board days, I extract from them the balance stated by the masters, and certified by the local committees, for or against; and all the demands for money made in the papers accompanying the half-yearly accounts. I extract the items, and place them upon paper, lot them, and lay them before the chairman; and then there is an order made, and the money is entered in the book that is laid before the committee every Wednesday; afterwards, I engross the proceedings in the committee book. I have to enter all the orders made respecting the masters, or others, to whom monies are paid.

Do you not call that examining the accounts sent by the masters?—No.

What should you call examining?—Going into the calculations of the dietary, and into every other calculation.

You do collect the results of these accounts, and lay them before the board?—I collect the amount of demands made by tradesmen, or others, certified by the local committees, and place those sums together, and shew it to the chairman of the board; and Mr. Adamson makes out the rough minutes from that, and I enter in the minute book the proceedings of every week, within the following week.

Describe particularly your duties as to the dietary?—I do not conceive I have any duty whatever to perform as to that.

Do you not submit the amount claimed on the foot of dietary to the board?—No.

Does not that include the dietary?—Yes, it does; the whole account.

In order to submit that account, is it not necessary for you to examine the account, to see what it is?—No; not for me.

How do you do it without?—I take it for granted.

[An account was shewn to the witness.]

In what way would you treat that?—If that was the balance due to the master, I would set it down as such, and add it up with the other sums claimed.

In every case, where the balance is against the master, do you decline interfering with the account?—No; because there is the catechist's salary, the medical attendant's salary, and other demands which are generally recommended in the body of the account; if so recommended, and that they appear correct, I ask Mr. Adamson's opinion, and then set them down as items to be ordered on that day, not including any sum on account of the master, when there is a balance due by him.

Who finds out whether they are correct?—The secretary.

Do not the board make the order for the payment of the money, when the money turns out to be due to the master, upon your laying the papers before them?—What I do, is under the direction of the secretary; and I take down those items, supposing them to be correct, but not having previously entered into the calculations.

Do you mean he has previously entered into the calculations when you abstract the items?—I do not know that he has done it.

You take for granted he has?—Yes.

In the account handed to you, the catechist's salary and the usher's salary is entered?—Yes.

Is it the practice of some masters of charter schools to leave out any charges upon that head?—Yes, in some cases.

Which is the correct mode of doing it?—The usual mode is to enter the catechist's salary in the abstract; but as to the medical attendant, it would not be correct, inasmuch as it requires the catechist and local committee should certify his attendance.

Are we to understand there is no distinct rule as to the mode of stating the accounts in this particular?—I do not think there is any distinct rule.

If any of the accounts should be wrong stated, is it your duty or Mr. Adamson's, to point out that circumstance to the attention of the board?—Mr. Adamson's.

Is it your duty to point it out to Mr. Adamson?—Yes, if I notice it.

Whose figures are those in red ink?—I do not know, they are not mine; I believe they are the figures of Mr. Adamson's present clerk; I am not certain.

Does Mr. Adamson consider it your duty to examine whether there are any errors in the accounts, for his information?—I should think not; if Mr. Adamson gave me an account, and said to me, examine that account, I would do it; but I do not think it my duty to examine any schoolmaster's accounts, unless Mr. Adamson asks me to do it.

Are we then to understand, that you mean that the following is the state of your respective duties; that Mr. Adamson is to examine the accounts, but not to state the result; that you are to state the result, but not to examine the accounts, and the committee are then to pay?—As I mentioned before, I abstract from the papers that accompany the accounts, any applications or demands for money; I show that statement to Mr. Adamson to see that I have put down all that is right, and it is then laid before the chairman.

Is the case supposed in the last question a true statement of your relative duties, according to your own conception, and if not, in what respect is it incorrect; is it your duty to state the items of the account, but not to examine them, and Mr. Adamson's to examine the items of the account, but not to state them?—He lays them before the board, that is stating them.

Is it Mr. Adamson that lays the items before the board?—Yes, generally; I hand them sometimes.

You have already said something about laying the accounts before the board, state what that was?—The items payable to persons in the country.

357
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

Is it you that do that, or is it Mr. Adamson that does it, or do you both do it?—
I do it.

Do you do it without examining the accounts?—I do.

And Mr. Adamson does examine the accounts, but does not lay the items before the board?—He does not extract the items, but he lays them before the board.

What distinction do you make between extracting the items and examining the items, and laying them before the board?—From the accounts I extract the items for payment, and they are then laid before the chairman.

Do you lay them before the board?—Yes, sometimes.

Is it your duty, in point of fact, to lay the items before the board, or not?—I have been in the habit of doing so sometimes; but as to its being my duty, I have no specific charge.

Has it been the practice of the office you should do it?—Yes.

Has it also been the practice that you should extract them?—Yes.

Has it been the practice of the office that you should both extract the items and lay them before the board?—Yes, occasionally; still under the sanction of Mr. Adamson, who is beside me.

What is it guides your judgment in the extracting?—Bills for repairs and other demands, recommended by the local committees.

[An account was handed to the witness.]

Suppose the account now exhibited to you, being the account for the charter school of Ross, ending 25th December 1823, were given to you and Mr. Adamson to perform your respective parts upon before the board; describe exactly what you would do, and what Mr. Adamson would do, and what the board would do?—Mr. Adamson would read the report of the local committee, and see what recommendations were stated in it—if any monies were to be paid; if any bills accompanied this account (now there is nothing in it). I would set down the items of those bills and demands made by persons residing in the country and recommended by the local committee, or certified, as the case might be, as a bill for repairs certified by the local committee and architect.

Would you look at it?—I would open the bills, and see what the amounts were.

Look at that sealed packet now produced to you, from New Ross, did you ever open them?—No, I did not.

Reconcile your last answer with the present condition of that packet?—I think it is perfectly reconcileable.

How?—That I did not see the papers which it contains; that account has not been perhaps laid before the board.

Why did you not open it?—It never came before me, that I recollect.

The account of this school, up to the 24th of June, has not been looked at yet?—Not by me, that I recollect.

Could it be looked at by any person?—Yes, by Mr. Adamson.

Does Mr. Adamson examine the accounts before you look at them?—Sometimes he does.

Does he, generally?—I cannot tell that.

How long do the accounts generally remain before they are examined?—Sometimes six months, between half year and half year.

Look at the account of the dietary of that school at New Ross, and describe the respective duties of you and Mr. Adamson upon that page, in submitting it to the board?—Mr. Adamson ought to examine this account, and see that it is correct; I have nothing to do with it.

Not to mention the amount of it?—No.

Nor in any way to state how much was to be paid to the master upon the foot of that dietary?—No.

In what manner are the committee to ascertain what is to be paid for the dietary?—Through the secretary.

Not through you?—No, save extracting the items.

Would you extract the items of the dietary, or would you not?—I would not look at that part of the account at all; I would look at the debit side and credit side.

Does that side take any notice of the dietary?—It does.

Would you extract that notice of the dietary in laying it before the board?—No, I would not take notice of any of those items.

What would you put in?—The demands made for repairs, or other items of demand.

Are not they all below?—They should not be here.

Are they in fact?—Repairs £. 15. 7s.; it is very likely those were ordered on passing the preceding account. When any sum is ordered on passing the account, it is taken credit for in the subsequent account, and the master debits himself with the amount of the money paid.

How can this happen; these accounts come from the country, sworn to?—Yes.

And there is a place for the affidavit on the back of the account?—Yes.

They are ordered to be put in the post directly they are sworn, and also marked when they are put in, and a place left where the master states he put it in on such a day?—Yes, he should state that.

Can you explain how it should happen, that the master put a certain account into the post office at Ross, the 28th February 1824, when the affidavit, containing the verification of the account, is dated the 6th of April in the same year?—I cannot explain it.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

242]

APPENDIX TO REPORT FROM COMMISSIONERS

Are those accounts ever made up in the office, and sent down to be sworn?—Not that I know of.

Could he have any subsequent opportunity of swearing the affidavit afforded him?—Yes, if he transmitted it without the affidavit, by mistake, the secretary would probably return it for the purpose upon discovery; and it might be in the office some time before the secretary noticed that circumstance.

What circumstance?—The difference in the date.

I want to know, whether these accounts ever came up from the country, made up in the first instance without the affidavit, and then sent down to be sworn, after they have been compared in the office?—I do not recollect.

You say you state the result of the several accounts to the committee?—The items.

Do you copy all the items?—No, I mean the items applied for by the local committee for repairs, or any other demand, that may occur in the country.

The matters which are applied for by the local committee, or in respect of which sums of money are applied for, are not items of that one current account?—No.

When you say you state to the board, or to the committee of fifteen, the items of the account, do you mean that you do not state the items of the account, but that you state to them what monies are required on account, for articles to be provided for a particular school?—Exactly.

Do you examine any accounts which do not contain a requisition for money to provide particular articles?—I do not examine the master's school accounts.

Do the several committees send up, at the time the masters send up their accounts, such requisitions as may be necessary, with a view to obtain furniture, or any other matter, for the school?—Yes.

Do you mean you have examined those requisitions, and those requisitions only?—I do not mean the master's accounts, as to their correctness.

Then you do examine the master's accounts for some purpose?—No, I did not say I did; the only examination I could have of that account, would be to hear the reading of the report; and if there were any recommendations for the payment of money, to see the bills, and the applications for them, and put down the result.

Do you read the items of any of the accounts before the committee?—I do not.

Do you read them at any time?—I may have done so.

Do you make any abstract of the accounts for the committee?—I do not.

Do you look into the accounts at all?—I mentioned before, when they are passing they are always before me; the secretary reads them.

By abstracting the items, do you mean that you merely abstract the sum to be paid to the master?—Yes, the sum to be paid to the master, and to others, having demands on the Society.

Do you abstract that as you find it in the account?—Yes.

Or does Mr. Adamson check those accounts, and point out where the errors may have occurred in calculation or otherwise, so as to alter the items in the abstract of the account?—I do not recollect any case of that kind.

Do you do any more than state the amount of the balance due to or by the masters?—I think that is the first thing.

You look at the accounts, and see what balance appears due to or by the master on that account?—Yes; and if there be a balance due by him I enter it, that the secretary may see it; if there is a balance due to him, I take for granted it is right.

Do you look into the account, to ascertain whether the additions of the debits and credits are correct?—I do not.

You merely see at the foot of the account what is the sum there stated to be due to or by the master?—Yes.

You do not ascertain whether that sum is accurately stated, or not?—I do not; I consider that the secretary's business.

Having stated that you put upon paper the amount of the balance due to or by the master, will you now state what you afterwards do in respect to the accounts?—I add these sums together, and make a total of them, for the purpose of being handed by me or the secretary, to the chairman.

What sums?—The balance due to the master, and any other sums, for repairs or otherwise.

What do you mean by repairs?—Any repairs ordered to be executed at the school.

Are not the sums which are paid in respect of repairs, or for any other purpose, charged by the master in his account?—They ought not, until first ordered by the committee.

But when ordered, they are charged?—Yes.

Can they appear in the accounts until they are ordered by the committee?—They ought not to appear.

Then, when the master in the account takes credit for a sum of money paid by him for repairs, is it your business to see that there is a proper voucher for that sum?—It is not; I mentioned that it is not my duty to examine the correctness of the master's accounts.

What do you mean by saying you insert upon paper what monies are wanted for repairs?—If an estimate was ordered for 200*l.* and part of the work was done, and the contractor was anxious to get money on account, the local committee would recommend it, stating sufficient work was done to cover the sum recommended, and I would enter it for the consideration of the committee.

Then the papers you furnish to the board, shows what balance is due to the master, when

359
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

when a balance is due to the master upon the account under consideration; and it also shows what sums are required on account, on the recommendation of the local committee?—Yes.

Is your duty confined to stating such sums?—Yes, in that instance.

Is that the whole of your duty as to the accounts?—Yes; with this one additional circumstance, that all orders made by the committee, on passing the accounts, are afterwards entered by me in the minute book.

Does the master, when he sends up his accounts, state in any letter to you, or in any letter to the board, or in any document, what sum he requires to be issued to him?—I really do not know that; he sends his accounts, and if he transmits any letter, it is to the secretary.

If it appears upon the accounts rendered by the master, there is a sum of 200 l. due to him, and that in addition to that sum of 200 l. monies are required on account; by what document would it appear that those monies were wanted upon account?—On the document of the local committee.

Not on the master's accounts?—No.

Then your duty, so far as relates to the master's accounts, is to ascertain what sum is due to him, or by him?—Yes; on those occasions.

And to add to the sum due to him, when there is any sum due to him, the amount of any monies that the local committee require to be advanced on account?—Yes.

That is the whole of your duty as to the accounts?—Yes.

Is it your practice to inquire from the secretary, before you inspect an item, whether it is correct, or not?—Yes; if I doubt its correctness.

Do you set out upon paper, that there is to be issued to the master a certain sum, as the balance appearing due upon the face of the accounts; and that there is also to be issued to him a certain sum of money in addition to that, pursuant to the recommendation of the local committee?—Yes.

In general, are the sums which it appears by your accounts ought to be issued to the masters, in point of fact, issued?—In point of fact, they are.

The document you furnish to the board, guides the board as to the amount of the sum to be given to the master?—It does; this document always being made under the eye of the secretary.

Do you ever consider at all the propriety of the recommendations of the local committee?—I have nothing to do with that.

Does the secretary?—I do not know; that rests with himself.

Has it ever occurred to you, there may be errors in the accounts furnished by the masters, that may require to be rectified?—None have appeared to me, that I now recollect.

Has it occurred to you, there might have been an error, if it was examined?—There might be errors.

Have you ever known an error in an account furnished by a master?—There have been errors.

Have there ever been errors of considerable magnitude?—I do not recollect.

Have you any recollection of instances, in which it became necessary to disallow the whole sum, on account of inaccuracy?—Not by our board; the commissioners of accounts have done it.

On what account?—The statement of the dietary appeared irregular, not explanatory enough; there was nothing wrong in the account, except the irregularity.

It was such a jumble, they could make nothing of it?—Yes, in that instance.

Do you not conceive, in that case it had been the previous duty of somebody connected with the Incorporated Society, to see that that irregularity had been rectified before the account was sent in to the commissioners of accounts?—It ought to have been done.

Whose duty was it?—Not mine.

Whose duty was it?—The secretary's.

Do you conceive it formed any part of your duty to render him any assistance?—No, unless he required it.

Have you ever known of any considerable mistake in a late account of the schoolmaster of Farra?—No, I have not, that I can recollect.

Did you ever hear of any such?—I do not recollect.

Did you ever hear of his dietary being disallowed?—I knew there was something wrong in the account before the commissioners, as to an irregularity in the statement of the dietary.

Had he been paid the amount of that demand on the foot of the dietary, before it was disallowed?—I suppose he was.

Do you suppose also, that his account had passed through your hands and Mr. Adamson's, before he obtained that payment from the Society?—I really do not recollect; it is probable that the two accounts forming the annual account sent in to the commissioners, were laid before the committee, and passed in the manner I have stated.

What was your first acquaintance with the schoolmaster at Farra?—I was acquainted with him at the time of his appointment.

What was his name?—Ring.

What was he before that appointment?—He held a situation in the Stamp Office.

Was he any relation of your's?—No.

What recommendation had he?—I do not know.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

What acquaintance had you with him?—A general acquaintance.

Did you ever see him between the period of his appointment at Farra school, and his lending you £.100?—Yes, very often.

On what occasion?—He has very often come to town, and dined with me.

Had you any more particular occasions of communication with him, between his appointment and lending you the money?—I called at his house in the country, and stopped a day.

What reason suggested him to you as an individual to apply to to lend you money?—He appeared at all times on very friendly terms, and if he was able I thought he would serve me; that was the only inducement.

Do you think he would have been equally willing to lend the money to any individual with whom he had no more acquaintance than you?—I cannot tell.

Do you mean to state, upon your oath, that you do not believe that he expected to derive some advantage, beyond the education of his children from you?—I do not know of any advantage.

And that he lent the money to you, a mere acquaintance, without any arrangement for the payment of the interest, and merely in reference to the future education of his children?—It was in reference to the future education of his children, and to oblige me.

Why should he oblige you?—Friendship.

Do you think he would have been equally willing to oblige any body else, of whom he knew as much as of you?—I cannot tell.

Have you ever borrowed money of any other master of the Incorporated Society's schools?—Yes.

Mention any other instance?—I borrowed money from the master of Castledermot school.

Lucius Harvey?—Yes.

What amount?—To the amount of £.60.

Was that all you ever borrowed?—Yes, and £.40 at another, to make it up £.100.

At what periods did you borrow those sums of money?—I do not recollect exactly the period.

How many years ago?—About three or four years ago.

What distance of time intervened between your borrowing the £.60 and £.40?—I do not know exactly.

One year, or two?—There might be a year.

Did you ever state any account with him?—No.

What security did you pass to him?—My own.

What kind of security?—Bills.

At what dates?—One year.

On each occasion?—Yes.

Were the bills paid?—No.

Either of them?—No.

Has any money been paid on account?—No.

Did you ever pay any interest?—No; but I am to pay him interest.

Had he any children to send to your school?—He had a child he did intend to send, but he did not; it was a matter partly agreed upon between us, that he would do so, when the girl was of a proper age.

Do you know the reason why he did not?—No.

Was there any understanding between you, that he should be repaid in that way?—No.

Do you mean to swear, you cannot tax your memory with the times at which you obtained those loans?—No, I cannot, now.

Could you say within five years of the time?—Yes.

Do so?—I should think it might be three or four years ago, that I borrowed the two sums.

Try again, whether you can recollect what interval of time elapsed between borrowing the two?—Perhaps six months; I am not sure.

What was your first acquaintance with Mr. Harvey?—I do not recollect; I did not know Mr. Harvey till he was appointed master of the school.

What was the nature of the opportunities of your forming an acquaintance, between the time of his appointment to the school, and lending you the money?—Only when he was in Dublin; I was in the habit of meeting him at the office.

How did the transaction of the loan of money originate; did he seek to invest it in your hands?—No, I applied to him.

Mention what you stated?—I told him I wanted so much money, and he would oblige me if he would lend it me.

Did you say any thing about paying him the interest?—Yes; I said I would.

Have you done so?—No, not yet.

Has he ever called upon you for the payment of the principal or interest?—Yes, about six months ago.

How much did he call upon you to pay him?—He did not state what sum.

Did he say whether principal or interest?—No, he did not; he had some occasion for it.

Did he state the nature of his expectations, as to the amount of the payment?—No.

Did he express any dissatisfaction at not having theretofore received payment of any of these bills, or interest on account of them?—No.

Do you think he would have been satisfied to have left his money in the hands of any other

361
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

other person in the community upon those terms but your's?—Yes, as I was to pay him interest.

Did he make any difficulty about lending you the money?—I do not recollect.

Really?—I do not.

How much did you ask him to lend you?—Sixty pounds.

Did he lend it you immediately?—I do not know that he did immediately.

In what manner did he hand it you?—I do not recollect; it was in bank notes.

Himself?—Yes.

Did he hand you the 40*l.* himself?—Yes.

Did you ever ask him to lend you any further sum than those two loans?—No.

Do you think Mr. Harvey had any expectation of deriving any advantage whatever from this loan?—I do not know whether he had or not.

If you were in his place, what would have been your impressions as to that probability?—I cannot tell.

Should you think it a desirable thing, if you were a master of a charter school, to oblige the registrar of the Incorporated Society?—I cannot say what I should think.

Would you rather have him as a friend or an enemy?—His friendship could not be very material.

Would it be so immaterial as not worth some little sacrifice to obtain it?—No, I should think it of very little consequence.

To what do you attribute the presents you received?—Mere civility; I cannot tell what else to attribute it to; it was more on account of the two girls placed at Mrs. Stuart's school, than otherwise, on Mr. Ring's part.

Do you not think that they might imagine, that the friendship of the registrar might assist them in the passing of their accounts?—I cannot tell what they would think upon the subject.

Can you form any idea, upon your oath, as to the motive that influenced them in making those presents?—No, except civility.

Do you think that those two loans were made from civility?—Yes, and in one instance friendship. Mr. Ring has been a very sincere friend.

Is there any other instance of a loan of money from a charter school master?—I do not recollect any.

Try and tax your memory; will you swear there were none?—No, I will not.

If there had been such a loan, do you think it is a circumstance not likely to have made an impression upon your memory?—It would have made an impression on my memory.

Will you swear you are not a debtor to any other charter school master?—Yes, I recollect one more.

In what instance was that?—In the instance of the present master of Santry charter school.

When?—A year and a half ago.

Did you give him any security?—Yes.

What was it?—My bill,

What time was the note for?—Payable, I think, on demand.

Did you ever pay him?—No.

Did he ever ask you for it?—He did not.

Do you expect a demand from him on account of that note?—I do.

Try and recollect, whether you can call to mind any other?—I do not recollect.

Do you think there could have been any considerable loan from any other master, without your recollecting it?—I think not.

Will you take upon you to swear, that no other master of any charter school has lent you to the amount of 50*l.*?—Yes, as well as I can recollect.

You are quite sure of that?—Yes, so far as I can recollect.

Did Mr. Hines, the master of Sligo, never lend you any money?—Yes, he did; but he has been repaid; it is several years ago.

The question was as to the fact of lending, and not with reference to repayment?—I understood it so.

How much did he lend you?—I think £.60.

How long ago is that?—Several years ago.

How long?—I do not recollect how long exactly.

On what occasion did he lend it you?—On my applying to him for it.

Why did you select him to apply to?—He was also a friend I have known long.

What security did you give him?—My bill.

How long was his money due before you repaid him?—Indeed I do not recollect.

Did you pay him interest for it?—I think not.

Were you two, three, four or five years in his debt?—No, I do not think it was two years.

Do you think there are many persons of your acquaintance who could obtain the loans of money without interest, which you have been so fortunate as to obtain?—I do not know whether I paid Mr. Hines interest.

Do you think there is any man in the country who has borrowed money from charter school masters but yourself?—I do not know.

In what manner did you repay Mr. Hines?—I think it was by his daughter, who was placed as an apprentice with Mrs. Stuart.

To learn what?—To learn to be a governess.

How long did she continue with Mrs. Stuart?—She was some years; I forget indeed how long.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

Was she to pay an apprentice fee of £.60?—Yes.

Have you ever known of an equally large fee being paid?—Yes, frequently; Mrs. Stuart has got a hundred guineas.

Was there that understanding when you borrowed it?—No.

Did you ever pay any money in cash to him?—No.

How long was his daughter with Mrs. Stuart?—About three years; I am not exactly sure.

Is it possible you cannot recollect when Mr. Hines's daughter left Mrs. Stuart?—I do not at present.

Can you form any approximation in your mind as to the time that Miss Hines ceased to be an inmate in your house?—Three or four years ago, as well as I can recollect.

Had Mr. Hines more than one daughter with you?—No.

Was she an apprentice or a pupil?—An apprentice, to be taught the qualifications of a governess.

Did you receive any payment for her tuition, or board or lodging, beyond £.60.?—I recollect the whole fee was a hundred guineas, and to be paid the difference.

Did he pay the difference, being £.53. 15s. after Miss Hines had left you?—No; on her coming to the house.

Did he make any difficulty about lending you the £.60 before there had been any allusion to the mode of repayment?—I am not sure, whether I had mentioned the circumstance to him, or he to me, about his daughter; I recollect we had a conversation upon the subject, and the mode in which he was to be paid was, in case he sent his daughter to Mrs. Stuart.

Did you ever receive any other loan or gift, or payment of money whatever, from Mr. Hines?—No; none, that I recollect.

Did any other master ever lend you, or give you, any money, no matter whether you may have subsequently repaid it or not, the question is quite general?—I do not recollect any other.

Did you ever hear of any master lending money to any officer of the institution but yourself?—I never heard of it, and never inquired.

Not to Mr. Payne?—Not that I know of.

Did you never know of Mr. Payne borrowing money from masters?—No.

Did you ever know of his receiving presents from masters?—No.

Did you ever hear of it?—I do not recollect that I heard it.

Do you believe, or not, that the masters in the charter schools are in the habit of making presents of money to any officers of the institution?—I should think not in the habit.

Do you think it occurs, from time to time, as a Christmas-box?—I do not know that it does.

Do you believe that they make presents to any one?—Yes, I admitted to myself.

Do you know of any other?—No.

As to your belief?—Presents may have been made to Mr. Adamson; I do not recollect the circumstance.

Upon your oath, what is your belief, whether presents have been made, or not made, to Mr. Adamson?—I believe presents have been made, but I cannot take upon me to say what or when.

Did you ever hear of any specific and remarkable presents having been made to him?—No.

Never in conversation?—No.

Leaving out specific or remarkable, did you ever hear of any presents?—Yes, I have heard of it.

What kind of presents?—Such as a bowl of butter, or a couple of hams. I do not know of any thing else.

Tea or sugar?—I never heard of it.

Was not there a kind of subscription among the masters of the charter schools to supply one of the officers of the Incorporated Society upon an emergency with money?—I do not recollect it.

Will you say, you have never received a present of tea or sugar from the master of a charter school?—I really do not recollect; to say positively, I will not; but this moment, I do not recollect.

Have you any doubt of having received presents of tea?—Yes, I have very great doubt; I am positive I never did, that I can recollect.

Or your wife?—No, nor my wife, that I know of.

Coming with the hams?—No.

Do you know where the hams came from?—Yes.

From whence?—From the master of Farra school.

Do you mean, that they came from his place in the country, or that he purchased them in Dublin?—I believe he sent them from his farm in the country; they came by the common carman.

Have you any doubt whatever, that hams have been purchased in Dublin to be sent to you?—I think no such things have occurred; I cannot swear to what I do not know.

Do you know of any instances where presents have been offered and refused by any officers of the Society?—I do; in my own case, where they have been sent within the last year, and I immediately wrote to the individuals so sending, desiring that they would furnish me with a bill, and I have paid him.

Did you ever do it before the last year?—No.

What induced a change of the practice?—There was an inquiry at our board with respect to 303

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

to Mr. Adamson; some inquiry about some person having made him a present; it was a private inquiry; I do not know the nature of it; but he told me that one of the members said to him, he should not receive from the master of a school, so much as a chicken; and when I found the committee would have been displeased at such a thing, from that I was determined I would not receive any kind of present without paying for it, and desiring the individual not to send any thing more.

Did that inquiry take place in the last year?—I think it was about a year ago.

What was the nature of the present that gave rise to the inquiry?—I do not recollect.

What was the present you refused?—Butter.

Do you know of any instance where a piece of plate has been offered by a master to any officer of the Society?—No, I do not recollect.

Who offered the butter you refused?—It was offered by a young lady who had been educated by Mrs. Stuart; she is now the wife of Mr. Kidd, of Dundalk school.

Had you any other from any other person?—Not that I recollect.

She was Miss Hines?—Yes.

Do you know Mr. Kinsley, the master of Monasterevan?—Yes.

Did you receive any present from him?—I do not recollect.

Have you the children of many masters of charter schools, at Mrs. Stuart's school?

—No.

Have you had many?—No, not many.

* * * * *

Do you remember when the contract was made for supplying the shirting, linen and shoes?—Yes.

Who obtained that contract for the shirting, in the first instance?—There was Mrs. Tyrrell and Co.

Who did the Co. mean?—I do not know.

Upon your oath, you do not know?—Upon my oath, I do not know the extent to which it went; I believe that one was Mrs. Adamson.

You mean the wife of the secretary?—Yes; the late wife.

How long did she continue to be concerned in that contract, do you know?—I do not recollect the number of years; three or four years, perhaps more.

Did you ever hear of any complaint being made of the quality of the articles supplied under that contract?—I think there was.

From whom did this complaint proceed?—I think it was from the Bishop of Ferns.

Anybody else?—I do not recollect any other.

Do you know what was done upon that complaint?—It was brought before the committee.

Do you know how they disposed of it?—I do not recollect.

Did the contract continue after that?—I believe so; it was a complaint of a pair of stockings.

Was it limited to one pair of stockings?—One pair was brought forward.

As a sample?—Yes.

Did you see it?—Yes.

Did you consider the complaint ill founded?—No, I thought it was well founded.

Describe them?—They were short stockings, adapted for trowsers; I do not know whether cotton or worsted.

Was the complaint that they were too short?—That they were badly made.

Did you examine them yourself?—No, I did not.

Had you no curiosity upon the subject?—No, I had not.

Did you ever hear of any complaint about shoes, under that contract?—No, I do not recollect any.

Or shirts?—I do not recollect any.

Did you hear of any complaint that the shoes were too small to be worn?—I did hear, in some instances they were too small, and when any report was made, others were furnished.

From what schools did this complaint proceed?—I only stated one school, I think that was Cashel.

Do you think it would be perfectly safe and prudent for any master to make complaint of goods furnished by the wife of the secretary of the Incorporated Society?—I cannot say.

Does it occur to you to be a good principle for the supply of those articles.—I cannot say.

Did you ever hear the secretary complain that the local committee had sent up an unfavourable report of the clothing?—I do not recollect.

Did you ever hear him make any statement to any master of a school, upon the subject of such a complaint?—I did not hear any such.

Do you know whether the committee of fifteen were aware that Tyrrell and Co. meant Mrs. Adamson?—I do not know that they were.

Do you mean that Mrs. Adamson was one of the Co. or the sole person?—I do not know whether she was the sole person.

Did you ever hear whether it meant anybody else?—Yes, and Mrs. Tyrrell.

Do you not believe that Mrs. Tyrrell was a mere name?—Yes, I am inclined to think so.

Co. did not include any of your family?—No; I had never any thing to do with any of the contracts.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Stuart,
13 Jan. 1825.

In what way did you hear that Tyrrell meant Mrs. Adamson; when did you hear of that?—At the period of the application being made to the committee.

Was it pretty well known in the house?—Yes.

By others, as well as you?—Yes.

Was it known to the committee of fifteen?—I do not know.

Was it known to any of them?—I do not know.

Were they the only persons in the house that did not know it?—I should think they were the only persons that did not know it.

Was the offer ever made under a different name?—Yes; the proposal was not made in Mrs. Adamson's name.

Was it ever made in any other name than Tyrrell?—I do not recollect.

Was it ever made in Mrs. Adamson's name?—I think not.

Do you think it was an object with Mr. Adamson to conceal it; or did Mr. Adamson wish the committee of fifteen to know it?—I should suppose they wished to conceal it from the committee.

Perhaps you talked to Mr. Adamson about it?—Yes.

He did not conceal it from you?—No.

Did he conceal it from the committee of fifteen?—That I cannot say.

Did he speak of it as a thing that the committee of fifteen were to know?—He did not.

Did he speak of it as a thing that was to be concealed from them?—Not to me; he never desired me to keep it secret.

Did he ever desire you to tell them?—No.

You stated you laid before the committee of fifteen, the amount of money to be advanced to the masters of charter schools, and that you stated the amount due to the masters, and the amount in requisition; have you ever known a less sum issued than what you represented ought to be?—I do not recollect.

Do you recollect Mr. Adamson pointing out any errors in your statement?—No, I do not.

Appendix, N° 121.

Further Examination of Mr. Thomas Stuart, Saturday, 22d January 1825.

22 Jan. 1825.

Mr. Stuart stated—When I got home on the last day of my examination, on speaking to Mrs. Stuart with regard to Mr. Hines's business, as to the loan I had from him, I found that the evidence given by me on a former day was not correct.

State what the facts were?—There were two questions I should wish to read from that evidence.

You may now add any thing you please, in the way of explanation; it is quite unnecessary to inspect the former evidence.—Could there be no part of the former evidence expunged; I find I was mistaken.

We will judge of that afterwards; state what you have to offer?—One question was put to me, whether I had borrowed money to the amount of 50*l.* from any other master. I said no, at the moment; and immediately I was asked, Did you not borrow from Mr. Hines £.60; I was quite unaware that those questions were taken down; it is on the face of it wrong, although I actually answered the question no; it was because I did not recollect it at the instant, till it was brought to my memory; it appears on the face of my evidence as if my testimony was given falsely.

You will offer such explanation as you please, in addition to that.—I called the next day on Mr. Pauncefote, the secretary; the commissioners did not meet that day, nor I believe for two or three days afterwards; the circumstance of the mistake made me very uneasy, particularly as it escaped my recollection, whether I had borrowed money from Mr. Hines or any body else, save those whom I mentioned.

Is the statement which was then made correct?—No, it is not; I stated that the balance between one hundred guineas and £.60 borrowed by me from Mr. Hines, was paid to Mrs. Stuart as a fee with his daughter. I find, on conversing with Mrs. Stuart, that that was not the fact, as he, Mr. Hines, had paid the whole sum of the fee, and that my bill for the £.60 in his hands, was handed to his son-in-law, Mr. Clark, the master of Kevin-street school, who is married to the daughter of Mr. Hines.

What became of the bill?—Mr. Clark got another bill in its place when it became due, and which bill remains in his hands.

You are the debtor of Mr. Clark, as well as the other person?—I am not the debtor of the other person, I am the debtor of Mr. Clark; it was on my memory that I was not a debtor to Mr. Hines; and that induced me to make the answer I did.

Have you stated in your former evidence that you are indebted to Mr. Clark?—No.

Ought you not, in your own view, to have stated you were indebted to the one or the other?—Yes, but I did not recollect the circumstances of the case.

Have you, upon your further recollection, recollected any other debt you have ever owed to any master of any charter school?—Yes.

To whom?—The late master of Clontarf school.

What was his name?—Magrath.

What did you owe him?—I think £.30; it is several years ago since I borrowed it of him.

In what manner did the debt become due?—I borrowed the money of him.

Why did you borrow it?—I was in want of it.

Why

325
 Examination of
 Mr.
 Thomas Stuart,
 22 Jan. 1825.

Why did you apply to him?—I was intimate with his family; Mrs. Stuart and his wife were on terms of intimacy.

What security did you give him?—My bill, I think; I am not sure.

Have you paid any part of it?—Yes, about half, I think.

How long is it since he made that loan to you?—Eight or nine years ago.

Has he ever asked you for the remainder?—He has not lately.

Have you paid him any interest?—No.

To what do you attribute his forbearance in not asking for it?—I do not know, except that he knew I was in distressed circumstances; I intend certainly to pay it when I can do it, whether he applies or not.

Can you account in any manner, for such a number of charter school masters as you have stated, not fewer than seven, who lent you money, without being anxious about interest, or without ever seeming, as appears to us, very solicitous for the payment of the principal?—I cannot answer for that, except from a wish on the part of those persons to serve me, knowing that for some years I have not been in as good circumstances as I formerly was.

Why should the charter schoolmasters wish to serve you?—I cannot tell, except through civility, kindness or friendship.

Do you think it was founded on a belief that you could serve them?—I do not know of any mode in which I could serve them, except in mere civility in the duties of my office.

The question is, whether they thought you could serve them?—I cannot tell what they might have thought.

Have you, since you were here last, recollected any other debt you ever incurred to the master of a charter school, except those you have stated this day and the former day?—I do not recollect any other.

Is there any thing further you wish to state?—Not any thing else.

Appendix, N° 122.

Examination of Mr. Samuel Ricky, on Oath; Thursday, 11th November 1824.

HOW old are you;—Seventy-seven years.

Are you employed by the Incorporated Society?—I am employed by the Incorporated Society; I am under them now, and have been in the situation I am in for upwards of forty years.

Mr. Samuel Ricky,
 11 Nov. 1824.

Do you do your duty now in person or by deputy?—Myself.

What is your duty?—My duty is to see that those boys and girls that we rear in the school, be bound out to Protestant families, and no others; and in the next place, if there is any complaint to be made from the masters or mistresses of the children of both kinds, they generally apply to me, and I settle the business for them.

When any boy or girl is to be provided for, how are you informed of it?—I make inquiries into the families before they are bound.

How many have you on your list now for whom you are required to provide apprenticeships?—That I cannot tell, for some are bound out, some are taken into the country, and some to England, and so forth.

How many are there now in the schools for whom you are to find apprenticeships or services?—That is a question I cannot answer.

Who sends to you from Kevin-street school, when any girl there is to be provided for?—There are certificates (I happen to have one about me) that are prepared for the purpose, for either boy or girl.

[The same was handed in.]

Do the shopkeepers apply to you for persons?—No, they apply for those papers, and get them signed by the minister and churchwardens, and then they are put into my hand to inspect, and see whether it is right or wrong; for you will observe, that this, though the minister has signed them as a proper Protestant family, the wife is a Papist, and has a boy taken out of the marine school, that is now reared a Papist.

Is it any part of your duty to look out for masters and mistresses for the children?—Not the least; it never was my duty; I only have to see that they go into Protestant families, and to strive to protect them in it as long as I can, and that only in the suburbs of Dublin; I have nothing to do with the country.

How do the certificates come into your hand?—Whoever wants to apply for a boy or a girl, is obliged to get one of those certificates signed, and leave it for me; and I have a week allowed me to examine into the business, and to find out whether they are proper Protestants or not. Before my time, they used to send children out, and give 40s.; and people used to take ten perhaps, and get 20l. and then turn them upon the town, and most of them went to friends who were Papists that did get them.

Are you supplied in the first instance with a certificate on the part of the minister of the parish, that the family applying is a Protestant family?—Just so; then it is my duty afterwards to inspect whether it is so.

Do you generally find it is so?—I often find it the contrary.

In those cases, how is the minister of the parish deceived?—I have applied to them frequently to know how they could certify; and the reason they give is, that one man, a man of great property in the parish, engaged them to be so and so, and I found them to be the contrary.

[K k]

How

Examination of
Mr. Samuel Ricky,
11 Nov. 1824.

How do you ascertain whether those people are Protestants or not?—By a thorough inquiry, and the greatest smart wit that can be, to try to find them out.

Have you any other duty than to find out, whether they are Roman Catholics or not?—Not any other.

Is it any part of your duty to find out whether they are proper people, honest people, and so on?—Yes, just the same for that, because proper, honest and Protestant people, is the same thing.

Supposing a person who applies for a girl, states she is a dress-maker, is it any part of your business to ascertain that that statement is true, and that she is a dress-maker?—Yes, certainly, or any other purpose; and I take care to see that she follows her business.

Do they ever bind girls or boys apprentices to persons who live in one room only, and have no house to live in?—They do.

They permit them to go where there is one room only?—Yes, where there is a room and a closet.

Do you remember a girl of the name of Judith Casey, being apprentice in Baggot-street?—No, because I do not in general keep a memorandum of them; there is always an account sent to the office.

Do you recollect any thing of a button-maker?—Yes.

What reason made you think that was a fit place?—The reason was, that her parents were able to get her apprenticed.

Did you think it a fit place for her?—I did; they had a tolerable decent place, and had a good business; I did think it a good business; I did take as much pains as I could to find it out, but a man may be deceived in the best shopkeepers; if there is any fault it is mine.

Do you know how long the girl was there?—Not above a month, I believe.

Do you know where she is?—No, I do not; they came and they applied to me, and I told them if they would make me a return, I would mention it to the board; the man told me I must know it very well, but I cannot recollect every thing.

Do you generally know any thing of the persons previous to their applying?—No; I know nothing in the world about them.

What do you do; how do you set about it?—I go where they live, and take my view, and put my questions; and after I have done that, I make inquiry of some friend I have perhaps in the neighbourhood, or at the church, or elsewhere—somebody who knows any thing about them; and I make my return to the Society.

Is it an easy matter to find out what religion people are of?—Yes; sometimes the reverse; we find it out in general.

Do you consider you are ever deceived?—Yes, indeed I am; I do the best I can.

How many girls and boys do you provide situations for, in the course of a year?—I do not know; from sixty to a hundred sometimes; may be not any for a week.

Out of every hundred certificates you receive, how many do you think prove to be incorrect?—Not a great many now; they are too careful; they know I am very attentive to it.

How many used there to be?—A great number.

One half?—Not quite that.

Are there five or six in every hundred?—I do not think there is.

What account do you take of the children after they have been bound apprentices?—There is a fee with them.

Do you go and see them?—I do go at times; it is not my duty to do it.

Have you any opportunity of knowing what becomes of the children, how they turn out?—Yes, by their attendance at the Society, to get their fee and their bounty.

Have you no opportunity of seeing how they go on in the situations in which they are placed?—Yes, I call sometimes at the different places; it is not in my agreement to do so; I am not required to do it; my duty is to see that they go into Protestant families.

Is it easy to find good situations for the girls?—A good many get into good situations.

Is it easy to find good situations for them?—No, not very easy.

Can you state why it is not easy?—I believe the parents of them or friends belonging to them are too apt to strive to get hold of them and spoil their ideas, and stop them from paying what attention they ought to do, or seeing where they live, and are in proper families.

Are you in the habit of waiting upon the committee of fifteen?—Every Wednesday.

You see them every Wednesday?—Yes; I have one or two of these papers generally.

You make your report in person?—Yes.

Have you made a report of every child that has been apprenticed in and about Dublin?—Yes, I have.

Are your reports in general more or less full than the one you have now shown us?—My report is upon the subject of the Protestants.

Are they more or less full than the one you have shown us?—They are all in the same situation; I do not know what you mean by full; I may be in a wrong conception.

Do you express yourself more at length?—No, every one alike, as far as I can; every one put into my hands I am equally attentive to.

What is your salary?—Thirty pounds a year.

Enumerate to us exactly what business you have performed in the last week?—Oh, nothing; only the certificates that go through my hands; I cannot say anything more.

How many certificates did you give in during the last week?—Only two.

How many inquiries have you made in the last week about the character of the persons applying for apprentices?—None, but the two that applied; whenever they apply, I go immediately and make my inquiries.

Is it your habit to make written reports upon the cases of children, after they have been apprenticed?—No, not at all.

Do you do so?—I have done some odd things of the sort.

When did you pay a visit, for the purpose of inquiring how a child was going on that had been apprenticed?—About a fortnight ago.

Where did you see one before that?—I do not know; it may be two or three weeks, and when a master or mistress comes and tells me the girl is going astray, I go and look into it.

You do not make this visit without such applications being made to you?—None, none.

Who makes those applications?—Either the boy or the girl apprenticed, or the master and mistress; if they complain against the apprentice, I go and endeavour to bring the girl to account.

You do not pay such visit unless there has been a complaint?—No.

What was the subject of the last complaint that induced your visit?—The last complaint was what the girl has mentioned.

State a little of the nature of the last complaint?—I only know that the girl said, that the button-maker had run away, and gone abroad; and I told her, if she would give me a memorandum, that I would make my inquiry of it, and make my report to the board; and she said, no; she would speak to the gentlemen herself.

Did you make an inquiry?—No, I had no return.

Where did you see her?—At the board, 55, Aungier-street.

She was at the board?—Yes.

And she told you, the button-maker had run away?—Yes; and some relation was with her that attended to the management of it, I suppose.

Why did not you go to find out the button-maker?—It was the board day, I could not go.

You have said, that was the last inquiry you made?—Yes, I call it inquiry; I was inquiring the best I could; as to other inquiries I cannot say.

Had you visited that button-maker before she was bound to him?—Yes.

Where did he live?—That I cannot tell; my memory is very short.

Can you recollect whether the name was Smith?—No.

Do you recollect how long she had been there?—She said, two months; my memory is very short. I am almost eighty years of age.

Do you recollect the nature of the complaint?—No.

State the particulars of any inquiry you have made since the 1st of January last?—I made particular inquiries of Mrs. Black, at Rathmines, when she had a boy; he wanted to go away from her.

Who complained upon that occasion?—Mrs. Black.

Where is that complaint?—I believe I have a letter of it at home at my place.

To whom is the complaint made?—It was a complaint to me, begging me to call.

To whom is the complaint addressed?—To me.

To you personally?—Yes.

Was it addressed to you, at the Society's house?—Yes.

Does Mr. Adamson receive those complaints?—No, the complaints are left for me. I have desired the masters and mistresses to leave a note for me, and I always examine into it, which is seldom the case.

To whom are those complaints delivered at the Society's house?—I have a box there, and they are dropped into the box.

Whose duty is it to receive them, and put them into the box?—The messenger or the clerks.

How many of such complaints have been made since the first of January last?—Not more than four or five.

Have you not had more than four or five since the first of January last?—No, not more.

About how many children may have been apprenticed in and about Dublin, since the 1st of January last?—About one hundred.

Did you actually make an inquiry, and report upon every one of those instances?—Certainly.

Did you ascertain, in each of those instances, that the persons applying really carried on the trades they described themselves as carrying on?—Yes, certainly I did.

Was there any instance of an application this year, from a person professing to carry on a trade, which you found in reality they did not carry on?—Yes.

Mention any such instances you can recollect?—No, I cannot recollect.

Do you remember Judith Casey?—No, I do not.

Do you remember binding her to Mrs. Wright?—Yes.

Do you remember her?—Yes.

What was she?—A straw bonnet maker.

Did she ever make a straw bonnet?—Yes, I have seen her make them, and her mother before her.

Do you know what is become of that girl now?—No, I do not; I wanted the girl to continue, and she told me she positively would not.

Who made the complaint to you?—The mistress came and brought her to the board, and I proposed for the girl to go back, and I would call.

What did the mistress complain of?—That she would not do any thing for her.

Did she tell the board she had not made any straw bonnets for two months?—Many of them will tell very good stories; they may say that.

Do you believe it to be true or false?—I believe it to be false.

Examination of
Mr. Samuel Ricky,
11 Nov. 1824.

Have you been at the house since?—Yes, I have.

Was she making straw bonnets then?—Yes.

Why was the girl taken away?—She would not stop.

Did not the girl complain that her mistress would not teach her any trade?—No; the mistress complained that the girl would go out in the evening and stay till eleven or twelve o'clock, standing at the door talking to youths.

Did the board believe her?—I do not know.

Did not the board take her from the place and put her to the asylum in Charlemont-street?—Yes, they did.

Have you any thing to do with Charlemont-street?—Yes, the same thing.

You hunt for Charlemont-street?—Yes all the schools.

Do you do as well for all the girls as Judith Casey?—Yes, the boys at Santry and all.

What was Mrs. Wright's husband?—I believe he is a clerk; I am not certain.

Is he a bookbinder?—I believe he is.

Does he carry on his bookbinding business at home?—No.

At some other person's workshop?—Yes.

You state she was making bonnets when you went to see her?—Yes.

How long ago?—About six weeks, or two months.

How came you to go there?—There was a complaint.

Did not the girl tell you she had never been put to make a bonnet?—She never said a word about it.

Mind what you say; did the girl never say that she had not been taught to make a bonnet?—I am not doubting but she might; I did not hear it.

What reason had the committee of fifteen to send this girl to Charlemont-street, she had nothing to complain of, according to your account?—I cannot tell what her complaint was, I heard no more than I have told you.

Do you attend at the board on board days?—Yes.

Are you always in the room?—No; only when I am called in.

Did Mrs. Wright keep any shop?—I do not know; but she might sell to shops.

Did she keep any shop herself?—No.

She lived in one room?—Yes.

How high up?—Up two pair of stairs.

Where did the girl sleep?—They had a closet.

Did the girl sleep upon a bed?—So I understand.

Did you see it?—No, I did not see her in bed.

Was it in the same room with her master and mistress she slept?—I believe not; I do not know.

Why have you more reason for believing one way than the other, if you do not know any thing at all about it; did you report to the committee what sort of a bed the girl had?—I reported to the committee that I thought it a very proper place for the girl, and I think so to this moment.

After you had made your report, did any body else go to see this room?—Not that I know of.

Do you not know that Mr. Adamson went?—I do not doubt it.

Does he always go after you?—No.

Did you hear he had been sent to see this room?—I do not recollect.

Did the girl make any complaint of her mistress to you?—The girl and the mistress came together, and I listened to both their complaints, and I thought in my mind the girl had very little to complain of.

What did she complain of?—That she did not like her, and would not live with her; she had not strictly any want of any thing.

Did she tell you her mistress was not employed in straw-platting?—No, she said no such thing.

Had the mistress applied to you to get her an apprentice from the charter school?—She brought one of those papers; and upon the inspection of the business, I thought her a very proper person.

Had she applied to you before she went to the board?—No.

You had known her some time?—I knew her before, and her mother, I did not know her husband.

Do people ever apply to you to get them apprentices?—Yes, they do, but I am always careful they should not go to anybody but proper people; it is always my wish and desire to do it.

Do you ever get any thing from people for getting them apprentices?—No, never was a black in my nail for any thing I got, nor would I take it if they offered it me; if they offered it I would not take it, I should think it a very great crime.

Do parents take children away after they are apprenticed?—They do; they decoy them away.

Has this happened frequently?—Very often.

Are they Roman Catholic parents that do this?—Yes, generally.

Do Protestant parents ever do it?—Very rarely; I never met but with one man that did it, in the course of my forty years.

Do you find Roman Catholic parents tampering with the children on the subject of religion?—I have often found it out to be so, I did not hear it; they wish to get back the children, children, so that people are loth to take them on that account under their roofs, they have so much trouble.

Do the children, after they are so decoyed, relapse into the church of Rome?—Always.

What inquiries do you make, prior to reporting to the board?—All I wish to know is, is this person, or not, a proper Protestant; do they follow such a business as they propose to do.

Do you go to their dwellings?—I always do.

Do you see whether the place be a decent place or not?—I do; I frequently see whether they have a proper bed for the apprentice to lie in.

In the case of Judith Casey, did you make any inquiry as to the bed?—I always do; I suppose it was the case.

Have you any recollection upon the subject?—I must recollect it; such a thing I must have seen, or I would not let the girl go to them; but some of them show clothes and such things, for them, but they do not belong to them; they may deceive me in that manner.

Do you make your reports to the board in person, or in writing?—In writing.

Are they preserved?—No; the children are bound out, and the reports are left in the office; the report is at the end of every certificate, in the same way as the one that I produced.

Has that child been bound out?—No.

Why was not that report given to the board yesterday?—It was, and they wrote "rejected," on it.

Then it becomes your property?—No; I keep it to see that they do not apply again.

How came you to have this; why was not it left with Mr. Adamson?—Those are put into my hands when rejected, that I may give an answer to such people as apply for it.

How did you know she was a Roman Catholic?—By inquiry; for the parent told me he got his child baptised in St. Peter's, and in short his wife went to church, and all that; and I turned about and saw one of the Catholic prayer books, and I took it up, and I says, "This is a good Protestant prayer book for you to read;" then I thought it was full time for me to look into the business, and I went and made a further inquiry.

And the fact came out?—Yes; and they took a boy out of the marine school, and the woman takes him to the chapel ever since.

You did not inquire of the clergyman of the parish?—No, I did not; because I often found that the clergymen signed these things, and I have been obliged to go and reprove them.

You have gone and reproved the clergyman of the parish?—I go and speak to him, you may not call it reproving of the people being Papists, and he told me then, that one of his parishioners came first and begged of him to sign it; that every thing was fair and right, and he did not know any thing to the contrary.

Do you think that the clergymen consider it a mere matter of form?—Yes, just so.

Did you speak to Mr. Lewis about this certificate?—No, I did not; I have frequently found it was of no use to complain to any of them about it.

Did you ever know a member of the committee of fifteen sign a paper of that nature, where the person was not a Protestant?—Yes, but they were mistaken in the same way; they were imposed upon by the parishioners.

The fact is, they took their representations only, and made no inquiry themselves?—Yes, just so.

You did not yourself pay any regard to their certificates?—Oh, I cannot; it is my duty to look into what they have certified.—You do not rely upon it?—No, not the least; I should say I often found them wrong.

Have you any thing else but the 30*l.*?—No.

Do you follow any business?—No, not now; I did formerly, I am not able now, I am seventy-seven years of age.

What business did you follow?—A shoemaker.

When did you cease being in trade?—I am out of it now, these fourteen years; I live up at Rathmines, I have a house there, a house for lodgers; and between that and what I get, it keeps me.

Appendix, N° 123.

Examinations taken at the Asylum in Charlemont-street, Monday, 8th November 1824.

Mrs. Hannah Vickers called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

HOW long have you been at the head of this establishment?—I think nearly six years, over the boys and girls.

When you first came here, how many boys were placed in the establishment?—Really I think we had twenty-eight.

How many girls had you at the same time?—We had no girls when we had the boys.

How long did the boys continue?—Between three and four years.

Were the boys all gone before the girls came?—No, I believe we had three or four, there were some large boys, they did not draft away; I think three to the best of my knowledge; and they went to Stradbally, I believe.

Examinations
 at the Asylum
 Charlemont-street,
 8 Nov. 1824.

Mrs
Hannah Vickers.

Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Mrs.
Hannah Vickers.

Can you recollect in what year it was you admitted the young women?—It is about two years, I think, since we had the first.

What instructions had you from the Incorporated Society, or the committee of fifteen, as to the management of this establishment?—The Archdeacon and all the members sent the girls up here, and I was to provide situations for them as fast as possible; that was all the instructions I got, and to keep them at constant employment.

Were you told what you were to employ them upon?—The work of the house and plain work.

How are they provided with clothing?—I provide them when they want it; when they do not want it I do not give it them; sometimes they come in very badly off, and no gentleman will take a girl without clothing; we do not give them the school clothing; the first thing a lady asks is, has she good clothing, if she has not they will not take them; there is no one but respectable people come here.

What wages do they generally get?—The lowest we send them out at is 3*l.* and then they go up to 7*l.* and seven guineas; that is excellent wages, and I wonder some of them get it. I very seldom have to take one back, unless they are ill.

Have you often to take them back?—No.

You consider this generally a sort of home for them?—Yes, it is generally considered so; but if a girl is not considered deserving she will not be admitted; we never admit them without the order of the board, and generally those who part with them, will come and tell the reason to the board; they are not admitted without good recommendation.

Do many girls make applications here?—No, I never see them till they are admitted by the board, they never come here at all till then.

Have any of the girls that have ever come here, gone to chapel in the mean time?—No.

They have continued Protestants all the time?—Yes.

Do you ever ask the question?—Yes, indeed I do. I have one or two, I am not sure which, but I have one girl; her father would not keep her because she would not turn Roman Catholic; her father is a butcher; her name is Katherine M^cGrath; he would not keep her at all, and she would not see him, and she applied to the board, and the board took her back.

Were any girls from the Foundling Hospital sent here before they were distributed in the country?—Yes.

In what state were their eyes when they came?—Very bad.

Did they appear to have been labouring under ophthalmia?—Yes, some of their eyes appeared to have had it only a few days; the children told me some of them caught it when they came to town with the change of air; their eyes were the worst I ever saw.

Can you say whether a large proportion of the girls had it?—Yes, most of them had it; my own child died of the measles, which she caught of one of the charter children; and there was something the matter with all the children that were admitted into the charter schools; all the foundling children came here first, and I saw them, and I think among them all there was something the matter with them; I think they had a great trial with them when they got them to the schools.

[It appeared on examining the book of admissions, that from the 4th of July 1822, to the 3d of November 1824, seventy-four girls had been admitted to this asylum, of whom twenty-nine remained on this day. It also appeared that several of the girls had been sent out as servants to three, four, and five different places, and returned again as being unfit from illness, or other causes, not including misconduct, the names of the master and mistress being in every case entered in the book.]

Have most of the girls admitted into this asylum served as apprentices?—They have all been bound, and many of them served their times, or the master has gone away and left them; one was admitted last week; her master and mistress had gone away to England, and left her in the street; she was very badly off, she was bound to a pin-header, and that was a very bad business.

What sort of stuff is it that is bought for the girls gowns; is it linsey-woolsey?—No; it is welbore stuff; they would not take them as servants, if they had that sort of stuff on; the other servants do not like the girls from the charter schools.

How do you account for that; why is that?—Because they have no wages.

Do you know who it is that answers the applications made for admissions, or who decides whether the girls are fit to come?—I think the Archdeacon of Dublin generally sends them; he attends the board more constantly, and Dr. Orpen. I think Dr. Orpen and Mr. Pomeroy, and the Archdeacon.

What is the superintendence of Miss Keating?—She inspects the house and the girls, and sees that they are properly taken care of.

Is there any reference made to her of the applications?—Yes; she generally goes to try to know the reasons of those girls being admitted, and she finds some of them get very bad places, or their masters and mistresses are very poor, and that she tells the board, and the board tries what they can do with them.

Do you think that the girls reared in these charter schools are for the most part healthy?—Indeed, I think they all appear very healthy.

What time do the girls rise in the morning?—Between six and seven, as soon as we can see; it is six in the summer.

What time do they go to bed?—Between eight and nine.

What do you employ them upon?—Plain work and the house work.

What

371
Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Mrs.
Hannah Vickers.

What description of plain work?—Shirts, quilting, and every thing in that way, that we can get to do.

Do they work for their own benefit?—No, I have the benefit of it; indeed I think, that is the only profit I have from the work. I do not think I could make any thing by it, unless for that; the allowance of ten-pence a day is very trifling. The expence of house, and coals and candles is very great.

Is there any profit upon the clothing?—No, never; I never made sixpence upon the clothing.

Do you get work enough?—Yes, indeed; we improve the girls very much; we have girls here that could not mend their stockings, and now they can make a shirt.

Do you mean you have had girls that have gone through a charter school, and could not mend their own stockings?—Yes.

Do you speak seriously?—Yes; many of the factory girls cannot hem a handkerchief; but I do not say it was the fault of the girls; they went so young to the factories, they could not even wash a room; but they are very good girls and willing to take instruction.

Can they read and write?—They all can read, and some can write pretty well; but they all go out here for servants, and they do not want it; they have prayers night and morning, and they read their Bible and Prayer-book.

How many Bibles have you in the house?—All the girls have their own Bibles—unless they have lost them in their lodgings where they have been, they have them.

When you take a girl to a situation, do you take any thing in the nature of a fee?—No, nothing of the kind; I never received any thing of the kind.

Frances Coyle, called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

HOW old are you now?—The mistress of the school told the master I was bound out to, I was seventeen and a half.

How long ago is that?—About eight months.

What charter school were you reared in?—Kevin-street.

How many years were you there?—I do not remember; I was but a small child then.

When did you leave Kevin-street?—On St. Patrick's day, I was drafted by the board.

From where?—I was put into the charter school at Ballycastle, and then drafted up to Kevin-street again.

How long were you at Ballycastle?—I do not remember; I think about six years.

Where were you born, do you know?—I think my mother lived on Ormond Quay; she was a lady's maid.

Your father you never heard of?—No; he was dead before I was put to school, and my mother is dead now.

You cannot remember much of either of them?—No, I do not recollect my father; I do not think I ever saw him.

Have you any brother or sister?—I have a brother in Stradbally.

Of the same name as you?—Yes; Henry Coyle.

When were you bound apprentice?—Last St. Patrick's day; the last Wednesday I was at the board, and a fortnight ago last Wednesday, my mistress went to England, and left me in the street, and then a gentleman took me and kept me till the Wednesday; I had no place to go to.

Were you bound from Kevin-street?—Yes, to a button-maker.

To learn the trade of button-making?—Yes, to learn the art and mystery of making buttons, and the trade got very bad; she was not able to support herself and her children, and she went to England; the trade was better there.

And did not take you with her?—No; I did not know she was going till the day before she went.

What was the name of your mistress?—Smith.

Were they Protestants?—Methodists.

What money did they receive with you, do you know?—They never got any money; it was not until March they were to get the money.

What did they teach you?—I did not learn the trade through that.

Did you work as a servant?—I used to do the work of all the house; besides learning the trade, I used to do all the washing, and clean the house.

What gentleman was it took you?—The employer of my mistress.

What is his name?—Mr. Park, down in Bishop-street.

You would have been quite desolate, if it had not been for him?—Yes,

Did you go to him?—I was going to the board, and he saw me, and I told him I had no place to go to, and he took me in and kept me till the Wednesday.

You had no money?—No.

Have you received any clothing since you have been here?—No; I have just got a gown to make.

Can you work at your needle pretty well?—Yes.

Can you read and write?—I was just learning to write a little bit, when I came from the school; I could read. There was a new governess come over the school a little before I came off, and she gave me a copy when she came; before that I did not learn.

How long had you been in Kevin-street school?—Seven years; I was a child when I came there.

Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Frances Coyle.

How long were you at Ballycastle?—I do not know.
You came last from Kevin-street?—Yes.
And you never learnt to write till the last little bit, at the beginning of this year, before March?—No.
Did you learn to work much?—Yes, I used always to be at slavish work.
Household work?—Yes.
And knitting too?—Yes.
Had you any part of the profits?—No.
Where were you best treated?—Kevin-street. It is better now than they were a while ago; there is a new mistress, and she treats them a good deal better than the other did.
In what way were the girls punished, if they did wrong at Kevin-street, before the present mistress came?—She used to beat them very severely.
With what?—A cane.
Where?—In the hand.
The girls are never stript to be punished?—Once they did. The Provost ordered one of the girls to be beaten, to get a horse-whip; she was a very bad girl, and she was stript and beat. She was to be sent to the Penitentiary.
That was as an example to the whole school?—Yes.
What was her name?—Ellen Costello.
Do you know what became of her?—She was got a very good girl, and Mr. Adamson got her out of it again, and she got a place.
Were the girls so beaten as to be materially hurt by it?—Yes; they are not beat now, for whatever misconduct they do, is put on a bit of paper, and put upon them.
Describe this sort of beating; you say they were struck with a cane upon the hand; were they struck repeatedly?—Yes, very severely; and on the shoulders.
How many blows have you ever seen inflicted upon a girl at once?—Six, when they have been beaten on the hand; they could not get more than six on each hand.
Have you ever seen a girl wounded by beating?—I have seen a girl that her back was black from the beating.
Were the girls properly supplied with food?—Yes.
Were they so at Ballycastle as well as at Kevin-street?—Yes.
Were the girls properly supplied with clothes?—Yes.
Had you the clothes supplied to you, according to the regulations of the school?—Yes.
Had you bonnets?—Yes, and a cloak.
How many pair of shoes and stockings in a year?—In Ballycastle we had three pair of stockings and three pair of shoes, and a mended pair.
And at Kevin-street?—The same, and three chemises.
Have you practised reading much since you left school?—Not very much.
Just read that chapter?

[The New Testament was handed to the witness, and she read part of a chapter.]

You get a good suit of clothes when you go out as an apprentice?—Yes.
Have you most of those clothes?—I have only got this gown I have on.
Your master and mistress were bound to clothe you?—Yes, but I never got clothes of them.
What have you got for dinner to day?—Bread and broth.
What is the broth made of?—Of sheep's heads.
You are cook to day?—Yes.
How many sheep's heads have you got to-day?—Half a dozen.
When was it put on?—To-day.
What do you put in besides?—Meal.
A good allowance?—Yes.
Any vegetables?—They are not in yet.
Are they to go in?—I have never seen any broth made but in this house.
Have you got any vegetables ready to put in?—No.
Then there will be none?—I do not know.

her
Frances × Coyle,
mark.

Judith Casey called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

Judith Casey.

IN what school were you brought up?—In Baggot-street.
When did you leave Baggot-street?—About ten months ago.
To whom were you bound apprentice?—Mrs. Wright.
Why did you leave?—She was not able to keep me; she took me for a bonnet-maker, and she never put me to the business; she kept only one room, and they would not let me stay with her; a gentleman went to see the room.
How long were you there?—Ten months, and she never put a needle in my hand.
Who recommended you to be apprenticed to her?—The governess over Baggot-street.
Was any examination made into the premises the woman inhabited before you were bound?—No.
Was any examination made to ascertain whether she was a respectable person before you went?—No, not at all, she was not able to keep a girl at any rate.
How did she get her own livelihood?—By her husband, he was a bookbinder, and he earned £.1. 15s. a week.

Did

373
Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Judith Casey.

Did that maintain them both?—Yes.

Did she work at all?—Yes, in summer, but in winter she could get very little; she kept no shop, and it would be very hard to get any thing to do.

She and her husband and you, were in one room?—Yes.

What did they employ you in?—In cleaning up the room, and taking care of the child.

Were you well fed?—I was.

Did she give you any clothing?—No.

Any money?—No.

Had you a decent bed?—No.

How did you manage for that?—When I went first, she had no bed at all for me, then afterwards she got a sofa, and I used to lie on the sofa.

In your clothes?—With no sheet, with only a blanket.

Was it in the same room with them?—They slept in a closet, and I slept in the room; Mr. Adamson went to see it.

Did you make any application to be removed from that place?—I did.

Whom did you apply to?—I applied to Mr. Adamson and Miss Keating.

Did you know her before you went there?—Yes, I knew her in Kevin-street; I was drafted from Baggot-street to Kevin-street; she knew me very well; I always used to be very sickly in the infirmary.

Did you seek out Miss Keating?—Yes.

You went to her?—Yes, Mr. Adamson sent me to her.

Did you complain to him?—I did.

Did you complain in writing, or go to him?—I went to him at the board, and to the Archdeacon.

And Mr. Adamson went to look at the place?—Yes, he said it was no fit place for me to go to, and he told me to bring my indentures, and not to bring the mistress with me, and then the board sent me here.

What work do you do here?—Shirts, or any thing that is given me to do.

Do you take your turn in the kitchen, and so on?—Yes; and in the dormitories, the same as the other girls.

How long were you at Kevin-street?—About a year.

Where were you before you went there?—In the country, at Charleville.

How long were you there?—About four years.

Where were you before that?—With my mother.

You went from your mother to Charleville?—Yes.

Where did your mother live?—In the next town.

Is your mother living or dead?—Living.

Is she a Roman Catholic?—I believe she is; I was too young to know when I left her.

Does she make any inquiries after you?—No.

Or you after her?—I wrote to her and got no answer; she used to come to see me before I was drafted so far.

Is your father living?—No; dead.

Have you any brother or sister?—Yes.

Can you write?—Yes, a little.

Can you write well?—No.

Can you write small hand?—I was learning to write small hand.

[A book was handed to the witness, and she was requested to write in it.]

How old are you?—Fifteen and ten months,

Catherine Carthy called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

HOW old are you?—I do not know.

Do you know when you went into a charter school?—No.

What charter school were you first admitted into?—Charlemont-street.

How long did you stay there?—I do not know; I was very small; I do not know how long; I recollect then that I went into Ballycastle.

How long did you stay there?—Five or six years.

Do you know where your parents live?—No; I have no one alive belonging to me but a sister.

Where is she?—In Duncannon school she was.

Where is she now?—Out, earning for herself.

Where were you bound apprentice from Ballycastle?—To Mr. Wilson's factory.

Were many girls bound with you?—Yes, fifteen.

How long is it since you were bound?—Eight years; I went very small, and served seven years there.

How long have you been here?—A year and three months.

You suppose yourself to be near 20 years old?—No, I do not think I am that.

Are you not about nineteen?—I suppose I am.

How were you treated at Ballycastle?—I got very good usage.

Did many girls elope from Ballycastle?—Not one eloped while I was there, except one that her mother took away.

Had you been taught to read and write before you left Ballycastle?—Not very well.

Can you write now?—Very indifferently; not more than my name.

[L1]

Can

Catherine Carthy.

Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Catherine Carthy.

Can you read?—I am a very middling reader.

[The witness read part of a chapter.]

Have you any books?—Yes.

What?—The Bible and the Lecture, and a Prayer-book.

Were those given to you when you left the school?—Yes.

And you have kept them ever since?—Yes.

What were you taught at the factory?—Nothing but the manufactory work, weaving, spinning and hackling.

Is that knowledge of any use to you now?—No, not in the least; I did not know how to make my own cap.

Have you been taught needle-work since?—I work a little now.

Do you improve?—Yes.

You have been working chiefly since you have been here?—Yes.

Were you well taken care of at the factory; were you well fed and clothed?—No.

Were you hardly used?—Yes.

How were you fed; what did you live upon?—Stirabout for breakfast, potatoes and broth for dinner, and stirabout for supper.

Every day?—Yes.

No meat?—No.

Were there many girls in the place?—One hundred and thirty.

Were they all apprentices?—Yes.

How many of those were charter school girls?—About 50 of them.

Were many of them from the Foundling Hospital?—I do not know.

Does the work go on now?—There are no charter school girls in it now; but there are from the Foundling, and girls from the Hibernian schools.

Where is it?—In the county Donegal.

What is the name of the place?—Buncrana.

Why did you leave?—I served my time out, and did not wish to stay there.

Did you get a premium for serving your apprenticeship well?—Yes.

How much was it?—Three guineas.

What happened to you then?—I paid my passage up to Dublin, and gave my money into Mrs. Vickers's care, and she bought what she thought I wanted.

How much had you left?—Two pounds.

Where were you paid the money?—There, at the factory.

How happened it that you came here?—I did not know of this institution till I went to the board.

Is it the custom for girls to go there after their apprenticeship is out?—Yes, if they have nobody alive belonging to them.

The local committee sent you there?—Yes.

How far is Ballycastle from Buncrana?—About sixty miles.

Who paid you your money?—Mr. Wilson.

Did you all come up together from this place to the Society?—Yes; two of them died.

On the road?—No, in the factory.

Were they over-worked?—It was a decline.

How many hours were you worked in the factory in a day?—Sometimes we began at four in the morning, and sometimes five, and worked till twelve or one at night, in winter; and till nine, in summer.

Did you only sleep from twelve to four in the morning?—Yes; we used to sit up all night in the winter.

And you went to bed in the morning?—Yes, till breakfast, and then we went to work again after breakfast.

Had you two sets of workers?—Yes.

Did you work in the day, when you worked in the night?—I laid in bed till nine o'clock, and then went down to my work again.

Did you all sleep together, how did you do for your beds?—We all slept in one room.

A good many beds?—Yes.

Two in a bed?—Yes.

Were you better off at Ballycastle, or this manufactory?—At Ballycastle.

Better fed and taken care of?—Yes.

How did your master clothe you?—Very well.

How many of you came up?—Seven of us came together.

How did you come?—We paid a carman to bring us up.

What is become of the rest of the girls?—The other girls who had any body belonging to them went to their friends.

You come here, having no friends?—Yes.

Mary Ann Hawkins called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

Mary Ann Hawkins.

HOW old are you?—I do not know my own age; it is in the books.

Were you bound at the same time with Catherine Carthy?—Yes.

Did you go at the same time?—Yes.

Are

375
Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Mary Ann Hawkins.

Are you about the same age?—I think I was about eleven when I was bound to serve my time.

How long did you stay there?—Seven years.

And you have been away a year?—Yes.

Then you are above nineteen?—I do not know.

What school were you first admitted into?—Charlemont-street.

How long did you stay there?—A fortnight.

Were you then sent to Ballycastle?—Yes.

How long did you stay there?—Four years.

What were you taught.—To read.

And to write?—No, I was only going to learn a little to write, before I came out.

Were you well treated at Ballycastle?—Yes, part of the time, when I was under Mr. O'Neil; Mr. Wallace was very severe.

In what way was he severe?—He beat us too severely for trifles, that there would not be any occasion to beat us for.

Did he beat you with a stick?—Yes; a rattan.

Where?—On my hands.

He made you hold out your hands?—Yes.

Where is Mr. Wallace now?—He is over the boys school, at Stradbally.

Had you the regular allowance of clothing there?—Yes.

And of food?—Yes.

Were you taught to work at the needle?—No.

Were any of the girls taught to work?—No, nothing but to spin.

What hours used you to rise at in the morning?—Six in the morning in the summer.

Did you go regularly to church?—Yes.

How many girls were there?—Sixty-four.

Did the catechist attend regularly?—Yes.

Did the usher take much pains with you?—I cannot say for any of them, unless one. I was under three, one of them took great care of us, and paid great attention to our learning.

What was her name?—Harriet Whitcroft.

Do you know where she is now?—She keeps a day school down in the country.

Her own concern?—Yes.

Are there many of the girls who were with you at the school, whom you know any thing of now?—No; there was one set went before us to the linen factory, and I never heard any thing of them.

Where is that factory?—In Donegal, 10 miles beyond Derry.

What did you learn in the factory?—To hackle.

Were you taught any thing by which you could get your livelihood?—No, we could not follow that business at all, for one of the girls who served her time to it, was trying to get into a factory at Celbridge, but it was of no use at all, hackling is of no use to a female.

Susan Davis called in; and having been sworn, was Examined.

WHERE were you bound apprentice?—In Clontarf.

From what school?—Celbridge school.

Were you in any other school?—I was three months in Baggot-street school.

To whom were you bound apprentice?—Mrs. Radcliffe.

What was the cause of your leaving her?—I caught the fever, and was not able for the work, and I went to the hospital.

You were not able to do the work?—No.

And you came here?—Yes.

How long have you been here?—Twelve months, the mistress says I have.

What clothing have you?—I was clothed twice here.

Was that gown furnished you here that you have on now?—Yes, when I came here first of all I was clothed.

And then again this last September?—Yes.

What is the reason you have not been provided with a place?—I was not well when I came here, till lately.

How long were you at Celbridge?—Ten years.

Do you know how old you are?—No.

Do you know any thing of your parents?—No.

Did you never hear of them?—No.

Were you first admitted into the Celbridge school?—Yes.

Have you any brother or sister?—No.

You never heard of any you had?—No.

Did you ever see your father or mother?—I saw my mother two or three times.

Where did she live?—In Drumcondra.

Have you heard of her lately?—No, not these eight years.

Does she bear the same name that you do?—Yes.

Is she a Roman Catholic or Protestant?—A Protestant.

Were you well taught at Celbridge?—Yes.

And well taken care of?—Yes, I do not think there was ever a better master or mistress than Mr. and Mrs. Boyle; I was treated very well the ten years I was there.

Examinations
at the Asylum,
Charlemont-street,
8 Nov. 1824.

Susan Davis.

Were you well taught?—Yes, needle-work and every thing else.
Can you read?—Yes.
Do you take much pleasure in reading?—Yes.
Can you write pretty well?—Yes.
With ease to yourself?—Yes.
And sum a little?—Yes.
Is your mistress very good to you here?—Yes, very good.

Mary M'Gill called in; and Examined.

Mary M'Gill.

YOU have been here longer than any girl in the house?—I have.
Were you bound out an apprentice from school?—Yes.
From what school?—Kevin-street.
What sort of a place did you go to?—My master came and told me my mistress carried on the dress-making business, and when I went to her she was very sick, and the neighbours told me she never did any dress-making.
How long were you in Kevin-street?—I was six weeks there.
What school were you at before that?—Dundalk, Mr. Thackeray's school.
Were you educated there?—Yes, I was.
How many years were you there?—To my recollection, I think twelve and a half.
You were taught to read, write and work?—Yes.
Well?—Yes.
Mrs. Thackeray was always looking after you?—Yes.
Can you write?—I can write, but my hand shivers so; I can read very well, and answer the Scriptures.

her
Mary × M'Gill,
mark.

Appendix, N° 124.

Examination of Mr. William Moffett, on Oath, Monday, 6th December 1824.

Examination of
Mr.
William Moffett,
6 Dec. 1824.

WHERE do you reside?—At Morgan's school, near Castleknock.
Is your brother, the master of Clontarf charter school now?—Yes, one of my brothers.
Were you ever in a charter school yourself?—Yes, at Clontarf I was usher.
Before or after you were in the other school?—Before I was in the parish school.
Had you been in any other charter school before that?—Yes, I was at Castledermot charter school before Clontarf.
How long were you there?—About a year.
Did you commence your career in the charter school at Castledermot?—No, I did not; I commenced at Sligo, in the charter school.
As usher?—Yes.
Under Mr. Hines?—Yes.
How long ago would that be?—I think that I was appointed to Sligo the 14th February 1810.
How long did you stay there?—Some years; I was altogether about seven years in charter schools, as usher.
When you were at Sligo, did the local committee meet frequently?—They met, I believe, at the regular times that they ought to meet.
Quarterly or half-yearly?—Half-yearly sometimes.
Did they often come to the school at other times, one or two of them?—I cannot exactly say to that; they might call on business at the school.
Not for regular formal inspection?—No, but they might do both together, without my knowledge; they might have made many inquiries without my knowledge.
At the time you were at Sligo, as usher, what was Mr. Hines's general conduct to the boys; was it temperate and calm, or hasty and passionate?—What others might count very hasty, perhaps I would not. I think he kept them in fear of himself, while I was there.
Do you think he was too strict with them?—I did not consider he was too strict with them, in some respects.
Do you recollect, whether he had any particular ways of punishing the boys?—Yes, I recollect he punished them very well.
By what means, by the regular mode, the rod?—Yes, with a rod, or rods tied together.
Had he no other means of punishment besides the rod?—I never saw him, to the best of my knowledge, use any other; he might use his hands, if he had not a rod.
Did you see him use a whip?—Yes, I have.
That is not a rod?—He did not generally use it. If a boy offended him when he had a riding whip, he might strike him; he might meet boys in the yard when he was going out or coming in.
Do you mean you never saw him use a whip designedly to flog a boy with it?—I do not think I ever did; some years have elapsed since that.
Did you ever see him take a boy by the throat?—I have frequently seen him take a boy by the clothes, about the throat, and shake him well, but not so as to injure him.
Not so as to throttle him?—No; but I admit that a boy might have been injured in this way, and that the example was bad.

Was

377
Examination of
Mr.
William Moffett,
6 Dec. 1824.

Was the weaving shop in existence at the time you were there?—Yes.

The boys were regularly employed in weaving?—They were.

Do you think the children in the school you now conduct are of a different temper and disposition, and happier, than the children you have seen in charter schools?—I do.

Can you assign any reason for it?—I am the master and usher in this case, and I am always, in fact, with them, except that I have to come into town once a month or so, or oftener, as business may bring me.

Is that the only reason?—There are a number of reasons.

Mention one or two?—I have not land attached to the school; if I had land with the school, the boys would be out working, and I could not be always present with them; and they would be in company with labourers and persons, who would give them bad habits and bad words.

Do you think it a defect in the charter school system, that the masters should have land to occupy?—Yes, if he have too much land; I always thought so.

Do you think it must always, more or less, interfere with his right management of the school?—I think it must certainly, if he has too much land.

Did the masters, at the charter schools you were at, interfere in the management of the children; did they teach in the school?—Not in all the schools; in some they did.

Did Mr. Hines teach in the school?—He did.

How often?—I cannot take it upon me to say how often.

Do you think once a week, upon the average?—Some weeks he might be there two or three times, at other weeks he might just pass through it and give orders, or sit on business, such as writing a letter.

And other weeks he might not pass through it at all?—Yes, he must pass through it, because the school was in the house.

Did he take a part in it?—Yes, he did; in the general management of the school.

Did he, in the reading and writing?—Yes, he did, generally.

What was the practice at Castledermot?—I was only about a year there.

How many times might the master be in the school, during the time you were there?—He generally came into the school.

Every week or every day?—I cannot say every day; but he came in occasionally to the school.

Did he act the part of an efficient man in teaching the school in your time?—I think he acted very well in my time.

Did he ever teach a boy to read?—He heard boys reading in their class like other schoolmasters; I do not say he began to teach a boy to read from his spelling-book.

Did he hear a boy his lessons as a master would do?—He would stand or sit before a class, and hear the class read round.

How long did he remain in the school every day, occupied in teaching?—He did not come in every day; on Sunday morning he generally remained there an hour or so during the time of reading prayers, and also Sunday evening.

Did he occupy much land that did not belong to the school?—In my time I believe he did not.

Who was the catechist during the time you were there?—A Mr. Mawe.

Who were you under at Clontarf?—A Mr. M'Grath.

Was he dismissed afterwards?—He was, after I left the school.

Were you held completely under the masters controul at the different schools you were at?—Yes, in any thing reasonable, any reasonable orders; not to do every thing the master or mistress might desire.

Do you think the children of charter schools generally were in considerable terror of the master?—I think at some schools they were.

Of those three you have been speaking, at which do you consider the master was the most dreaded?—I think they were less afraid of Mr. M'Grath than any other man.

Were they afraid of Mr. Harvey?—They were.

And afraid of Mr. Hines?—They were; that sort of fear that boys are generally in of any schoolmaster.

Not exceeding that, do you think the boys of your school have the same dread of you that the boys of the charter school had of Mr. Hines and Mr. Harvey?—I do not.

Do you attribute that to different treatment on your part?—Boys, in some cases, may be more afraid of an occasional master than the constant one; I believe it is the same in the army. I may be partial to my own mode; you will make allowance for that; but I do not think the boys are as much afraid of me, as they were of those two masters.

Have you turned your mind particularly to the charter school system as opposed to the system of other schools; can you form any opinion of that mode of instruction and bringing up children, compared with any other mode?—I have frequently spoken of it in my own society, among friends of my own.

Mention the opinion you have formed?—I think the system has different effects upon them; some children of the charter schools are good children.

Speaking of it as a general system, what do you think of the system in the charter schools; do you see any objection to the system, or do you think it is one to be approved of?—I have often heard it remarked, and have made the remark myself, that the boys that are appointed ushers from the charter schools are generally severe, and I think it may arise from the severity of treatment they have experienced themselves.

Examination of
Mr.
William Moffett,
6 Dec. 1824.

Do you think, generally speaking, the boys in charter schools were as well taught as they ought to be, for the time and pains bestowed upon them?—I do not.

What do you attribute that to?—There are various causes that I did not think of until this moment; there is a great deal of work to be done about charter schools.

Which you think interferes with the master's attention and the boys time?—Yes, I think it does.

Does any other reason occur to you to give?—The boys I think in charter schools are admitted too much to the company of the lower orders of people, out at farming and weaving, &c.; I think so from my own experience of the school I am at now, which consists of the better class of children.

And not permitted to associate with the labourers?—Yes, and I often thought that the taking of Roman Catholic children into the schools did not suit the system; it often appeared to me so, that it would be better to take only Protestants than to take Roman Catholics; they make them Protestants for a few years, and then let them go back to be Roman Catholics again.

You think that is the fate of the children generally in those schools?—Yes, some of them, those that have parents and relations near Dublin.

Do you think the boys in the schools you have gone through were moral boys, or addicted to any vice; how were they as to telling the truth, for instance?—In the schools I have been at, the boys in general have gone on pretty well.

How were they for telling the truth?—I think the boys of Castledermot were much better behaved than at Sligo.

Do you mean better with respect to truth-telling?—Yes, I think they were, and of a more innocent cast that way than the other boys, in all respects.

Can you assign any reason for it?—Yes, I can; the boys of Sligo were more given up to weaving in the weaving shop; they had nothing of that at Castledermot; they were more immediately under my controul than the boys were at Sligo, on account of being taken away to the weaving, and under very improper hands.

Do you mean they were withdrawn so much more from school?—No, I do not say that; the weaving prevented the school; I think the boys at Sligo were as well taught as other children.

Then why should it have that effect?—They generally rose early in the morning, and in other schools there was only an usher to attend the class, and at Sligo, an hour in the school did more than two hours elsewhere; some of them that attended in the school were very competent to do it, and were made to do it, but the master and the boys were altogether in the school at Sligo; the hours in Sligo school were more actively employed than in other schools.

Did they get up earlier?—They did.

Did they get up before the rules required?—I never saw the rule at that time; when I was in Sligo I was not curious enough to see them; I might see the dietary, but not the book of rules.

What time did the boys get up in the morning?—I believe sooner than the rules of the Society required.

Do you remember their getting up as soon as five o'clock in the summer?—Yes, I dare say they might at times, in the hurry of business, or going to bathe in salt water.

You mean to get the weaving done?—The harvest business and spring business, weaving, and so on.

Did they always receive their full allowance of time for play?—No, they did not; I don't mean to say that they never played, but I mean formal play hours.

How can you answer that, if you do not know the rules?—After I left Sligo, I was more acquainted with the rules.

Then you had not read the rules during the time you were at Sligo?—No, except the dietary; indeed I am not sure I did read that, but I think there might be such a thing in the school.

You were there three years?—Yes, about that time.

Did you receive a copy of the rules on your entering into the school, to which you went afterwards?—I did not.

Did you ever receive a copy of the rules in any charter school in which you were?—Never.

Did you ever inquire for a copy of them?—Never.

Were you aware, that certain rules were prescribed by the Incorporated Society, to be observed in all their schools?—I was.

Did it not occur to you to know what those rules were?—It did, but as I was only sent there as an assistant, I did not think it my business to inquire after them.

Do you think it probable, if you had applied to the master for information, he would have refused to give it you?—I think if I had applied to the master, it might have caused anger between the master and me; that the master might think I was prying, in order to injure his establishment; I thought it better not to say any thing about it.

How did you know there might not be a great violation of the rules, if you did not know them?—From seeing the rules afterwards, I knew it.

Of course, that did not occur to you as a reason, at the time you were at Sligo?—I often thought in my own mind, that there could be no great violation of the rules, except as to the school hours; and I thought it as good for me as if I had assisted in more regular hours.

Did you consider what effect it might have as to the children?—I did.

Then

319
Examination of
Mr.
William Moffett,
6 Dec. 1824.

Then you considered the rules with respect to the management of the children in the school that were appointed by the Society, might not be so good as those that the master had appointed?—I considered that the master might make several very useful amendments in the rules; but the Society's rules are only general.

Do you conceive it is in the option of the master to observe or not observe the rules of the Society?—I think he may vary them very much, without doing much harm to the boys, or the Society.

Do you consider he is to judge of that?—I consider he is the more immediate judge; the Society may appoint a play hour every day, and it might for a week be wet that day, and he might keep them to work during that hour.

And not to give them any time for play on other days?—Yes, to give it them on other days; that is what I do myself.

Were there many elopements from Sligo, or Castledermot, in your time?—There were some attempts to elope, and I believe one successful one from Sligo; I do not recollect any from Castledermot.

Do you know whether those boys who were apprenticed out from Sligo, generally turned out well?—Indeed, I fear that they have not.

Having had seven years experience in charter schools, do you know whether, generally speaking, the boys who have been bound have turned out well, or not?—Some have, and some have not.

In the majority of cases, do you generally reckon the charter school boys to turn out well when they have been apprenticed, or not?—I suspect the majority turn out well; for I consider a person, though poor, if honest, turns out well; but I am not acquainted with all of them.

* * * * *

Do you know whether Mr. Stuart was indebted to Mr. Hines of Sligo, in any sum of money?—Yes, I do; Mr. Hines told me he was.

To what amount?—I think he said to the amount of 150*l.*; and that if he did not pay him he would let Mr. Barclay slip (or some such word) at him.

Who was Mr. Barclay?—An attorney.

Was Mr. Stuart in confinement for debt, at any time?—He was; I heard so.

After this conversation with Mr. Hines?—Yes, after, I believe.

Do you know how the debt to Mr. Hines arose?—I dare say it might be for linen, or other property, Mr. Hines being in the linen way.

How long ago is it?—I dare say seven years; he spoke to me when I was walking through the streets of Dublin with him. I was not with him as usher at the time.

Do you remember a daughter of Mr. Hines being bound apprentice to Mrs. Stuart?—That was after I left Sligo.

Does Mrs. Stuart keep a boarding school?—I understand so.

Has Miss Hines married since?—Yes, to the master of Dundalk school; Mr. Hines mentioned at the time to me, that Mr. Adamson and Mr. Stuart treated him ill.

Did he say in what respect?—He said that Mr. Adamson endeavoured to have him dismissed, and that Mr. Stuart made the most of the matter; that he made Mr. Hines believe he was in great danger when he was not; but he seemed to have a good deal of animosity to Mr. Adamson at the time.

Did he state the ground upon which his chance of dismissal rested?—He told me, and I knew of an occurrence there between Mr. Hines and the usher after me; the usher wrote to the Society several complaints of Mr. Hines; he said Mr. Adamson was too forward to hear these complaints, and gave the usher more than fair play, and was too willing to assemble boards, and to have it investigated; that they were both willing he should lose the place.

And on that account he was determined to have his money from Mr. Stuart?—Yes.

Was this about seven years ago?—Yes, it was; Mr. Hines, and an usher of the name of Finucane, quarrelled, and that Mr. Adamson was willing to hear the usher's complaint, and he spoke as if he had no confidence whatever in Mr. Adamson, and thought that Mr. Stuart treated him ill.

Do you know the grounds of the quarrel between Finucane and Hines, from Mr. Hines himself?—Yes; he told me, generally, that Mr. Finucane endeavoured to get him out of the school.

Do you know the grounds?—No; he did not mention the grounds to me himself.

Did you hear from other quarters what they were?—I did; they were partly, I believe, by anonymous letters; something to the board he mentioned; I think Mr. Hines's son told me of a boy that died there; that he said Mr. Hines killed this boy. This was one of the charges made against him; but Mr. Hines himself did not tell me this.

Do you recollect any other charge?—No.

But he said there had been boards held and discussions upon his conduct?—Yes, and meetings of the local committee held.

Did you ever know that Mr. Payne, who was clerk to Mr. Adamson, was in confinement for debt?—I did.

Do you know whether he was in debt to any charter school masters?—I think he was.

What makes you think so?—I believe that gentlemen in such offices as that are commonly intimate; I do not know their affairs; it is those who are practical in them that know it.

Have you any reason to believe that he was?—Yes, I have from my own opinion, that he might be indebted to some of them.

Examination of
Mr.
William Moffett,
6 Dec. 1824.

What reason have you to form that opinion?—I know the masters that are not intimate with them, are not so well treated as others.

Do you mean by intimate, the masters that do not lend them money, are not so well treated?—Yes, I do.

On what occasion have you had reason to know that any master has lent money to any of the officers of the Society?—That occasion of Mr. Hines himself.

Any other?—It was a thing I generally understood in my own mind, and I concluded it to be the case; I did not wish to know it.

Do you mean, you concluded it in your own mind, without having any specific reason for doing so?—I think they did; it was through Mrs. M'Grath I heard it; she said she stood for a child of Mrs. Stuart's, and gave the child a present, a sum of money and other trifling things, of that kind, I have heard of, and I concluded from that, that others might take place.

What other trifling things have you heard of?—Not thinking of the subject before I came here, I cannot recollect them; but I have heard of some things of that nature.

Do you mean things of the nature of loans or presents made by the masters or mistresses of charter schools to the officers of the Incorporated Society?—Yes.

Can you recollect any particular master except those you have mentioned, by whom money was either lent or given?—I do not know any of the masters; but I believe it was; and I have generally understood, that the masters who were not able to do those things, that they were held out as objects of degradation in the Society's office; that the common civilities of office were not done for them; if there was any thing going forward, any complaint, they would not hear of it from those officers; I have heard of means of that sort.

Do you know of any presents made by anybody to Mr. Adamson?—I heard that Mr. M'Grath made a present of a silver cup for one thing. I believe there were a great many others to Mrs. Adamson, and that as soon as Mr. Adamson heard of it he made it be returned.

All the presents, or only the cup?—Not all of them, but this silver cup, not the trifling things.

Do you know of any thing sent up from Castledermot?—I believe there was money sent to a Mr. Payne; and I believe there might be a sack of oats, sent up by the master there; whether he was paid for it, I cannot say.

* * * * *

Do you think the boys get much impression of religion in the charter school education?—I do think they get much in some of the schools only.

Are they generally impressed with religious ideas?—They do not show it much if they are; some may, and others may not be. They are taught as much of the Scriptures as will please the visitor or catechist; but when they see this only a matter of form, when they are teaching them the Scriptures; I am afraid it has not a good effect when they see any dissimulation in the person teaching them.

Have you observed, whether the boys pay more or less respect to those ushers who have been educated in charter schools?—I think the boys that are educated there, are very severe, and more ignorant of the world, than persons that are educated in the country.

Do you think the boys respect them equally?—This depends on the respect paid to the usher by the master and mistress.

Do you think the charter school boys when in the school, are disposed to feel ashamed of their state, or do they take a pride in it?—I never knew them ashamed of it.

Do you think they are proud of the circumstance of being charter school boys?—Many of them were in bad circumstances before they got in, naked and hungry; I do not think that other boys are.

Do you happen to know whether, when they go out to apprenticeships, it is considered by their masters and fellow servants as a disgrace, that they should have been in a charter school, or that it is considered an honour?—I think the boys deny it when they can, as ignorant fellow servants might reproach them.

What induces them to do so?—They think it rather a reproach that they have been there.

Do they begin to feel that, when they go out of the school, or when they are in it?—I think when they leave the school they feel a pride that they ought not to feel; I mean some of them.

Appendix, N° 125.

Examination of Mr. Thomas Moffett, on Oath, on Thursday, 9th December 1824.

Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

YOU are master of the school at Swords?—Yes.

When were you appointed?—In March 1818, I believe.

What is the number of children?—About 150 boys, and 180 or 190 girls; I can tell the exact number on the list.

Do so?—One hundred and eighty-nine females, and one hundred and fifty-six males.

Do the children of all the different persuasions read the Testament alike?—They do.

What version is used in the school?—The common authorized version; the same as we use in churches.

Has the school been much opposed by the Roman Catholic priests, on account of the Scriptures being read in it?—I do not know that it has; I heard that it was opposed before I went.

381
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

I went there, but I cannot say whether it was or no. I saw a letter from Mr. Cary the priest, some years ago, disapproving of the Testament.

Have you ever heard the children say, their parents had been directed to prevent their attending the school?—No.

Have you ever had any reason to believe, that any attempts had been made to clear the school?—No, I cannot say there have been any attempts; there may have been threats, but I believe no direct attempt to take the children away. The priest held out some threats some time ago.

Do you ever find that the attendance of the school varies from time to time, on account of any interference?—Not on account of any religious interference.

State how much the Testament is read by the higher classes?—The whole.

Do they read all through it?—Yes, all through it; they read one column each boy.

Do they read in class?—Yes.

Verse by verse, or column by column?—Column by column in the higher classes; the reading in the other classes is varied, according as the children are qualified; some read one verse, others three, and others five.

Do you explain it to them?—Not farther than a literal explanation.

By literal, do you mean you explain the grammatical construction and meaning of the word?—Yes.

You do not give scriptural instruction?—No.

You do not interpret the religious meaning of any phrases?—None; I have nothing to do with it. I have received directions from Dr. Elrington not to interpret any.

Do the children learn the catechism?—At twelve, on Saturday, the scholars are dismissed; the Roman Catholics go to their chapel, I am told, to be instructed by their priest, and the Protestant clergyman instructs the Protestant children, either in the school or the church, as he finds it convenient.

Does he attend regularly for that purpose?—In general he does.

Is he paid for it?—No.

Who is it?—Sometimes the vicar and sometimes the curate.

Which attends most frequently?—When there is a regular curate it is his duty to attend, and he attends frequently.

Is there an attendance, either of the rector or curate, on every Saturday?—In general on every Saturday; but he may be absent sometimes. In general, they are catechised every Saturday.

When you say, in general, explain how you mean?—I mean, that any time that the vicar has not a curate, he may be absent himself from the place on that day; he may be in town here; but they are always examined in the church on the Sunday morning following; and he will sometimes request the superintendant to examine them on Saturday in his place.

Have you ever known two weeks go together without the rector or the curate attending?—I cannot say I have, without somebody examining them; either the vicar, curate or superintendant, or myself.

How long does the religious instruction last on the Saturday?—Sometimes two hours.

What is the shortest period it ever lasts?—It cannot be well done in less than an hour.

Is it ever done in less?—I think not; it would be impossible to go through four classes in less time.

Is it confined to their catechetical examination?—No, they examine into the scriptural meaning.

Is that of the passages read in the week?—They are prepared in a chapter of the Testament during the week; on this Saturday, there is a chapter pointed out for the next Saturday.

Is that the chapter read in the way you describe?—No.

What catechisms are taught in the school every Saturday?—Mann's catechism, the Church catechism; the Church catechism broken into short questions, and Crossman's catechism.

Are there four catechisms taught?—Yes.

Are there any more?—No.

Stopford's?—Stopford's was.

Is Stopford's no longer taught in the school?—It is not taught at present; sometimes a class will get through all those catechisms, and when they are considered sufficiently well grounded in it, they teach some other catechism.

Upon the whole, is most time and pains consumed in teaching them the catechism, or in explaining to them the Scriptures?—I really cannot say.

Will you take it upon you to say, as much as two hours a week, upon the average, are given up to the religious instruction of the Protestant children who attend your school, by the vicar or his curate?—Yes, I should think more; if Sunday morning is included, it will be more.

Do you consider, that that extent of attention to religious instruction is found practically sufficient to make the children sufficiently acquainted with the religion of the church of England?—I do not doubt but it would.

Are you usually present at their religious instruction, on Saturday?—In general, I am.

Do the children appear to you to be sufficiently instructed in the truths of religion?—If closely followed up by an active examiner, I would consider it would be sufficient.

[M m]

Are

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

Are there any rival schools to yours?—None.

Are there any schools kept by Roman Catholics?—Yes; there is one kept by a Roman Catholic, but the attendance is very trifling.

Are the children taught gratuitously in that school?—I think not.

Are there any children in Swords that go to no school at all?—No; I believe they go as soon as they can be sent to it.

Do you consider your school as popular, or otherwise, with the inhabitants of Swords?—I think, popular.

Is it so among the Roman Catholic population?—It is.

Is the Roman Catholic clergyman of Swords friendly to it?—I cannot exactly say; he objects to the books.

Does he not forbid the children to go to the school?—He recommends the children to the school; it is requisite he should recommend them.

Does he object to any other book than the Testament?—Yes; he objected to the Dublin spelling book; he told me they were all equally bad.

Did he mention any particular objection to the Dublin spelling book?—No.

Did he object to the Dublin reading book?—I believe he has not seen it.

Have you ever obtained a grant of a lending library from the Kildare Place Society?—Never; we purchased one from them.

Is it made use of in the school?—Yes.

What books does it consist of; are there forty or fifty different books?—Fifty, I think.

When did you make that purchase?—Three months ago.

Are you aware they would have given it you for nothing, if you had asked for it?—Yes.

Why did you choose to purchase?—Because we considered we were able to purchase it; and we considered it would be taking so much money from Government.

Do you find the children fond of reading those books?—They are fond of it.

Do you keep a book in which is entered when a child takes a book?—Yes.

And when it is returned?—Yes.

Are they all in use among the children?—Yes; I am sometimes without one of them.

Which do you find most popular?—They all take a turn; some will ask for one, and some for others.

Are you aware, that in one of them there are considerable extracts from the Old Testament, the History of the Creation?—I barely know the name of the History of the Creation.

Can you say whether that book is popular, or otherwise, among the children?—I cannot say.

Do you consider yourself, that it is improving and beneficial to the children, to have access to a lending library of that kind?—I consider it is.

Do you know whether the Roman Catholic clergyman objects to those books?—I do not know.

Is he aware of the fact of such a lending library being in that school?—I do not know.

Do the children take those books home to their parents?—They do.

Do you find them much abused and injured by the children taking them home?—They must be soiled by taking them to the smoky cabins; and that is made allowance for.

Do you find, that any children who can read fluently are indifferent to those books?—No; the children best qualified to read, are most eager to get them.

Have any applications ever been made from the Roman Catholic priest, to permit the Roman Catholic catechism to be taught in the school?—No.

Have the parents of the children ever expressed a wish they should be so taught?—No.

Have any of the children ever brought the Roman Catholic catechism with them, in order to learn it?—I saw the Roman Catholic catechism in the school once.

Did you object to it?—I did; I told the boy it was not a place for it.

Had you instructions for that purpose?—No particular instructions; but I conceived all catechisms should be excluded from the school.

All alike?—Yes.

Have you any Presbyterian children in the school?—I know of none.

Have you any children who are known to belong to the Methodist connexion?—I do not know; I should think very few, if any.

Where were you educated yourself?—At Killashee near Longford.

Had you ever been master or usher in any school before you were in this?—Never master; I was usher.

Where?—At Castledermot.

In the charter school there?—Yes.

How long were you there?—I believe seven or eight years.

Who was the master during that time?—There were three masters, Mr. Connolly, Mr. M'Grath, and Mr. Harvey.

When did you leave it?—In 1818.

During the time you were usher of that charter school, were you acquainted with the rules and regulations of the school?—I was, at least in the latter part of my time.

Are not a part of the rules hung up in the eating hall; the dietary of the children for instance?—Yes.

Are not the rules read from time to time aloud to the children?—I never heard them.

Is there any direction to that effect among the rules of the charter schools?—I believe not during my time; I do not know what may have been introduced since.

Can

383
 Examination of
 Mr.
 Thomas Moffett,
 9 Dec. 1824.

Can you undertake to say, positively, that they were never read publicly, during the time you were at Castledermot?—I certainly never heard them.

If they had been must you have heard them?—I think I must.

Who was catechist during the time you were at Castledermot?—There were three catechists during that period.

Was the duty of the catechist regularly performed?—I cannot exactly say.

Did the catechist attend regularly?—He in general attended often enough at the school.

What do you call often enough?—As often as required by the rules of the Society.

How often do you believe that to be?—I do not know.

What leads you to say often enough?—I have some impression in my mind it is twice a week.

Do you think he attended as often as that?—I think he did.

When he came, did he catechise the children?—Yes; not always.

Used he to examine them in the meaning of the Scriptures you read?—He used.

And give them instruction?—Yes.

How long did it occupy him?—I cannot exactly say, sometimes more and sometimes less; perhaps an hour or half an hour; sometimes two hours, according as the business was.

Did he more frequently execute the duty, or go away without executing it?—In general there was a report to be made, and I believe the reports were made, and that the catechist did the duties which he stated.

But the report does not necessarily mention more than the fact of his having been there; the question is, whether he did more frequently catechise the children, or go away after having merely visited the place; but without having examined the children?—He often went to the school without examining the children; he often walked through the school.

Which did he more frequently content himself with, that species of visit, or actually go through the labour of examining the children?—I cannot exactly say.

Were you sufficiently acquainted with the children, so as to be able to say whether the instruction received from the catechist was productive of much impression upon their mind?—I believe the best instruction the children receive, is from their master or usher of the place. There may be many instances in which a catechist will exert himself, and in such cases the children improve.

The question applies to the case of Castledermot, whether you think the children did derive much knowledge of the meaning of the Scriptures from the instruction of the catechist?—The catechist that was there during my day, I did not consider well qualified.

You have said that three were there?—Yes.

Were they all unqualified?—No; one out of three.

Was it the last of the three?—Yes.

Did it appear to you that the children were seriously impressed with the importance of religious truths, so as to be likely to have their conduct influenced by them, or did they merely learn by rote?—I really did not see many of them, that their conduct in life was much improved by it.

Which do you conceive, upon the average, are the best instructed in religion—those children or the children at Swords?—I cannot well answer that.

Did Mr. Harvey use to spend much time in instructing them in school?—Latterly he did.

How much?—I cannot say how much; I know I have seen him very often in it during the latter period I was there.

Did you ever know six months together, during which he did not instruct in the school?—No, I do not think I did.

Did you ever know three?—Indeed, I believe not; during Mr. Harvey's time, I was out of the school a considerable time.

What do you mean by out of it?—I was not usher of it.

But he was there while you were there?—Yes; and during the latter part of my time he was more constant in the school than he was before.

What do you mean by constant; was he ever in the school during a week for example?—He did regularly attend every week.

Every day in the week?—A part of every day, an hour before breakfast.

And instruct the children?—Yes.

Have you seen him instruct the children in some part of every day?—I cannot swear to every day, but during the latter part of my time I saw him more regularly in the school.

That is consistent with his being very little in the school during either period—how frequently have you seen him attend in the course of a week?—During that time I speak of, I believe I may say he was in every morning during the week.

For what purpose?—For instructing the children.

And he actually instructed them?—He actually had a class round him.

Do you mean to say he did not throw the burden of the instruction almost entirely upon yourself?—Yes, I believe it was thrown in general upon myself.

Can you recollect whether there was ever a month together during which you had no assistance from Mr. Harvey in instructing the children?—I dare say there was.

Did you consider him a well tempered man?—No, I did not.

Did you consider his wife a well tempered woman?—Not the best.

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

Which did you conceive had the best temper?—I declare I cannot say.

Did you ever know either of them to beat a child unnecessarily?—I knew them to beat the children.

Did you ever observe them beating the children for causes that did not appear to yourself to justify the beating?—There was an instance once; but I was not at home, I was in Carlow at the time; I understood the correction was greater than the crime justified.

State what came to your knowledge about it?—Shortly after that occasion, a Mr. Thackeray visited the school, and the boys made a complaint to him of the ill treatment they suffered; the local committee investigated into it, and I was examined upon the subject; I gave the same evidence that I give now, that I was not at home, but that I understood the punishment was beyond the offence.

Do you recollect what was the offence?—No.

Were the rules as to the dietary observed by Mr. and Mrs. Harvey during your time?—Not strictly.

Were there any remarkable deviations from it?—They might substitute one food for another.

Did they give enough food of one kind or another to the children?—Some children would make use of more food than they received.

Do you conceive, upon a fair average, they gave a sufficient allowance of food to the children?—The children complained they did not get enough.

Were they ever flogged for making such complaint?—I really do not recollect.

Were there many elopements took place during your time?—I believe not, I cannot say positively.

Were the children properly supplied with clothing during the time you were there?—They seemed to me to be very well clad.

Do you know the quantity of clothes that ought to be supplied to them according to the rules of the Society?—I did know at that time.

You have forgotten?—I have, I believe there have been alterations made.

Was the quantity supplied at that time to the children, what it ought to have been according to the then existing rules?—I believe the quantity was always produced on the examination day, but that the savings of one year might be thrown into the next.

Who had the benefit of the savings?—The master, during the time he had the clothing of the children.

About what number of pairs of shoes used to be delivered to the boys each year?—Three were the number of pairs allowed, whether they had the whole number I do not know.

Have you reason to believe they did not wear that number?—Some did not, and some perhaps more.

Was it known to you what clothing was delivered to them during the time you were there, or was it kept secret?—It was partly known to me, but I did not seek to know it.

Did you avoid knowing things you might think would be disagreeable to the master?—I cannot say I particularly avoided it.

Was the interference of the master such as to be extremely irksome to the usher?—Sometimes it was.

Do such ushers exist in a very disagreeable state?—Yes, sometimes, heretofore.

What is it puts the master and the usher on a bad footing?—I cannot say, there are different causes.

Do you feel that the ushers in charter schools, stand in a more disagreeable situation towards the master than in other schools?—In other schools the masters have the appointment of the ushers; in the charter schools it is the reverse.

Does that occasion the disagreeable situation in which they stand as to each other?—I do not know that it does.

Do you think it does?—The master in a private school can dismiss his usher at once.

Does the master in a charter school appear to you to have any inducement to treat the boys under his care less well, than is usually the case with other masters in other schools?—Some of the charter schools are more insulated, and probably less examined into than private schools; for that reason the master may make something by keeping back clothing or in the dietary.

Do you think that was the case at Castledermot?—I cannot say.

Did it ever occur to you, at Castledermot, that the master made considerable profit by his contract for supplying the boys with food?—I cannot say he did, for the supply of food was a thing I had no concern in, and never made any enquiries about.

Were you satisfied he did supply the boys with as much food, as according to the rules of the school they should have had?—At all times I think they were not supplied with as much food as they ought to have had.

Was that one of the grounds of complaint the boys made to Mr. Thackeray?—It was.

You were examined upon that point?—I was.

Was Mr. Thackeray satisfied the boys had not justice done them in that respect?—I believe he was, but I do not know.

Do you recollect what instances there were of undue severity practised upon the children which were proved before Mr. Thackeray at his investigation of the school?—I believe there was only one instance proved before him; the instance that occurred in my absence.

Did you ever know such an infringement upon the rules of the Society in the conduct of the school at Castledermot, as to induce you to complain to the local committee, or the catechist?—No, I believe not; I do not recollect.

If

385
Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

If you ever had seen any important breach of the rules, would you have ventured to speak to the catechist or the local committee?—I would not; I conceived it was the catechist's own duty to see it, and not mine.

Did you conceive it was not any part of your duty to see that the children were properly treated, or that the rules were complied with?—I conceived it was not my duty to see after the master's business; the diet was his business, and I did not conceive it to be my duty to look after it; but I was told afterwards I had a right to complain of it; I was told so by Mr. Green, one of the local committee.

If you had complained, do you think the master would have had it in his power to make your situation very uncomfortable?—I do.

Should you have apprehended his vengeance, if you had complained?—I always considered it would not serve me.

Did you at that time look to a provision in the charter schools?—I did.

Did you wish to become a master?—I did.

Did you think if you complained you should be less likely to obtain an appointment?—I thought quarrelling would not be of service to me.

Had you any reason to suppose if you made a just complaint of any misconduct in the charter school, that it would be unacceptable among those persons who could promote your views in giving you a school?—I had reason to believe, that the evidence I gave before Mr. Thackeray was rather injurious to me.

What reason had you for thinking so?—I understood, through a complaint of the master, Mr. Harvey—there was a brother of mine, master of Stradbally charter school; he wrote to him and complained and told him I was the only person that injured him, and this story was repeated here and there, where the master would have an opportunity of doing it.

Did you leave just afterwards?—I did.

Was it in consequence of that examination you left it?—It was not.

Did you leave it of your own accord?—I had left then; I was disappointed in getting a charter school; after that I was appointed in a temporary manner to Kilkenny charter school; I was in it only one day, and I received a letter I believe from the clerk in the office at 55, Aungier-street, stating that Dr. Elrington wished to know whether I declined my application for Swords school or not; I immediately set out for Dublin, and my friends advised me to accept of Swords, and in a few days afterwards I was appointed at the Chancellor's, and left Kilkenny.

Is the appointment at Swords less advantageous than the appointment to a charter school?—Yes, but I thought it more certain, considering the manner in which I was appointed to Kilkenny.

Was there any other ground of complaint made at the time by the boys—for instance, that they were deprived of the hours allotted for play?—There was such a complaint.

Do you remember whether it was substantiated?—I believe it was.

What work were the boys employed on at Castledermot?—Farming.

Did the master occupy land not belonging to the Society?—About the time I left it, he was about taking some ground.

Were the boys employed in the cultivation of land in a manner, and to an extent, not conformable to the rules of the Society?—They were; the hours were infringed upon.

Was that fact ever made known to the local committee, or the catechist?—I believe not, till that period.

Had the master any apprentices at the time you were there?—He had.

Were they charter school apprentices?—They were, many of them.

Was his treatment of those apprentices such as to please Mr. Thackeray?—I believe they complained of his treatment.

Was he reprimanded by the committee of fifteen for his conduct towards those apprentices?—I do not know that; I never saw it.

Do you remember, whether the children were obliged to wash their own stockings or not?—I believe they assisted.

Did they not do it entirely?—I do not exactly know.

Was there any complaint made of the quality of the clothing in your time, supplied to the boys?—I do not recollect.

Do you recollect any complaint being made, that the boys were all story-tellers, during the time Mr. Thackeray was there?—I believe there was such a complaint by the master and mistress.

Have you any reason to believe, that the subordinate officers in the establishment of the Incorporated Society have much influence in obtaining the appointments of the masters?—I do not know; I believe they would wish to make the candidates believe that they had.

In point of fact, do you know that the persons looking forward to obtain those appointments are extremely assiduous in their attempts to please those individuals?—I am inclined to think that some of them were.

From the experience you have had, can you say, whether you think the instruction in the charter schools has a good effect upon the children educated in them?—I believe it has not made many proselytes.

By that do you mean, you have reason to believe that many children have become Roman Catholics again?—Yes.

Have many instances come to your own knowledge?—Some instances have.

Do you believe, that many of the children remain Roman Catholics in their hearts, during the

Examination of
Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
9 Dec. 1824.

the time they are in the charter schools?—I cannot say as to that; but the influence of the parents, after they leave the charter schools, produces that effect.

Without reference to any particular religious persuasion, or proselytism, do you think the education is such as to produce a good effect upon the children?—I believe there is more money expended on the whole system than is absolutely necessary, and that the children might be educated for a less sum, and probably as well.

Do you think the children are benefitted by the education they receive?—My experience of the children, after they leave the school, does not warrant me in answering that question.

What is that experience?—I have not seen many of them turn out better, or much better, than other children.

Do they generally turn out as well?—If they turn out as well, they are seldom better.

Do you mean by that, to convey to us that they generally turn out less well?—They turn out in general less well than is expected.

Would you naturally expect them to turn out quite as well as children who do not receive a charter school education?—I should expect them to turn out better.

Then we are to collect, that you do not find them to turn out better?—My experience is not much with respect to the children after being apprenticed.

You have necessarily had opportunities of seeing boys in the charter schools, and the boys at Swords, and boys educated at other schools, do you think that the dispositions, habits and knowledge of the boys educated in the charter schools, are better or worse, than boys of the same condition of life, and the same age, in other situations, in which you must necessarily have seen them?—I would prefer the dispositions of the boys at Swords.

That is in a day school?—Yes.

Are the children in day schools more happy than those in the charter schools?—I believe them more happy.

Are they more lively than in charter schools?—I think they are.

Have they higher spirits than in the charter schools?—I believe they have.

Have they any nobler views; do they stand higher with regard to honesty, integrity and truth, than in charter schools?—I should think so.

How do you account for all that?—In Swords there is a stricter eye kept over those children; and the misconduct of either themselves or their parents, may deprive the parents of the advantage of coals, and so on.

Do you conceive the superior strictness of eye in Swords can possibly render the children more lively?—I would expect more activity from children that are not so much confined.

Do you attribute any of those effects to the circumstance of the children being entirely separated from their friends and relations, and being perpetually pent up within the walls of the charter schools?—I think it would be better for the children to be among their friends and relations.

Have you observed the children to be fond of the masters and mistresses in charter schools?—No, I cannot say I have.

Do you think there is any strong attachment in the children towards each other?—I cannot say there is.

Is there any quarter or direction in which the charter school children can exercise their social affections?—I think not; not to my knowledge.

That is not the case with respect to children in day schools?—No.

Do you not conceive the exercise of social affections makes a valuable part of education?—I do.

That may account, in some degree, for the superior liveliness, as well as superior regard for honesty and truth, that you have attributed to children in day schools?—It may.

What should you say generally, as to the moral conduct of the children in the schools?—Some are inclined, I think, to be liars.

Is there not something in the situation in which they are placed, that exposes them to that?—That may be the case.

Have not the masters very strong inducements to represent the boys as capable of telling a falsehood, in order to invalidate the complaints the boys may make against them?—Yes, I should apprehend so, in case of a complaint.

Appendix, N° 126.

Extract from the further Examination of Mr. Thomas Moffet, Friday 24th December, 1824.

Mr.
Thomas Moffett,
24 Dec. 1824.

DO you know of any person who ever carried any money, or presents of any kind, from the master of a charter school in the country, to the secretary Mr. Adamson?—I know that Mr. Harvey's apprentice boy came up with presents.

Of what nature?—I believe turkeys and oats; and I should think, hams.

How often have you known that to be done?—I do not know how often; I can speak of once, for I saw the things packed up myself.

Was it one particular apprentice boy, or more than one, that used to come?—He had only one.

What was the boy's name?—Dennis Murphy.

Do you remember, at the time you speak of, whether the turkeys, hams and oats came, or only a portion of them?—I would not swear to all of them.

Appendix, N° 127.

Examination of Mr. James Moffett, on Oath, Wednesday, 5th of January 1825.

HOW long have you been the master of a charter school?—About fifteen years.

Where were you educated yourself?—In the county of Longford.

In what school?—The greater part of the time in a school at a place called Killashee, and a part of the time at Longford.

Was it in a charity school or a day school?—It was a day school.

Were you ever an usher at a charter school?—Yes.

What school?—I was at Strangford and New Ross.

At what period were you at Strangford?—I went there in 1801, and stopped there till the latter end of 1803, and from that till the latter end of 1809, at New Ross, in the county of Wexford; I was then promoted to be a master.

Have you had, during the time you have been master, many different ushers under you?—No, not many; only two.

Do you happen to know where those ushers were educated?—The last young man was educated in the county of Wicklow with his parents, and the former man was a charter school boy at Clontarf.

Speaking generally, which do you think would make the best ushers for charter schools, persons who have been educated out of any charity school, or persons who have been all their time educated in charter schools?—From the like experience I have had of the two I have mentioned, I think the last was far superior to the former, he seemed to be superior in his manner—not so forward as the other; and I think he was more tender.

Do you prefer an usher educated out of a charter school?—In this instance the one educated out was superior; whether it would be the case in a general way, I do not find myself competent to say.

You say this man was more tender?—Yes, decidedly so, superior in every way for his situation, but then he was of respectable parents.

Have you no general opinion upon the subject?—I would be inclined to prefer respectable lads educated with their own parents, but I am certainly not a competent judge; for my own part I would give my preference to such if I had my choice.

Should you doubt, if you were told to choose an usher, either from among charter school boys or the public at large, from which class of persons you should make the choice?—I would take from the public at large, if I could find a respectable family; I would prefer a charter school boy to taking one from the very lowest order.

Should you expect, that an usher educated in a charter school would probably be more severe to the boys than one who had received a general education?—Indeed experience has proved, that they are in general more severe.

Can you account for that?—Probably they may have seen so much severity that they unfortunately are severe when in power; they are very apt to fall into the same bad plan, from having seen so much of it; perhaps they might be more teased by the boys knowing they came out of a charter school; they might not shew them the same respect, and in that case they might be provoked to forget themselves and inflict more punishment than they ought, in consequence of receiving impertinence from them.

Have you observed, upon the whole, that the boys treat ushers who have been educated in charter schools, with less respect than others?—Decidedly so.

Is it generally an object to conceal from the boys that the usher has been educated in a charter school?—No, the thing is so well known that they have generally come from the seminary called Santry, it would be of no use; it would answer no purpose to endeavour to conceal it—it would be known; they used formerly to have them from Clontarf.

Before the institution at Santry, was it endeavoured to conceal it?—No, I believe not; they were then taken from Clontarf; I think it was at all times in vain.

Do you think that the boys in the charter schools have a disposition to be more dissatisfied than the boys in other schools?—Certainly not, if treated according to the Incorporated Society's rules.

Do you not find that they are always watching their treatment with a view to ascertain whether they are strictly treated according to the rule, and that they have a constant disposition to complain and be discontented, if they think the rules are broken?—If the thing be done openly in the presence of the children, I do not; and then if the food be weighed in their presence, and they are brought to assist in it, they are then confident they are treated according to the rules; I do not see that there is any disposition in them to complain; not the slightest.

If those precautions are not taken, do you entertain any doubt they do become dissatisfied?—Decidedly, and very justly, if it is done in the dark; if they got more than the allowed them, they would be dissatisfied, in my opinion.

Does not that dissatisfaction engendered in the minds of the boys, produce a disposition on the part of the master to check them by severe treatment?—It is natural to think so, in the view I take of it; it is natural to think it would be the case.

Do you entertain any doubt, taking the charter schools altogether, that the boys in them are treated with rather more severity than in other schools?—I do not doubt that upon the whole they would do better with less correction than they have been in the habit of seeing; I have not seen any of this, I only give it from hearsay; I think they would do decidedly with less punishment, and that the boys would be better in every way with little correction;

[M m 4]

I have

Examination of
Mr.
James Moffett,
5 Jan. 1825.

Examination of
Mr.
James Moffett,
5 Jan. 1825.

I have no hesitation in saying, that very little correction need be used if the master be constantly present, because they never will receive from any usher (no matter of what description) chastisement, not even necessary chastisement, the same as they will from the master of the school; the master being constantly present, it will reduce the punishment considerably.

Where were you before you came to Clontarf?—At Stradbally.

How many years were you there?—About ten years.

When did you cease to be master of Stradbally?—The beginning of 1820.

How long have you been master of Clontarf?—About five years.

Is the clothing supplied to Clontarf school by contract?—Yes, by a contractor here in town.

Who are the contractors?—A Mr. Peile, of Westmoreland-street, and Mr. Ewings.

Have they been the contractors from the first period of the Society?—No, they have had others; Mr. Peile supplies the coats, waistcoats and trowsers, and caps, and Miss Tyrrell the shirts, and Mr. Ewings the shoes.

Are the present contractors connected by relationship, or otherwise, with any individuals, officers of the Incorporated Society?—Yes, Miss Tyrrell; she is related to the secretary, or his wife; I do not know what the relationship is, I fancy it is by marriage.

Has Miss Tyrrell had the contract for the shirts from the beginning?—I believe it was in her name; it was said, that Mrs Adamson was the contractor for it originally; but however, it was in that way. I believe it was in Miss Tyrrell's name. It was generally believed that Mrs. Adamson was the contractor, when alive; she has been dead some time.

How long ago?—Upwards of twelve months.

Does the contract go on now in the same manner as during her life time?—No; I believe she had the supplying of the shoes, during her life time.

Was the contract made in her name?—No; I always undertood it to be made in Miss Tyrrell's name also, but not latterly, another person has it now. I do not speak of this positively.

Has the local committee of Clontarf always been satisfied with the quality of the clothing delivered by contract?—I have not heard of any complaints, except that Mr. Mulloy objects to the trowsers, he thinks corderoy would be better; it is impossible to keep them clean, except by constant washing.

Who supplies the stockings?—The master of Dundalk and the master of Monastereven.

Do the children make them?—Yes.

Were the stockings good, generally?—This season there are some of them not good, generally; some of them are.

Are they all knit by hand?—Yes, no doubt they are.

Who is understood to be the real contractor now?—The people whose names I have given.

Do you suppose Miss Tyrrell to be the real contractor?—I do.

If I understand you right, in Mrs. Adamson's life time, whatever benefit might arise, she had it in the contracts for the shirts and shoes?—Yes, so I understood; she might have given it to them.

When you were at Stradbally, were the clothes supplied by the contractor?—Yes, part of the time.

Did the local committee object to the quality of the clothes furnished at any time?—Yes, and made a report* at the very first time the new clothing arrived; the committee met soon after to examine the master's accounts previous to sending them up to the board, and they mentioned it.

Were you present when they examined the clothes at your school?—Yes, I was.

What opinion respecting the clothing, did the local committee report; was it favourable, or unfavourable?—Unfavourable.

Did any thing pass afterwards in Dublin, between Mr. Adamson and yourself, upon the subject of the report of the local committee, and the observations of the committee of fifteen thereupon?—Yes; I had a conversation with Mr. Adamson, I think, previous to the passing of the accounts.

After

* Extracts from the Reports of the Local Committee of Stradbally Charter School, respecting the Clothing of the Children.

1815:

April 24.—No observation respecting clothing.

Nov. 10.—“ With respect to the new clothing, we think it our duty to state, that we have carefully examined “ the materials and workmanship of the coats, waistcoats, cloth, breeches and stockings, and “ found them of inferior quality and bad workmanship, not calculated to last the time intended, “ being in many instances ripped, and buttons lost already. Without repeated repairing, for “ which the master has no allowance, and which would be attended with great expense, we do “ not think the boys, in a few weeks, will be able to go in a decent state to attend their duty at “ church, and the clothing has only been in use ten days. We consider the hats, shoes, shirts
“ and linen trowsers, to be good of their kind.”

The above report was read in committee of fifteen, 29th November 1815, and the following order made thereon:—

“ The committee of fifteen do not think it necessary to make any observations to the master on that “ part of the report of the local committee respecting the clothing of the children lately sent “ from Dublin, in consequence of the explanation given by him in his letter read this day.”

* N.B. To every school under the Society, an allowance was made for fitting and repairing the clothing.

389
Examination of
Mr.
James Moffett,
5 Jan. 1825.

After he had seen the opinion of the local committee?—Yes.

What did he say to you?—I recollect he called in Mrs. Adamson to the board room, and the impression of Mr. Adamson seemed to be, that I was the cause of this bad report; I assured him that the local committee were composed of such characters, that I could not, and did not presume to interfere with them, and that the report was not mine; that I had nothing, pro or con, to do with it.

Did he seem to think you were in fault, because the clothing was complained of?—That was the impression on my mind, but it might have been erroneous.

If the clothing had been defective, and it had been your duty to express an opinion upon it, should you have felt, under all the circumstances of your situation, more doubt and hesitation as to reporting your bad opinion of the clothing, if Mrs. Adamson was the contractor who supplied it, than if it had been supplied by an individual wholly unconnected with the Incorporated Society?—I should speak more freely, if she had not been connected with it.

Was Mr. Adamson finding fault with you at that time; did it appear to you he was interested in the clothing being praised rather than complained of?—Indeed it did; I did not think he had acted a very honourable part with me.

Did he appear to charge you with having made this complaint, because the contract for the clothing had been taken from the master in the country and transferred to the Dublin contractor?—Indeed, I should think so; he came down stairs and told me the committee were going to dismiss me.

For making such a report of the clothing?—Yes; he told me at the foot of the stairs, that the committee were going to dismiss me; and I said, “for what?” he said, about the clothing or the report, and he desired me to walk up, that they had some of the clothes examining; and when I entered the room, the late Dean Keating asked me, what was this report I had made; I said I had made no report. He said, your local committee. I said, “I hope you will not hold me accountable for any report of the local committee;” he said, “Certainly not.” I said, I would do what I could to repair them; I have bought cloth, I will enlarge the seats of the breeches, as I stated in my letter I had written to the secretary, that morning. Dean Keating asked the secretary where the letter was. He fumbled about, and at last produced it, and handed it to the Dean; and after he had seen it, he desired him to strike out some things. I suppose they were resolutions they had passed.

In your judgment were the things complained of, complained of without reason?—No, very justly.

Were the committee of fifteen convinced that they were justly complained of?—No, they did not seem convinced; they were examining the sewing of them, the local committee complained of the sewing, for many of the buttons dropped off in a few days; the committee in Dublin seemed convinced that the breeches were too small in the seats.

Did Mr. Adamson seem angry with you on account of the report?—I cannot say; I think he was not well pleased.

Was there at any time an officer about the Incorporated Society, of the name of Payne?—Yes, there was.

Did you ever hear of his receiving money?—Yes.

From whom?—I think I gave him some money myself.

On what occasion, and what for?—It was understood to be customary to give a trifle to him; he had a very small salary, and it was customary to give a trifle in that way; what is called a Christmas-box.

What office did he hold?—What is called private clerk to Mr. Adamson, but he was paid by the board; there were 50*l.* allowed to Mr. Adamson to pay him.

What was the amount of the money you gave to Payne?—I fancy not more than 30*s.*

Was the 30*s.* annually repeated, or was it only once?—There was no regular way of doing it.

Did not the money that Payne received from you, amount to 10*l.*?—Indeed, I should think not.

Above 30*s.*?—It might be a couple times repeated, perhaps.

What was the immediate object for which this was given?—No object upon earth; I had no object in it.

Merely to conciliate his good will?—Yes.

Did you understand it was usual among the masters to make him these sort of presents?

—It was so understood, but I never saw any instance of it.

Did you think by doing so, you did what other masters of the charter schools did?—Yes, something in that way; but not given from any bad motive in the way of a bribe.

You understood it was a customary compliment from the other masters?—Yes, at that time he had a very small salary.

It was to make his situation more comfortable?—Yes, it would do no harm.

He is master of New Ross now?—Yes.

Did you ever give any money besides that alluded to, to Mr. Payne, to Mr. Adamson, Mr. Stuart, Mr. Vickers, or any other person belonging to the establishment?—I might have given a trifle to Mr. Vickers, as a pound or a guinea.

As a Christmas-box?—When I came to Dublin once or twice a year.

Was it usual for other masters to do the same?—I cannot exactly say.

Did you do the same when you were at Stradbally?—Not since I came to Clontarf, only at Stradbally.

Examination of
Mr.
James Moffett,
5 Jan. 1825.

What put it into your head to make any presents to any of those officers?—I cannot say; it was a suggestion of my own.

Had any body put it into your head that it would be desirable to do it?—There might, I cannot say.

Did the officers ever ask for it?—No, certainly not.

Did they appear surprised when you offered it them?—Not very.

Did they make any difficulty in accepting it?—Not much.

Did you make use of any particular arguments to overcome their reluctance, such as it was?—There was not much argument wanted.

At New Ross, in which you were usher, do you know whether the master there used to do the same thing as you did after you came to Stradbally?—I believe he used to do the same little things, but very trifling, I believe.

Did he use to send any presents up from the country?—I do not immediately recollect.

Do you know any thing of a set of Waterford glass being presented to Mr. Adamson by any body?—I have heard of it.

Who was said to be the giver?—Mr. Palmer, the master of the school there.

How long ago is that?—When I was at Stradbally.

Do you know of any other master making presents to Mr. Vickers?—No, I do not; Mr. Vickers was not very long in office, and I have known nothing of the office, nor any thing connected with it for these five years back, except in quite an official way.

Do you know any thing about a farm rented by Mr. Palmer at Waterford?—I have heard he got a large farm for his son.

At a good rent?—I do not know the rent; I heard he got it for the value.

Not too cheap?—Not too dear; it might not be very cheap; but such as he could live upon.

Appendix, N° 128.

Extract from the further Examination of Mr. James Moffett;
Saturday, 8th January 1825.

Mr.
James Moffett,
8 Jan. 1825.

IS there any addition you wish to make to the evidence you gave the other day?—No addition, only to correct some points.

You stated you had given no presents to any officer of the Incorporated Society, since you came to Clontarf; is that correct?—No, it is not; neither the man, nor the money occurred to me at the time of giving evidence. I did give to Mr. Marshall, who was clerk to Mr. Adamson, money two or three times.

Who fills that office now?—I see a clerk now there, they call Pearce.

Is he private clerk to Mr. Adamson?—I suppose so.

For what purpose was the money give by you to — Marshall?—I cannot say I had any particular object in view; he gave me some little information about annual accounts.

What was the amount?—It might be 3*l*. I gave him money twice or three times; I am certain I gave it twice if not three times.

Three pounds each time?—No; 1*l*. each time.

Do you know whether Marshall was in the habit of receiving other or similar gratuities from other masters?—I am certain if they offered he would take it.

Did you give it because you understood it was usual for persons in your situation to make presents?—I cannot say whether it be a general thing or not; I certainly understood that they got something this way.

How did it occur to you to think of giving money to any officer of the Society; were you told by any body, was it suggested by any one?—I do not recollect that it was suggested by any person.

What was your object in doing it?—That they might be more friendly to me.

Do you know whether Mr. Adamson was aware of his clerk receiving those presents?—Certainly not.

Do you know whether the person who now fills the office of clerk, is in the habit of receiving presents?—I do not know.

Did you ever make him any?—No I never offered him any.

Appendix, N° 129.

Examination of Thomas Moyle, on Oath, Saturday, 30th October 1824.

Thomas Moyle,
30 Oct. 1824.

HOW old are you?—Eighteen years of age.

Where were you first admitted into a charter school?—Ross, county of Wexford.

Are you a child of Catholic parents?—My father was a Protestant, and my mother a Catholic.

Are they both living or dead?—My mother is alive, I do not know whether my father is or not; he is in England.

In what year were you admitted into Ross school?—The year 1813.

How long did you continue there?—About eight or nine years.

To what school were you removed from Ross?—To Santry.

How long have you been at Santry?—Two years last August.

Are

Are you in the class of candidate teachers?—Yes.

Are you acquainted with the rules and regulations for the management of the charter schools; do you know what the dietary is?—Yes.

When you were at Ross, were you properly fed, according to the dietary?—No.

State in what way you were fed, and in what the difference consisted?—We did not get the allowance of bread or milk; they never got new milk for the breakfast when I was there.

What used they to have instead?—Butter milk.

In any other respect was the diet different from what the rules prescribed?—Yes, they gave veal instead of beef, very often.

Anything else?—No, I do not know any thing else.

Is it a school in which the boys had much work to do; do they weave?—No, they work on the farm.

What land had the master at Ross?—A hundred acres; thirty from the board, and he took seventy a little after he went there.

Used the boys to do much work upon that land?—Yes, as much as on the other.

Do you know what hours the boys were required to be employed at labour, and what in the school?—Yes.

Were those regulations conformed to?—Yes, most part of the year, except four or five times in the year; in harvest time and in spring he would keep the boys out of school entirely.

And that for many days together?—Yes, a fortnight or a month; and sometimes the large boys were out all the year round nearly, leading horses and the like.

He employed them upon the farm as servants?—Yes.

Could those boys that were employed upon the farm, read and write properly?—Yes.

Had they been sufficiently instructed in arithmetic?—Some of them were not very far advanced in it.

Used those boys to come to school at all?—Yes, the master would often send them in to write a copy; no more than that.

Did the boys use to go regularly to church on Sundays, or write copies?—No, they used to read the Scriptures.

And go to church?—Yes.

Were the boys frequently punished in the school?—I would tell the truth, that the man is a very great tyrant; Mr. Payne.

What ushers were there?—Since Mr. Payne went there, there were three ushers.

One at a time; three different men?—Yes.

Did the ushers punish the boys?—Yes they used.

What were the punishments for chiefly, for neglect of work?—Yes, and their tasks.

Which were the most frequent?—The master generally beat them about the work, and the usher about the tasks.

What used they to punish the boys with?—The master generally with a horsewhip, and the usher would keep a cane or a rod.

What was the rod?—A switch of hazel or birch.

Were the boys punished severely?—Yes, very often they were.

Which used to punish them most severely?—The master.

When it was a question of work, the punishment was most severe?—I think it was on the part of the tasks in the schools; but he would not beat them so hard as the master.

Have you ever seen any particular instances of severe punishment; do you remember any?—Indeed I have; I saw one boy beaten for speaking about his milk being watered, the master beat him in a terrible manner, with a thick cat-o'-nine-tails.

Who was the boy?—James Brooks.

What became of him?—He is out of school now; he came up to Santry, and was apprenticed out.

How long is that ago?—About a year ago since he was sent out.

To whom did he complain?—It was not a complaint; he was telling one of the men, that was generally about the house, that the master that was there before Mr. Paine, treated them better; and the man told Mr. Payne of it.

To what man did he mention it?—The "Nurse tender's" son; the nurse's name was Haydon.

And this boy, James Brooks, stated to the son of the nurse, that the former master had given them better food?—Yes.

What happened in consequence?—He was beat very severely in consequence.

Did you see the beating?—Yes.

Where did it take place?—In the school room, before the boys.

What did he do to him?—He made him take off his coat and waistcoat and shirt, and beat him with a cat, till he left his flesh nearly raw.

You mean on the shoulders and back?—Yes.

Did he take his breeches down?—No.

Was that the usual mode of punishing in the school?—No; being in a hurry, he would beat them across the back with a horsewhip.

What was the common practice in the school?—He used to bare their backs, and sometimes on the breech.

How old was this boy at the time?—Seventeen or eighteen.

How many stripes do you think he gave him?—About three dozen or better than that.

Examination of
Thomas Moyle,
30 Oct. 1824.

Did the master mention to the boys the cause?—Yes; the reason he assigned was, that he should not carry stories to any of the neighbour's houses, concerning him. The master would not suffer any boy to make a complaint, without first telling him; and the boy would be afraid to go up to him to make a complaint, and he would over-rule him if he did. One boy did make a complaint; I was not there at the time; but I was told by a boy, who has left it about a month; he went to the minister and complained of the manner in which he was beaten; he was simple, and went to make a complaint; and the master beat him very much, and put him to hard work.

What is the name of the boy?—Edward Knight.

Who was the boy who told you?—William Lewis.

Did James Brooks suffer severely from the punishment of the cat-o'-nine-tails?—His back was very sore; he could not stir.

Did it bleed?—I cannot say it bled; but it was raw, and there were great lumps on his back.

Did the surgeon attend him?—No.

Was the boy able to come to school?—Yes.

Was the instrument with which he was flogged, the instrument commonly used or made on purpose?—I never saw it before; it was a large cat.

What do you mean by "a large cat"?—Nine pieces of cords with knots upon it and a short handle.

Actually nine?—Yes, just from the name; I think there were nine; I did not count them.

Did you ever see such an instrument employed on any other occasion than that?—No; I did not.

Did you ever see any other boy as severely beaten as Brooks?—No, I did not.

Did you ever see the master strike any boy with the fist?—No; but I saw him kick one of them.

When he was standing up, or when he was on the ground?—The boy was standing.

Did he kick him in such a way as to injure him?—The kick was not severe; but it might have injured him, I cannot say.

Did you ever know a boy whipped often on the same day?—I have seen them beaten three times in a day.

Upon a common beating, what number of blows would they get?—Half a dozen or nine.

Did you ever see any boy so beaten as to receive much injury by it?—No, not to my recollection.

Did you ever see any boy so beaten as to make it necessary for the surgeon to attend him?—No, I did not; I saw a boy with a cut eye, by a blow of a switch, and the surgeon attended him.

Who was the boy?—I think it was Irwin; but I cannot say he was the boy.

Were the boys employed in weaving at all?—No, they were not.

How were the boys treated when they were unwell?—The mistress treated them very well.

Were the dormitories clean?—Yes.

Had you a proper number of sheets?—Yes.

Two on each bed?—Yes.

Were you supplied with a regular quantity of clothes, coats, waistcoats, trowsers and shoes?—Yes; three pair of shoes, three pair of stockings, coat, waistcoat, two trowsers and three shirts.

Were they regularly supplied?—Yes, from Dublin.

Who was the catechist?—Mr. James Stubbs, who was the curate of the parish.

How frequently did he attend?—Sometimes once a week, sometimes twice, and sometimes less.

How long used he to stay, when he came?—Sometimes about five minutes, I think; sometimes he would catechise the boys.

How frequently did he catechise the boys?—It was the church catechism.

How frequently?—About once a month or five weeks.

Are you sure he used to catechise them as often as that?—Sometimes he might not do it as often; but generally he did.

Were the boys in general healthy there, or did they suffer from illness?—They were in general, healthy.

How many boys eloped during the time you were there?—I think I may say about fifty, in all; I remember counting them up once; I think thirty had eloped at that time, and I think a great many since.

How many boys were in the school at any time?—Sixty is the number; but there are seldom more than thirty or forty.

Were the boys generally dissatisfied with their treatment; were they unhappy?—Yes, they were, generally.

Were they kept in a state of fear and alarm?—Yes, in a state of fear every moment; they were afraid to make their complaints.

Did any individuals of the committee ever ask the boys questions as to the mode in which they were treated, apart from the master?—Yes, often.

What used the boys to say?—They were afraid to speak; they used to say they were well treated; if he made a complaint, he would never have a peaceable moment afterwards; the master would have an eye to him.

What would be the consequence of having an eye to him?—He would watch him, and send him to harder work.

What

What sort of work were the boys sent to?—Sometimes to pick stones, or to carry dung on box barrows.

On their backs?—No; two boys or four boys to a barrow, what they generally call a hand-barrow, made up of four sides.

What other labour used the boys to perform?—To dig, and make hay, and glean after the reapers, and pick the potatoes, at the time of getting them in.

How far used they to carry dung on the box barrows?—Sometimes fifty yards, and then put it on the ground and go for another.

For wheat, or potatoes?—Generally for cabbage.

Used the boys to be able to hold the plough?—No, I never saw any of them ploughing; but I saw them driving the horses.

Did you ever see any boy so severely worked as to suffer in his health by it?—No, not in my recollection.

Have you any occasion to know, whether the boys who have been in the school continued Roman Catholics, or whether any of them relapsed?—I know two or three who turned Catholics.

Do you know their names?—One of the name of Mark Thomas.

Was he apprenticed?—No, he was drafted up to Dublin; then he left Clontarf, and I think he eloped, and came down to Ross afterwards, and he is about there now, and keeps a Catholic school.

Have you had any occasion to make any complaint of the treatment you have received since you have been at Santry?—Yes.

What did you complain of?—The beef was very bad, and bad milk often in the winter time.

Was your complaint attended to?—No, we never heard any thing of it afterwards.

To whom was it made?—To Dean Ponsonby, I believe.

Were the boys punished who made it?—No, they were not.

Have you ever known any difference made in the feeding of the boys, in consequence of any conduct of theirs; or were they all fed alike?—Yes; I have seen gruel given, instead of milk, with potatoes.

With a view to punish the boy?—No; the master gave it while I was at Ross, to all of them in the winter, and sugar with the stirabout, instead of milk; sometimes treacle.

Was any difference made in the diet as a punishment; was a less quantity given to one boy than the rest?—Sometimes a boy would be punished by the usher keeping that boy from his supper till he got his task off; but I never saw any thing extended beyond that.

Appendix, N° 130.

Further Examination of Thomas Moyle; Tuesday, 2d November 1824.

HAVE you had any occasion to make any complaint of the manner in which you have been treated at Santry since you have been in that school?—Yes.

Thomas Moyle,
2 Nov. 1824.

In what manner did you complain?—It was not of Santry I complained, but I wished to make my complaint when I was in the country school, but it was not in my power, and there were boys at Santry from all the charter schools in Ireland, and the other boys were of the same opinion, and yet they had not the power to complain, because the clerk intercepted the complaint, and did not lay them before the board.

What description of complaint did you prepare?—The whole nearly is here (referring to a paper.)

Describe what you prepared, what sort of a document it was?—Respecting the treatment of the children in the country schools, the labour and the food.

Was it in the form of a letter or memorial?—Four or five sheets stitched together, and I sent it in to the board.

To whom was it addressed?—The Incorporated Society.

What did you do with it?—I gave it to one of the clerks, and Mr. Vickers read it over also.

Did they both read it?—Yes.

Did you see them read it?—Yes.

By whom was it prepared?—By myself and the candidate. Teachers gave their consent to it, and said it was very proper it should be done, to represent the state of the country schools to the Charter Society, as the children had not the means of making the complaint.

Did it refer to more schools than one?—Yes, to the general schools, taking them altogether.

Did it contain specific circumstances of grievance, or only general observation?—General observations and grievances.

Did it state the authority upon which you knew those grievances to exist?—Yes, just on the evidence that the boys at Santry could give of the complaint.

Did you give the names of the boys that could support a particular allegation?—No.

Did you sign your own name?—Yes, I did.

Have you a copy?—No, I gave it to the clerk at the board, and instead of that, he wrote to all the masters concerning the complaints that were made against them, and so the masters had a great aversion to the Santry boys on that account.

Examination of
Thomas Moyle,
2 Nov. 1824.

Do you know which clerk it was who wrote to the masters?—I cannot say perfectly, but all the masters were acquainted with it.

How do you know that?—Two of them came to me, one from Ross, and the other from Waterford, and abused me very much—it was Mr. Payne and Mr. Palmer.

What did you complain of?—Thomas Oates is below, his complaint was of the allowance of food, and they were not able to make the complaint at the school.

Who is Mr. Payne?—The master of Ross.

Did you mention particular instances?—I did.

And the names of the boys?—No; the treatment they received in general in the schools, and the boys being afraid to make a complaint.

Was any thing done in consequence of your complaint?—No, I never heard any thing concerning it.

Was any notice of it taken to you, were you sent for and examined?—No, I do not think it was laid before the board.

Have you any reason to believe it was laid before the board?—No, I have not.

Did they complain of the master at Santry?—It did not particularize any of the masters at all, but we expected the paper would be investigated, and that then we could make our complaint good.

At what period was this letter presented?—About the 23d of June last.

Had you named the masters of Ross and Waterford upon your paper?—No, I did not name any of them at all.

Did you point out any particular schools as being worse managed than others?—No, I did not.

In your statement, did you mention any circumstances that occurred at the school at which you had been?—Yes, I represented the way in which James Brooks was beaten for making a complaint, and a whole string of them.

Were there any particulars stated of what you considered improper conduct in other places?—Yes, I pursued the same course, with very few exceptions.

That is that as to any particular facts you thought wrong at other schools, those facts were mentioned?—Yes.

And the names of the schools?—No, they were not mentioned.

In the statement you sent in to the Incorporated Society, did you specify particular instances of improper conduct at particular schools?—No, it was all about the way the children were treated, as if they were in one school; there are candidates from every school at Santry, and they knew the punishment of the boys in their schools.

Did you state particular misconduct in particular schools?—Not in particular schools, but particular offences.

And you desired to be called upon in that letter to confirm and give evidence of the truth of the statement—did you tender yourself to be examined?—Yes.

Was the name of the boy here to day, mentioned in that letter, the Killoteran boy?—No, it was not.

Appendix, N° 131.

Further Examination of Thomas Moyle; Monday 8th November 1824.

Thomas Moyle,
8 Nov. 1824.

CAN you call to mind accurately, what passed between you and Mr. Vickers, when you presented to him the memorial, that you wished to have delivered to the committee of fifteen?—I went to the door first, and it was Mr. Stuart I met; I went into the office and gave it to Mr. Vickers, and requested him to lay it before the board.

What did Mr. Vickers say?—Then Mr. Vickers said they had not time to look at it.

That the board had not?—Yes.

Did he say any thing else?—He put it down there, and he asked me, might I not consult Mr. Devine before I sent it in; I said I did not think it right to consult him about it, because there was nothing but truth in it, and Mr. Devine would endeavour to persuade me to keep it away. Then Mr. Stuart came to know of it; I think Mr. Vickers told him; then Mr. Stuart desired me to attend the next Wednesday, and he would lay it before the board; that they had not time to look at it then; and the next Wednesday, I asked Mr. Devine's leave to go into the town, and he would not give me leave. He said if the gentlemen had any thing to say to me, they would send to me.

Did Mr. Stuart tell you to come on the following Wednesday?—He did.

Can you recollect, distinctly, the reason he gave for your coming again the following Wednesday?—No; he did not give any reason.

Did he lead you to believe he would lay the paper before the board?—I think he did; he desired me to attend the next Wednesday, that was all.

Did you understand from him, that he would give you that paper back again on the next Wednesday?—No; I thought it would have been laid before the board.

Did you tell him yourself, you would call for that paper any other time?—No; he just desired me to attend, and I said I would.

Did Mr. Vickers tell you he thought you had better not present that paper?—He seemed not to like laying it before the board; he desired me to consult Mr. Devine about it.

Did he tell you he thought you would injure yourself by presenting it?—No; Mr. Devine told me, that he asked me the nature of it, and I told him it was a complaint.

When

When did you talk to Mr. Devine about it?—The Wednesday after; and then Mr. Devine told me I might injure myself, as Mr. Payne was a relation of Mr. Adamson.

Is that the Mr. Payne the schoolmaster at Ross?—Yes.

Do you not say in your memorial that you know three of the masters who are related to one another?—Yes.

Who are they?—Mr. Kidd, Mr. Hines, and Mr. Clarke.

What school is Mr. Kidd master of?—A girl's school at Dundalk.

Where is Mr. Clarke master?—Kevin-street girl's school.

Now is he?—Yes.

Has Mr. Payne any relations among the masters?—No; I do not think he has.

Do you know how Mr. Payne is related to Mr. Adamson?—I do not know; but I believe he married Mr. Adamson's niece.

Did you understand from Mr. Vickers that he refused to present this memorial of your's?—I know he was unwilling to do it, because I brought the complaint before any of the members of the board attended.

Did you speak to Mr. Devine about it first, or did he speak to you first?—When I asked him leave to go into the town, he asked me what I wanted to go for; then I told him about this paper; so I spoke to him first.

Did you then collect from him that he had heard of the paper?—No, I did not.

Why did you not ensure its coming before the board, by delivering it into the hands of one of the members?—It is generally to the clerks they deliver the complaints and letters; whatever is to be laid before the board.

Have you known of any other boys having delivered any other complaints to the clerks?—No, I have not; but one of the boys sent in a letter by me at the same time; but it was not laid before the board.

What was that about?—With respect to a piano to teach the boys to sing; the letter was to be sent in to Colonel Blacker; I think I heard the boy say he got the letter again.

When did you first know that your complaint had not been delivered to the board?—I knew from the first, that Mr. Stuart did not like to lay it before the board; I was certain I should be called before the board if it had reached them.

Did the catechist teach you religion often at Ross?—He just heard the boys the church catechism, generally about once a month or six weeks.

Did he examine you in the expositions of the church catechism?—He did.

Did he merely ask the questions, or did he endeavour to explain the meaning to you?—In a few instances he would explain the meaning by asking us questions.

Did the boys talk or think much of religion when they were out of school?—No, they did not.

Did they ever discuss the difference between the Protestant and Roman Catholic religion, when among themselves?—No, they did not; but they generally had a hatred to the Roman Catholic religion; some of them when they are put in after ten years of age, generally turn Roman Catholics.

Those very boys who afterwards turn Roman Catholics after they get out of the school, what do they think of the Roman Catholic and Protestant religion when in it?—I think they always had an aversion to the Protestant religion.

Do you mean, they retain their hatred to the Protestant religion while in the charter school?—I think they do.

Do the boys ever talk among themselves upon the subject?—Indeed some of the wisest of them do.

Did Mr. Payne ever give you any religious instruction himself?—He did, he often read a sermon in the school room when the boys did not go to church.

Did he use to examine you in the catechism himself?—No.

Did he use to be present when the usher examined you?—No, he used not to attend the school, except when there was not an usher.

Had Mr. Payne the character of being a religious man among the boys?—No, he had not.

Had he any particular character upon that subject among the boys?—We did not consider him a moral man.

Did they consider him immoral?—No, they did not; it was between the two.

Can you state upon what grounds they did not consider him a very moral man; had they any particular reason for it?—On Sunday morning the house would be in a terrible confusion, he would be running about like a madman with a horse whip in his hand, beating the boys for not being ready for church, and he would not give them the means in the week of getting ready.

Was he in a greater passion that morning than other mornings in the week?—Yes, he was.

Did he punish the boys more on Sunday than other days in the week?—Yes, he did.

What sort of punishment?—He would beat them on the back with a horse whip.

Do you mean he did that for any other offences than not being ready for church?—No, I never saw it for any other.

Appendix, N^o 132.

Copy of a Letter from Thomas Moyle, of the Santry Institution, to the Incorporated Society.

To the Right Honourable, Honourable, and Reverend, the Guardians of the Charter Schools of Ireland.

Copy of a Letter from Thomas
Moyle, of the Santry
Institution, to the Incorporated
Society.

THE following account of the Charter Schools of Ireland, is most humbly presented to the members of this honourable and benevolent Board, with the warmest hopes that it will meet with a favourable and willing reception; and as I think it is just and proper to give a full detail of the fraud and cruelty which are practised in the said schools, I shall, as far my knowledge extends, give a full detail of all things which I know to be contrary to your laws and orders. Neither shall I, in one instance, exaggerate those crimes which I am about to relate. As for the greater part, I have experienced them myself: and, gentlemen, as this account will, from its length, take up more than ordinary of your time, I can only beg pardon for thus infringing on it. But, as the honourable Board may think this action to be a laudable one, I humbly hope it may prove an excuse. And, gentlemen, as it is the sincere and humble wish of all charter school boys to have this account brought before your honourable Board, they can only beg of you to read the account, and they are sure of redress.

Now, gentlemen, seeing the total deficiency of the most acute inspector to find out the fraud and injustice which are practised in the said schools, I take it on me to give you a full detail of the whole; thinking myself fully competent, from the number of years I have been in the said schools, from the manner in which I have seen inspectors deceived, and catechists, who much more frequently visit the said schools, imposed on; and I'll go much farther, even to say, not only imposed on, but also knowing many things which they plainly see are not right, but think they are too trivial to inform this honourable Board of. But, gentlemen, perhaps you may think that I am too bold, in thus imputing deficiency to the inspectors, appointed by you to examine the state of the charter schools of Ireland; but in talking of such deficiency, I may truly say, every man thus commissioned is deficient; for it is utterly out of the power of the most acute inspectors, as I said before, to give a true account of the state of the said schools, without they really disguised themselves, and formed an acquaintance with one of those masters, and then come and sup and dine with him—they would see the wretched manner in which the children are treated. For at first, when an inspector is sent by your honourable Board, to examine the state of the charter schools of Ireland, the first master he goes to may be turned out of doors, or perhaps one or two more, that expected not such a sudden visit, or that have no acquaintance with the other masters. But after that, according as he takes his circuit, all is well; all the charter schools seem to be mansions of peace and plenty and comfort. But what is the reason of this? How can it be accounted for? It is this: the moment the inspector leaves the first school he visited, the master takes, without any further delay, and writes to his friend the next master, without any anxiety for himself being turned out, so as he can prepare another master; that master writes to another, and so on, writing to each other, informing him that there is an inspector, taking his round to examine the state of the schools. Thus before the inspector has examined one-fourth of the charter schools, circular letters are sent with the greatest dispatch through all parts of Ireland, where those schools are; and in this manner they frustrate all means which are used to find out their injustice. Another peculiar thing, which I am not well acquainted with, although I may have a glimpse of it is, that before the inspector takes his round, a few of the masters know very well what time he is to visit the schools, even before he sets out. This is how inspectors are deceived; for how is it possible that they could find fault with either schools or masters, when they are so closely connected; for instance, I know three charter school masters who are all relatives, and of course mutually assist each other with information, at all times, that is necessary. In the next place, gentlemen, as the inspector enters the school, the first child he meets he generally interrogates him with regard to the treatment he has received in all cases. The poor child, filled with terror, equally behind his back as before his face, cannot answer until a few moments, wavering between two things—truth and falsehood. But at last he gives his answer; and shocking to say, in the latter, viz. falsehood. Thus the child is forced to lie, from the fear of being ever after hated, and perhaps punished, for having the boldness to utter any thing against his master; and it generally happens, that the words of all are the same. But sometimes it may happen, that all will not agree; some may tell truth, and some lies. But woe to him that speaks against his master; from that moment till he leaves the school, his life is a burthen; the poor child has no one to comfort him—no place can he find rest in. These are the men whom ye, no doubt, believed to be men of exemplary characters, hating falsehood and covetousness. But it is quite the reverse. Do they perform their duty, by training up the children in the way of truth, and in the fear of the Lord? The answer is plain. But this is not the half of their injustice and cruelty. I shall now relate a fact which I have experienced myself. A master, on leaving one of the charter schools, was succeeded by another, only remarkable for his cruelty. One of the children not liking the change, as it was for the worse, told a neighbour, a man who was frequently about the school (his mother being nurse tender in the same), that the milk given by the present master was not so good as that given by the former; and that I know to be truth. This, however, coming to the master's ears, he immediately prepared to exercise his savage hand and heart with revenge; and then taking a cat and nine tails, large

397
Copy of a Letter
from Tho^s Moyle, of the Santry
Institution, to the Incorporated
Society.

large and severe enough for to chastise a criminal, he stripped the boy naked, and beat him unmercifully, until his back was raw and covered with frightful lumps; so that it was a sight which would make one shudder. All this for saying nothing but the truth, and telling the manner in which he was wronged. Is not this cruelty, monstrous injustice? Such inhumanity and injustice must, undoubtedly, force consideration upon the most cruel heart. All this, gentlemen, may appear strange and terrible, but I am sure ye were never informed of it; for the poor children would greatly fear to inform the committee, or catechist of their school, of such things. But at the same time they know very well, that if it were in their power to inform this honourable Board of the manner in which they are treated, they would soon meet with redress. But that is not in their power, they being distant from Dublin, and having neither ways nor means whereby to convey their complaints. In this manner do the masters use the children, without your knowledge. They invite company, and feast in the richest manner themselves, without ever considering the fare of the children, whether it is bad or good, comfortable or not; and still worse than all, they never consider whether the children get enough of it. It is a great crime, and highly offending to the masters, if the children complain of their diet, or the small quantity which they get, even when it is evident that they do not get enough. I have seen the children beat for complaining of the small quantity of food which was given them. The master's reply was, how dare you complain at all; you have no right to do so. Thus the children are afraid to complain, while at the same time they are famishing. They will then eat any trash that they can lay hold on; and in the end, are sure to be punished most rigorously for doing so, if it come to the master's hearing.

In the next place, gentlemen, I shall give you an account of the manner in which you are deceived by the reports from different charter schools. A short time before the master sends up the reports for the half year, a committee is assembled to examine the state of the school; but before the gentlemen are assembled, there are extraordinary preparations. The house is cleaned better than usual, the children are dressed in their Sunday clothes, and a very good and comfortable dinner is served out for the children. The committee examine all the house, and find it clean. They next go to see the children's food; and consider it is very good, which is true. The manner in which the children are served, and the state of the house being acknowledged by the gentlemen to be very good, all concur to produce a favourable report which is sent up to this honourable Board; therefore there is every reason for the members of this honourable Board to believe that the children are treated well, and that they live in comfort. But let them go to the school unexpectedly on another day, and they will find all things wearing a new appearance: The children's diet small, uncomfortable and bad; and the children, as it very often happens, out at hard labour in the field, and beat by the usher (another petty tyrant) if their backs are not stooped the whole day to their work; and more cruel still, often beat unmercifully for leaving a small weed unpulled. These are the men, who being thought men of excellent characters, are set over children to act as fathers to them, and to comfort them, but it is far otherwise; they are tyrants, ruling like petty despots, who must have every thing at their will, contrary to your orders. In many other ways, gentlemen, are the children defrauded; a few instances of which I shall give you: By your appointment, the children are allowed new milk at least four or five times a week, which they do not get once a year. Butter milk very often is given to the children, which is more than forty-eight hours churned, and that rendered insipid by the infusion of a great quantity of water. How then can these men verify by affidavit, sent up with each half yearly report, that during the said time they have not infused a greater quantity of water than is appointed by this honourable Board. How can it be done without perjuring themselves. The children are allowed twice a week good beef or mutton weighed raw, exclusive of bone. But the master is quite satisfied with giving them the cheapest he can find, whether bad or good. The flesh of a calf no more than a day old, dressed in the most wretched manner, and a small allowance of it, is very different from your appointment, viz. good beef or mutton. Now, gentlemen, speaking in a fair manner, do the catechists of such schools mind their business?—but when they visit the school and receive their salary, they are satisfied as having done their duty. All these things fall heavily on the children, nor can they even take their food with comfort without being disturbed by the master, if his temper is ruffled by any accident; in he flies to wreak his vengeance on the poor children, and satiate his passion by punishing them. But gentlemen, I'll delay you too much by entering into a minute detail of all the fraud which is used in these schools. Suffice it to say, that the children are used wretchedly, without your knowledge, while the masters live in the most splendid manner. They have done enough, they think, when they have hoarded up a fortune for all their sons and daughters; and a few can send their sons to the college to receive a good education. But if the children were used properly, very few of them could thus live as they do; for by defrauding the children they are able to make a fortune for each of their children. The children have a fixed aversion to the Holy Scriptures, because they are severely punished for not getting by heart large portions of the gospels, epistles, &c.; they then elope from the school, and a great number of them turn to the Catholic religion; and so become a burthen to their country, instead of a blessing. Now, gentlemen, I humbly hope that I have not offended by presenting this account to this benevolent Board, which, from its length, must take up more than ordinary of your time.

These things call the members of this honourable Board, who are distinguished for humanity, to reform those schools, and settle the children in comfort. And now, I hope, that the members of this honourable Board, incorporated for such laudable and ben evolen purposes, will not take offence at my boldness in presenting this account.

(signed)

Thomas Moyle

Santry Institution.

Appendix, N° 133.

Institutions for Teachers of both sexes ; more particularly for Parish Clerks and Schoolmasters.

Institutions for Teachers of both Sexes, at Santry and Kevin-street
Schools.

THE Committee of Fifteen of the Incorporated Society, in pursuance of a a resolution of the general board, at their annual meeting, on Wednesday last, the 3d of February, having taken into consideration the plan submitted to the Society by the Reverend Elias Thackeray, " for the further advancing the usefulness of the Charter School Institution, " by applying it directly to the wants of the country in forming teachers of both sexes " and parish clerks, and schoolmasters," beg leave to propose and recommend to the Society, that the following resolutions be adopted and carried into execution :—

I. That two of the houses belonging to the Society be forthwith set apart as Institutions, for forming teachers.

II. That each Institution be capable of containing at least 120 persons.*

III. That one be appropriated to males, and the other to females.

IV. That, in order that the said establishments may be under the immediate superintendence and controul of the Society and committee of fifteen, and be convenient to such persons as may have occasion to apply to them in search of teachers, it is expedient, the charter house of Santry, be assigned to the male pupils, and the charter house of Kevin-street to the female pupils.

V. That these separate Institutions be supplied with pupils, candidate teachers, by selections from the various schools of the Society.

VI. That an examination take place previous to selection, before each local committee and catechist ; and that superior ability and application, united with superior moral conduct, be the sole points on which the selection shall be decided, provided the pupils have arrived at the age of fourteen.

VII. That the selection in this, and in every future year, be in the course of the first week in March.

VIII. That the number returned, be in the proportion of one in twenty, of the full establishment of each school, specifying the age, proficiency in learning, and other qualifications of each individual ; and that the returns be made so as to be received at the Society's house, on or before the second Wednesday in March.

IX. That these Institutions be in full operation by the 25th day of March next, at the farthest.

X. That none of the candidate teachers be continued in these seminaries after they have attained the age of twenty years.

XI. That superannuated candidate teachers receive from the Society 10*l.* upon their removal, to enable them to establish a school at their own cost, and by their own efforts.

XII. That candidate teachers be eligible to vacant usherships under the Society, and at liberty to accept any situation that may be approved of by the committee of fifteen.

XIII. That no person be admitted on the roll of candidate teachers, who has not been four years trained and educated under the Society, and regularly elected from the school to which he or she may belong.

XIV. That to give equal encouragement to each school, the vacancies occurring among the candidate teachers, be supplied, in an uninterrupted rotation, by the several schools taken in alphabetical order.

XV. That if any, sent up under this rule, be, upon examination, found not qualified, they be rejected, and the vacancy filled up by the next in rotation.

XVI. That pupils, though admitted into the Institution for teachers, be removeable for bad temper, bad conduct, negligence, or any other cause, from which it shall appear that they are not qualified to promote the object for which these Institutions are established.

XVII. That in case any school be not able to supply its quota, or, supplying it, send forward to the Institution candidates evidently disqualified by neglect in instruction ; all officers connected with such school, who receive premium for faithful conduct, lose for that year such premium ; and should they fail in sending forward efficient candidates a second year, from the same cause, they forfeit double the premium ; and if a third, their appointment.

XVIII. That it be the duty of the committee of fifteen, to select from among the present teachers employed by the Society, fit persons to be placed at the head of these important establishments.

XIX. That the candidate teachers be instructed in Reading, English, Grammar, History, Geography, Arithmetic in all its branches ; Writing in every hand that can be considered useful ; in Psalmody, and above all, in sound Scripture knowledge, and in the doctrines and liturgy of the United Church of England and Ireland, as connected with it.

XX. That

* To make teachers, there must be scholars ; in the male Institution the number of candidate teachers will be forty, in the female twenty.

399

Institutions for Teachers of both Sexes, at Santry and Kevin-street
Schools.

XX. That in the Institution set apart for female candidate teachers, instructions be given in addition, in all sorts of needle work that can be useful to that class of scholars, of which hereafter they may be expected to become the teachers; and also in all the inferior, though not not less necessary knowledge of knitting, carding, spinning, &c.

XXI. That an half-yearly examination of these Institutions for teachers take place, before appointed visitors, accompanied by such members of the Incorporated Society, and their friends, as can make it convenient to attend.

XXII. That at these examinations, the most minute inquiries be made, not only into the progress of the candidate teachers, as to those points which qualify them for instructors merely, but into those also, which may make them useful, moral and religious examples, in the country where they may reside. That every circumstance connected with these inquiries be entered in a book kept for this sole purpose, to which reference shall be had at each future examination; and that the recommendation of candidates to situations as they offer, shall be regulated by an impartial reference to this record of the conduct, application and abilities of each teacher.

AT an extraordinary general meeting of the Incorporated Society, held on the 6th of February 1819, for the purpose of receiving the report of the committee of fifteen, on the plan submitted to them by the Reverend Elias Thackeray, for the establishment of two separate Institutions for the instruction of teachers of both sexes, and of parish clerks, and schoolmasters; the same was unanimously approved of; And it was resolved, That it would be most beneficial to the country, that the said plan should be adopted, and the purposes of it carried into immediate execution.

Signed, by order,

J. Adamson, Secretary.

Appendix, N° 134.

SANTRY INSTITUTION.

A LIST of the Names and Ages of all the Boys admitted into the Teacher's Class from its first formation; also the Dates of Admission into said Class, with the manner in which they have been disposed of, and the Dates.

No.	NAMES.	Date of Admission into Teacher's Class.	Ages at said Period.	Schools last from.	How disposed of.	Dates of their leaving this Institution.
1.	Edward Lawler -	4 May - 1819	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	Castledermot	Sent as assistant master to the Foundling Hospital.	2 Feb. - 1824.
2.	William Smyth -	" - -	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	D° - -	To Shannon Grove, as usher.	10 Sept, - 1821
3.	James Ward -	5 D° - —	16	Monastereven	Transplanted to Castle-dermot school.	29 January 1820.
4.	Thomas Fleming -	" - -	14	D° - -	Remains in the institution,
5.	John Wadeson -	" - -	15	D° - -	To Ballynascannon, as schoolmaster.	6 July - 1822.
6.	William Spear -	6 D° - —	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Ardbraccan -	To Castledermot, as usher.	10 June - 1822.
7.	John Phillips -	" - -	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	D° - -	Remains in the institution.
8.	Samuel Connolly -	" - -	14 $\frac{1}{4}$	D° - -	D°.
9.	Patrick Galvan -	" - -	16 $\frac{3}{4}$	Clonmel -	To Cashel, as usher -	5 Feb. - 1824.
10.	John Gorman -	" - -	16	D° - -	To Longford, as usher	7 May - 1823.
11.	Benjamin Glover -	" - -	16	D° - -	Given to his parents -	6 Sept. - 1822.
12.	Thomas Keely -	" - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Sligo - -	To Thomastown, Kilkenny, as schoolmaster.	15 October 1821.
13.	Robert Robinson -	" - -	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	D° - -	In the hospital at Clontarf school.
14.	Michael Nelligan -	" - -	15	D° - -	Eloped - - -	4 June - 1819.
15.	Richard Smyth -	" - -	15	Farra - -	D° - - -	6 August 1821.
16.	Bartholomew Cooper -	" - -	16	D° - -	D° - - -	8 August 1819.
17.	Michael Doyle -	" - -	15	D° - -	D° - - -	5 June - 1819.
18.	Patrick Leonard -	7 D° - —	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	Strangford -	Remains in the institution.
19.	James Coffey -	" - -	16	D° - -	Eloped - - -	21 June - 1821.
20.	Robert Allen -	10 D° - —	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	Shannon Grove	Dismissed at his request.	12 Jan. - 1821.

No.	NAMES.	Date of Admission into Teacher's Class.	Ages at said Period.	Schools last from.	How disposed of.	Dates of their leaving this Institution.
21.	William M'Kinley	10 May - 1819	16 $\frac{3}{4}$	Shannon Grove	To Ross C. school, as usher (Newtown Ards.) Re-admitted 5 Jan. 1822; sent as P. C. and S. M. to Grey-abbey.	15 Oct. - 1821. 15 May - 1824.
22.	Michael Keely	" - -	16 $\frac{1}{4}$	D° - -	Remains in the institution.
23.	Robert Maddan	" - -	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	Longford -	To Ardnorcher, as parish clerk and school-master.	26 Sept. - 1824.
24.	Johnson Browne	" - -	16	D° - -	Eloped - - -	5 June - 1819.
25.	Patrick Gallagher	12 D° - -	15	Waterford -	D° - - -	22 August 1821.
26.	James Walsh	" - -	15 $\frac{3}{4}$	D° - -	Remains in the institution.
27.	George Gordon	" - -	16	Stradbally -	To Sligo, as usher -	7 May - 1823.
28.	Giles Sullivan	" - -	16	D° - -	Died of consumption	4 Dec. - 1821.
29.	Gerald Kennedy	" - -	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	Stradbally -	In the hospital at Clontarf school.
30.	George Cooper	13 D° - -	15	Cashel - -	Usher, school department in the institution.	12 May - 1824.
31.	Patrick Benson	17 D° - -	16	Dunmanway -	To Innishannon, as usher.	9 July - 1822.
32.	Charles Kelly	" - -	14	D° - -	Eloped - - -	7 June - 1819.
33.	James Halcro	25 D° - -	15	Ballykelly -	To Ardee, as school-master.	2 Oct. - 1822.
34.	John Brisland	25 D° - -	15	D° - -	Expelled for disobedience, &c.	3 Dec. - 1819.
35.	Hugh Anderson	26 D° - -	16	Ray - -	To Clontarf, as assistant usher.	8 Feb. - 1822.
36.	Daniel Mackey	" - -	17	D° - -	Expelled for absenting himself several times without leave.	30 May - 1821.
37.	Christopher Maddan	27 D° - -	18	Clontarf -	To Stradone, near Cavan, as schoolmaster	5 April - 1821.
38.	Henry Leonard	" - -	15 $\frac{1}{4}$	D° - -	Usher of candidate teacher's class.	12 May - 1824.
39.	John Cashill	" - -	16	D° - -	Eloped - - -	23 July - 1821.
40.	Patrick M'Namara	12 June - -	16	D° - -	To Castlebellingham, as schoolmaster.	15 Sept. - 1821.
41.	James Hall	" - -	16	D° - -	Given to his mother -	2 Nov. - 1819.
42.	Richard Pheris	23 July - -	16 $\frac{3}{4}$	Ross - -	To the Foundling Hospital, as assistant master.	10 May - 1824.
43.	William Rooney	" - -	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	D° - -	Given to his mother -	7 May - 1823.
44.	John Bradburne	4 October 1820	17	Ardbraccan -	Returned to Ardbraccan	18 Oct. - 1820.
45.	James Brookes	18 D° - -	16	Ross - -	Eloped - - -	2 August 1821.
46.	John Laihy	8 Nov. - -	19	Castlemartyr -	To Loughrea, as school-master.	19 Dec. - 1821.
47.	John White	" - -	12 $\frac{3}{4}$	Waterford -	Remains in the institution.
48.	James Leonard	9 D° - -	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	Clontarf -	Eloped and enlisted -	17 June - 1824.
49.	Robert Butler	11 D° - -	15	Dunmanway -	Eloped - - -	6 Jan. - 1822.
50.	William Doyle	6 Dec. - -	14 $\frac{3}{4}$	Innishannon -	D° - - -	2 July - 1821.
51.	Joseph Jenkins	7 Feb. - 1821	14	Castledermot -	Given to his friends -	2 Feb. - 1824.
52.	Matthew Reily	10 March -	14	Cashel - -	Expelled for stabbing a boy	7 Feb. - 1822.
53.	Dudley Adams	10 October -	15	Santry - -	Eloped - - -	26 Nov. - 1823.
54.	William Mullen	" - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	D° - -	D° - - -	4 May - 1823.
55.	Henry M'Cleland	20 D° - -	14	Longford -	D° - - -	24 Feb. - 1822.
56.	Edward Cochrane	24 D° - -	15	Shannon Grove	Remains in the institution.
57.	John Connolly	24 D° - -	14	Sligo - -	D°.
58.	Henry Griffith	7 Nov. - -	14	Dunmanway -	To Foundling Hospital, as assistant master.	11 Sept. - 1824.

No.	NAMES.	Date of Admission into Teacher's Class.	Ages at said Period	Schools last from.	How disposed of.	Dates of their leaving this Institution.
59.	Richard Griffith	7 Nov. - 1821	14	Waterford	Remains in the institution.
60.	John Burke	" - -	16	Castlemartyr	Eloped and enlisted	30 Dec. - 1823.
61.	John M'Cahey	14 D° - -	14	Stradbally	Remains in the institution.
62.	Francis Purcell	30 D° - -	15	Farra	D°.
63.	Joseph M'Namara	" - -	15	Clontarf	To Inniskeen, as parish clerk and schoolmaster.	25 Sept. - 1824.
64.	John Mahor	5 Dec. - -	14	Innishannon	Eloped - - -	17 June - 1824.
65.	William Healy	29 Dec. - -	16	Ardbraccan	Remains in the institution.
66.	John Browne	11 Feb. - 1822	17	Castledermot	To Dundalk, as schoolmaster	9 Sept. - 1824.
67.	Patrick Grinden	26 July - -	15	Farra	Remains in the institution.
68.	John Ryan	29 D° - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Innishannon	Eloped - - -	29 Dec. - 1822.
69.	Thomas Moyle	31 D° - -	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	Ross	Remains in the institution.
70.	Thomas Hurst	1 August - -	14	Longford	D°.
71.	John Cosgrave	12 D° - -	14	Clontarf	D°.
72.	Thomas Oates	2 Sept. - -	15	Waterford	D°.
73.	Michael Donohoe	29 D° - -	15	Castledermot	Apprenticed to John Robinson, Fisher's-lane, carpenter, 7 years.	12 Sept. - 1823.
74.	John Doyle	1 Nov. - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Sligo	Remains in the institution.
75.	James Stuart	18 D° - -	19	D°	To Gores Bridge, as schoolmaster.	13 Sept. - 1823.
76.	Thomas Cuzzins	29 August 1823	16	Santry	Remains in the institution.
77.	John Weldon	2 Oct. - -	16	Dunmanway	D°
78.	William Bartley	5 Feb. - 1824	18	Shannon Grove	D°.
79.	Edward Warren	7 June - -	16	Farra	D°.
80.	James Kearney	19 July - -	18	Ross	D°.
81.	William Lewis	" - -	14	D°	D°.
82.	Patrick Carroll	29 D° - -	17 $\frac{1}{2}$	Stradbally	D°.
83.	Matthew M'Donough	" - -	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	D°	D°.
84.	Thomas Balance	" - -	14	Clontarf	D°.
85.	Richard Spear	10 August - -	17 $\frac{1}{4}$	Ardbraccan	D°.
86.	William Delany	" - -	16	D°	D°.
87.	Michael Hoare	14 D° - -	15	Farra	D°.
88.	Richard Jessop	20 D° - -	15	Castledermot	D°.
89.	William M'Nabb	" - -	15	D°	D°.
90.	John Myers	8 Sept. - -	18	Cashel	D°.
91.	Samuel Myers	" - -	17	D°	D°.
92.	William Rea	12 D° - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Innishannon	D°.
93.	Henry Rea	" - -	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	D°	D°.
94.	Charles Byrne	5 Nov. - -	16	Longford	D°.
95.	Henry D'Arcey	" - -	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	D°	D°.

I certify this Return to be correct and true,

(Signed) Ja' Adamson, Sec.

ABSTRACT of the above List of Children admitted into the Teacher's Class.

Number admitted in each Year.				How disposed of.
Admitted in 1819	-	-	43	Eloped	-	-	19
— 1820	-	-	7	Sent out as masters to schools	-	-	12
— 1821	-	-	15	— as parish clerk and schoolmaster	-	-	2
— 1822	-	-	10	— as ushers to charter schools	-	-	8
— 1823	-	-	2	— as ushers in this institution	-	-	2
— 1824	-	-	18	Given up to parents	-	-	5
				Apprenticed	-	-	1
				Died	-	-	1
				Expelled	-	-	3
				In hospital at Clontarf	-	-	2
				Remaining in institution	-	-	40
Total - - 95				Total - - 95

Appendix, N° 135.

Examination of the Honourable Colonel Gore, on Oath; Thursday, 20th January 1825.

Examination of
The
Hon. Colonel Gore,
20 Jan. 1825.

YOU lived for some time near Santry?—Yes; and am a member of the Incorporated Society.

Were you one of the committee of fifteen?—No.

You lived near the charter school at Santry?—Yes.

Did you ever take any particular interest in the manner in which that institution was conducted?—Yes, I wished to change the mode of pronunciation of the Irish, and I went to the school to instruct the children in pronouncing with the English accent.

Had you in that way an opportunity of seeing how that institution was conducted?—Yes, I had.

For what period of time were you in the habit of paying visits to that institution?—As well as I recollect, I was there 90 or 100 times.

In what years?—I cannot remember, some years ago, perhaps two or three years ago.

Were you personally acquainted with any of the boys during the course of those visits?—I knew all the boys under my particular instruction, there were fourteen.

Did any of them ever become servants in your family?—Yes.

What number?—One of them, I do not think he turned out well.

Were you obliged to part with him?—The one I had robbed me.

Was there any one before that you were obliged to part with?—I do not think I had any from the charter school at Santry as a servant, but one.

Had you from any other schools?—I had, but not from the charter schools.

Do you know from what schools they came?—I had not any other from the charter schools, but from the school for educating soldiers children.

Did he turn out well?—No, he was not a pleasant boy to have, and I got rid of him as soon as his time was out.

What was the nature of his unpleasantness?—They are generally careless of their master's interest, and not inclined to do what they might.

Had you ever any other children educated in a charity boarding school?—I have one at present educated at Santry, and he behaves very well.

Are you acquainted with any persons who have or have had servants educated in charter schools?—The Bishop of Kildare had a servant from the foundling hospital, but he did not turn out well. Not from the charter school.

The Bishop of Kildare is a near relative of yours?—He is my brother in law.

Had he more than one from the charter schools?—Yes; but I do not know of any more than that one that behaved ill.

What was the nature of his ill behaviour?—He robbed him.

Are you acquainted with any other instances, in which charter school boys have become servants?—I have heard complaints about them, but cannot particularize them.

Have you any general opinion in your mind, whether the tendency of the education in the charter schools is likely to render the boys valuable members of society?—I wished to introduce a system of my own, into the school at Santry, and to have bred them up as good agriculturists and horticulturists, and to give them some opportunity of learning handicrafts; and I gave to the committee a plan of that scheme, with a minute detail of the expenses. I thought we should have produced a better set of people to have gone into society, than those that were sent in; I disapproved also of locking them up in the charter schools, as those that happened not to be made apprentices, were thrown into society without knowing any body, except their schoolfellows, and consequently were, in all probability, preyed on by somebody who robbed them of the 5*l.* granted them by the Society, at their departure.

Did you find that the charter school servants, in your opinion, were more ignorant when they came to you, than you think boys of the same age, educated in any other manner were?—They are any thing but ignorant; they are admirably well educated, particularly in the Scriptures, as you see by the testimony of the Rev. Lewis Way, recorded in the books of the Santry school. They are very tolerable arithmeticians, and a few draughts-men; and perhaps better instructed in the Scriptures than the generality of boys you meet with.

How then do you account for it, that the boys instructed so well in the great fundamentals of religion, should have turned out so ill?—We cannot account for that; I never heard anybody that could; you might as well account for the cause of the ill conduct of boys educated at Harrow, Westminster or Eton, or why evil exists in the world.

Do you not think there are some predisposing causes?—I could never find them out; I had access to the school at Santry, and totally managed it, and directed it as I pleased; and built a wall to have the horticultural experiment tried; but the reason it was not adopted was, that it was contrary to the charter, otherwise the committee would have adopted it.

Can you say in what manner it was contrary to the charter?—They told me it was; I never read the charter; I do not understand why the charter should stand in the way of improvement.

Do the boys who become servants, so far as your observation has extended, agree well with their fellow servants?—In my experience, I think they agree very well with the Roman Catholic servants; they used to read the Scriptures to the Roman Catholic cook, and other servants of that persuasion; and I thought that one of the most important uses they could be of in a family.

Do you think they were held in as much estimation by their fellow servants as other servants?—No, nor any charity child; it lowers them in the estimation of their fellow servants.

Can you account for it in any way?—No, except that it is because the Roman Catholics are desirous of throwing a slur on them, for having been educated in a religion contrary to their own.

Was Mr. Devine the master at that time?—Yes.

Did he appear attentive to his duties?—Perfectly; he is an honest conscientious man; if you examine him, you will find he will give you valuable information; he was partly educated under them.

Upon the whole we collect your impression is, that the charter school system does tend to form good moral habits?—Yes, no doubt; I cannot account for the charter schools not producing general moral habits every where, because I think, I never saw boys so conversant in the Scriptures; and I do not know what can produce such habits better than the Scriptures.

Do you allude to charter schools generally?—Yes; Dr. Murray of the Foundling Hospital, one of the best men in the country, and most learned divine, attends a yearly catechetical examination, held by direction of the Association for Discountenancing Vice, and he reports highly of the answers the pupils give.

Do you recollect who was catechist at Santry at the time you were in the habit of visiting it?—I think the Rev. Mr. Long.

Was he attentive to his duties?—I found him there very often; almost always.

Do you think the acquaintance of the children with the Scriptures goes beyond mere head knowledge of the Scriptures?—Yes; as the system adopted in their instruction, is that of conversational interrogatory, the intellectual faculties are developed, and a sound knowledge thereby acquired.

What was the age of the boy you dismissed?—Fifteen.

Do you include him in the description you give of the religious knowledge of the children?—He was a very heavy stupid boy.

Was he well acquainted with the Scriptures?—Yes, they all are.

Could you mention to us the names of any boys who have turned out well, who have been educated in a charter school?—Yes; the boy I had to take down the words that were mispronounced, William M'Kinley, I got him appointed to some school as usher.

How long is it since you had him appointed usher?—About two years.

Are you acquainted with the institution for the training of candidate teachers at the Santry school?—These were the persons I instructed.

You are speaking of the candidate teachers?—Yes; they are very conversant with the Scriptures.

Had those two persons who became servants in your family been candidate teachers?—One of them was; the man that is with me now was not.

Was the candidate teacher the person who turned out so ill?—Yes; but he was a very stupid fellow.

Can you say what induced a person, who had been destined for a candidate teacher, to accept the situation of a menial servant?—Because his intellectual qualifications were not sufficient.

Is it not understood that those persons selected, are the best in the charter schools?—Yes; but persons may be careless in the selection.

What is your opinion as to the merits of that particular part of the charter school system we are now speaking of; the school for training candidate teachers?—I thought the theory admirable.

Do you know how they have turned out?—No.

Do they not consider it a promotion to be admitted into that institution?—Yes, certainly.

Did you ever hear of any elopements of candidate teachers from the institution?—No, never.

Should you think it possible?—It may be possible, but I think improbable.

Why so?—Because they look forward to higher situations in life; they are taught the mathematics and higher branches of literature, and drawing of maps.

We would wish to apprize you, in point of fact, that in the last six years, no fewer than nineteen candidate teachers have eloped from Santry; we should beg to know, whether you can in any way account for that which is obviously a very improbable result, and one we have great difficulty to understand?—With respect to the boys elopements, I should be inclined to put it down to bad treatment and bad clothing; but from my experience, I do not think there was any thing of that kind.

We are speaking of elopements from the institution of candidate teachers?—That is under Mr. Devine.

Nineteen of those teachers have eloped, and three have been expelled in the time specified?—I cannot account for it.

Should you suppose that any system of administration that would induce twenty-two in six years to be disposed of in the manner now suggested, can be such a system as would produce a beneficial effect upon those who did not elope?—It appears to me not; certainly that is too great a proportion to have turned out ill.

Have you had any opportunity of observing how far charter school children are addicted to truth or falsehood; whether more or less than other children; whether their knowledge

Examination of
The
Hon. Colonel Gore.
20 Jan. 1825.

of the Scriptures induces an adherence to truth?—I fancy they are the same as others. The unfortunate fellow that robbed me would also lie.

Was the servant who robbed the Bishop of Kildare, a candidate teacher?—I rather think not.

Can you mention the name of any other individual besides the one you have mentioned, who became an usher, who has turned out well in life, and who was educated at a charter school?—I think there was one I sent to the East Indies; I cannot say, exactly, how he has turned out since.

In what capacity?—As a private soldier.

What induced you to take that step?—I thought him a very fine fellow; and I thought it the best course I could adopt, as he was unemployed.

How old was he?—Seventeen or eighteen.

Was he a candidate teacher?—I cannot recollect; I am certain he was.

Appendix, N° 136.

Examination of Mr. Andrew M'Ghee, on Oath; Friday, 3d December 1824.

Mr.
Andrew M'Ghee,
3 Dec. 1824.

DID you ever fill the situation of usher in any of the charter schools?—In Santry I did.

Were you ever in any other school than Santry?—Never.

How long were you there?—Four years, and a little more.

When did you leave it?—The latter end of April last.

What persons held the situation of masters of Santry school, during the period you were usher there?—Only one, Mr. Devine.

Was the same person catechist during the time you were there?—Yes, Mr. Long.

Were you acquainted with the rules for the management of the charter schools?—In part I was. The fact was, I had not a copy of the rules (though I applied to Mr. Devine for them), until latterly. I was well aware of the substance of the rules; they may not be all accurately impressed on my memory.

Did you leave the school voluntarily, or were you dismissed?—No, voluntarily.

Do you keep a school now?—Yes, a parish school; St. Peter's parochial school.

Were the rules for the management of the charter schools correctly followed in the school at Santry when you were there?—They were not.

In what respect were they deviated from?—The master did not conform to the rules.

In what respect did he not conform to them?—Absence from his school, and neglect of the education of the boys.

Was he ever absent for a long time together from the institution?—Not when I was there; he has been absent at different times two or three days together, but then I believe he attended fairs to purchase cattle.

Had he leave to be absent from the committee of fifteen, when he was so?—I do not know.

Do you mean, he did not attend regularly in the school to instruct the boys?—Yes, that is what I mean.

What attendance used he to give in the school to instruct the boys?—None whatever, with the exception of half a dozen times, I believe, in the course of four years.

By whom were the candidate teachers instructed?—They were instructed by me when there; at present I do not know by whom they are instructed.

Was there any other usher than yourself?—At first there was another, for a short time.

Can one usher instruct the boys and the candidate teachers?—The candidate teachers are employed as teachers or monitors for the juvenile classes.

Was it the form of the school that the usher taught the candidate teachers, and the candidate teachers the boys?—Yes.

Were the rules deviated from in any other respect than the non-attendance of the master in the school?—There might be a deviation in the dietary.

Can you remember that there was?—Yes, I do, in the article of broth; it was supplied at supper, when it should, I believe, have been given at dinner.

Was that constant?—Latterly, it was. At first it was not uniform and constant; latterly it was.

In the dieting of the boys, did they deviate from the rules of the dietary in any other respect than that?—I do not know exactly, except in the article of milk; they might supply butter-milk when new milk was required.

Did they deliver the proper quantity of clothing to the boys?—Yes.

Is the usher in a charter school in a situation, that makes it dangerous for him to state it to the master, if he sees any thing going decidedly wrong?—Very dangerous to himself; as long as he remains he will have a miserable life. It is a most wretched occupation if he does not always act conformably to the will of the master in every instance, if he is not his slave.

Is a complaint, either from the usher or any servant, or any of the boys, looked upon by the master as an unpardonable offence in a charter school?—In the eye of the master it is; he will remember it, and he will load the person making the complaint with as much oppression as he possibly can.

Who

Who punished the boys when they committed faults; were they punished by you or the master?—By both; I have corrected them, and the master.

Was there any undue severity of punishment in the school on the part of the master?—There might be occasionally, but not excessive.

You have said, that the ushers of charter schools are in a very painful situation, I would ask you, whether you think the boys are also?—They feel so; and from the number of elopements, I should think it is the case.

What are the peculiarities which, in your mind, distinguish the charter school education from that of other schools?—The system is very good, I think, but it is abused; it is owing to the very great abuse. I think it was a well conceived thing at first, but the boys are constantly in dread of severe punishment being inflicted from the master.

Why in charter schools do they dread severe punishment by the master more than in common schools?—Because the master has the complete ascendancy and controul over the boys. There is no person to look after them and intercede for them; he may use what cruelty he pleases towards them, without the fear of detection, or of being brought to any account. If the local committee and catechist, however, did their duty, that would be prevented.

Do the boys know of the existence of certain rules, that it is the duty of the master to comply with?—They do not; they merely know, I believe, that such rules do exist; but they are studiously kept from them, though, I believe, it is a standing order in the rule book, that they should be read once a week, or once a month. I have never seen that put in practice at Santry.

You never knew them read whilst you were there?—No.

Was there no board stuck up containing the dietary?—Yes, there was in the dining hall; and, I believe, the master had a desire to keep the rules even from me. I was in his office when he was paying a little money, and I took up the book, and asked him to lend it me, but he would not.

Did you ever apply to the secretary for a copy of the book?—No.

If you had known the rules, and had perceived there was an habitual violation of them, circumstanced as you were, would you have ventured to complain?—I would not; I went too far that way, and was persecuted even for doing so.

How far did you venture to go?—If I saw any thing amiss in the dining hall; if the dietary was not acted upon, I might freely express myself in the presence of the boys; bad broth, bad potatoes, or the milk; and this would be communicated to the master or mistress, for he always retains a few to act as spies; and every thing that passes is communicated. The master and mistress and I were not on good terms; and the reason was, I should think, because I acted rather too independent a part.

Did you ever know any instances of an undue partiality in the school, in providing apprenticeships and situations for boys?—I have; very undue partiality.

What means did the boys take unduly to ingratiate themselves with the master?—By being serviceable; attending to the horses and the farm, and driving the car and other like services.

Were there any other means than those?—Conveying information to the master of what was going on.

Have you known instances of boys being provided by the master with situations, in preference to others, who ought not to have had that advantage?—Yes; I have known one boy appointed as usher who was not at all qualified, he was quite ignorant; and others who were qualified, were rejected, because they did not render themselves useful.

Has the master much land in his hands?—Thirty acres, I believe.

Was the moral conduct of the boys good in the school, or had you any occasion to find fault?—I have never heard them openly swear, there were some petty thefts committed.

Have you been able to observe how the boys turn out that are educated in charter schools?—Yes; I have had an opportunity of knowing from those who have been apprenticed in Dublin; in general they do not turn out well, but very ill.

Do you state that of your own observation and knowledge?—I do; I know many instances of it.

Do you remember two boys of the names of Allen and Mackay?—Yes.

Were they candidate teachers?—Yes.

Do you know what became of them?—Allen enlisted; Mackay entered the police for a time, but he lost it, I believe, from neglect of duty, and he enlisted also.

Can you assign any reason why they should give up the advantages they had in view, as candidate teachers?—No, I cannot.

Were those boys favourites of Mr. Devine?—No, they were not favourites.

Do you remember a boy of the name of Leonard?—Yes; there were three of that name.

Do you know what became of them?—One of them enlisted.

Was he a candidate teacher?—He was.

Do you remember any quarrel between Leonard and Mr. Devine?—No.

Were you there when the boys presented any complaint to the committee of fifteen or Mr. Thackeray; were you aware of that circumstance?—No; when I was there, they did prefer a complaint to Mr. Thackeray, complaining of the diet.

That was five years ago?—About four, I believe.

That was on his personal visitation?—Yes.

Was it made out to the satisfaction of Mr. Thackeray? It was not explicit. Mr. Thackeray expostulated with the boys, and hushed it.

Examination of
Mr.
Andrew M'Ghee,
3 Dec. 1824.

The boys did make their complaint to Mr. Thackeray?—Yes.

Do you remember how the expostulation took place; what was the nature of it; did you hear it yourself?—Yes; but I do not remember it exactly; he reasoned with them, and told them how happy they should feel, how well they were provided for, and that they should not be overwilling to take advantages of trifles, so as to injure an individual.

Meaning the master of the establishment?—Yes.

Do you know, from your own knowledge, whether this complaint of the boys was well or ill founded?—It is a long time since; I should think, if there was not a cause, they would not prefer a complaint.

You have no distinct recollection of the cause?—They did not get a proper allowance of bread, nor of a proper quality.

Did you ever know the boys apt to complain without a just cause?—No, never.

Did you ever know them have a just cause without complaining?—Yes, I have.

What do you think is the effect of the system of the charter school education upon the minds and dispositions of the boys?—It is calculated to demoralize their minds; the Bible is made too familiar, so familiar that I have seen it used in the little house; I have detected it in three or four instances, and I have held out some encouragement, both encouragement and punishment to any of the boys who would tell me of those who were guilty of it; the Bible is too familiar, it is not at all respected in the charter schools, it is generally prostituted.

Does the religious instruction they receive in charter schools make serious impressions upon their hearts or feelings, or do you think it is a mere system of question and answer?—Merely question and answer; there may be a solitary instance where the heart has been touched; I have known one good boy at Santry, and if he had been placed in any other school it would have been the same.

Is the effect of the education such as to render them useful members of society?—It is not; I think quite otherwise, though the charter schools profess to be seminaries of religion and industry, they are quite the contrary, as far as my experience goes.

Have you formed those opinions from what you have yourself seen and observed in the charter schools?—From general report, and my own experience.

Does the school at Santry give an usher a better opportunity of judging of the effect of the charter schools than any other school?—I think it does; for this reason, they have there boys from every part, and every charter school, there are two or three from each, and when they are removed, they are communicative, and they tell what was practised in their respective schools.

Are those boys advanced to such a period of life that their judgments are in some degree ripened?—They are, I think.

Are they generally selected from the schools on account of their superior merit?—I should think not, from the very great ignorance I have found in the boys sent up as candidates.

Ought they not to have been selected on account of their merits?—Yes.

And they profess to be so?—Yes; that was one of the conditions, "superior merit."

Is the education such as to give them facilities in answering questions from the catechism, and on a chapter in the Testament, but which leaves them extremely ignorant of all the general concerns of life?—The Bible and the farm monopolize so much of their time, that they cannot devote attention to any thing else; they are extremely ignorant of every thing else but the Scriptures, and often extremely ignorant of that too.

Is it easy to find masters for the boys educated in the charter schools, or is there a prejudice against them?—Indeed I think there is a prejudice against them, and those that do apply for apprentices as tradesmen, it is in expectation of a fee.

Have you observed that the boys are desirous of concealing they have been in charter schools when they leave them?—They are, I think, if they possibly can.

Is it supposed that the masters of the schools make a very large emolument?—It is.

Is it out of the contract for the supply of the boys with meat and clothing?—They have only the contract for the food at present.

By what means do they make large emoluments?—The food, and the farm, and the labour of the boys.

Appendix, N° 137.

Examination of Mr. Francis Devine, on Oath; Tuesday 28th December 1824.

Mr.
Francis Devine,
28 Dec. 1824.

YOU are master of the school at Santry?—Yes.

How long have you been there?—Nearly six years.

You came from Shannon Grove school?—Yes.

Were you master or usher there?—Usher.

Was the Santry school put upon the system of teaching candidates for schools, before you came to it?—No; I was the first master under the new system.

Are there two parts of the school; one intended for the education of candidate teachers, selected from schools throughout the country, and the other conducted upon the usual system?—Yes.

Do the teachers instruct the boys, or by whom are the boys instructed?—There is a teacher for each class. The school is divided into four classes according to the number; the numbers numbers vary. There is a candidate teacher to each class; they also have an usher, and sometimes not.

Under whose instruction are the candidate teachers?—They are supposed to be under the instruction of the master or usher, one or other of them.

Is this list a correct account of the number of boys who have been admitted from the different charter schools, from the beginning of the institution?—[A paper was handed to the witness.]—It is as far as I am aware.

Does this also contain an account of the mode in which the several boys have been disposed of?—It does.

[A list was produced, containing ninety-five names.]

It appears that of the 95, nineteen have eloped, that twelve have been sent out as ushers to charter schools, two as parish clerks and schoolmasters, eight as ushers to other schools, and two retained as ushers in this institution?—There is one at present only, the other has been appointed to a school near Enniskillen.

That five have been given up to their parents, one apprenticed, one died, three have been expelled, two are in the hospital at Clontarf for their health, and thirty-nine remaining in the institution?—Yes.

Is that, or nearly so, a correct statement?—It is; there are thirty-nine remaining.

Can you give an explanation, why in an institution like yours, so large a number as nineteen should have eloped in that period?—No; a number of the boys when they were brought there expected they would be sent off very soon as teachers, and when they found they were not sent off as soon as they expected, they were disappointed, and they wished to get into the world. Some of them were bad boys and would not be content any where.

Is it not understood that the boys selected from the different schools, are those who have the best character?—That was the rule.

Do you think that rule has not been adhered to in the selection of the boys?—I cannot say as to that.

Who are they selected by?—By the local committee and the catechist at an examination; they should be the best, certainly.

From the specimens of the boys brought to your school, do they appear to be in disposition and attainments, the best boys?—My knowledge of other schools does not go far enough to enable me to answer that.

Must not the other boys be excessively bad if those are the best?—Yes.

As those are selected as the best, do you not conceive those left behind must be very bad?—Certainly.

Besides the nineteen boys in the list who have eloped, do you know a boy of the name of William Atkins, not in this list?—He is one of the lower boys.

He did not come under the head of candidate teacher?—No.

Was William Holly a candidate teacher?—No, never.

James Mulry?—No.

Do you know what became of those three boys?—I heard that Holly has been transported, and Mulry I sent to his mother in England. Mulry was apprenticed to a Mr. White, a wine-merchant, and he misbehaved. He wished to get him put back to the school; that could not be allowed. He was unwilling to keep the boy any longer, and applied to the lord mayor to have the indentures cancelled, and the boy sent to Bridewell.

Those were boys in the lower school?—Yes. I do not know what became of Atkins. He was apprenticed to a shoemaker, who failed. I do not know what became of him ultimately.

Did you hear he was transported?—No.

Were those boys of decent character when they left you?—They were.

Do you remember Edward Hagan?—Yes; he was a schoolboy; he was apprenticed to some person on the Quay, and stayed a very short time, and eloped.

Do you remember anything of Henry Kelly and Owen Spencer?—Yes; Kelly was ordered, at his own request, as a servant to me, and after he was a short time with me, he became discontented and was not satisfied; he complained of the clothing. I allowed him a certain sum to clothe himself; he went on for some time contented, and then wanted more, which I refused, and then he left me and enlisted.

Thomas Doyle, what became of him?—He was apprenticed to me; he was a very short time under my care.

Did he elope?—Yes.

Was he a Roman Catholic or a Protestant?—A Roman Catholic.

And returned to it?—I have heard he did.

Who was William Griffin?—One of the lower class also.

Did he turn out well?—No, very badly.

Thomas Jones, William Wilson, and Matthew Foy, what became of those?—Thomas Jones, I have understood, was doing well in his place; William Wilson was apprenticed, and left his place and came to Dublin.

On what ground?—I do not know; the last time I saw him he was employed as a waiter in some tavern. Matthew Foy was apprenticed to Mr Boyle, the master of the school at Celbridge, and behaved very badly there, and eloped.

Peter Wade and Christopher Stevens?—Wade was a boy that bore a very good character in the school; he was apprenticed and left his place, I know nothing more of him.

What became of Christopher Stevens?—I have very little recollection of him.

You remember there was such a boy?—Yes.

Examination of
Mr.
Francis Devine,
28 Dec. 1824.

Do you know what became of him?—He was apprenticed.

Did he turn out well?—He was apprenticed to a gentleman, and I believe turned out badly.

John Cathcart?—He was apprenticed to a tradesman; the last time I heard of him was from his master, who said he was discontented, but still with him.

How often was he bound?—He was ordered to be apprenticed previous to this, as a servant, but before the indenture was signed he became sorry, and was allowed to return to the school, and was not apprenticed.

Do you know, besides these, any other cases of boys from the lower school who have been apprenticed and left their places, to whom their education has been of little service?—I do not recollect others at present; the most part of those were apprenticed at a great distance from the school, and any information I had was incidental.

Whose concern is it to bind, or to see that those boys are bound to proper masters?—When a boy is apprenticed in Dublin, there is a man of the name of Rickey, who goes to see if the place is proper; there is also a printed form of application, to be signed by the minister and churchwardens of the parish, and that application states the master to be a proper person, that he neither sells malt or spirituous liquors, and that he is of the established religion; and if this appears to be correct, and is signed by the clergyman and churchwardens of the parish, the child is ordered.

Who acts in the place of Rickey in the country parts?—There is no one; it depends upon the clergyman of the parish and the churchwardens, it would be impracticable in most instances.

The boys never go upon liking, they are always bound at once?—Yes; if they had been allowed to go out in that way they would have returned to the school, there is scarcely a boy of them who would not have been anxious to get back.

Appendix, N° 138.

Further Examination of Mr. Francis Devine, on Oath; Thursday, 30th of December 1824.

Mr.
Francis Devine,
30 Dec. 1824.

DO you remember what became of the two boys, Allen and Mackay?—Allen was dismissed at his own request, and enlisted in the East India Company's service; Mackay, for the same purpose, applied repeatedly at the depôt to get enlisted, and was absent without leave several days, and was reported to the board, and dismissed; he got into the police, and remained there several months, and was dismissed, and then entered into the East India service.

Can you account in any way for those boys foregoing all the advantages of their education, and pursuing this course?—Their anxious wish to get into the world, and not being willing to wait till situations offered.

Do you find that feeling generally prevail among the boys?—Yes, many of them have been a great number of years in the other school, and when the find they cannot get situations out of the institution, they become discontented. They hope to be provided in six, eight or ten months, and some of them have remained nearly six years; they are not at all fit, from their size or appearance, to go to situations. There was a clergyman applied some time ago, who wanted a clerk and schoolmaster; he would not take the oldest of them, he thought his appearance too boyish.

Do you think the school likely to answer in the end, for the production of parish clerks and masters for different parts of the kingdom?—I think some of them would turn out well.

Do you think the system itself is likely to answer?—I fear it is not.

Can you give any reason for it?—I think the reason is, some are too young, and they are in consequence obliged to stay too long. They have been so long in the schools they are anxious to get out. We have some that have been eighteen years under the Society; and a boy at that time is anxious to get into the world.

Do you think, with all that anxiety to get into the world, he is prepared to meet it, from the course of education he has undergone?—Indeed I think he is not; he wants that steadiness, and knowledge of the world, which he can never derive from a school.

Do you think that ignorance is a fault of the system?—I cannot call it a fault of the system; I think it must necessarily arise, inasmuch as the children are shut out from all intercourse with the world.

Do any means occur to you, by which the system could be altered as to the training school?—Yes; if they could be taken in at the age of eighteen, or a little older, and not remain so long, they would do better. We have had some instances in which the boys came in more grown, and were sooner sent out.

If a boy cannot get out now, who has been in the school six years, what means would he then have of getting out sooner?—If he were older coming in, he would have a better chance; some of the boys come in at fifteen or sixteen, and must remain a longer time than those that come in at eighteen or nineteen.

Had you not some boys brought in at first, seventeen or eighteen years old?—Yes.

And are they not there still?—Yes.

Though they began upon the system you now recommend?—Yes, some of them were of that age.

And yet they stay with you?—Yes.

In 409

Examination of
Mr.
Francis Devine,
30 Dec. 1824.

In those instances that practice has not answered?—In some of the schools the boys are not so grown at seventeen or eighteen, as you would expect.

Do you think the charter school boys generally, are as well grown, and as large of limb, as other boys in similar situations in the world?—No, I think they are not.

Can you account for that in any way?—I believe the only reason is, that they are not allowed so much exercise in the open air; some of them have been employed in spinning and knitting, and things of that sort, which of course prevents their growth. It is so in all manufactories where young children are employed.

What is the state of your school with respect to illness?—We have none in the infirmary.

Had you any children from the Foundling Hospital this year?—Yes, forty.

Did they introduce the ophthalmia?—Yes, very generally; it passed through the school.

Who is your medical attendant?—Messrs. Craven and Nichols, of Dawson-street.

Have you any ophthalmia now in the school?—Yes, there are three or four instances, but very trifling; there is one, a boy of the name of Connelly, always subject to it; he is at present under the care of surgeon Macklin.

Did you find it more distressing this year than usual?—Yes, much more so.

What instruction do those Santry candidate teachers get, what are they taught?—The candidate teachers are instructed in geography and English grammar, English history, and some branches of mathematics, in addition to the usual education.

You have said, that you and your usher were supposed to attend to them; who does, in fact, attend to them?—There is very little attention at present; the upper class attend to the lower; there is no usher at present.

How long have they been without an usher; who was the last regular usher?—Mr. Eustace was the last; he was there six weeks; the last regular usher was Andrew M'Ghee.

When did he leave?—He left some time in the month of April.

Upon his going, who supplied his place as usher?—The upper class supplied his place till the middle of May, when there were two appointed, one for the school, and one for the candidate teachers. Leonard, one of the teachers, was appointed in the month of May.

Did Mr. M'Ghee teach the candidate teachers and the lower class?—No, only the candidate teachers.

Upon his going away, Henry Leonard was appointed to the candidate teachers?—Yes.

He being one of them?—Yes.

Was it by a regular appointment of the board?—Yes, on the 12th of May.

How old was he at that time?—About 20 years of age.

How long did he stay in that situation?—Till some time in August, as well as I recollect.

Was he competent to discharge the duty of his situation?—He certainly was.

What became of him?—He was appointed to a school at Tubrid, near Enniskillen.

Who was appointed at the same time to the lower class?—George Cooper.

When Henry Leonard left the candidate teachers class, as usher, who succeeded him?—None, for some time.

How long was there a vacancy from the 12th of August, when he left, before any other person was appointed?—Better than two months; I think till the latter end of October; Mr. Eustace then came.

Did Mr. Eustace come to you from Stradbally?—He came from Stradbally to Dublin; he was there some days.

Did he come to you before he was appointed?—No, he did not; he came to the office and was in lodgings, and applied to the board by memorial.

Did he not come to your house first, and you go with him to the board?—Certainly not.

Did you not go with him to the board?—After he was appointed.

Not before?—No.

Were the committee of fifteen aware there was no usher in the school during that period?—They were, certainly.

Had you given them regular information?—Yes.

Is there any entry in the minutes to that effect?—No, I rather think it was by letter.

Mr. Eustace was some days in town before he was sent to Santry.

Are these reports regularly transmitted to the board?—Yes they are, every Wednesday; there is an entry in the book on the 16th of August, to that effect.

During the time, from August till November, when Mr. Eustace came, by whom were the candidate teachers instructed?—By some of the upper class.

Did you ever assist them at their studies?—Not latterly; nothing more than a general superintendence.

Between August and Mr. Eustace's appointment, did you take any part?—Not more than seeing that they attended to their business.

Is Mr. Eustace with you now?—No, he has not been there during some weeks; he was dismissed early in December.

How long did Mr. M'Ghee stay with you?—Nearly four years.

During the time he was with you, what part did he take?—His duty was to instruct the candidate teachers.

Did you take any part during that time in the instruction?—In the early part I did.

How much do you think?—For the first two years I assisted.

Do you mean, you were in the school daily?—Not every day, but occasionally; and instructed the higher classes, and examined them more than the school boys.

Examination of
Mr.
Francis Devine,
30 Dec. 1824.

Were you there once a week amongst them?—Yes, I think I was, much more.

Do you mean, it was a regular part of your daily business?—No; because there was an immensity of other business to attend to.

What was your other occupation?—I had the farm to manage, and take care of the supply of the whole establishment. I got the farm in the most wretched state. Those teachers who instructed the classes, I found, after the first year or two, were not paying proper attention to the boys; and for the last three years I allowed each teacher, who had charge of a class, half a crown a month, as a reward.

Out of your own pocket?—Yes; to the amount of £.20.

To supply the place of an usher?—Yes; if there had been an usher, it would not have cost me that.

Do you conceive they are making progress during all this time without a teacher?—Not so much as if they had one; the great business of the teacher is, to see that they attend to their studies.

Does Mr. Long attend very regularly?—Yes.

Does he catechise whenever he comes?—Not always; the report book states accurately whatever he does.

He appears very seldom to catechise, according to this report?—Whatever is there, is the fact.

Mr. Courtenay seems to examine them more particularly?—Yes, he is the curate.

Does he come to supply the place of Mr. Long?—No; Mr. Brown the rector is very anxious about the school; and when he was in the country, took an active part in their scriptural instruction, and wished Mr. Courtenay to continue it.

How long has Mr. Long been the catechist?—Before I was appointed, he was catechist; I cannot say how long before.

Are the regulations of the Society read in your school?—No.

Have they ever been read since you have been there?—No.

Neither by the catechist or yourself?—Not publicly.

You know that is required monthly?—Yes.

Have you a copy of them?—Yes.

Have you any reason to state why it has not been done?—No, I have not; nor would I have the slightest objection to having it done.

You are aware of the rules of the Society, and that it has not been done?—I am.

Do you know whether, by the rules, the master is prohibited having any dealing with the catechist?—Yes.

Notwithstanding that, have you not had dealings with Mr. Long?—Very trifling.

Have you not had dealings with him for potatoes?—Yes; better than five years ago I bought some from him.

And for corn?—No; from his father I bought corn.

Have you bought hay of him?—Not from himself, from his father.

What is his father?—He is a magistrate, and has a farm within three miles of the school.

Is he one of the local committee?—No.

Does Mr. Long assist, or in any way superintend at his father's house?—No; he has a separate establishment altogether.

You never dealt with Mr. Long the catechist, for any thing else than potatoes?—No; and that was very shortly after I went to the institution.*

How long is it since you have had any dealings with him of any sort?—Not in the last four years, except as above stated; but I have bought oats, and hay, and potatoes, from his father. I have bought hay at his auction the same as any other person.

Do you remember, at the time Mr. Thackeray visited, there was a complaint made as to the diet?—Yes.

And that Mr. Thackeray was satisfied it was substantiated?—He was satisfied that it was groundless; that there was no ground whatever for it.

Are you sure he said there was no ground for that complaint?—I am pretty sure.

Are you sure he said that he was satisfied that that complaint was groundless?—I reason from this; Mr. Thackeray stated the charges to the board before he examined into them, he had got them anonymously, and before he went to inquire into them, he stated to the board he had heard such and such charges. Doctor Elrington, who had taken an active part in getting me the appointment, was extremely displeased with me some time after. I asked him, had he seen Mr. Thackeray's report on the complaint; and he said, yes; and so completely had that report done away his previous impression, that he would not have thought of it, if I had not mentioned it.

Is this the only time any complaint has ever been made with respect to meat or bread?—No; there was a complaint once after that, as to the milk.

Not of the bread?—No.

Did they never complain of the bread?—Yes, latterly, within the last two months.

Before this twelvemonth?—No, never.

There

* On reading over this evidence the witness desired to state, that since giving this answer he recollects having bought a cow and two pigs from Mr. Long. This, he says, had escaped his memory at the time of his examination.

Examination of
Mr.
Francis Devine,
30 Dec. 1824.

There was never a complaint made of the badness of the meat, except that one time when Mr. Thackeray visited?—Never, that I heard of.

Do you ever remember the children prevented going to church for want of shoes?—Yes.

Has application been made to the committee of fifteen for shoes?—Yes.

Do you know the reason they have not been sent?—The contractor had not them ready.

Did Mr. Thackeray visit more than once, when you were there?—Yes.

Twice or three times?—More than that.

Did he visit before any entry was made in this book?—He visited before my time; he sometimes visited it and did not enter any report; when the institution was forming, he was there almost every day.

Did you ever have two boys there in a state of idiotcy—what became of them?—They were sent to the House of Industry.

Have you any boys now in that state?—There is one from Sligo; they say he is an idiot. I cannot say whether he is or not; he is not very sharp, he is rather silly, certainly; as to one of those boys sent to the House of Industry, the idiotcy was produced by epileptic fits.

What do you pay per acre for your land?—Thirty-seven pounds four shillings and nine pence, I pay altogether.

How many acres?—About thirty acres.

You found it in a very bad state?—Yes.

Can you tell what it is worth fairly in its present state per acre?—It is worth double as much as when I got it.

What was it worth when you got it, in the condition in which it was?—I think it would have been very dear at 30s. an acre.

You think it now worth 3*l.*?—Yes; it is owing to what I laid out on it; a single field, not over five and half acres, cost me 25*l.* to drain.

You have been absent for a month, were you absent with leave?—Yes; with leave from the committee of fifteen.

Should not that have been entered in this book?—Yes; it was omitted through neglect; I had not leave for the whole time, I had only leave for ten days; I was out near a month.

From what period to what period had you leave?—For ten days.

Was not it the duty of the catechist to enter it in the book?—No, not the catechist's duty; it was my duty.

Was it entered in the book?—Not otherwise than by the catechist reporting the "usher and mistress present."

The report states, that the mistress and usher were present?—That denotes I was not present.

During that time was there any usher in the school?—Yes, two, whom I named before, Cooper and Leonard.

Who overlooked them?—There was no one, except Mr. Long the visitor, and Mrs. Devine.

Do you remember, about the time you went to London, that the rain was pouring into the roof from the state in which the building was?—There was very little rain in the month of May.

If the catechist enters, that rain on the 28th of May "was pouring into the dormitory and dwelling house, on account of the roof being stripped off for a long time," would that be a correct entry?—He certainly would not enter it if it was not correct, I am perfectly sure of that.

Do you recollect what time you were absent?—From the 26th of May to the 23d of June, I believe.

Should not it have been entered in the book, when you went and when you returned?—It should, certainly; it was from inattention, and no other motive.

What is the use of the book if such things are not to be entered in it?—On Wednesday, the 23d of June, I returned; I see by looking at the book.

Were the committee aware you had so far exceeded your leave of absence?—I cannot say.

Did you report it to them when you did return?—They saw me on that day.

Did you report it to them?—I did not.

Did you tell Mr. Adamson?—Yes, I think I told Mr. Adamson; but I cannot say I did it officially, only in conversation.

With respect to the dormitories, what vessels do the boys use in their bed-rooms?—Wooden buckets.

Are those buckets applied to any other use?—Yes, they are; sometimes there is water put into them, to wash their hands and face.

Are the boys allowed soap?—No; if they ask for it, they get it; they are not generally allowed it.

They are expected to be clean? They are.

Do they wash their own stockings?—Not generally; some of the teachers applied about twelve months ago, and said their stockings were not well washed, and wished to keep them themselves to wash them; and I said, that anybody who wished to do so, might do it.

Do they at this moment wash themselves?—Yes, some of them.

Examination of
Mr.
Francis Devine,
30 Dec. 1824.

Do the majority of the teachers do it?—Yes, they do.

Do any of the boys of the lower class?—Not that I know of.

How often are they changed?—Once a week.

Are those vessels ever used for fetching potatoes from the field as well as for washing in?—Yes; but not some time back.

Are the Society aware of that, do you think?—I think they must be, but am not sure; there are no other vessels.

Was there any application made to them upon the subject?—Mr. Thackeray applied to have a shed built for the boys to wash in.

Were they aware that the buckets used to wash themselves were the same that they used in the night?—I do not know that they were.

Do you think that a cleanly process?—Yes, when they are washed out first; they sometimes wash in the buckets, and sometimes in the trough, and sometimes in the river, in the yard.

Do you think it decent and cleanly, that potatoes should be fetched in those vessels used for that purpose?—If it could be avoided it would be better not.

Could it not be easily avoided, by having other vessels?—There might be other vessels; but unless there was always a person to watch the boys they would take the first vessel that came in their way.

Are your servants of the Roman Catholic religion or Protestant?—Both.

How many have you Roman Catholics?—Two, and one of the other.

Are the Society aware of that; were they returned in your last return of the Roman Catholics or Protestants?—There is no return of them.

Is it not a part of your duty that you ought to make a return of their religion?—Yes, it is.

Why was it omitted, because they were Roman Catholics?—It must be through inattention, and no other motive.

Is that the only time you ever omitted to return the religion of your servants?—I do not think they ever were returned more than once or twice.

Is not there a column for it?—Yes; there is a paper, but it has not been called for some time.

Is it not the duty of the catechist to see that that paper is filled up, and to sign it?—I believe it is.

Has he not been in the habit of looking to that?—Not for a length of time.

How many times has Mr. Long catechised the children in the last twelve months?—I cannot say.

Has he ever catechised them when it is not entered here?—Not unless that book was in town, at the office.

On this return would it not be entered?—Yes.

Has his attention been greater lately than it was previously?—No, not at all; I think upon the average, he is always equally attentive, as far as I have been able to judge.

What is the present temper and disposition of the boys in the school?—They are, some of them, very discontented, and always have been, and always will be.

Ever since they have been in the school?—Yes; discontent has prevailed in the institution since its formation, in a great measure.

Nothing particular has occurred lately, to make them more so?—Not on my part, most certainly.

Or in other quarters?—No.

Describe the nature of the discontent of the candidate teachers?—They think they should be indulged more; that there should be no restraint; that they should be allowed to go to town when they like; and go about the country.

Do you mean to say that the discontent existed in the whole school, or was confined to the candidate teachers?—I have hardly ever heard an instance of it coming into the lower school; they think they should be allowed to do as they like.

Have you any demand for boys now in the institution?—We have had no application lately.

It appears from the result that not more than twenty have been sent out during the whole period?—About twenty-three; there was a gentleman applied about two months ago, a clergyman, from the county of Wexford, for a parish clerk and schoolmaster; he thought them far too young and small looking, and would not take them.

Have you any means of forming an opinion, whether active exertions are made to induce applications to your institution, or whether they proceed from a voluntary wish on the part of persons making the application, and an expectation that they are likely to meet with proper persons there?—There have been no active steps taken that I am aware of, except by the Archdeacon of Dublin, who was very anxious to provide for them; he recommended Leonard to his situation, at Tubrid school; and the Rev. Mr. Thackeray of Dundalk, who procured places for five or six.

Have the applications been principally for them in the character of clerks and school masters?—Yes; there were several applications for them as parish clerks and schoolmasters. Some time ago none of them could sing; at that time they were just at the period of life when the voice changes. There were six or seven applications all unsupplied, from the boys being incapable of singing out; since then, there have been very few applications; the schools take the greatest part as ushers. There have been some sent to the Foundling Hospital, as assistant masters.

Appendix, N° 139.

KEVIN STREET INSTITUTION.

A LIST of the Names and Ages of all the Children admitted into the Teachers Class, from its first formation; also the Dates of Admissions into said Class, with the manner in which they have been disposed of; and the Dates.

No.	NAMES.	Dates of Admission into the Teachers Class.	Ages at said period.	Schools last from.	How disposed of.	Dates of their leaving this Institution.
1.	Eliza Clements	8 May - 1819	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Dundalk	Nursery governess to Mrs. Adams.	15 Nov. - 1821.
2.	Letitia Hoey	9 May - 1819	18	Celbridge	To Arklow school, as usheress.	11 May - 1824.
3.	Mary Neil	D° - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	D° - -	Nursery governess to Mrs. Hughes.	25 Oct. - 1821.
4.	Mary Shearn	D° - -	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	D° - -	D° - d° to Mrs. Phibbs.	11 March 1822.
5.	Ann Carrol	D° - -	16	Monivea	D° - d° to Mrs. Wallace.	8 Feb. - 1822.
6.	Mary Stephens	10 May - 1819	21	Baggot-street	D° - d° to Mrs. Latouche.	20 May - 1820.
7.	Agnes Behan	D° - -	18	D° - -	Usheress to Dundalk	25 Sept. - 1819.
8.	Ann Legass	D° - -	17	D° - -	D° - - d° - -	8 January 1820.
9.	Ann Montgomery	12 May - 1819	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	D° - -	D° to Charleville -	27 Nov. - 1820.
10.	Esther Trisham	May - 1819	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Dunkerrin	Nursery governess to Mrs. Wolfe.	12 Dec. - 1822.
11.	Anne Byrne	D° - -	15	D° - -	D° - d° to Mrs. Chambers.	4 April 1822.
12.	Mary Latchford	D° - -	14	Charleville	D° - d° to Mrs. Jameson.	11 June - 1823.
13.	Mary A. Andrews	D° - -	-	D° - -	Died - - -	8 April 1820.
14.	Anne Daly	D° - -	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Maynooth	Usheress to Dundalk	25 January 1822.
15.	Letitia Matthews	1819	15	Baggot-street	Nursery governess to Mrs. Kyle.	24 Dec. - 1819.
16.	Ann Gibbons	- - -	-	D° - -	D° - d° to Mrs. Saurin.	13 Sept. - 1821.
17.	Ann Rafferty	21 August 1820	16	Dundalk	D° - to Lady A. Scott.	18 January 1822.
18.	Susan Weir	- - -	-	Baggot-street	D° - d° to Mrs. Featherstone.	25 January 1822.
19.	Sarah Mann	- - -	-	D° - -	D° - d° to Rev. Mr. Crawford.	12 Feb. - 1822.
20.	Sarah Darlington	- - -	-	Monivea	Apprenticed to Mrs. Graham, bonnet-maker.	2 July - 1822.
21.	Hannah Dunlavy	18 Dec. - 1820	15	Celbridge	Apprenticed to Mrs. Moffett, dress-maker.	21 July - 1822.
22.	Susan Stephenson	8 Nov. - 1822	17	D° - -	Nursery governess to Austin Cooper, esq.	27 January 1823.
23.	Maria Hemrock	- - -	-	Monastereven	D° - d° to Mrs. Hamilton.	27 April 1823.
24.	Ellen Douglas	30 Sept. - 1822	14	Dundalk	D° - d° to Mrs. Rainsford.	8 May - 1823.
25.	Mary Ann Wood	21 February 1822	16	Celbridge	Apprenticed to Mrs. Graves, bonnet-maker.	8 July - 1823.
26.	Eliza Murphy	- - -	-	Kevin-street	Nursery governess to Mrs. Spencer Knox.	10 Nov. - 1823.
27.	Bridget Legatt	- - -	-	Dunkerrin	D° - d° to Mrs. Nicholls.	28 Feb. - 1824.

N ^o .	NAMES.	Dates of Admission into the Teachers Class.	Ages at said period.	Schools last from.	How disposed of.	Dates of their leaving this Institution.
28.	Sarah English -	14 October 1820	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	Celbridge -	Nursery governess to Mrs. M ^c Creat.	19 March 1824.
29.	Catherine Humphries	July - 1822	15	Kevin-street -	School mistress to Miss Filgate.	24 June - 1824.
30.	Maria Cullen -	1 May - 1822	17	Dundalk -	Nursery governess to Mrs. Upton.	24 August 1824.
31.	Bridget Gallagher -	9 July - 1823	16	Bally-Castle -	Returned to Bally Castle.	24 Feb. - 1824.
32.	Rose Tighe -	25 October 1822	18	Baggot-street	Eloped to her aunt -	6 Feb. - 1824.
33.	Margaret Keightly -	26 May - 1823	18	Dundalk -	Given up to her mother	11 Feb. - 1824.
34.	Margaret M ^c Cormick	12 August 1823	14	D ^o -	Returned to Dundalk for change of air.	1 June - 1824.
35.	Bridget Spelman -	1 March 1821	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	Monivea -	Still in the school.
36.	Jane Harman -	D ^o -	16	D ^o -	D ^o
37.	Mary Kean -	14 July - 1824	14	Kevin-street -	D ^o
38.	Catherine Carey -	18 August 1822	17	Bally-Castle -	D ^o
39.	Eliza M ^c Donagh -	7 Sept. 1822	15	Charleville -	D ^o
40.	Catherine Quinn -	17 May - 1823	18 $\frac{1}{2}$	Celbridge -	D ^o
41.	Mary Anne Smith -	15 June - 1823	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	Bally-Castle -	D ^o
42.	Catherine Potts -	D ^o -	18 $\frac{1}{2}$	Kevin-street -	D ^o
43.	Honor Carrol -	14 August 1823	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	Dundalk -	D ^o
44.	Ann Keenan -	18 Feb. - 1824	19	D ^o -	D ^o
45.	Mary Elliott -	24 Feb. - 1824	15 $\frac{1}{2}$	Celbridge -	D ^o
46.	Mary Winton -	28 April - 1824	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	Kevin-street -	D ^o
47.	Margaret Cavenagh	28 April - 1824	13 $\frac{1}{2}$	D ^o -	D ^o
48.	Maria Harley -	11 May - 1824	-	Dundalk -	D ^o
49.	Anne Harley -	14 July - 1824	-	D ^o -	D ^o
50.	Emily M ^c Quay -	14 July - 1824	-	D ^o -	D ^o
51.	Sarah Reynolds -	23 July - 1824	18 $\frac{1}{2}$	Celbridge -	D ^o
52.	Mary Brennan -	D ^o -	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	D ^o -	D ^o
53.	Anne Kenny -	29 August 1824	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	Bally-Castle -	D ^o
54.	Frances Sheridan -	D ^o -	14 $\frac{1}{2}$	D ^o -	D ^o
55.	Amelia Glover -	21 Sept. - 1824	16 $\frac{1}{2}$	Kevin-street -	D ^o
56.	Catherine Poer -	-	-	Baggot-street	Nursery governess to Lady Gore.	25 Sept. - 1820.
	(omitted above.)

Abstract of the above List of Children admitted into the Teachers Class.

Number admitted in each Year.		How disposed of.
Admitted in 1819	16	Sent out as nursery governesses	21
„ 1820	6	„ school mistress	1
„ 1821	2	„ usheresses	5
„ 1822	11	Died	1
„ 1823	7	Apprenticed	3
„ 1824	14	Eloped	1
		Given up to parents	1
		Returned to schools	2
		Remaining in institution	21
Total	56	Total	56

Appendix, N° 140.

Examination of Mr. George Clarke, on Oath; Wednesday, 10th of November 1824.

Examination of
Mr.
George Clarke,
10 Nov. 1824.

HOW long have you been master of this (Kevin-street) school?—On the 6th of December last I took possession.

This being a girls school, what is the nature of the charge you have as master, and what is the charge of the mistress?—I have the charge of purchasing provisions and providing all necessaries of that description for the use of the school; I also take a share in the education of the children, chiefly in writing and arithmetic, and when I have leisure I go into the school room at other times of the day; writing and cyphering are taught every other day; they write one morning and cypher the next.

That is peculiarly your duty?—Not peculiarly, I take that part in it.

What is the duty of the mistress?—The general superintendence of the establishment, and taking a share in the education.

Is your wife the mistress?—She is.

Have you more than one usheress?—We have an usheress and an assistant.

What is it her duty to do?—To instruct the children, and see them to their beds, and see them washed, and look to their general conduct.

Are they supplied with soap for washing their own clothes?—Yes.

Do they wash their own clothes?—Yes, with the assistance of one laundress.

Are they supplied with soap for washing their own persons?—Yes.

As much as they want?—As much as is considered necessary.

What is that quantity?—I do not know; there is a piece of soap cut for them, and given to them to wash; but the mistress would be better able to answer that question than me.

Is there any difference between their diet in this school and the others, in quantity or quality?—No, I believe the dietary is the same.

Is it exactly conformed to?—I believe strictly.

Have the girls clean linen once a week or twice?—Only once a week, particularly this weather, from not having any drying-house, which is a great want in an establishment of this kind, we could not get them aired; in the Foundling Hospital there is a very excellent place for drying, but that is much more extensive.

How many shifts have they a week?—Only one.

How many pair of stockings?—I do not know whether one or two.

Do they wear cotton stockings, or woollen?—Cotton.

Are they white or black?—Rather brown cotton; it is not bleached.

In what state of health have the girls been, since you took the charge of this institution?—Indeed, sometimes they have had slight fever, their general health has been very good, except sore eyes and slight feverish colds; no serious illness, except for a short time, when there was a smart fever among them last spring.

How many girls were in the Institution when you first came to it?—I think about a hundred and thirty, between that and a hundred and thirty-five; I cannot positively say as to that.

How many have been admitted since you have been here?—

[The witness referred to the book of admissions.]

One hundred and twenty-seven, including those that came from other schools, and the Foundling Hospital children.

Are those 127 all children, or does it include the teachers?—It includes all, nine have been admitted into the teachers class.

How many have been apprenticed, how many died, and how many eloped?—None have died, nor have any eloped, except Rose Tighe; fourteen have been apprenticed, four out of the teacher's class, one of them was sent to Arklow as usheress to the girls there; two of them are nursery governesses, and one is a schoolmistress to a lady who wanted a schoolmistress for a school she had in the country; one of them went out as a hired servant; a lady that visits here got her an excellent place; five have been given up to their parents, and thirty-two have been transferred to other schools.

At what ages were those five given up to their parents; and were the parents Roman Catholics or Protestants?—Rose Tighe, aged 19, her parents Roman Catholics.

Do you know in what situation of life her parents were?—Her mother, I believe, induced her to elope; we found her out afterwards, and brought her to the board, and the board thought it best to let her go.

Do you know what is become of her?—No; she was at the public examination of the children at St. Mary's church, last June. Margaret Keightly, 18½, Protestant parents.

Were they in a situation of life to be able to take care of her?—Yes; her mother appeared to be a very respectable woman; she lived at Bray. Jane Dubois, aged 11; her mother was a Protestant, and a respectable woman; she was in distressed circumstances for some time, but was able afterwards to support her. Margaret M'Allister, aged 13; Protestant parents. Margaret Creagh, aged 10; her parents were Protestants.

Have the statements you have given included the names of all the girls that have been sent out of the school in any way, since you took charge of it?—There were 13 of the Foundling

Examination of
Mr.
George Clarke,
10 Nov. 1824.

Foundling children returned from this school, that are among the list of those admitted; they were admitted here; they were only here a few days.

Then there are seventy-one more children now than when you took possession?—I believe there are 200 now in the house.

Are many children transferred from the country to this institution, to provide apprenticeships for them?—They are not sent to this school for that purpose, but to Baggot-street.

Are any children sent from this school to Baggot-street for that purpose?—Not since I came.

Is there a difficulty in providing apprenticeships for girls?—Indeed sometimes we have a good demand for them, and at other times not.

How is it at present?—At present we are rather slack of applications.

What do you attribute that to?—I cannot positively say.

Is there any difficulty in procuring respectable situations, and good provisions, for girls in the school?—Indeed I think they are provided with tolerably good places; some may happen not to get good places.

Is there a difficulty in providing good places?—There is never any search made for places for them, except some of the ladies that come here may know some of their friends that want them, and they may get them situations; there is no person that goes about for places.

Is there not a person to look at the places before they go to them?—Yes; there is a man of the name of Rickey; he is to look to the places after the applications are made for them.

Are the applications made to the school or the society?—To the committee of fifteen; there must be an order from the board.

Do they pay premiums with all the apprentices?—Not unless to trades.

Do you know how any one of the girls are going on who have been sent away since you have been here?—No.

Has any one their eye upon them?—I do not know, except the clergyman in the parish has.

Do you know where any of them are?—I do not know; by referring to the book I may be able to discover; the only one I know is, one I have taken myself.

Have you any opportunity of knowing whether the girls from the charter schools turn out well?—Only from hearsay; I have no means of knowing.

How long were you charter school master of a boy's school?—Something about five years.

Were you the whole of that time in Shannon Grove?—Yes; I was appointed there in 1818.

What situation did you fill in life before you were appointed a charter schoolmaster?—I had a farm.

In what county?—The county of Roscommon.

By whose interest were you appointed the master?—I had several recommendations from the country.

As to your qualifications as master?—No, not as to my qualifications particularly, but as to my conduct and character.

Where had you been educated yourself?—In the country; I always lived with my father, and he had me educated by the best means he could procure for me; sometimes he had a man to attend me at home morning and evening, at occasional times, to instruct me, and he assisted himself. I got as much instruction from him as from any body else.

Who do you look upon as your chief friend and patron, in town, in the committee of fifteen?—I have no one particular friend or patron in the committee of fifteen.

It was by the help of your certificates?—Yes.

That committee knew nothing individually of you?—No, nothing in the world, except that some gentlemen in the country, knowing them, might have written to them individually; they wrote generally to the board respecting my character. They were gentlemen that knew how I have conducted myself from my childhood.

Were you in the habit of attending in the school, to instruct the boys in Shannon Grove, or did you leave it to the usher?—I did not often go into the school, but I did not leave it entirely to the usher; I was generally some portion of the day in the school-room (I do not say hours), to see that every thing was going on right; I do not say I was so every day. In a country school, a master has a great deal of trouble and labour in providing for a country school.

Does not the trouble of the master, in a country school, consist in taking care of the farm?—Yes, there is a great deal of time taken up in that way.

How much land had you attached to Shannon Grove?—Thirty acres, belonging to the Society.

How much did you rent not belonging to it?—I had just two fields separated by the road from the other, it was merely for pasturage, that did not take up any of my time.

Are there not large buildings, barns and offices, attached to the school at Shannon Grove?—Yes, very good offices.

Are they larger than are necessary for the use of the school?—I do not think they are; in a country school it would be almost impossible to keep the school and provide for the establishment without a farm.

How many cows had you in Shannon Grove?—I had sometimes ten and twelve, and so on; I generally killed my own meat, that was what I had the two fields for chiefly.

What meat used you to kill?—Mutton, chiefly.

What

Examination of
Mr.
George Clarke,
10 Nov. 1824.

What else besides mutton?—Beef, and sometimes a small portion of pork; a bit of corned pork among their food occasionally; the chief meat I gave them was beef and mutton.

Can you say positively you never gave them veal?—I can, positively, upon my oath*.

Is that prohibited by the Society?—The description of the meat that the rules of the Society have prescribed, is beef and mutton; good beef and mutton is the description of meat mentioned.

Was the clothing of the boys at Shannon Grove supplied them regularly?—Yes, while I was there.

According to the quantity prescribed by the Institution?—Yes; I had the contract myself except one year, when it was supplied from Dublin; I always gave them the full quantity of clothing and every thing else than it was my duty to give them.

Do you know in what way the catechist performed his duty at Shannon Grove, both with regard to his inspection and the catechizing of the children?—Indeed I think he is a very conscientious man as possibly can be; he had no regular days for catechizing the children, or visiting the school; he came there occasionally, perhaps once or twice a week.

What was his name?—The Reverend George Franklin.

Were you in the habit of seeing him inspect the dormitories?—Yes I was, regularly; he never omitted it while I was there, either at school hours or dinner hours.

How many dormitories were there?—Two; one over the other; one on the attic and the other on the middle story.

Did he inspect them both?—He generally did; I do not recollect his having omitted it.

Have you ever seen him inspect one and not the other?—No, I do not recollect that I have; he is a man that would not take any thing for granted; he generally saw every thing that he reported on.

Was there a good opportunity of providing for the boys in the neighbourhood of Shannon Grove?—Indeed, there are a great many small farmers about there that apply for them as apprentices, but I do not think they are good places for them, the boys latterly disliked going to them, they are poor places most of them; some of them got good places.

Were not some of them bound out to farmers so poor as not to be able to maintain them?—Not wholly so; they were not as well taken care of as in the school, most of them, some of them, are very well off; they got their bounty and their marriage portions afterwards; I paid it to several; they were very much liked by those they served their time to, and conducted themselves very properly; of others there were complaints.

Were there not many complaints from boys, who had been apprenticed to farmers, of the situations in which they had been placed?—Indeed there were some.

Were there not many?—I cannot say there were many, in proportion to the number of apprentices; whenever a complaint was made to me of them, I endeavoured to see after them as well as I could, and have their grievances redressed as much as lay in my power.

Did not many of them leave their places before the term expired?—Yes, many; and some of them used to come to me, and I endeavoured to get other places for them.

Have you not had boys come to you in rags, almost like beggars?—Not so bad as that; some of them came with their clothes very much broken, and bad shoes and stockings, but not so bad as you have mentioned; some of them were in a very poor way.

Was it the practice at Shannon Grove to have the flour sifted and divided, and the finer part used in your family, and the coarser part for the children?—I had a steel mill that I ground the wheat with, and I really do not know; the mistress was to manage that part of the business; such a thing might have occurred for what I know†.

Was it the practice to mix water with the milk at Shannon Grove?—Just according as the dietary prescribed; I believe not more than that, as far as I can say.

[The witness was directed to withdraw.]

By a minute of the committee of fifteen, dated 18th of February 1824, it appeared, that Bridget Gallagher who had been convicted of a theft, was directed to be transplanted to Ballycastle school, from which she was brought, and that a letter should be written to the master and mistress of that establishment, expressing surprise, that a girl who, while in the school, had been addicted to that crime should have been recommended to the teachers institution, and that an explanation would be required of them.

Upon the minutes of the same committee, of the 7th of April 1824, the following order appeared:—That Mary Cogan was sent to Charlemont-street Asylum in consequence of her ill conduct at Kevin-street school, and that the mistress be requested to get her a situation as soon as possible; and that should she refuse to go to the first place that offers, she is immediately to be dismissed from the protection of the Society.

Also, by another minute of the same committee, dated the 26th of May 1824, It was ordered, That Mary Griffiths should be sent to the Asylum in Charlemont-street, and be removed from thence to a country school, should she not reform her conduct, which has been very exceptionable in Kevin-street.

[The Witness was again called in.]

With respect to a girl of the name of Gallagher, that came from Ballycastle, what were the circumstances connected with her removal?—Indeed she was guilty of some theft in this

* See end of this examination, where the witness corrects this statement.

† The witness afterwards desired to add, that on speaking to his wife he found that a small portion of the fine flour had been used so.

Examination of
Mr.
George Clarke,
10 Nov. 1824.

this house. She was a girl that was sent up here from Ballycastle school, and the committee of fifteen thought proper to send her back again.

How did it appear she had been guilty of theft before at Ballycastle?—From the statement of some other children that came up from that place.

With her?—I do not know whether they came with her.

Have you much to complain of with respect to the morals of the girls?—No; indeed we are very strict as to their morals; sometimes they are guilty of trifling little crimes of that description amongst themselves, but latterly it is very much done away with; we mark the smallest trifle, to prevent any thing of the kind, with a view of putting it down, if possible, and improving their morals. If we get the smallest hint, we never stop till we get an explanation.

What was Mary Cogan's case?—She was a girl that was re-admitted here, that had been apprenticed. I do not know exactly the circumstances of her re-admission; she was here when I came here; she was rather impertinent, and some of the ladies that came here got her removed to the Asylum in Charlemont-street.

Is that a place to which you remove girls that are not fit to be kept?—No, we do not remove girls there; but girls out of a situation are sent there, till they can be provided for.

Do I understand you to say, that Cogan's offence was impertinence, and nothing more than that?—Nothing more, I believe; I never knew of any thing else; I believe it was nothing more.

Were you present at the time she was guilty of that impertinence?—No, I was not.

Was it to the mistress?—I believe it was; but I declare I am not sure; I got leave of absence from the committee; I was in the country a few days at the time.

What was Mary Griffith's offence?—I do not know that she was guilty of any offence; she was here pretty much upon the same footing as the other, and she was sent up to that asylum; she was a very idle, indolent kind of girl; and I dare say she might have been insolent and saucy in her language also.

Was she removed also to the asylum?—She was.

Is she one of the number you have mentioned?—No; Cogan is one.

Why was not the other?—She was not one of the establishment; she was apprenticed in the county of Limerick, and the Ribbonmen, the unfortunate fellows there, I believe, murdered her master, as well as I recollect the story, and she was evidence against them; and they removed her here for safety.

Where is that girl now?—She is at the asylum still, I believe. As I have been sworn to speak the whole truth, I would state, that with respect to the veal at Shannon Grove, I never gave veal in lieu of the meat they ought to get; but sometimes when I had calves of my own, I used to boil part of it in the broth, to make the broth the better, and give it them chopped up in the broth; but never instead of the meat they ought to have.

The calves were two or three days old?—Yes.

You wanted the milk from the cows?—Yes.

Appendix, N° 141.

Examination of Mr. John Nicholls, on Oath; Thursday 13th January 1825.

Mr.
John Nicholls,
13 Jan. 1825.

YOU are an apothecary in Dublin?—Yes.

Have you any particular professional connexion with the Incorporated Society?—I am apothecary to the Incorporated Society's schools in Dublin, conjointly with Mr. Craven, of Dawson-street.

Only those?—Yes, including Santry and Clontarf.

Is it your duty to visit those schools in your professional capacity, or only to supply medicines?—To visit and supply medicines.

Are you frequently called upon to perform the duty of visiting?—Very frequently.

Do you go as a matter of course at any particular times, or wait for application as occasion may require?—As occasion may require; there are no stated times.

How often may you find occasion to visit the school of Santry for instance?—It varies exceedingly; sometimes I have gone there every day, sometimes every second day, sometimes not for a fortnight, sometimes not for a month.

Do you conceive, from the nature of the management of one of these institutions, that a month can elapse at any particular time in which you ought not to be sent for?—Indeed, I do think it very possible; it does not very often happen, but I have known schools so healthy as not to be sent for for a month.

Can you say that any one of the schools that fall within the sphere of your visitation, are more or less healthy than the rest?—I could say, with positive certainty, that Kevin-street is the most unhealthy; the rest bear a tolerable proportion to each other.

Do you believe Santry to be more or less healthy than Clontarf?—I think it is more unhealthy, but the difference is not very great.

Do you think upon the whole, the health of the children in charter schools is better or worse than in boarding schools generally?—I would suppose that it was not quite as good.

Have you, in the exercise of your professional duties, had occasion to visit other boarding schools?—I have not knowledge enough to speak with positive certainty, but as well as I can recollect, from what intercourse I have had with schools of that description, charter schools are not as healthy as other boarding schools.

419
Examination of
Mr.
John Nichol's,
13 Jan. 1825.

To what cause should you attribute that?—I could not exactly say; there are many circumstances combined to render charter schools unhealthy; in fact, you get most of the children from the dregs of society, and probably there is not in many instances that early attention paid to their health and habits, and foundation may be laid from such causes, for disorders that are troublesome afterwards, particularly in respect to want of cleanliness, and probably the quantity of exercise they get is generally not sufficient, though many of them have as good health as they have at other boarding schools; you rarely see a boarding school with so many as are collected in one charter school. It might be added, that possibly in some instances, the feeling of independence natural to boarding school children, as well as the greater variety of life which they enjoy, may contribute in giving them the advantage of superior health.

Does not the situation of Clontarf, so near to the sea, afford particular facilities for the cleanliness of the children?—It does.

Which do you suppose upon the whole, the children of the school at Clontarf, or at Santry, have the greater habits of cleanliness?—I think there is the same degree of attention paid, I could not say in one school more than another, there was a difference.

Should you say there was the same attention paid on the part of the master in the school of Santry or Clontarf, or would you prefer the habits of either master?—Indeed, I would not; I never considered there was any disadvantage to the children in respect of that.

For how many years have you been in attendance on the school at Santry?—I suppose, sixteen or eighteen years.

During the last six years, about how often in the year do you suppose you visited that school; fifty times, or a hundred times; we do not require any think like exactness in the answer?—I suppose, fifty times.

On an average in each of those years?—I could not exactly say that; in the last year, I have no hesitation in saying, I have been there forty or fifty times.*

Do you always enter your visits in the book?—I should do it.

Did you in fact?—I did not.

You are there frequently without entering it?—Yes.

Is it your duty to enter your visits?—Yes, it is; and if I had paid sufficient attention to my own interests, I would have done it.

Are you paid by the visit?—No.

Do you recollect having at any time had an impression upon you, that you were called too late to any child?—Indeed, I do not; they do not stand on much ceremony in any of the schools, in sending to our house.

You do not recollect having an impression on your mind, that a person had been suffered to fall into such a state as to render it impossible for you to relieve him?—I do not recollect any thing of the kind.

Or having been sent for too late?—That might have happened; we have had in the schools at various times deaths, and I do consider they have happened without in the slightest degree affecting the character of the persons that superintend those places.

The question was a question of fact?—I do conceive they might postpone sending to me, from their not supposing a boy was so ill; and not from intentional neglect on their part.

Do you recollect any instance of that nature?—No, I do not; I think, whenever there is the least occasion, they stand on very little ceremony in sending; I have repeatedly to go when there is very little occasion for it.

You sometimes sent a young man?—I have sent there.

You say, in the last year you were forty or fifty times at Santry, did you usually see the master in the school?—Not every time.

Did you see him the majority of times you called?—Indeed, I think I did.

Did you usually find him at home?—I think in general very often, I could not say precisely.

In what part of the premises did you usually see him?—I very often went to the parlour, and had some of the boys brought to me. Out of three visits to the school, I have seen him twice.

Is there any rule or regulation upon the subject, or is it desirable he should be in the way to receive the apothecary, or was it casual?—No, only casual; he might be in the premises, and I know nothing about it; there is no rule of the kind, nor is there any necessity. I would very likely go to some of the family, and ask whether there were any of the boys ill, and I will do myself the justice of saying, I have gone there often when I have not been sent for.

Are you able to give any decided opinion as to the character of Mr. Devine; as to his solicitude about the health of the children; whether you conceive it is the average degree of attention that might be expected from a man in his situation, or less than that average, or more than that?—I never thought him but a proper man; I never saw anything of him but regard and attention to the children; when I have given directions, they have been complied with. In a public place of that kind there is a degree of caution necessary; if you were to indulge the children much, the evil would increase on you very fast; very likely

* The witness desires to state, "Since my examination I have ascertained that I visited at Santry seventy-eight times during the year 1824."

Examination of
Mr.
John Nicholls,
13 Jan. 1825.

likely if I was to have an infirmary with a fire in it, I would have more sick than is generally the case, for the sake of the indulgence. I think it requires a degree of prudence on the part of those who superintend them, not to lend an ear to every thing.

Why do you state Kevin-street to be so unhealthy?—I cannot say the reason, unless from a large crowded room with a great heat, and coming out into large passages with drafts of air; the children may be chill, that is the only reason at this present time; the committee are putting up a building to break the drafts; it is a very unhealthy school.

Do you know how many are in the infirmary?—Fifty-four are in the infirmary to day; for the last twenty years, I have no hesitation in saying, that nearly a fourth of the children have been constantly ill. From the time the school was originally up in Charlemont-street to the present time, we have had constantly a number ill, equal to a fourth; there was never any thing worse than the school in Charlemont-street; and though we have got into this place, apparently so well calculated for the purpose, we are as bad off as ever.

What are the prevalent complaints?—Fever, sore eyes and colds; also eruptive diseases.

Do you think that part of Dublin is particularly unhealthy?—I cannot say that it is; there may be something in the premises.

Do you find the complaint of the itch prevalent in the charter schools under your direction?—I do not think it is; but where there are a number of children congregated together, you must have skin disorders resembling it.

Within what period would you be able to cure a child of that complaint?—It might be banished in a fortnight from one person; but there are instances in Kevin-street, of children who have had it on them for months, at least what appears to be the itch.

Is it a complaint, which if neglected for a certain length of time, becomes extremely difficult to eradicate?—Very difficult; a good deal would depend upon the constitution of the person; in some persons, if they were ever so inattentive, it would be easily got rid of; in others it would be very obstinate.

Do you not conceive that the disease might be communicated from one child to another, by means of the books?—It might; there are a great number at present labouring under scald in a slight degree, and I have no doubt it is communicated from one to another.

There is no doubt about the disease prevalent in the school being in a greater degree than among an equal number of children at home with their parents?—There will be always more disease in large collections of people; possibly if they had the same diet as those living in cabins, the same exercise and the comfort of social life, there would be less disease.

You lay a great deal of the health of the body upon the state of the social affections?—Yes, that and the diet; there are a variety of circumstances in a public institution, that prevent that complete care being taken that would be taken in private life, where there was a decent and proper feeling.

Do you think the children in the charter schools are as lively as an equal number of children taken out of society at large, in the same rank of life?—I would say not.

To what do you attribute that?—I cannot say; I think that there is a difference.

Do you think, in a mere physical point of view, they are as fine animals as an equal number of children taken out of the lower ranks of society?—I do not.

Do you think there is a marked difference?—I do; the circumstances under which they are placed, prevent their thriving and becoming those fine-looking persons; and though in private life, I think if they were kept down by rules, as in places of that kind, it would limit their growth. If I could use the expression, I would say, they appear, absolutely in many instances, as if they were more stunted than you meet with in a mass of persons in private life.

Of the fact you have no doubt, whatever the cause may be?—I have no doubt of the fact.

As to their mental faculties, have you any opinion of the effect of the charter school system upon them?—I cannot speak with any particular accuracy.

Have you any opportunity of forming any opinion, or have you an opinion whether their mental faculties are as much developed as you find them in children of the same ages taken out of the lower walks of society, not collected in such an institution. The question is, whether upon the average, and in all these cases we speak of an average, and not what may be exceptions to the general rule; whether those children have as many ideas, and are as advanced in knowledge as children of the same ages in the lower ranks of society not collected in such institutions; whether they have the same power of thought?—I would suppose they are somewhat superior; several of them appear to be very intelligent, and they are better educated, and that gives you an opportunity of forming an opinion.

The question is not as to the theory of the institution, but the result of your actual observation of the fact, the theory of the institution is to educate; but it does not follow that that is to be the effect in all cases?—I cannot precisely answer.

In your intercourse with them, as medical attendant, do you find them equally ready in explaining their little wants and complaints, in stating a case of illness to you, as you find among other children in the same rank of life?—No, certainly not.

If there were twenty children taken out of a charter school, and twenty out of the same rank of life, all dressed alike, would you have any difficulty in discriminating which were charter school children?—I do not think I would have any.

Would it be by the superiority and good looks you would distinguish the charter school children children in such case?—Indeed, I think, in point of appearance, if you took the others from the lower classes here, you would see they belonged to a charter school or a similar institution. If you took twenty children of the very lowest ranks of society, you would see a superiority in the appearance of the charter school children.

421

If all were dressed alike?—Yes; because there is more of a florid appearance, as any one would see, who has visited them, in the children of the charter schools and schools of that kind, than you would see in the confined places the children are living in in Dublin.

The observation is not meant to apply to schools in Dublin, but to tolerably well-regulated day schools in the country, attended by the children of farmers of the middling and lower description; do you think that you would find the charter school children more florid than an equal number of children taken from such a school?—No; but I think twenty children in the charter schools are better fed, in point of meat and bread, than twenty children who might attend Kildare-street school, or be taken from an inferior class.

We are not asking as to the theory, but the fact?—It would preponderate in favour of their appearance, judging from the face, in favour of the charter schools.

As compared with the children of the lower ranks in Dublin?—Yes.

Would it preponderate as compared with an equal number attending any school in the country?—They would stand pretty much on an equality.

But would you, in some way or another, distinguish the charter school children?—I cannot say that; but in Dublin I should say, twenty children taken out of a charter school, and twenty taken from the confined places they live in here, that the appearance would preponderate in favour of the charter school children; but I do not think that would be any thing in favour of collecting children together, as they are in charter schools.

Examination of
Mr.
John Nicholls,
13 Jan. 1825.

Appendix, N° 142.

Examinations of William Bruce Bartley, Michael M'Larney, William Lewis, Patrick Leonard and Edward Cochrane, (from the Santry Institution).

Examination of William Bruce Bartley, on Oath; Wednesday, 3d November 1824.

WHERE were you first admitted into a charter school?—Into Clontarf.

When?—In the year 1813.

How long did you stay there?—For about a month.

Where did you go then?—To Shannon Grove charter school.

How long did you stay there?—Very near ten years.

Was the same person master at Shannon Grove all the time you were there?—No, there were three masters there.

Who was master when you first went?—One Mr. Hurst.

Who succeeded him?—One Mr. Clarke.

Who succeeded him?—Then Mr. Waterstone.

How long was Mr. Waterstone master before you came away?—He is not a year in it.

When did you leave it?—In last February; he went there about this time last year.

You were not under him six months?—No.

Who was the usher at Shannon Grove when you left it?—One Hugh Anderson.

How long had he been there?—Near two years.

Who was the catechist when you left?—Rev. Mr. Franklin.

How long had he been catechist?—About six years.

Were you regularly supplied with clothing at Shannon Grove?—I used not to get new clothes every year there; latterly I used, but formerly I used not; when Mr. Hurst was master I used not.

According to the rules of the school, what clothes ought you to have in the year?—Three pair of stockings, three shirts, three pair of shoes, a cap, two trowsers, coat and waistcoat.

What number of pair of stockings used you to get in a year at Shannon Grove?—I think I used to get one pair a year formerly, but latterly I got three pair.

And how many pair of shoes?—About the same of shoes, one pair formerly.

Used you to have a jacket and waistcoat every year?—Yes, I used.

And trowsers?—About one trowsers formerly.

Was that the number allowed?—No, two trowsers.

How often used you to have clean linen?—Once a week formerly, but latterly twice.

Used you to have stockings clean every week?—No.

Latterly used you to have them?—Yes; but formerly I used not.

Used you to have clean sheets upon your bed as often as the regulations required?—Yes.

Formerly and latterly?—Yes, both.

Used you to be fed according to the regulations of the Society?—No.

During no part of the time?—I used to be fed not to say according to the rules of the Society entirely; sometimes I used and sometimes I used not.

In what respect did they disobey the rules of the Society; state formerly and latterly?—The Incorporated Society allow us good beef and mutton for dinner on Thursday and Sundays; and Mr. Hurst used to give us calves that used to be a month old, and sometimes three days old.

Is that what is called staggering Bob?—Yes.

Used they to give you new milk, or skim milk and butter milk?—We did not get new milk,

[R r]

*William Bruce
Bartley,
3 Nov. 1824.*

Examination of William Bruce
Bartley,
3 Nov. 1824.

milk, but we used to get sometimes skim milk, not very often, but butter milk always; and when milk is scarce the Society allow us beer, and at night Mr. Clarke used to give us water gruel and flummery.

Was that against the rules of the Society?—Yes.

What sort of bread used you to have?—Formerly I used to get cake bread without barm in it, and when Mr. Clarke was there I used to get bread with potatoe barm very sour, and sometimes we were a month without getting fresh bread.

Was it very brown, or made of the whole flour?—Very brown.

Used they to take the fine flour from the coarse?—Yes; they used to take out all the fine flour and a little of the coarse, and give us the middling.

Is that according to the rules of the Society?—I do not know.

Used they to sift the fine flour out for the master and his family?—Yes.

Was that known generally in the school?—Yes.

Was one of the boys employed to do it?—Yes.

What is his name?—John Brennan; he is now in Waterford charter school.

In what state were the beds?—The bedsteads were very bad, and the ticks were stuffed with straw; I do not know whether oaten or wheaten straw.

How often had you clean sheets?—Once a month clean sheets.

Was that the rule?—Yes.

Had you two sheets on every bed?—Yes.

And two boys in every bed?—Yes.

Not more?—No.

Were the dormitories in a proper state?—Yes.

What vessels are provided in the dormitories for the necessary purposes of the boys?—Two tubs in each room.

Are there any vessels for washing yourselves in the morning; are any basins provided to hold the water in which the boys wash themselves?—They use the urine tubs to wash themselves in.

In what way can those tubs be prepared for the purpose of enabling the boys to wash themselves?—They are taken down stairs and emptied and rinsed, and clean water is put into them, and then we wash ourselves in them, and after we wash in them, we take them out into the field where the potatoes are dug, and the potatoes are brought home in them.

Do you use any soap?—No.

Had you soap latterly at Shannon Grove?—No.

Have you soap now at Santry?—No, there is no soap allowed; we never get soap to wash ourselves.

Do you ever buy it yourselves?—There are some of the boys who are teachers, who get 2s. 6d. a month for teaching; they sometimes buy soap.

Were the dormitories at Shannon Grove all equally clean?—Yes.

Were the dormitories all regularly inspected by the catechist?—Yes.

Are you quite sure he inspected all the dormitories?—Yes.

Were the boys well taken care of when they were sick in Shannon Grove?—They were.

Was there an infirmary?—Yes.

Who was the surgeon or apothecary?—Dr. Franklin, or Surgeon Franklin.

Is he any relation to the catechist?—I hear say he is step brother; I think he did not attend as often as was requisite.

Who used to take care of the boys when they were ill?—The mistress.

Was the milk that was given you skim milk, or was it new milk?—Sometimes skim milk, but always butter milk; every day we got butter milk, but on the odd times we got skim milk.

Was the milk ever mixed with water?—Yes.

How do you know that?—The taste of it, and I saw it.

Was not there a boy employed to put it in?—I cannot tell.

Was not there a boy employed about the dairy?—Yes, John Brennan and William Brennan were both employed about it.

What part used you to do?—I used generally to be knitting stockings.

Were those stockings used by the boys?—Yes, sometimes we used to knit for the mistress.

Were there any looms in the school?—No, there were not; there are now.

Were there before you came away?—No.

Were you employed much in working on the land?—No, I was not; the rest of the boys were employed about the land; I generally used to be inside, darning and knitting.

What was the reason the boys did not complain at the time they were not so well fed, as according to the rules they ought to have been?—They could not forward their complaints, they used to complain to the catechist; and their letters would be intercepted if they were to send any complaint to Dublin.

Did you ever know any one intercepted?—No; but Mr. Clarke said, if he ever knew one to go, he would get it out of the post office immediately; there was one letter sent by Daniel Doyle to Mr. Adamson in Dublin, but I never heard the result of it; Doyle is not in the school now; the boy had very nearly been beaten for it.

How used the boys to be punished?—With a switch.

A birch rod?—Very seldom with a birch rod, but a hazel switch.

Were the boys severely punished?—Yes, when Mr. Devine was usher of Shannon Grove, they were punished very severely.

Did

423
Examination of William Bruce
Bartley,
3 Nov. 1824.

Did many boys elope when you were there?—I cannot tell.

Should you not have known it if a boy had run away?—I heard of them running away, but they were generally got back, except two; one used to run away very often, but he was always taken, except the last time, when he ran away with another, and they were not taken.

Was he punished when he was caught?—Yes.

Were there many big boys in the school when you came away?—They were generally about the same size as myself; some a few inches bigger.

How many boys were there at Shannon Grove?—From seventy-six to eighty-four; one hundred and twenty is the established number.

Did you know any thing about the manner in which the boys were apprenticed?—Generally the farmers used to take the boys there; when he came and applied for a boy, he would make an application, and it should be signed by the churchwarden and minister of the parish, and to be forwarded to Mr. Adamson in Dublin, he should return an answer, and then the boy, as I understood, was his; the master would come down and the boy would be left at his disposal to bring him to the farm; some of them used to be kept very bad by their masters.

Used they to come back again to the place?—Yes, they used to bring their complaints before the master of the school.

Was that frequent?—Yes; I saw one boy of the name of Benjamin Moore, he came to Mr. Clarke to tell of his master; he was dressed like any beggar man, and Mr. Clarke turned him out of the house for coming on a Sunday.

What became of Mr. Clarke?—He is in Kevin-street charter school now.

Did the catechist attend regularly to teach the boys their catechism?—No, not so regularly as he ought, not more than once a year.

Were they taught their catechism?—Yes, they were generally examined; he used to send up a report every half year, of the progress of the boys in the Scriptures, and reading and writing.

Did the catechist examine the boys in the Scriptures?—Yes, once a quarter.

Do you know John Walsh?—Yes.

Did you ever know him make a complaint to the catechist?—I was not there then.

Did you ever hear he did make a complaint?—Yes, I was told he made a complaint of the meat being bad, and that the catechist smelled a bit that was kept on purpose for him to smell, and he said it did not stink as the boy complained, and he gave him a clout on the jaw.

Was that Mr. George Franklin?—Yes.

Was the catechist in the habit of visiting the master?—Yes.

Was he friendly with him?—Yes, I think so; every time he came he would stay and take a snack.

Which master does that observation apply to, Mr. Clarke or Mr. Waterstone?—Both.

Did you ever know any other boy complain there?—I complained myself for not getting enough served out to eat.

To whom did you complain?—To the master.

What was the consequence?—I told the master, and the master ordered me into the kitchen to take more, and when the mistress saw it, she ordered the stirabout left in the hall, such as the slobber that was gathered up for the hens and ducks, she ordered it into the kitchen before me, for me to eat.

Appendix, N° 143.

Examination of Michael M'Larney, on Oath; Wednesday, 3d November 1824.

ARE you a candidate teacher, or a charter school boy?—A charter school boy.

When were you first admitted into a charter school?—In 1813.

Where?—Clontarf.

Were you sent from thence to Shannon Grove?—No, Clonmel.

How long did you stay at Clonmel?—About six years.

Did you stay till Clonmel school was broken up?—Yes.

Were you then removed to Shannon Grove?—Yes.

Who was master then?—Mr. Clarke.

How were you treated there?—Upon the whole very well.

Did you get your proper clothing?—Yes.

Are you certain of that?—Yes.

Three pair of stockings, and three pair of shoes?—Yes.

And the proper quantity of shirts in a year?—Yes.

How often were the sheets upon your bed changed?—Once a month.

Two sheets on each bed?—Yes.

Were you supplied with the proper quantity of food?—I was generally, but not generally the quantity allowed.

If you were not supplied with the quantity allowed, how was it the proper quantity?—It was not of the same kind.

Was the milk in the state in which it ought to have been?—No, it was generally sour butter-milk, instead of new milk.

Michael M'Larney,
3 Nov. 1824.

Examination of
Michael M. Larney,
3 Nov. 1824.

Was the bread you were supplied with as it ought to have been?—It was generally ; sometimes it was very sour.

Was it the practice in the school to part the fine flour from the coarse, and the master to use the fine for his own family, and give the boys the coarse?—Yes, it was.

How many dormitories were there?—Two.

Did the catechist use to inspect both?—No, only one.

Are you sure of that?—Yes, I am.

What was the state of that dormitory he did not inspect?—It was not so clean or so neat as the other was ; the lower dormitory it was that he used to inspect ; it was very seldom he ever inspected either of them.

Had you benches to sit down upon at dinner?—No.

When you had potatoes, had you salt to eat with them?—No, milk ; the boys themselves used to use salt, but it was not given to them.

Had you soap to wash yourselves with in the morning?—No.

What vessel had you to hold the water to wash yourselves in in the morning?—The vessels the boys used at night.

For what purpose did you use the vessels in the night?—Occasionally to get up at night.

To make water in?—Yes.

Were those vessels used for any other purpose?—They were used for different purposes, occasionally about the house for putting potatoes in, or any thing of that kind.

What were the vessels made of?—They were wooden tubs ; I wish to say a word about the present master, Mr. Waterstone ; there was a great expense incurred in making barricadoes to the house, the windows had iron rails, and the house used generally to be open till two o'clock occasionally every night to company, though there were two police men stationed in the house to mind it ; and even on the Sabbath day there was company, and open house for every person that chose to enter.

When was this?—Just about two months ago.

Were you there then?—Yes, I was.

What was the purpose of the barricadoes, against whom?—The house was often threatened by the rebels.

What kind of company used to come into the house at night?—Persons invited from the neighbouring places about.

What rank of persons were they?—Shopkeepers in the adjoining village.

Why do you complain about that?—The boys were always generally very irregular, while the master and mistress were attending up stairs, and there was no looking after the boys.

Had you not an usher?—Yes, and he was often above too.

With the company?—Yes.

Was the catechist with the company too?—No, not at night.

Did the catechist ever dine with the master?—Yes, regularly.

What do you mean by regularly?—Once a week he used to visit.

Did he dine there once a week?—Yes, when he visited there.

Did he dine there when he did not visit the school?—No.

Did he actually visit it once a week?—Sometimes less, and sometimes more.

Did he examine you in your catechism when he came?—Sometimes, but very seldom ; perhaps he would examine us once a month.

Did he examine into the state of instruction in other particulars than the catechism?—Generally he catechised the boys in the Scriptures, and those forms of catechism approved by the board.

Did he examine into the arithmetic or writing, or any thing but religion?—Yes, into arithmetic and writing once every half-year.

Did the boys like or dislike the catechist?—They generally most of them disliked him, because he did not pay any attention to the complaints they made.

Were boys ever punished for making complaints?—Not to my knowledge ; I never saw any boy punished severely, except one boy got a slap upon the face.

About what age is the catechist?—About sixty years of age.

How often was punishment usually inflicted in the school, once or more than once a day?—At all times, when the master thought the boys deserved it.

How often did it turn out in the course of the week?—Generally every day three or four times a boy would be punished.

What was the mode of punishment?—His small-clothes would be taken down.

And how punished?—Whipped with a birch, and I have seen a horsewhip used there.

Who by?—Mr. Clarke.

By the present master?—No, only once.

Which did you consider most severe?—Mr. Clarke was the most severe.

What is the name of the usher now?—Anderson.

Who was the most severe, the master or the usher?—Mr. Anderson generally punished them more ; Mr. Waterstone is not often in the school.

How often does Mr. Waterstone go in, and what does he do when there?—He takes up a class, and keeps it up half an hour.

What quantity of land does the master hold?—About thirty acres.

What work are the boys employed in?—Farming and weaving.

Are

Are the boys in general healthy?—Yes, they are generally, on account of having the salt water near them; when they are sick, there is very bad attention paid to them.

Who is the medical person who attends?—Doctor Franklin.

Do the local committee, or gentlemen belonging to it, often visit the school?—Very seldom, except when they visit with the catechist.

Examination of
Michael M^r Larney,
3 Nov. 1824.

Appendix, N^o 144.

Further Examination of Michael M^r Larney; Friday, 5th November 1824.

WERE you ever at Clonmel school?—Yes.

Who was the master of that school at the time you were there?—Mr. Martin.

Is Mr. Martin the master of it now?—The school is suppressed at present; there is a parochial school there.

And a day school too?—Yes,

Is he the master of the day school?—Yes.

In what way were you treated at Clonmel school?—Very bad; it was far worse than any other school I have been at.

In what particulars?—Both in diet, and the way in which the boys were corrected.

In what way was the diet defective?—It was always the worst bread, very sour; and sour milk we had as a substitute for new milk.

Had you plenty of meat?—No.

State in what way it was not in conformity with the rules of the Society?—The boys were always kept too much to work; they would rise at six, and go to their work, and continue working till seven, excepting when they came in to dine and to their meals.

Did they not go into the school at the regular times?—No, very seldom, whenever there was any hasty business going forwards, when he was getting in his crops.

Had he much land?—About twenty acres.

Was there work enough upon those twenty acres to keep the boys constantly employed?—Yes; they employed no other person except the boys, and one man.

Used they to be at work after dinner, as well as before?—Yes.

Were you properly supplied with clothes?—Yes, I was.

Had you the allowance that is required by the Incorporated Society?—Yes.

Had you three pair of stockings and three pair of shoes?—The shoes were not given out regularly, except when a boy wanted them he would get them.

Did you always get three pair of shoes and stockings in a year?—Some boys did not, there were more that did.

Did the catechist attend regularly?—About once a fortnight.

Were the dormitories clean and in good order?—Yes, they were always clean.

If the boys committed faults, who used to punish them?—The usher and the master.

Which most frequently?—The usher.

Used the usher ever to complain to the master, and induce him to punish the boys, or did he always punish them himself?—He always punished them himself.

How were the punishments inflicted; with what instrument?—The last usher that was there used the horsewhip on every occasion.

Describe what sort of a horsewhip?—Such a whip as you drive a cart with, the common whip sold in shops.

Had it a long lash as well as a handle?—Yes.

A wooden handle?—No, plaited with catgut and leather, made by a tradesman.

Such as are sold by saddlers?—Yes, a common whip they would drive a gig with, or any whip of that description.

Was it a severe instrument?—It was very long.

How many blows of this would he inflict upon a boy?—According to his own fancy, often about four dozen; I have often seen him inflict that with his utmost strength.

Did you ever see a boy much injured by it?—I have seen boys incapable of walking about after their beating; I have seen them beat till the blood would come down upon the flags.

Used he to beat them on the bare back?—Yes.

Do you know what has become of the boys that were so punished?—The most part are in Shannon Grove.

What is the age of the youngest boy you have ever seen punished severely with a whip, in the way you describe?—The youngest boy in the house would be punished in the same way.

What is the youngest age?—About ten.

Did you ever see any boy struck with the fist by the master or usher?—No, but I have seen them kicked; I have seen one boy kicked till he had two of his ribs fractured.

What was his name?—Bryan Carney.

On what occasion was it?—The boy was pelting potatoes at another; the usher was punishing him very severely, and the boy ran away, and he ran after him, and knocked him down, and kicked him severely, and broke two of his ribs.

When did it happen?—In about the year 1816 or 1817.

What was the name of the usher?—Joseph Dyas.

Do you know what has become of him?—No, I do not.

Did any medical man attend that boy whose ribs were broken?—Yes, Dr. Hemphill.

Did he live at Clonmel?—Yes.

Michael M^r Larney,
5 Nov. 1824.

Examination of
Michael M^r Larney,
5 Nov. 1824.

When did you leave Clonmel yourself?—I think in the year 1819.

Was Dyas the usher there at that time?—No.

Had he any other name than Joseph?—No.

Was any complaint made to the catechist or local committee of the severity exercised by Dyas upon this boy?—No, not to my knowledge.

Did no boy, to your knowledge, tell to any member of the local committee, or the catechist, of this severity to this boy?—No.

Are you sure the boy's ribs were broken?—Oh, yes! the ribs were certainly broken, and he was very near half a year, and could not sit upright.

Do you know what account was given of the boy's illness or accident to the local committee or catechist?—The surgeon was told it was the usher who had broken his ribs, and the surgeon had it in contemplation to report him to the board; I do not know whether he did or not.

Do you know when Dyas was dismissed from Clonmel?—It was shortly after that; the boy was not well before he was dismissed.

Did Mr. Thackeray's examination take place during the time the boy was ill?—I am not certain of that; I am not certain whether the boy was hurt before Mr. Thackeray went round or not.

Were you at Clonmel when Mr. Thackeray went round?—Yes.

Who was the usher then?—Dyas.

Did Mr. Thackeray go round twice?—Yes.

Did you ever see the usher conduct himself disrespectfully towards the master?—Yes, I have frequently; he often had a scold before the boys; I have seen him offer to fight the master.

Do you mean, you have seen him offer to fight him in the school, before the boys?—Yes.

Do you know the name of the usher who succeeded Dyas?—George Alexander Mooney.

Do you think Dyas is now in the service of the Society?—No, I do not think he is.

Do you know what has become of Bryan Carney?—He is bound apprentice to a shoe-maker in the county of Limerick.

Did you ever see any other boy injured by the mode in which he was treated by the master or usher?—Yes, I have seen one boy's ear pulled out, not quite, but dislocated.

Who did that?—The usher.

What boy was it?—Joseph Carroll.

What had the boy done to provoke such severe treatment?—I am not certain.

Was the punishment inflicted in your presence?—Yes; the master reported the usher to the catechist for it.

Did that take place previous to the breaking of the boy's ribs, that you have described?—Yes.

What was the name of the catechist?—The Rev. William Stephenson.

State as nearly as you can what time this pulling of the ear occurred?—I am inclined to think it was about the year 1816 or 1817.

Was it after Mr. Thackeray's first visit, or before?—Yes, after the first visit.

Did the surgeon attend the boy whose ear was pulled?—I am not certain whether he did or not.

Did the boy continue permanently injured by it, or did it get well?—Yes; it got well in a short time.

Do you not recollect that Mr. Thackeray visited the school when Dyas was there?—Yes.

Do you not also recollect his being there when Mooney was there, and Mooney examining the boys in the catechism?—Yes, I do.

Used the boys to be allowed soap to wash themselves?—They used.

How often in the week?—Every Saturday evening.

Once a week only?—That was all.

What vessels were used to contain the water in which they washed themselves in the morning?—Wooden buckets.

Were those buckets applied to any other purpose?—No.

In the night were they applied to any other purpose?—No, only to carry water into the kitchen.

The buckets used in the night for the necessary purposes of the boys, were different buckets from those they washed themselves in?—Yes; the buckets the boys used at night were not put to any other purpose.

Appendix, N° 145.

Examination of William Lewis, on Oath; Wednesday 3d November 1824.

William Lewis,
3 Nov. 1824.

AT what charter school are you now?—At Santry; I was formerly at Ross.

When did you leave Ross?—The 19th of July last.

Are you now a candidate teacher?—Yes.

How were the boys treated at Ross?—Very indifferently.

Had they food supplied to them according to the rules of the Society?—No.

In what respect did it differ?—The boys are allowed a pint of new milk every morning four times in a week, and they never got it since Mr. Payne went there; a part of the year they used not to get milk at all for their breakfast.

Did they get meat as often as it was allowed?—Yes, but it was not the sort of meat that was allowed.

How was it different?—They used to get veal instead of beef.

What

What sort of veal was it?—A calf about three days old.

What is it called commonly among the boys?—Staggering Bob.

Were you supplied with the proper quantity of clothes?—Yes.

Regularly?—No, not regularly.

Used you to have three pair of stockings, and three pair of shoes in each year?—Yes.

Were you supplied with clean linen twice a week?—No, only once a week in the winter.

How often had you clean stockings?—It was very seldom the boys stockings would be washed, unless they washed them themselves; Mr. Payne would only give out one pair of stockings at a time.

How often had you clean sheets?—Once a month.

Were the rooms in which you slept clean?—Yes.

Were the boys in general healthy?—Yes.

Were they well taken care of when sick?—Yes.

Did the master attend the school regularly?—No.

How often used he to come into the school?—Only once a month.

Who used to punish the boys when they were naughty?—The master and usher.

How could the master do it if he only came in once a month?—The usher would tell him when he came in to his meals.

Were the punishments severe?—Yes.

More severe than they ought to be?—Yes.

How so?—He used to strip the boys and beat them with a horsewhip.

Were you ever punished in that way?—Yes.

What was the reason of your being punished?—There was a boy in Ross of the name of Knight; he made a complaint to the rector of the parish, and the usher said I put him up to it, and the master gave me a terrible beating with a horsewhip.

What did he complain of?—The usher beat him, the steward beat him first and he was crying, and the usher beat him for crying.

Who was the rector at that time?—Mr. Morgan.

What did the steward beat him for originally?—For not opening the gate; it was Sunday morning, he was dressing himself to go to church, and he called to him to open the gate, and he could not go—he had his clothes off, and he beat him for not doing it, and the usher beat him for crying.

To whom did he complain?—The rector of the parish.

Was he a local committee man?—Yes.

Did he take any notice of the complaint?—No.

Was it in writing?—No; he went up to him in church, and told him so.

Was Knight punished for complaining?—He was.

The same day?—No; it was winter, and he was put to wash potatoes for the cows, for half-a-year during the severity of the winter, and any little fault he would commit he would beat him more than he deserved.

What was the usual course as to washing potatoes for the cows, did they take it in turn?—No, they appointed two boys.

And then they appointed him alone?—Yes, him and a small boy.

Was it considered a mode of punishment, or disgrace?—A mode of punishment.

Was it considered a punishment to be put to prepare the potatoes for the cows?—Yes.

Were you punished by being put to labour, or by an instrument?—I was punished with a whip.

What sort of a whip was it?—It was a long whip he used to drive the gig with, and he doubled the lash to the handle, and took off my coat and waistcoat.

How many blows did he give you?—He was beating me half an hour.

Who was present?—There is one of the boys at Santry who was there at the time.

Were the rest of the boys present?—Yes, it was in the dining hall.

How many blows did you get do you think?—Upwards of sixty.

Did it injure you much, was your back much marked?—Yes it was, and a lump was left upon my head a good many days afterwards.

Were you able to go to school the next day?—I was.

Were you able to walk about afterwards without difficulty?—No.

How long did you feel it?—I felt it for the remaining part of the week.

Do you bear the marks of it now?—No.

What is the name of the boy that saw you get this beating, who is now at Santry?—James Carney.

Who was the catechist at the school?—Mr. Jones.

How often used he to attend?—Once a week.

Used he to inspect the dormitories?—Yes.

And hear the boys their catechisms, and teach them the scriptures?—Yes.

Did he always do it when he went?—Yes; but he was not there long, there was a man there before him, Mr. King.

Did Mr. King perform these duties?—Yes, but he did not attend very regularly.

What used the boys to wash themselves in, in the morning?—In water.

What vessels held the water?—Buckets that would be up in the bed room the preceding night.

Do you mean the buckets that are in the room for the necessary use of the boys at night?—Yes.

Urinal tubs?—Yes.

Had you any soap to wash yourselves with?—Yes, once a week we got soap.

Examination of
William Lewis,
3 Nov. 1824.

Any towels to dry yourselves with?—Yes.
Was there any other use made of those tubs than that you mention?—Yes, getting of the potatoes up out of the ground for their dinner.
Any other use than that of carrying potatoes?—No.
Was there any other use made of those tubs at night, except for receiving urine?—No.
Suppose a boy had a complaint in his bowels, would he have to go down stairs, or would he use the tub?—Yes, he would use the tub.
In the room?—Yes.
Did that often happen?—Not very often.
Did it happen sometimes?—Yes.
Were those tubs used for the potatoes the next morning?—Yes.
And for washing yourselves?—Yes.
Just the same?—Yes.
Is it so at Santry now?—I believe it is, but I am not sure.
Sure you must know what you wash in, in the morning?—Yes, the bucket.
The same buckets you use at night?—Yes.
Is it there used for any thing besides making water into?—No.
Suppose a boy is ill at night, does he get up and go down stairs?—No.
Where does he go?—To the bucket.
Have you ever known a boy go to the bucket at night, to do his business?—Not in my bed-room.
Have they any where else to go?—No, the doors are locked.
Are the same vessels used at Santry for the potatoes?—I do not rightly know.

Appendix, N° 146.

Further Examination of William Lewis, on Oath; Friday, 5th November 1824.

William Lewis,
5 Nov. 1824.

WAS Mr. Payne the master of Ross school when you were there?—Yes.
Did the boys attend the school regularly there?—No.
Was there any particular time of the year at which they were absent more than others?—Yes.
Were any particular boys absent more than others?—Yes, the larger boys were generally kept out working.
During what period of the year?—During the harvest and the sowing of potatoes, and taking up the potatoes, and making hay.
What is the longest time you have ever known any of the boys absent from school, without interruption?—About three weeks or a month.
About how many periods in the year would they be absent?—Four.
Are you quite sure of that?—Yes.
How many boys would be absent for three weeks or a month, during four times in the year?—Twenty or thirty boys.
Are you certain it was so large a number as that?—Yes.
Were the boys allowed the regular times for play during those periods?—No; the moment they had done their breakfast they were taken out into the field, and had no play.
Had they a good ground to play in?—No, the greater part of the play ground was diminished by a wall and cow-shed.
When was that erected?—Last winter.
Was that shed built at the expense of the Society, or was it erected by the master?—I do not know.
Whose cows were put into it?—The master's own.
How many cows?—Twelve or fourteen.
What proportion of the play ground was cut off in this way; a tenth part or a quarter?—Very nigh a quarter of an acre was taken off.
How much space was left afterwards?—A little better than half a quarter of an acre.
Do you mean, that for the purpose of making the shed, they took away two parts out of three?—Yes.
Did any of the boys ever measure it, or how do you speak so accurately?—The master got his ground surveyed not long ago.
Did you see the survey?—I did not see the survey, but I saw a field that was surveyed at an acre, and I could judge by that.
Had the master a large farm?—Yes.
How did he dispose of the produce, for the benefit of the boys?—Yes, partly; he used to send hay and straw to the local committee. I do not know whether he was paid for it or not, but it was an act of civility.
How do you know it was an act of civility?—They used to send him back the dung.
How do you know it was to go there; have you seen it delivered?—Yes, I have seen it going out of the yard, and heard the master telling the steward to send hay and straw to different gentlemen.
What made you know any of those gentlemen were members of the local committee?—I have seen them attend on committee days.
Did he not sell hay and straw to other persons as well as members of the local committee?—No, not to my knowledge.

Do you mean, when he sent hay and straw to any persons, they were all members of the local committee?—The greater part of them.

Who were the others?—Some friends he had in town; people that he was acquainted with.

Who used to drive the carts?—Two apprentices.

Were they the charter school boys?—Yes.

Have you any reason to think the hay and straw were not paid for?—The catechist came into the yard, and asked the master to send him a little straw, if he had any threshed and the master sent it to him.

What reason have you to suppose he did not pay for it?—The reason is, that they never shewed the boys justice; it was an act of civility.

Had you better food on some days than others?—Yes.

On what days was it best?—The local committee days.

429
Examination of William Lewis,
5 Nov. 1824.

Appendix, N° 147.

Examination of Patrick Leonard, on Oath; Wednesday, 3d November 1824.

WHAT charter school were you at before you came to Santry?—Strangford.

How long were you there?—I think six years.

Who was the master at Strangford at the time you went there?—Mr. Clinton.

Who succeeded him?—Mr. Dunn.

Who succeeded Mr. Dunn?—Mr. Fleming.

Is Mr. Fleming the master there now?—Yes.

Where did Mr. Fleming come from?—From the charter school at Ray and Ross; he was in Ray first, and then Ross, and then Strangford.

When did he come to Strangford?—In 1819.

Were the rules of the Incorporated Society, according to which the charter schools are to be managed, faithfully complied with by the master of Strangford school?—Mr. Dunn was turned out for not complying with them shortly after I left it.

Were not you there under Mr. Fleming?—No.

How long has he been there?—Since 1819.

Have you not been there since 1819?—No; I am not sure of the date at which he went; I left Strangford the 3d of May 1819.

Were you supplied with clothes according to the rules of the Society?—They were furnished from Mr. Cusack, in Dublin.

Were you furnished with them in a proper quantity?—Yes.

And with food?—No; not always.

In what respect was it deficient?—With regard to the milk at nights; we would get broth very frequently.

Used the boys to complain?—Yes, they did to the catechist complain once, and it was remedied for a time; afterwards, when Mr. Thackeray was going round, the master was complained of, and shortly after that he got a trial for a short time, and was turned off; he was found incapable of conducting the school.

What number of boys were at Strangford when you were there?—Forty was the established number.

Were the punishments frequent?—They were very, very severe; the master would strip them to the skin, and beat them with a horse-whip, and sometimes with a jaunting-car whip.

Did you ever see a boy materially injured by being beaten?—I cannot say that.

Have you any reason to suppose the boys were punished with more severity than was due for the offences committed?—With regard to the instrument used and the manner in which it was used, it was too severe.

What number of stripes have you ever seen a boy receive?—I have seen some get two dozen, and sometimes thirty.

Did you ever see a boy punished more than once in a day?—No.

Did you ever see a boy so sore from punishment as to be unable to attend school the next day?—No.

Used the master to punish the boys, or the usher?—Both; but the usher not so frequent or so rigid as the master.

What offence committed by the boys was the most frequent at Strangford?—I cannot immediately recollect; I recollect I was punished for writing a letter for a lad; he ran away, and shortly after his father came to him, and the master said this letter contained a meeting for the father and the lad, that he might run away; but it was for the father to get him an apprenticeship.

Had the boys been brought from Ray to Strangford before you left?—No; shortly after.

Patrick Leonard,
3 Nov. 1824.

Appendix, N° 148.

Examination of Edward Cochrane, on Oath; Wednesday, 8th December 1824.

ARE you now at Santry school?—Yes.

As a candidate teacher?—Yes.

How long have you been there?—About three years and two months.

What school did you come from?—Shannon Grove.

Edward Cochrane,
8 Dec. 1824.

[S s]

How

Examination of Edward Cochrane,
8 Dec. 1824.

How long were you there?—Very near four years; I believe it was four years.

How many boys have lately gone from Santry, to situations in life?—Three, in about two months.

Where have they gone?—Two to Mr. Thackeray, as parish clerks and teachers.

Where has the other gone?—I do not recollect.

Does the master of Santry school ever assist in teaching?—Very seldom; he comes into the school sometimes, generally once a day, to give out quills.

But never assists in teaching?—He does now and then, among the small boys, but not the candidate teachers; the present usher we have is incompetent, and not able to teach at all, not anything.

How long has he been with you?—About six weeks, or seven weeks.

Where did he come from?—Stradbally.

What was his name?—Thomas Eustace.

Who was the usher before him?—Leonard, one of our own boys, a candidate teacher.

When did he leave the school?—Three or four months ago.

Who taught you between Leonard leaving and Eustace coming?—No one; only the head boys would assist one another, but there was no one to assist the head boys, at all.

Who taught the little boys?—Two or three of the head boys.

Did Mr. Devine do more then than when he had an usher?—No.

Who was usher before Leonard?—Mr. M'Ghee.

Was Leonard appointed immediately upon Mr. M'Ghee's leaving?—No.

How long intervened?—Very near a month.

How were the candidate teachers instructed then, during that month?—In the same way, by themselves.

What is the objection to Mr. Eustace?—He is not able to teach any of the branches we all learn in; he does not know mensuration, or algebra, or geometry; he teaches the last class of the candidate teachers, the boys that came lately; he is not able to teach the other boys, at all.

Have you made any progress in any of those sciences?—Yes.

Are you able to work algebraic questions?—I am; I have gone through the first six, and the eleventh and twelfth books of Euclid, and through the data, and I am now studying trigonometry.

Under whose guidance did you learn those things?—Partly under Mr. M'Ghee; he taught me a little in mensuration.

Have you done all Euclid yourself?—Yes.

How do you know you were going on properly?—There were one or two boys that have left the school lately, when I had any difficulty, I applied to them.

Do you stand one of the first to go out?—I am fifth or sixth boy.

Do you remember William Hollay, at Santry?—I do.

Do you know what became of him?—He was apprenticed out as a servant, and I heard he was afterwards transported.

For what?—I believe, for robbing his master.

Do you remember James Brooks?—Yes.

